It is gratifying, of course, to see the number of accounts increase and the average amount of balance decrease. The movement of the latter has not been a healthy one, having risen from $86, nine years ago, to $360 at the end of 1873, and $391 now, as to the 26 banks. The largest amount of principal due one depositor runs as high as $5,000 in the Manhattan, $10,000 in the Dry Dock, $18,277 in the Irving, $40,000 in the Seamen's, and $89,779 in the Metropolitan. These heavy deposits, unless carefully guarded, are likely to injure rather than benefit the banks, and they do not belong to the class of persons for whom savings banks exist. It is an evidence of the anomalous condition of affairs since 1873 that many persons belonging to the "capitalist" class have been unable to see any better use for money than to put it in the savings banks accounted strongest, and take any interest on it they could get, virtually making safe-deposit companies of the banks; but since this has been done, it is perhaps rather an encouraging fact that the average deposit line does not rise nevertheless.

The actual deposits made have been declinining since 1872, but the withdrawals have also been declining. The net result is that a number of weak or dishonestly-managed concerns have been forced out of existence, at great cost to their creditors and great public injury; that the banks have grown slightly in resources, deposits, and surplus, but not with much benefit to the depositors all told; that the banks have held their own as a whole, and that their dealers have been able to do rather better than might have been expected. Prosperity and saving having been out of the question, it is pleasant to see that thrift is so well adhered to. And yet it is easy, in times like the present, to err in measuring privations of the mass by the movement of the savings banks, because the dealers of the banks, being the best workmen, are retained in employment longer and feel the pressure the least. The worker who lays by money, with rare exceptions, has steadier employment, better capacity for earning, and in all respects more staying power than the one who does not. Still, as far as any general conclusion can be drawn from their movement, the banks hold their own wonderfully well, and indicate that the long period of strain upon every interest and industry is now nearing its close.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

No question of world-wide interest assumes so many aspects as the so-called Eastern question. It is capable of an infinite variety of changes, and it continually surprises one by its novelties and startling phases. Two or three weeks ago, the conference adjourned without accomplishing anything. The Turkish Government was left master of the field. Reforms urged upon the Sublime Porte were contemptuously thrown aside, and guarantees demanded were refused with scant courtesy. It must be confessed that the sympathy of the impartial on-looker was with Turkey. Turkey is not threatened by any powers except by those which mutually agree to keep the peace among themselves, and to let Turkey alone, until all agree to fall upon her and dismember her with exact and equal deference to each other's claims. Keeping in mind the fact that Turkey is maintained in Europe by the allied powers simply because those powers could never agree as to the manner in which the territory of the Turk should be divided, GORTSCHAKOFF'S note is a model of insolence. The note, after reciting the diplomatic efforts which have consumed a year or more, goes on to say that the Cabinets of the guaranteeing powers find themselves precisely where they began. The Turkish Government pays no attention whatever to the wishes of the great powers, but keeps on its course as though the remonstrances of the high and mighty potentates represented at the conference were, in their solemn declarations, as idle as the wind. GORTSCHAKOFF complains that Turkey is intractable, indifferent, willful. But, after all, why should Turkey—an independent State—be under the tutelage of the combined powers of Europe? Evidently this is the question which the party of Young Turkey is asking itself.

But assuming that the European theory concerning the dependent condition of Turkey is to be maintained, the Russian note is not only strictly in keeping with all that has gone before, but it is unexpectedly ingenious. It should be borne in mind that Russia has from the first been bent on war. War she is bound to have, sooner or later. From the day when the Herzegovinians rose in revolt, until now, no attentive observer could fail to see that a Russian hand was busy in fomenting the disturbances which have been laid to the charge of the so-called Christians of the northern provinces of the Ottoman Empire. That there have been atrocities committed and oppressions sanctioned by the Turkish authorities in the so-called Christian provinces is most true. But Russian influences have been at work to make the worst of these, and to sow dissensions in the regions from which we have heard the most inflammatory accounts. All this resulted at last in the conference at Constantinople—a conference in which Turkey was treated like a ward of feeble mind—too dangerous to be at large without guardianship. The encroachments of the powers had been gradual; but at last the irresponsible ward turned indignantly and refused to be driven into a corner. When it came to abdicating the sovereignty of the Sublime Porte in Bulgaria, a Turkish province, the blood of the race of OTHMAN was up, and there was a rebellion against further pressure.

The unthinking may say that Russia suffered a diplomatic defeat. It is too early to arrive at any such conclusion. Now, Russia appeals to Christian Europe, and, reciting the fruitless demands made on the Turk, asks, What are you going to do about it? Russia declines to go any further until she learns what the other powers "intend to do in reply to this refusal, and for insuring the execution of their wishes." This is not Russia's, but Europe's quarrel. The Muscovite is not yet ready for a fight. Meantime, he will contrive to secure the moral support of every European Cabinet, if possible. Russia does not rush blindly upon a war with Turkey. She exhausts, or appears to exhaust, diplomacy and entreaty. Meantime, she is busy with preparation. Every month of delay is a gain to the great northern power. But Turkey is as ready now for the last struggle as she will ever be. Russia continually refers the ultimate decision to the other powers. But when Russia is ready for the fight, it will come, and the other powers will be estopped from protest.

It is impossible to say exactly what the real intentions of Turkey may be. Generally speaking, however, Turkey has everything to gain by inflexibly defending its own sovereignty. When a surrender of one iota of that sovereignty is made, the doom of Islam is sealed. It is positive that Russia will, sooner or later, strike for a passage from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean. But, meantime, Turkey must, perforce, stubbornly contest every inch of ground. It is not likely that the disgrace and banishment of MIDHAT PASHA have any connection with the European relations of Turkey. The chances are that he has been engaged in intrigues which are only a little short of conspiracy. In the good old times of the Achmets and the Selims, he would have been bow-strung and thrown into the Bosphorus. In these more civilized days, he is given a few thousand dollars and sent to Brindisi, an exile in disgrace. EDHEM PASHA is uncompromising in his opposition to foreign interference. So must be any Turkish statesman who cares a fig for the independence and dignity of the Empire. On the one hand, Russia is determined on war. On the other, Turkey is equally determined upon maintaining its sovereignty unimpaired. Russia may appear to relax, but it is only in appearance. Turkey cannot surrender in the least without a complete surrender.

WAS IT A COINCIDENCE?

Latterly the ghost market has been unusually dull. Owing, possibly, to the repeated exposures of "materializing mediums," the demand for ghosts has largely fallen off, and dealers have lacked courage to bring forward any new and attractive styles. A novel and interesting ghost has, however, recently made its appearance at Walkersville, Wis., which really deserves to be brought to the attention of all enterprising ghost collectors.

For a long time a young gentleman of Walkersville, whose identity may be concealed under the name of Smith, cherished a desire to make the acquaintance of a few select and attractive ghosts, with a view to mutual improvement. To this end he placed himself under the tuition of a Chicago medium, who undertook to refine his spiritual vision to that extent that he would be able to see any specified sort of ghost at any time or place. With the medium Mr. Smith had daily "sittings" for several weeks, at the low rate of $5 per sitting, but when his first quarter's tuition was ended, and he had not seen so much as the glow of a Democratic ghost's nose, he became indignant, denounced the medium as an impostor, and returned to his rural home. It is only fair to say that the medium indignantly repelled his accusation that he was an impostor. He pleaded that a watched ghost rarely boils, so to speak, and that the mere fact that his pupil had not been able to see ghosts on demand was no evidence that he would not be able to see them at some future time. The justice of this defense has since been established. Mr. Smith, who could see no ghosts in the medium's room, has since seen the most remarkable ghost of the year—not to say of the century.

A month ago Mr. Smith was sitting in his bedroom wishing that when the landlady boiled cabbage she would keep the kitchen door shut, and yearning for the infinite. The hour was 11 o'clock P. M., and he was on the point of preparing for bed by throwing something at the tuneful cats on the back fence, when he suddenly became aware that he was not alone. A vague mysterious dread, as of a large athletic creditor with a heavy club, oppressed him, and he would probably have fled into the hall were it not that he would have been certain to fall over the house-dog and thus excite the suspicions of that hasty animal. He therefore seated himself calmly in a chair, with his back against the wall, and remarked to himself in a soothing and explanatory manner, "rats." In another moment the rat hypothesis was overthrown by an elderly and fat female ghost, who quietly floated before his astonished vision, and gazed steadfastly into his terrified eyes.

Female, fat, and elderly ghosts are by no means novelties, but there was that in the appearance of this particular ghost which was well adapted to startle the coolest ghost-seer. The ghost did not touch the floor, but floated about four feet above it, in a graceful, wavy manner, not unlike the swaying motion of a captive balloon. What chiefly attracted Mr. Smith's attention, however, was the peculiar attitude of this ghostly female. She was poised in mid-air with her head downward, and her arms and legs extended in straight and rigid lines. Her dress was a voluminous black alpaca, somewhat rusty, and apparently water-stained, and a wide belt of some unrecognizable material was fastened around her in the presumed region of the knees, which preserved Mr. Smith's feelings from too violent a shock. Swaying gently to and fro, this peculiar ghost smiled sadly at Mr. Smith, and winked at him in a manner so trying to his sensibilities that he could scarcely bear to look at her. Had she winked with her mouth and smiled with either eye, his nerves would have borne the strain, but there was undoubtedly something very painful in a wink situated three or four inches below the locality of the accompanying smile.

Mr. Smith had finally achieved his longing to see a ghost, but after all, this reversed old lady failed to give him any real comfort. It was impossible to ask such a preposterous being any serious questions as to the other life, or to propose to her to become his guardian angel and spirit wife. Still, he was determined not to be afraid of her, and so, hastily bending down the ends of his hair with both hands he requested her to "avaunt"—such being, in his opinion, the most effective method of exorcism. But the ghost declined to do anything of the sort. She merely floated once around the room, occasionally banging her head on the edge of the trunk and the foot-board of the bed, and then resumed her station at three yards' distance from the too-successful ghost-seeker.

Now, Mr. Smith was one who firmly believed that he who lays his hand upon a woman, save in kindness and in a reasonably dark room, is a man whom it would be unfair to call a book agent. But a ghost is not, strictly speaking, a woman, and is not entitled to be treated as such. Holding this very reasonable view, Mr. Smith firmly requested his ghostly visitor to "get out," thinking that she might have misunderstood the word "avaunt"; but, finding that she still persisted in dangling before him, he seized the poker and dealt her a violent blow. The poker passed directly through her shadowy form and smashed the lamp, and when the occupant of the next room, who had been awakened by the crash, rushed in with a candle, Mr. Smith was found in a fainting fit, beautifully diversified with kerosene and broken glass, but still grasping the poker in his rigid hand.

Since then Mr. Smith has seen no more ghosts, and does not wish to see any. Of course, the average person who reads of the floating female ghost will scornfully insist that Mr. Smith was either dreaming, drunk, or idiotic. Without going behind the face of the returns to investigate this question, it must be mentioned that he subsequently learned that years ago his room had been occupied by an old lady who was drowned by the sinking of a steamer on Lake Michigan, and whose body was found with a life preserver fastened about the knees, the effect of which was to cause her to float head downward. Was this historical fact connected with Mr. Smith's vision, or did the two merely constitute a coincidence? This is a question which does not admit of a conclusive answer without careful investigation. Meanwhile, it may be cheerfully admitted that Mr. Smith's ghost was decidedly the most remarkable ghost which has so far revisited the glimpses of the Wisconsin, or indeed the American, moon.

OBITUARY.

REAR ADMIRAL JAMES ALDEN.

Rear Admiral James Alden, of the United States Navy, died yesterday morning in San Francisco of congestion of the brain. He was ill only a few days. Admiral Alden was a native of Maine, from which State he was appointed a Midshipman on April 1, 1828. He was first stationed at Boston, where he remained three years. He was then transferred to the sloop-of-war John Adams, and saw his first sea-service in her during the years 1832 and 1833, when he made a cruise up the Mediterranean. Upon returning to the United States, he was placed on shore duty, and was not relieved for several years. In the meantime, on June 14, 1834, he was made a Passed Midshipman, and was commissioned as a Lieutenant on Feb. 25, 1841. He was with the Wilkes Exploring Expedition, and afterward made a cruise on the frigate Constitution in East Indian waters. During the early part of the Mexican War he served in the Gulf Squadron, and went with his vessel into the ports of Vera Cruz, Tuspan, and Tobasco. He then served for a short time at the Boston Naval Station, from where he was detailed to the Coast Survey, in which service he remained until 1860. He was commissioned as a Commander on Sept. 14, 1855. At the outbreak of the rebellion he was in command of the steamer South Carolina, from which vessel he was transferred to the steam sloop-of-war Richmond. It was in this vessel that he saw his first real war service. With the rest of the fleet, he ran by the formidable Forts Jackson and St. Philip, on the Mississippi; and afterward brought her into a prominent place during the engagements with the Chalmette batteries and the nearer defenses of New-Orleans. For his action in these engagements he was commended in the official reports; and this, with his two successful passages by the fortifications of Vicksburg, and gallant conduct at Fort Hudson, led to his promotion to a Captaincy in January, 1863. He participated in the terrible conflicts in Mobile Bay as Commander of Admiral Farragut's flagship the Brooklyn, and while still in command of that magnificent vessel he took part in two attacks on Fort Fisher. In the reports of all these fierce conflicts his services were praised, and it was conceded that he was one of the most skillful and determined officers in the Navy. On July 25, 1866, he was promoted to the rank of Commander. For a part of the following year he commanded the steam-sloop Susquehanna on special service, and was transferred from her to the frigate Minnesota. He was Commandant of the Mare Island Navy-yard for several months in 1868 and 1869, but in April of the latter year was appointed Chief of the Bureau of Navigation and Detail in the Navy-yard. He retired from service on March 31, 1872, with the rank of Rear Admiral. After this he made Washington, D. C., his home but a few weeks ago went to San Francisco to make a visit, intending to remain there several months.

JAMES MANNING WINCHELL.

Mr. James Manning Winchell died at his residence in Hyde Park, on the Hudson, on Friday last, at the age of 53 years. His life was a remarkably busy one, and his employments numerous, and varied in character. He was born at Avon, Livingston County, N. Y., in the year 1823. His father, Rev. Reuben Winchell, supervised his education, and gave his son the instruction he could not obtain at the district school. In 1846 having determined to become a professional teacher, he obtained admission to the State Normal School at Albany. Two years later he was graduated, and became a teacher in the public schools of Syracuse. While in that position he was connected with several journalistic enterprises. In 1853 he came to this City, and in the following year removed to Council City, Kan. His business there was destroyed by the "border troubles," but he staid at his home, undismayed by the threats of the ruffians who were incensed against him for his bold declarations against slavery. At this time he was requested by the late Henry J. Raymond to act as correspondent of THE TIMES, and, accepting the position, he furnished this journal with the earliest and fullest accounts of the outrages that were committed in Kansas by the "border ruffians." In the Spring of 1856, Mr. Winchell was chosen a delegate to the first National Republican Convention, which met in Philadelphia, and by which Gen. Fremont was nominated for the Presidency. In 1858 he was a member of the Kansas Constitutional Convention, held at Leavenworth, and, in the following year, was President of a like convention in Grandotte. At that time he was talked of as a candidate for the United States Senate, and it is probable that if Kansas had then been admitted to the Union, he would have been elected to that high position. During the year 1860 and the early part of 1861 Mr. Winchell was a member of the Kansas Territorial Legislature. At the opening of the rebellion he resumed his connection with THE TIMES, and became a useful war correspondent. During 1862, and until the close of the session of Congress in the early months of 1863, he was in charge of THE TIMES Bureau in Washington. After this he became connected with the management of the Kansas and Pacific Railway. In 1864 he again entered political life as the Secretary of the National committee organized in Washington to urge the nomination of Secretary Chase for the Presidency. The failure of this movement sent him back to private life. For several years thereafter he was engaged in mining enterprises. In 1867 he retired from active business, and bought the estate at Hyde Park, where he died.

MRS. SARAH PETER.

Mrs. Sarah Peter, mother of Hon. Rufus King, of Cincinnati, died suddenly in that city yesterday morning. Mrs. Peter was a woman of extraordinary intellectual powers and great personal influence. In 1854 she visited Europe, and while there became a convert to the Roman Catholic faith. From that time forth the whole current of her life was changed. She was the possessor of a very large property. Upon her return to this country she began at once a systematic distribution of her wealth for the promotion of the Roman Catholic faith through the agency of church institutions. Since that time she is said to have founded about 20 convents. Most of these are situated in Cincinnati and Philadelphia. This mission brought her into intimate communication with the Pope, and she has crossed the ocean nine times on special visits to his Holiness. Aside from this she had previously traveled extensively, and is said to have visited more parts of the world than any other woman of her time. Her first husband was the son of Judge Rufus King, of this City.

MRS. SUSAN BOWLER.

Mrs. Susan Bowler, the widow of the late B. B. Bowler, died suddenly at her residence in Clifton, Ohio, yesterday. Mrs. Bowler was a sister of Hon. George H. Pendleton, and a woman of marked social qualities and of much prominence in social life. She was also very wealthy. During the later years of her life she has devoted most of her time to works of charity. Her death was the result of a stroke of paralysis, with which she was attacked while at dinner at her home.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Mr. Mathew Fagan, an old and well-known Republican of Brooklyn, died yesterday morning, at his residence in the Fourteenth Ward, of pneumonia.

John S. Gallaher, formerly Third Auditor of the Treasury, and well known as a journalist several years ago, died in Washington on Sunday night last, aged 81 years.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

MAYOR ELY AND RAPID TRANSIT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In reply to the addresses made yesterday by the representatives of the owners of property on Sixth avenue, protesting against the erection of the Gilbert Elevated Railway, his Honor Mayor Ely stated "that rapid transit is a necessity, but the thing was to secure it without interfering with private rights. He had examined the railroad system of London, but it could not be adopted in this City on account of the rocky nature of the subsoil. If any persons embarked in such a project it would be financially disastrous to them." A careful examination of the subject will certainly convince Mayor Ely that he is mistaken in supposing that a rapid-transit railway beneath the surface of the avenues cannot be adopted in this City because of the rocky nature of the subsoil; indeed, there is scarcely a doubt, judging from the large experience on record in cutting through the rock of Manhattan Island, that it is really less costly to cut through this than it was to cut through the stiff London clay through which a very large part of the Metropolitan Railway in that city passes. An examination of the reports of the London railway will show his Honor that the enormous cost of this undertaking was due to the expense of the real estate and other damages properly coming under that head, which it was necessary to pay in order to secure the right of way. I have not the figures by me, but I think it is safe to say that upward of two-thirds the cost of this road is chargeable to payments other than for construction—expenses, it may be added, which need not be incurred in order to construct in this City a rapid-transit road beneath the surface of the street and above the bottom level of the sewers on perfectly feasible plans that have been presented.

No city in the world presents so great advantages as New-York for the construction of a sub-grade rapid-transit railway. Four-fifths of the route granted by the late Rapid Transit Commission, from the City Hall to the Harlem River via Third avenue, passes through a street almost perfectly straight, with a roadway of 100 feet measured between the curbs of the sidewalks, a width quite sufficient to accommodate the sub-grade road and leave a carriage-way ample for all purposes of street traffic. No competent judge will deny that such a rapid-transit road as this, while it is a real railway and not a skeleton—will be far less of a damage both to property-owners and the community at large than any form whatever of the elevated species. One is almost wholly concealed from view and does not in any degree shut out the sunlight from the street; the other, as is now the case in Amity street and South Fifth avenue, turns the street into a sort of vault or sub-way, and hence (from this cause alone) inflicts enormous damages on the property along the line.

Permission to construct such a sub-grade road as above mentioned was asked from the Rapid Transit Commission by the same capitalists who are the backbone of the Gilbert Company. This request was refused. This commission, in common with the greater part of this community, believed that an elevated railway would be some sort of gossamer structure which would be rather ornamental than otherwise, but when practical engineering questions are brought face to face with the realities of the situation by being called upon to plan a structure to carry two tracks, each to sustain "1,200 pounds per running foot," with a "factor of 6," the gossamer and ornamental part disappears. In its place is found the structure now on exhibition in Amity street.

The sub-grade road would not cost more than about $150,000 per

AMUSEMENTS.

DRAMATIC.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.

A translation of "Les Danicheff," a drama conceived, as it would appear, by one M. Pierre Newski, and molded into a presentable form by M. Alexandre Dumas, was acted at the Union Square Theatre Monday evening. Its performance, which occupied three hours and a half, was listened to attentively, but its impression was not favorable. "Les Danicheff," in fact, is almost as out of place on the English stage as would be "Le Demi-Monde," from the pen of the same French author. It deals with scenes in which none but a traveled spectator, or a play-goer desirous of securing instruction as well as enjoyment, can feel the slightest interest; it introduces but one personage for whom an atom of sympathy can be entertained, and the little action it embodies is clogged by a mass of verbiage which only a Parisian audience, used to such experience by Parisian actors, will tolerate. The story of "The Danicheffs" has already found a place in these columns, but may be briefly rehearsed anew. Vladimir, son of the haughty Countess Danicheff, is deeply in love with Anna, the favorite attendant and companion of the Countess. Anna, however, is still a serf, and Vladimir's declaration must have been little short of a death-blow to the Countess, had she not seen a way to prevent the threatened marriage. Vladimir is on the point of leaving for Moscow. His mother asks that he shall go into society, shall try to forget Anna and to marry in his own rank; promising, however, that if he returns at the end of a year, and is still in the same mind, she will offer no opposition. But no sooner has Vladimir departed than she forces Anna to marry Osip, whom she had that morning freed from his serfdom. Osip loves Anna, but he is devotedly attached to his master, and knows his secret. Were he to refuse, as he gladly would do for his master's sake, the Countess would only force Anna to marry some less worthy man, and the ceremony is performed. Immediately afterward Osip and his wife quit the house and take up their abode in a dwelling more fit for the occupancy of two emancipated serfs. After several months have expired Vladimir hears of the Countess' machinations, and comes furiously to denounce and punish what he believes to be the treachery of one he had made his friend. Osip does not shrink from the uplifted whip, and as the Count looks into the man's face his hand drops. Then he hears the story. The marriage ceremony has been an empty form, and Osip has held the bride in sacred trust for the lover to whom she had given her heart. But there is still this difficulty, that Osip and Anna are legally married, and the Princess Lydia, who undertakes to obtain the Czar's consent to a divorce, is in reality an enemy, for she has hoped and supposed that Vladimir loved her, and, professing friendship, is in truth eager for revenge. But Osip finds a way to free himself from the bonds which under other circumstances would be so light a burden. By devoting himself to the service of the Church he can obtain a divorce, and though the Princess would fain check this method of escape, the Czar's permission is gained by Zakaroff, a trader, who owes the Princess a bitter grudge, and thus repays her. Much of this plot is unquestionably M. Nowski's, but at least one personage—M. Roger de Taldé—is M. Dumas' own, and all the long speeches—and these are neither few nor distant from each other—are clearly from the same source. That M. Dumas has not been sparing of his pains becomes speedily apparent. Unluckily, the protracted disquisitions, the witty banter, and the pathetic moralisations go as far toward damaging the piece in the eyes of an American audience as they must have done toward helping it in France. The dialogue, indeed, must have carried everything before it in Europe, for the story is too simple to sustain four acts, and the action does not progress between the close of the first act and the beginning of the fourth. Clever though the delivery of bright or touching speeches may be, an English-speaking assemblage promptly tires of them. And, what is particularly to be regretted, an English-speaking assemblage does not care to be enlightened at the expense of being amused. Else there would be some hope for "The Danicheffs," in which representative types and scenes of Russian life—a sort of life so ill-known as to have for thoughtful persons a special charm—are reproduced with commendable care. Monday, at least, many curious pictures and passages must have been caviare to the general. The average theatre-goer, in fact, does not seek studies of men and manners on the stage. The spectacle of a Russian noblewoman speaking of her serfs as she does of the dumb brutes on a stud-farm may be enlightening but is not uncommonly pleasant, and a scene like the Russian wedding, an interview like that between M. De Taldé and the Princess—a veritable fencing-match with epigrams for thrusts—and elaborate and saintly tirades like those of Osip are of small weight with spectators anxious above all things for action and deeds. The third act of "The Danicheffs" is unquestionably the most dramatic, although even at this stage of events, the play often drags. The second act acquaints the public with Zakaroff, a comical ex-serf, who being then trampled upon by the Princess, subsequently revenges himself for his wrongs, but it delays the advance of the story to exceedingly slender purpose. A curious trait noticeable at this point is the anti-climax, by which, after a brief but powerful encounter between Vladimir and the Countess, the curtain is kept up until the Princess strikes an attitude prophetic of revenge: this can hardly be considered as a happy thought, either in Paris or in New-York. The fourth act is excessively tedious. The interpretation of the new work, Monday, was, relatively, good. We say relatively, because it is impossible, outside of France, to give to a composition of this kind a rendering equal to its exigencies. The conviction with which French artists fill their parts, and the marvelous finesse and delicacy of touch which make their treatment of the most improbable and disagreeable themes acceptable, are not the results, merely, of months or years of study, but of tem perament, of tuition based on time-honored traditions, and of observation of types not to be met in cosmopolitan cities. The best of our comedians are wanting in these attributes, and, hence, the efforts of the performers, Monday, successful as they were in the degree we have hinted at, fell short of success where possibilities were detected. The most satisfactory personation is "The Danicheffs" is that of the Princess by Miss Katharine Rogers, whose scene with M. De Taldé was a very fine exhibition of proud coquetry, superb disdain, and overwhelming hauteur. More exacting, and almost as clever, was Miss Morant's Countess, while Miss Sara Jewett's intelligent and refined methods only proved unequal to the demands now and then made upon Anna—notably in the scene of the marriage and when she flies for protection to Osip, in act the third—from sheer lack of emotional power. Mr. Thorne's Osip is deficient in pathos; in dignity, intensity, and manly grace we could wish no worthier representative of the character. We do not admire Mr. O'Neill's Vladimir—a hard and artificial portrayal, and Mr. Floyd's M. De Taldé we are reluctantly constrained to describe as more sheepish than incisive and brilliant. The minor rôles are in competent hands, Messrs. Stoddart, Parselle, and Montgomery, and Mmes. Vernon, Wilkins, and Farren, being included in the cast. Mr. Stoddart, as Zakaroff, has but one scene, and acts in it after his wonted fashion and with the wonted effect. The scenery and costumes in the new piece are superb.

BOOTH'S THEATRE.

A new drama, dealing with personages of a familiar type and with scenes illustrative of contemporaneous events, real and possible, was made known at Booth's Theatre, Monday, to a very large audience. It is called "Fifth Avenue," is divided into five acts, and enlists the services of a large force of well-known artists. "Fifth Avenue" is from the pen of Mr. George Fawcett Rowe. Its characters and its actions are altogether local. The ground, indeed, is new and then shifted from Metropolitan streets and mansions to the banks of the Hudson; but to this the most devout worshiper of the unities can offer no serious objection. The result is a play with many effective incidents, to which the single chasm—that of slightness of connection between the numerous pictures unveiled—can be met with the assertion that a panoramic story, rather than a study of men and manners, has been kept in view by the writer while at work upon his task. Without narrating with too copious detail the plot of "Fifth Avenue," its purport will be indicated by a mention of the fact that it rests upon the successful career of a young American, Mr. Richard Blake. The fortunes of this gentleman, who, at an early period, is disclosed as an aspirant to the hand of Olivia Schuyler, a millionaire's daughter, first betrothed to Hon. Graham Liddesdale, a placid Englishman, are illustrated throughout the piece. In the opening act, most of the personages are at sea. When off the banks of Newfoundland, the steamer bearing them homeward comes into collision with another vessel, and sinks, Olivia being rescued by Richard Blake. In act the second, a large commercial company, of which Mr. Schuyler is the President, is shown to be on the verge of bankruptcy. Richard Blake is again at hand, and by shrewdness and firmness averts the imminent calamity. In the third act it is determined to build a monitor, and Richard Blake, taking the affair in charge, brings about the successful launch of the prodigy. In act the fourth the consequences of the deadly enmity of one Richard Blogg toward both Mr. Schuyler and his protegé bear fruit, and the banker is murdered. In the fifth act Richard Blake, unjustly accused of the crime, is discovered to be innocent, and the curtain falls, after a stirring picture of the draft riots of 1863 has been beheld, upon a prospective realization of the hero's wishes. The action hurrying along the events we have briefly alluded to naturally affords abundant opportunity for picturesque and realistic views. Without slighting the language of the drama, Mr. Rowe has evinced unusual fertility of invention in giving grounds for the exhibition of varied acting and views, and in so handling each of the numerous divisions of every act as to render the scenes at least likely of occurrence. That a few of the incidents might be omitted without breaking the continuity of the tale must be admitted, but life is made up of episodes, and those lives which are most interesting because most probable are seldom perfect chrysolites. The glances Mr. Rowe allows the spectator into in-door and out of door existence in this hemisphere are at times vivid in color, and stirringly truthful. Some of them are exceedingly striking. The sinking of the steamship is very cleverly managed; it forms a powerful denouement for the first act, and was enthusiastically applauded. Then comes a remarkably correct and animated picture of Wall street, and next a bustling sketch of a meeting of angry shareholders. The chief transactions in the third act are conducted on an estate on the banks of the Hudson. In the fourth act we have a view of Fifth avenue, near Twenty-second street, some comic songs and dances by two bill-posters, and a murder scene, which, it had been rumored, was to represent a tragedy which took place in that vicinity several years since. Those persons who came to the theatre with anticipations of this kind, however, were disappointed, as were those, also, who had hoped that a foolish injunction, and the subsequent proceedings in the courts, might add to the notoriety of the drama. Many one ever entertained an idea of the sort, (which is much to be doubted,) it is clear that correct information as to the character of the transactions in the scene compelled the conclusion that the game was not worth the candle. "Fifth Avenue," Monday, may be said to have achieved a succès d' estime. Applause was frequent during the first act, and at its close the principal actors were called before the curtain. Mr. George Rignold was the Richard Blake of the play, and favored the public with an entirely new and surprising portrait of an educated American. This personage, according to Mr. Rignold, is a gentleman who is slow and hesitating in speech, awkward in manner, and slouching in gait. Monday he seldom knew what to say, and never how to say it. The character of Simon Schuyler, the wealthy President of an iron company, was intrusted to Mr. James H. Taylor, and Hon. Graham Liddesdale, the aristocratic Englishman, found a fitting representative in Mr. Frederick Warde. The heroine of the piece—Olivia, the daughter of Simon Schuyler—fell to the lot of Miss Maud Granger, who acted with commendable good taste, and exhibited genuine feeling. Mr. Charles Parsloe and Mr. George S. Knight, two gentlemen well known in performances of a somewhat different order, were recognized in the garb of bill posters, and Mr. John Wild, as the negro Nelson, was greeted in so hearty a manner as to leave no one in uncertainty as to the penchant of the majority of the spectators. The remainder of the cast does not require particular notice. The managers of the theatre have provided new and beautiful scenery for "Fifth Avenue," the most remarkable sets having been already described. The piece is announced for repetition until further notice.

THE PRESS CLUB ENTERTAINMENT.

The entertainment given last night in Steinway Hall under the auspices of the New-York Press Club was in every respect a gratifying success. The hall was filled with a truly representative audience, large numbers of prominent men and women who dignify and grace metropolitan life being among the spectators. The gathering, while an elegant one, was by no means formal, for hundreds met who were in daily intercourse, and hence the occasion was as pleasing in its social aspect as in its financial results. The programme was very liberal, but its variety and excellence were so uncommon as to hold the audience to the end, and the performers were freely and warmly applauded, and frequently constrained to return to the stage. The President of the club, Mr. Charles H. Pulham, explained the unavoidable absence of Miss Kellogg, who had kindly volunteered to be present and sing, but who had afterward been compelled to withdraw her promise. Mr. Horatio C. King then opened the entertainment proper with a graceful organ performance, and was followed by the choir of Apollo Boys, who appeared under the direction of their popular teacher, Mr. William Francis Williams, and sang Spofforth's delightful "Hail, Smiling Morn," and the well-known chorus from "Ernani" in a manner that secured for the vocalists a deservedly cordial round of applause. Mr. S. L. Clemens—"Mark Twain"—was gracefully introduced by the President of the club as an old member, and gave an account of his "Encounter with an Interviewer" and his "Dueling Experiences," which kept the audience in constant laughter. Messrs. A. D. Woodruff, A. T. Hills, G. E. Rockwood, and Jules G. Lumbard sang Hatton's songs "King Witlaf's Drinking Horn" and "The Happiest Land" with rare skill, and the warm plaudits which followed them from the stage were general and prolonged. Mme. Pappenheim, always a favorite, was last night received with more than usual heartiness. She sang "Robert, toi que j'aime" so superbly that an encore rewarded her and brought forth Abt's "Gute nacht, mein herziges kind," which the prima donna rendered so acceptably that the audience would have insisted upon hearing her again but for fear of actual indiscretion. In the second part of the concert Mme. Pappenheim sang Millard's pretty "Waiting" charmingly. Mr. George Werrenrath needed no new test to make him a popular singer, and he rendered Robaudi's "Alla Stella Confidante" in a very tasteful manner, while Mr. F. Boscovits created a flutter of delight among enthusiastic pianists by his execution of a quaint old composition, "The Village Bell." Mr. Boscovits afterward gave his "Steinway March." Mrs. Zelda Seguin, a favorite among favorites, not only with the journalistic fraternity, who have always expressed good wishes for her success, but with everybody else possessed of taste and feeling, raised a whirlwind of applause by her singing of Hullah's "Storm." The excitement could not be stayed by anything less than a ballad, and the lady sang a pretty little Irish song—"I wrote my love a letter." Mr. Castle, the distinguished tenor, was greeted as another welcome friend, and he sang Salaman's "Celia" with capital effect. In the second part of the programme Mrs. Seguin and Mr. Castle sang very sweetly together in the famous duet between Maurico and Azucena from "Il Trovatore." Mr. Jules Lumbard's noble voice was heard to good advantage in Ricci's "Here upon my vessel's deck," and he was generously applauded. Mr. A. P. Burbank, one of our most skillful elocutionists, gave everybody a chance to laugh heartily at "Schneider's Account of the Performance of Leah," and Mr. Charles Roberts in his wonderful recitation of Poe's "Bells," made it almost possible to forget that the poem had ever been thought hackneyed. Mr. Roberts was compelled to return at its close, and he then recited and sang the comic ditty from the Bab Ballads—"The Yarn of the Nancy Brig." Mr. Werrenrath next interpreted a sprightly composition by Mr. Horatio C. King, to words by Mr. Bayard Taylor, with great vivacity, and Mr. William Carleton, whose beautiful voice has been admired for some years, already, on the operatic stage, sang Faure's "Rameaux" with fine effect. The quartets "When evening's twilight" and "Sailor's Song," by Hatton, rendered by Messrs. Woodruff, Rockwood Hills, and Lumbard, concluded the entertainment, which was certainly one most creditable to all the artists concerned in it, and a thoroughly satisfactory and memorable one for the club under whose auspice it was given.

GENERAL MENTION.

"A Morning Call," with Mr. Wallack and Miss Dyas, and "Married Life" will be acted at Wallack's Theatre, this evening, and Monday Mr. Wallack will perform in "Wild Oats."

Mr. Heller offers nightly, throughout this week, a new programme of marvelous tricks. A more agreeable light entertainment than that supplied at the Wonder Theatre is not to be enjoyed in town.

"Marion" is the title of the new musical comedy now represented nightly at the New Broadway Theatre—erroneously alluded to as Wood's Museum in a recent reference to the place in these columns. "Marion" is a lively composition of the French order, and is vivaciously acted by the company of the theatre.

Miss Abbott's first concert will take place at Chickering Hall, this evening. Miss Abbott is to sing the grand air from "Robert," and "Ah, non credea," and "Ah! non giunge," from "La Somnambula." She will have the co-operation of Mr. W. R. Case, a young pianist new to American audiences, and that of Signori Brignoli and Ferranti.

"Lucia di Lammermoor" was sung at the Academy of Music yesterday evening, Miss Rosewald representing with considerable cleverness Edgar's ill-fated bride, Mr. Mass singing the tenor music exceedingly well, and Mr. Carleton lending his fine voice to the baritone rôle. Miss Kellogg, it should here be mentioned, was indisposed, and hence the substitution of Miss Rosewald for that popular artist. "The Flying Dutchman" is announced for performance this evening.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

PRINCIPAL ITEMS OF THE APPROPRIATIONS AGREED TO IN THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The House Committee on Commerce completed the River and Harbor Appropriation bill this morning, and it will be reported to the House at the first opportunity. The total amount of the appropriations recommended is $2,275,800, including, as the largest single item, $200,000 for removing obstructions from the East River and Hell Gate, New-York. The other principal items in the bill are as follows:

For the improvement of rivers: Mouth of the Mississippi, $100,000; Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas, $65,000; Mississippi, opposite St. Louis, $70,000; Des Moines Rapids, Mississippi River, $95,000; Upper Mississippi, $30,000; Rock Island Rapids, Mississippi River, $10,000; Missouri River above the mouth of the Yellowstone, $10,000; Tennessee River, $200,000; Ohio River, $130,000; St. Mary's River and St. Mary's Falls Canal, $100,000; Saginaw River, $30,000; Schuylkill River, $15,000; Falls of St. Anthony, Minn., $5,000; Delaware River, below Petty's Island, $35,000; James River, Virginia, $40,000; Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, $10,000; Little Kanawha River, West Virginia, $5,000; Cape Fear River, $110,000; Connecticut River, below Hartford, $35,000 Tauntan River, Massachusetts, $5,000; Providence River, Rhode Island, $5,000 For Harbor Improvements: Galveston, Texas, $100,000; Savannah, Ga., $95,000; Baltimore, $60,000; Buffalo, $50,000; Oswego, N. Y., $50,000; Boston, $25,000; Provincetown, Mass., $10,000; Hyannis, Mass., $10,000; Erie, Penn., $25,000; for the construction of an ice harbor at Chester, Penn., $800; harbor and breakwater at Wilmington, Del., $34,000; for breakwater at Cleveland, Ohio, $40,000; harbor at Toledo, Ohio, $30,000; Chicago, $5,000; Michigan City, Ind., $35,000; Harbor of Refuge, Lake Huron, Mich., $75,000; Grand Haven, Mich., $20,000; Cheboygan, Mich., $15,000; Milwaukee Harbor, $20,000; miscellaneous dredging, Superior Bay, $28,000; ship channel, in Galveston Bay, $28,000; examination, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors, $15,000; examination and surveys at South Pass of the Mississippi River, $15,000.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7—1 A. M.—For the Middle and East Atlantic States stationary or falling barometer, south and west winds, and warmer, partly cloudy weather.

IN THIS CITY.

The following record shows the changes in the temperature for the past 24 hours, in comparison with the corresponding date of last year, as indicated by the thermometer at Hudnut's pharmacy:

	1876.	1877.		1876.	1877.
3 A. M.	16°	39°	3:30 P. M.	33°	40°
6 A. M.	18°	33°	6 P. M.	33°	37°
9 A. M.	18°	36°	9 P. M.	32°	35°
12 M.	30°	39°	12 P. M.	33°	32°

Average temperature yesterday.....35½°
Average temperature for corresponding date last year.....26½°

MYSTERIOUS MAIL ROBBERY.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 6.—It has just been learned that a mail bag containing letters and about $25,000 worth of bank checks and private drafts, while en route from Newport, Ky., to Cincinnati, several days ago, was opened and the contents abstracted. No clue whatever has been obtained as to who committed the deed, or as to the whereabouts of the missing papers. There has been a determined effort to keep the matter hushed up, and for a time it had been successful. The First National Bank of Covington had over $10,000 worth of checks in that mail, and James Taylor & Sons, bankers, a still larger amount. Among other papers there was a gold draft on a California bank for $5,000.

STRIKE OF COAL MINERS.

POTTSVILLE, Feb. 6.—On account of a small reduction made recently in the pay of miners in the Stanton Colliery at Mahanoy Plane, they held a mass-meeting last night, after which they notified the operators that they had resolved to strike. In accordance with this resolution, work in the colliery was suspended to-day, and upward of 1,100 men are idle. It is a source of surprise that such a large number of men should voluntarily cease work in the midst of Winter, considering that for some time past many unemployed men have been leaving the region to seek employment elsewhere.

MARINE DISASTERS.

HAVANA, Feb. 6.—The schooner Nancy M. Rose, from Philadelphia Jan. 21, for Cardenas, is ashore on the reefs of Cruz del Padre, and will be a total loss. Her cargo will probably be saved.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Feb. 6.—Intelligence was received here to-day that the ship Norseman, one of the finest of the St. John fleet, was run into by the steam-ship Rose, in latitude 4° north, while making a voyage from the Guano Islands to Queenstown, and sunk. The crew were rescued and landed at Montevideo.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—The British ship Norseman, Capt. Lane, from Mejillones, for Europe, has been abandoned after a collision. The crew have arrived at Buenos Ayres.

COIN COUNTERFEITERS CAPTURED.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 6.—Mary Fryer was arrested at the South Street Ferry yesterday afternoon on suspicion of passing counterfeit coin. On going to her residence the officers discovered James Fryer and Thomas Mitchell engaged in the manufacture of counterfeit 10-cent pieces, and a full set of counterfeiters' implements was found in their possession. On Mrs. Fryer was found a lot of the bogus coins. The prisoners were held to await a hearing before the United States Commissioner.

FOUR MEN KILLED IN A MINE.

ALLENTOWN, Penn., Feb. 6.—A frightful accident occurred yesterday at the iron-ore mine of Daniel Lauer at Hensingerville, Lehigh County, 12 miles from this place. While workmen were digging ore, the ground caved in upon them, burying Henry Hunsberger, Lewis Engle, Reese Lewes, and David Frederick, under 10 feet of earth. The three first named were killed, and Frederick sustained very serious injuries, but will probably recover.

ASSEMBLY NOMINATION.

MIDDLETOWN, Feb. 6.—The Democrats of the Second District of Orange County met in convention here to-day, and nominated J. V. D. Benedict, of Warwick, on the twenty-sixth ballot, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Assemblyman S. L. Durland.

ALBANY.

WARM DEBATES IN THE ASSEMBLY.

THE BILL TO PROHIBIT POOL-SELLING—AN IMPORTANT AMENDMENT MADE TO IT—MR. LANGBEIN'S BILL IN RELATION TO THE DISTRICT COURTS—BUSINESS IN THE SENATE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1877.

Tuesday being general order day, the Assembly went into Committee of the Whole this morning, and the first bill discussed was that to prevent pool-selling. This measure was reported from the Judiciary Committee in place of the several bills on the same subject which had been introduced and referred to it. The discussion on the bill lasted nearly two hours, and at times became very personal, so much so that the speakers had to be called to order. The chief point of dispute was whether the bill should be extended to absolutely prohibit the selling of pools on horse-races. The country members, or the greater portion of them, seemed to be strongly in favor of stopping the tricks of pool-sellers at the rural fairs; and, in the end, the House adopted an amendment offered by Judge Hogeboom, which prohibited the selling of pools on horse-races anywhere. As the bill originally stood, the prohibition extended only to selling pools in any house or building, the intention being to allow persons to sell pools on a race-track if they wanted to. The Senate Judiciary Committee had prepared a precisely similar bill to this, in which this concession, not certainly a dangerous one, to the sporting fraternity was made. The House bill, with Judge Hogeboom's amendment to it, was ordered to a third reading. If it passes in that form the Senate will certainly amend it, and should the House be too tenacious, the failure of the whole measure will be the result, and the pernicious practise of keeping pool-rooms to sell pools on elections, &c., will go on unchecked.

The next bill of importance discussed was that introduced by Mr. Langbein to provide for a revision of the laws relative to the administration of justice in the District Courts of the City. This bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee by unanimous vote, and for few bills now in the Legislature can better reasons be adduced why they should become laws. The corruption, the inefficiency, and the gross extravagance of most of these District Courts is so notorious that no defense of them can be offered; yet it seems that few members on either side of the House care to boldly tackle the subject, and give it the heroic treatment it deserves. It is probable that the persons connected with these courts have friends who, while they will not defend, at least do not care to attack the little nests of corruption. In the debate this morning, Mr. Langbein was left to defend the bill single-handed against Mr. Ecclesine, Mr. Purdy, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Grady, and last of all, the redoubtable Gen. Spinola. It is true Mr. Langbein did very well, and undoubtedly had the House in sympathy with him; but he is new, is a young man, and not habituated yet to sharp running debate. He is thoroughly informed on the subject of these courts, and in argument before a committee on it would be a match for each and all his opponents of this morning; but a little more practice will be required for him to do as well on the floor of the House. Why he should have been left alone in his fight is not easy to explain. The bill was first attacked by Mr. Grady, who moved to strike out that portion of it which required the Commissioners to "report suitable provisions for the election of such justices on general ticket, and for longer and classified terms of office." The bill, it will be remembered, provides for the appointment by the Governor, with the consent of the Senate, of three Commissioners, "learned in the law," to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all the statutes now in force applicable to the administration of justice in the district courts; also, in their report, to recommend what additional legislation, if any, shall be necessary for the improvement of these courts. The Commissioners were to receive $1,000 each for their services. The report is to be delivered to the Governor in December next. Mr. Grady succeeded in carrying his amendment, but it has no practical effect one way or the other; since, as the Commissioner's duties are only advisory as to new legislation, it is within their competence to recommend any plan or plans whatever, which may seem to further the objects for which they were appointed. The next ammendment was one by Mr. Purdy, to cut down the compensation of the Commissioners to $500 each, from $1,000, as the bill provides. Mr. Ecclesine was opposed to the bill altogether, and so one who spoke in favor of the amendments seemed to have much good will toward it. Spinola was making one of his characteristic speeches against it, consisting mainly of an attack on Mr. Cowdin, (which he especially delights to do, and which Mr. Cowdin treats with silent contempt,) when the hour of 2 arrived, the bill was progressed, and the House adjourned. Mr. Ecclesine, in his speech, complained, as did Mr. Grady, that the Legislature would not let the City of New-York alone. Let us alone, let us alone, was the burden of his cry. In response to this, it may be pointed out, that of the 70 or 80 bills for all kinds of purposes, now in the Legislature, affecting the City of New-York, every one of them has been introduced by either a New-York member, or some member from an adjoining county who is looked upon as, and considers himself, a New-York man.

Senator Gerard introduced a bill for the appointment, by the Board of Education of New-York, of an Assistant Superintendent of Schools and School Buildings, whose duty it shall be to visit the public schools of the City and examine into their sanitary condition, see that the buildings are properly ventilated, and gather statistics relative to contagious diseases and the general health of the public schools. He is required to make an annual report to the Board of Education. Mr. Gerard also introduced a bill, which has received the sanction of the Board of Architects and of the Fire Underwriters of New-York City, for the better protection of the public against fire in theatres in the City.

The Senate ordered to a third reading the bill introduced by Mr. Carpenter, providing that in actions brought against the Mayor of New-York for damages to real estate in Westchester and Putnam Counties, arising from the Croton water supply, the parties bringing the action need not give the 20 days' notice, usually required, to the Controller of their claims, and that such actions may be brought outside of New-York County.

The Court of Appeals to-day rendered a decision in favor of the constitutionality of the Judicial Sales bill framed last Winter, commonly known as the "Sheriff's bill," which gave the Sheriff of Kings County the exclusive sales of property under foreclosure.

The Ways and Means Committee will to morrow report Mr. Alvord's bill allowing towns, cities, and villages to replace bonds falling due by other bonds at a lower rate of interest, and running for long terms. This is an important measure, affording a much needed relief to burdened municipalities. The Legislature has already passed five local bills to allow this, and will undoubtedly be called upon to pass 50 more bills of the same sort unless this general measure becomes a law. The same committee will give another hearing to-morrow to the architects and others connected with the new Capitol building.

The bill relating to the office of Superintendent of Public Works is the special order for to-morrow morning in the Assembly. A spirited debate may be looked for, but the talk will not be allowed to run to such wearisome and useless lengths as it did this morning.

Mr. Langbein's District Court bill being progressed, will come up in the next Committee of the Whole, and it will then only be left to Mr. Langbein to fight it through.

The Committee on Cities this afternoon agreed to report Mr. Cowdin's bill to require the Mayor to call an advisory council, consisting of the heads of the City departments and a number of eminent citizens, to agree upon the legislation necessary to a more economical administration of the City Government. The bill has been amended so as to require the report of the council to be sent to the Legislature by March 10.

Mr. Corsa's bill relative to the Jefferson Market Court-house will be reported back intact.

The house is well up with its general orders, and the whole calendar would have been cleared off this morning had not the debate been so unnecessarily protracted on the pool selling and District Court bills. Whatever delay there is in the business of the house now comes from the tardiness of some of the committees in reporting bills. This complaint, however, cannot be made against the Judiciary Committee, which has been sending in its reports with unfailing punctuality. It should not be assumed that the committees are not working because they do not send in much. All the more important committees have been sitting nearly every afternoon. As a whole, the business of the House is in rather a more forward state than it was at the same time last year. The New-York bills, however, certainly drag along rather slowly.

The bill in relation to the office of Superintendent of State Prisons still hangs in the Ways and Means Committee, principally on account of Judge Hogeboom's absence. Mr. Post is looking after the measure.

LEGISLATION AT TRENTON.

THE BILL FOR THE RELIEF OF THE NEWARK MURDERERS PASSED—BELIEF THAT GOV. BEDLE WILL DECLINE TO SIGN IT—A JOINT CONVENTION TO BE HELD TO-DAY.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1877.

The bill introduced into and passed by the Senate last night, the purpose of which is to secure a writ of error in the cases of Oschwald and Ryan, the Newark murderers, sentenced to be hanged on Friday morning, was brought into the Assembly this morning, and the concurrence of that body asked. On motion of Mr. Vail, the rules were suspended so as to permit its immediate passage. It met with the opposition of Mr. Bergen, of Somerset, who declared that it would bring reproach on the speediness, if not the certainty, of Jersey justice. "The second trial," he declared, with apparent confusion of ideas, "will result in a verdict of manslaughter, and the third trial in one of conviction." This brought Mr. Vail to his feet in advocacy of the bill. He said that the law permits a writ of error as of right when a man is in danger of going to jail for three months; but it ceases to become a matter of right when a man's life hangs upon it. The condition of the law was anomalous, and, without reference to the Newark case, the bill ought to be sustained on its merits. When the vote was taken on the question of its final passage, several members arose in their seats, and gave in their adhesion to the bill because of their conscientious scruples against capital punishment. It was passed, only five dissenting votes being recorded, and was placed at once in the hands of the Governor. The Executive declared that it was the most important bill which he had been required to consider, and that he would give it his careful attention. Attorney General Vanatta, whose opinions carry considerable weight with the Governor, pronounced the bill to be one to enable convicts to fix the time for their own execution. These adverse sentiments indicate a possible refusal to sign the bill, and yet it is not likely that the Governor will take this responsibility.

A resolution was offered from the Democratic side this morning calling for a joint meeting for the election of a Controller and other officers at noon to-morrow. Mr. Griggs moved to amend by naming noon of to-day for the meeting. A tremendous "aye" was the response elicited to the call of the vote on the amendment, and a "rising" vote having been ordered, 27 members stood to record themselves in its favor, and but 24 against it. It wanted then but a few minutes before noon, and when it was remembered that the Democrats had held no conference to prepare for the meeting, nor had time to hold such a conference, a broad smile spread over the faces of the members. Mr. Egan, however, called for the yeas and nays, and they being taken, the amendment was declared lost. The original resolution was then adopted. When it reached the Senate it was laid on the table, but will probably be taken up at the session to-morrow morning. The Democrats caucused this afternoon to prepare for the coming joint meeting, but on account of the absence of members did nothing. There was a long discussion in the House this morning over the bills punishing employers who shall hereafter pay their employes in grocery orders. It was amended after a hard struggle so as to eliminate the six months' imprisonment penalty and subject the offender to a fine of $500 only. In that shape it was ordered to a third reading.

In the Senate, the nomination of Col. G. N. Abell as Prosecutor of the Pleas in Essex County, of Charles Conenhoven as Prosecutor in Middlesex, of C. S. Scott as Lay Judge in Middlesex, and of W. A. Logue as Lay Judge in Ocean, were received from the Governor and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

It is understood to-night that Gov. Bedle will not sign the bill for the relief of the Newark murderers. It is likely, however, that he will veto it. He may allow it to become a law by default on his part, holding it for the constitutional five days. The bill, in that event, will not become a law till Monday, and will be too late to prevent the execution of the doomed men on Friday next. Kruger, the Newark member, whose eccentric conduct was the occasion of so much solicitude in the Democratic camp during the Senatorial fight, was absent from the Democratic caucus this evening, and the selection of a candidate for State Controller was deferred till Monday evening. It is said that Kruger has declared his intention of being bull-dozed into no more Democratic caucuses.

NAVAL ORDERS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Commander George B. White is ordered to command the Frolic, at the South Atlantic Station, per steamer March 1; Lieuts. Murray Day and John Rodgers, Ensigns Walker Cowles and Hamilton Hutchins, Midshipmen John M. Bonditt, Walker McLean, Daniel R. Case, and Abraham E. Culver, Assistant Surgeon William R. Dubose, Boatswain John S. Sinclair, and Gunner Joseph Smith are ordered to the Trenton, at New-York, on the 12th inst. Medical Director Joseph Wilson is ordered to assume the duties of President of the Medical Board of Examiners at Washington. Surgeon John C. Spear is ordered as a member of the Medical Board of Examiners at Washington. Lieut. Commander Nicholl Ludlow is detached from duty at the Torpedo Station and ordered to the Trenton as Executive. Lieuts. Abram H. Vail and Isaac Hazlett are detached from the Hydrographic Office and ordered to the Trenton; Lieut. Edward S. Toussig, from the Monongahela, and Lieut. Charles A. Stone, from the Washington Navy-yard, and ordered to the Trenton. Lieut. William H. Beehler is detached from the Alliance, and placed on waiting orders. Ensign Charles A. Lyeth is detached from the Colorado, and Ensign Robert H. McClean from the Powhattan, and ordered to the Trenton. Pay Inspector Edward Foster is detached from the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, and ordered to the Trenton, and also as Fleet Paymaster of the European Station. Passed Assistant Surgeon John W. Ross is detached from the Franklin, and ordered to the Trenton. Chaplain Henry Clark is detached from the Boston Navy-yard, and ordered to the Trenton. Chief Engineer Edward Fithian is detached from special duty at Washington, and ordered to the Trenton, and also as Fleet Engineer of the European Squadron. Passed Assistant Engineer George W. Baird is relieved from duty in the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and Sailmaker George W. Diet is detached from the New-York Navy-yard, and ordered to the Trenton.

BROTHER AND SISTER KILLED.

Gerhardt and Catharine Hessling, brother and sister, aged 9 and 7 years, were instantly killed Sunday afternoon at the corner of Seventh and Lafayette streets, in the southern part of St. Louis. They were out in holiday attire, and waved kisses to their parents when leaving the house, No. 804 Gever avenue. In crossing the street they were knocked down by a passing car, the wheels passing over both children, breaking the boy's neck and crushing the girl's head.

AN ANECDOTE OF MR. LINCOLN.

In a communication to the New-Haven Palladium, Dr. Thomas P. Gibbons, late a Surgeon in the Army, relates the following: "During the Spring of 1862 I was engaged in the City of Washington in preparing hospital accommodations for the wounded soldiers brought up by steamer from the peninsula. A few days after the receipt of several hundred of the wounded from the battle of Williamsburg I met Mr. Lincoln in the vicinity of my hospital, and asked him if he would not come in and make us a visit. With that peculiar sericomic expression of his face, assumed at times, which those who were familiar with him will not soon forget, he replied: 'Do you think it would be right for the President of the United States to make a visit except by special appointment?' I said: 'That is for you to determine, Mr. President.' 'Well, then, how would you like it if I came to see you to-morrow at 5 o'clock?' I told him I would be gratified, and he drove on. Punctual to the time next day he came, and I showed him through the wards containing some 500 sick and wounded men. He walked quietly through, talking pleasantly, shaking the hands of those who had hands to shake, and endeavoring by his kindness and consideration for their wants to encourage, and comfort the poor fellows. After spending about two hours he was about to leave when I said, 'We have some wards in which there are about 30 officers of various grades from Generals to Lieutenants; would not you wish to visit them?' To which he made this reply: 'The officers will be taken care of; I have no fears for them; but I wished to know that the men were properly provided for.' Then again, in a sort of absent manner: 'The officers will be taken care of.'"

INDIAN OUTRAGES IN ARIZONA.

GOV. SAFFORD URGES THE ORGANIZATION OF INDIAN SCOUTS TO SUPPRESS THE HOSTILES—INEFFICIENCY OF THE UNITED STATES TROOPS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 6.—Dispatches from Tucson, Arizona, state that the Apaches are killing and plundering the settlers in south-eastern Arizona. Ten whites were killed in the Senorita Valley, on the 4th inst. Gov. Safford has sent a message to the Legislature recounting the depredations and murders committed, dwelling on the inefficient manner in which military operations are being conducted—troops moving slowly with heavy trains

COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1877.

The receipts of the principal kinds of Produce since our last have been as follow:

Ashes, pkg.	50	Oil, bbls.	61
Beans, bbls.	516	Oil-cake, pkg.	1,213
Broom-corn, bales.	43	Oil-cake, bbls.	131
Beans, bbls.	516	Oil-cake, pkg.	1,213
Cotton, bales.	4,728	Pork, pkg.	1,039
Cheese, bbls.	172	Pork, bbls.	6
Dried Fruit, pkg.	372	Cut-meats, pkg.	5,483
Eggs, bbls.	273	Grease, pkg.	858
Flour, bbls.	14,719	Lard, pkg.	2,400
Wheat, bushels.	21,000	Lard, kegs.	526
Corn, bushels.	26,000	Seed, pkg.	50
Oats, bushels.	23,776	Butter, pkg.	4,774
Rye, bushels.	2,019	Cheese, pkg.	3,313
Malt, bushels.	703	Tallow, pkg.	122
Barley, bushels.	8,100	Lard-oil, bbls.	25
Peas, bushels.	2,233	Dressed Hogs, No.	2,594
Grass-seed, bags.	1,731	Pea-nuts, bags.	6
Corn-meal, bbls.	1,040	Rice, pkg.	182
Corn-meal, bags.	350	Sugar, hhds.	360
S. W. flour, pkg.	245	Sugar, bbls.	11
Hemp, cut-s.	1,252	Spelter, pcs.	588
Hops, bales.	605	Staves, pcs.	3,311
Hides, No.	1,200	Skins, bales.	13
Hides, bales.	624	Tobacco, hhds.	26
Leather, sides.	20,007	Tobacco, trs. & cs.	170
Lead, pigs.	1,000	Whalebone, bales.	1,078
Molasses, (N.O., bbls	1,067	Wool, bales.	168
Moss, bales.	50	Sundries, pkg.

ASHES—Trade has been unimportant in amount. Pots quoted nominally steady at $4 75, and Pearls at $6 5-@$6 75 ₱ 100 lbs.

BEES-WAX—A light demand has been noted for Yellow at from 30c.@33c., the latter for very choice.

CANDLES—Continue in limited request, with Adamantine quoted at 11½@13½c.; Paraffine, 10c. @20c.; Sperm, patent, 28c.; Sperm, pateat, 30c.; Stearic, 27c.@28c. ₱ lb.

COAL—The movement is throughout in tame and unsatisfactory, with prices generally quoted weak. Anthracite is quoted as follows: Cargo quoted at $3 @$3 17; Liverpool Gas Canael, $10@$11; Newcastle Gas, $5 50; Scotch Gas, $5@$7; Provincial Gas, $4 50@$5; American Gas, $5 75@$6 25; Cumberland Lump, Cleaned, $5 25@$5 50, and Anthracite, $3 25@$4 50 for cargoes.

COFFEE—Has been quoted steady, though quiet, with no invoices at 17¾c.@21c.; Java, 22c.@24c.; Maracaibo and Laguayra, 18c.@20c.; Rio, ordinary to fair, 18½c.@19½c.; Costa Rica, 19c.@21c.; St. Domingo at 16c.@16½c. gold.——Last week's receipts of Rio here, 23.5 9 bags; sales, 2,889 bags; stock here this morning, 150,000 bags, of the supposed best grades; afloat and loading for the United States to Dec. 30, 141,698 bags; purchased for the United States to Feb. 3, 16,000 bags.

COTTON—Has been moderately sought after for early delivery at former figures.——Ordinary quoted today at 11 3-16c.@11 5-16c. Low Middling, 12¾c.@12¾c.; Middling, 12¾c.@13c.——Sales were officially reported, for prompt delivery, of 1,393 bales, for which 400 bales were sold on last evening, including 4 bales to shippers, 754 bales to spinners, and 635 bales to speculators.——And for forward delivery business has been moderately active at firmer, though variable prices. Sales are now reported for the day of 24,000 bales, of which 4,800 bales were on last evening, and 19,200 bales to-day, with 3,600 bales on the call, on the basis of Middling, with February options quoted at 12¾c.@12¾c.; March, 12 15-16c.@12 31-32c.; April, 13⅛c.@13 5-32c.; May, 13 5-16c.@13 11-32c.; June, 13 15-32c.@13¾c.; July, 13 49-32c.@13¾c.; August, 13 11-16c.; September, 13 ¾2c.@13 15-32c.; October, 13 5-32c.@13 ⅜c.; November, 12 27-32c.@12¾c.; December, 12 27-32c. @12¾c. ₱ lb., showing an advance of 1-32c.@1-16c. ₱ lb. The closing steady.——The receipts at this port to-day were 4,728 bales, and at the shipping ports 24,915 bales, against 22,071 bales same day last week, and thus far this week 80,532 bales, against 79,073 bales same time last week.——The exports are 5,483 bales, shipping ports 1,078 bales. Jan. 1, 1876, have been 3,221,774 bales, against 3,127,925 bales for the corresponding time in the preceding Cotton year.——Consolidated exports (three days) for Great Britain, France and the shipping ports, 24,915 bales; to the Continent, 13,376 bales. Stock in New-York to-day, 207,624 bales; consolidated stock at the ports, 881,741 bales.

Closing Prices of Cotton in New-York.

	Uplands.	Alabama.	N. O.	Texas.
Ordinary	11 3-16	11 3-16	11 5-16	11 5-16
Strict Ordinary	11 5-16	11 5-16	11 5-16	11 5-16
Good Ordinary	11 15-16	11 15-16	12 1-16	12 1-16
Strict Good Ord	12 3-16	12 3-16	12 5-16	12 5-16
Low Middling	12⅝	12⅝	12¾	12¾
Strict Low Mid	12¾	12¾	12¾	12¾
Middling	12 15-16	12 15-16	13	13
Good Middling	13⅛	13⅛	13¼	13¼
Strict Good Mid	13⅜	13⅜	13½	13½
Middling Fair	13¾	13¾	14⅛	14⅛
Fair	14¾	14¾	14⅝	14⅝

Stained.

Good Ordinary	10 13-16	Low Middling	11¾
Strict Good Ord	11 7-16	Middling	12¼

FIRE-CRACKERS—Have been very quiet, even in a jobbing way, on the basis of $1 9-@$2 ₱ box.

FISH—The leading kinds have been in somewhat better demand, with values ruling firm.——We quote: Dry Cod, at 2¾@2¾c. for Georges, and 3¾@3¾c. for Bank; Herring, $1 50@$3 75. Mackerel quoted at $10@$22 for No. 1; $9 50@$13 for No. 2, and $6 00@$10 50 for No. 3. ₱ bbl; Pickled Herring, $2 50@$6; smoked Herring at 17c.@21c. for Scaled, and 14c. for No. 1. ₱ box.; Dutch Herring, $1 10@$1 12½ ₱ box.

FLOUR AND MEAL—A limited business has been reported in most descriptions of State and Western flour, for well for the local trade and shipments, at drooping rates, in most instances, receivers offering supplies with more urgency.——Sales have been reported since our last of 9,700 bbls. of all grades, including 1,000 bbls. Superfine Flour at $5 30@$5 75; 500 bbls. Extra State at $5 50@$6 00; very poor to choice No. 2 at $4 25@$5. chiefly at $4 40@$4 75; very poor to very choice Superfine Western, $5 30@$6 00, mostly at $5 50@$5 75; good to choice do. at $6 00@$6 75@$6; good to choice do. at $6@$6 30; good city Mills Extra, shipping grades, $5 90@$7 10, nearly all for West Indies, on the basis of $6 75@$7 for good to choice. (with only 2 bbls. for small lots of choice); Rye mixtures quoted at $5@$5 50 for about choice to strictly fancy, for the South American trade, and quoted nominally at $5 50 asked for brands sunited to the English trade, (only one or two small lots were sold on this rate); very inferior to good shipping Extra Western, $5 75@$6; good to choice do., $6@$6 30; very poor to very choice Western Trade and Family Extras, spring Wheat stock, $6 10@$6 50; inferior to very choice do., do. and Amber Winter Wheat stock, at $6 20@$6 50; part for shipment at $6 75@$6, (of which 475 bbls. sold); ordinary to very choice White Wheat do., do., $6 25@$6 90; very poor to very fancy St. Louis Extras, $6 25@ $9 75; extra Genesee at $6 30@$7 50, the latter an extreme; very poor to very choice Minnesota clear and straight Extras at $6 25@$7 50; inferior to very fair to choice, and up to $8 25 for very choice, with up to $8 50 asked for fancy, (and very poor at $6 30@$6 50;) and Minnesota Patent extras, fair ordinary to fancy at $7 25@$10 50, many at $9 25@$10 25, with up to $10@$11 50 for small lots of fancy.——Included in the sales have been 2,800 bbls. shipping extras, of which 2,700 bbls. City Mills; 1,100 bbls. Minnesota clear and straight Extras; 600 bbls. do. Patent do; 475 bbls. Winter Wheat Extras, (for shipment;) 400 bbls. Superfine and 925 bbls. No. 2 at the quoted rates.——Southern Flour has been in moderate request, in a jobbing way, for export, on the basis of about previous prices.——Sales have been reported here of 2,100 bbls. in lots, at $6 00@$6 for poor to strictly choice Superfine; $6 25@$6 50 for poor to fair to fancy Extra, and $7 50@$8 50 for fair to fancy trade and family. The dealings were mostly in Extras at from $7 25@$8 25, and included 1,000 bbls. choice, for Baltimore delivery, on private terms.——Rates for South American trade have been somewhat firmer in a jobbing way, at essentially unaltered rates.——We quote at from $4 50@$6 20 for about fair Western to very choice State for superfine, and $5@$6 for poor to choice fine.——Sales reported of 235 bbls. in lots, chiefly at $5 75@$5 for fair to good Superfine State; $5 10@$5 20 for choice to very choice; $4 75@$5 for Pennsylvania, the latter for choice; and $4 50@$4 60 for at and fair to very choice Western.——Corn-meal has been quite active, but quoted a trifle cheaper.——We quote at $2 90@$3 10 for inferior to very choice Yellow Western; $2 85@$3 10 for Yellow Jersey; $3 50 for Yellow Baltimore, and $3 55 for Brandywine.——Rates have to be reported of 2,400 bbls. including 1,000 bbls. Yellow western, in lots, chiefly at $3, and 1,500 bbls. Brandywine at $3 5-.——Rye flour is in usage, has been selling to a moderate extent, within the range of $4@$4 40 for poor to very choice ₱ 100 lbs. Most of the sales have been of coarse lots, at $4 12 for the latter, quoted at $4 05@$4 10 for Western, and $4 for Baltimore, from one.——Rye meal has been in better demand, at $2 25@$2 37 for fair to choice City and Western; very choice to Fancy held higher: Canada, $7@$7 50.——Buckwheat flour has been in limited demand, within the reduced range of $3 90@$4 for fair to choice, and $4 10@$4 20 for Fancy, Jersey, and Pennsylvania. Most of the lots sold were at $4@$4 10 for fair to very good ₱ 100 lb.——The exports for the week—22,875 bbls. Wheat Flour and 304 bbls. Rye Flour.

FRUITS—Trade has been on a restricted scale at essentially unchanged figures. Sales include 1,600 bxs. Layer Raisins at $1 7-; 1,200 oxs. loose at $2 10@$2 20; 800 bxs. Valencia at 9c@9½c; 400 bxs. Currants at 6½c.; 300 cases Turkey Prunes at 5c.@ 5½c. for old, and 6½c.@6¾c. for new; 400 cases Sardines at 13c.@13½c. for quarter boxs.

GRAIN—The movement in Wheat were confined to small lots, chiefly local to millers, on the basis of about previous quotations. Including 4,000 bushels fancy White Michigan at $1 63; 1,600 bushels good Red Western at $1 50; a car-load of New-York No. 1 spring at $1 38; and sundry odd lots of ungraded Spring at $1 27@$1 40. Bids on export account were generally 2c.@3c. a bushel under asking rates. Prime No. 2 spring quoted nominally at $1 45@$1 46 for No. 2 do., (waxy, about), and $1 40@$1 43 for do., in store, and $1 40@$1 42 for No. 2 Chicago, in store, holders claiming the extreme figures in each instance, while bids were based on inside quotations. No. 3 Chicago Spring, in store, sought rates, on speculation, to a limited extent, on the basis of $1 36. Choice do., to arrive, quoted at $1 36 bid, and $1 38 asked.——Corn has been comparatively quiet to-day, with sales reported at rather lower prices on the spot, as before. Demand from shippers limited. ——Sales have been reported since our last of 47,000 bushels, including New-York No. 1, old and new, at 50c.; New-York steamer Mixed at 50½c.@50¾c., chiefly at 50½c.; New-York steamer Yellow at 51c.; New-York No. 2 White at 52c.; New-York unmerchantable at 46½c.@46¾c.; New-York no grade at 49c.@ 50½c., closing at 50½c.; new Western mixed Western, car lots, at 50½c.; Western at 51c.@51½c.; ungraded sailing-vessel Mixed Western, old crop, (nominal, at 50c.@52c.; prime No. 2 Chicago, in store and afloat, quoted at 60c.@62c.; with a cargo load, in store, reported sold at 60c.; southern Yellow at 52c.@ 54c., from dock and afloat, (of which 2,100 bushels Virginia afloat at 54c.@54½c.) Rye has been in request, but the sales for superfine have not been unsatisfactory, thus impeding negotiations.——Western car lots quoted at 83c.@85c., and in boat-loads up to 85c.@86c. asked; very good to strictly choice state, in lines or boat-loads, 92c.@95c., (with prime, for May delivery, offering at 95c.,) with car lots at 90c.@93c.; Canada, in bond, to arrive, at 93c.@94c. asked.——Trade in Barley has exhibited more animation, but values have been quoted generally weak. ——No. 1 Canada good to very choice quoted at 1.10 @$1 15, the latter rate asked for very choice; six-rowed State, fair ordinary to strictly prime, 70c.@85c., with higher prices for fancy lots; two-rowed do., fair ordinary to very choice, at 63c.@75c., the latter an extreme.——Sales have been reported of 10,000 bushels two-rowed State, in store, on private terms; 20,000 bushels good to choice six-rowed do. at 75c.@85c.; 5,000 bushels fancy do. at 86c.; 4,800 and 1,500 bushels good to choice at 49½c.——Barley Malt has been in light demand, with fair to very choice Canada West, old and new crop, quoted at $1@$1 25, chiefly prime to choice, new crop, on time, cash; strictly prime to choice, same rate to very choice, nominally at 90c.@$1 05; two-rowed do., 70c. @80c.——Buckwheat has been in light supply and quiet, strictly prime, quoted at 55c.@56c. asked, and 55c. for poor to choice fine.——Sales reported of 235 bbls. in lots, chiefly at $4 75@$5 for fair to good Superfine State; $5 10@$5 20 for choice to very choice; $4 75@$5 for Pennsylvania, the latter for choice, and $4 50@$4 60 for at and fair to very choice Western.——Corn-meal has been quite active, but quoted a trifle cheaper.——We quote at $2 90@$3 10 for inferior to very choice Yellow Western; $2 85@$3 10 for Yellow Jersey; $3 50 for Yellow Baltimore, and $3 55 for Brandywine.——Rates have to be reported of 2,400 bbls. including 1,000 bbls. Yellow western, in lots, chiefly at $3, and 1,500 bbls. Brandywine at $3 5-.——Rye flour is in usage, has been selling to a moderate extent, within the range of $4@$4 40 for poor to very choice ₱ 100 lb. Most of the sales have been of coarse lots, at $4 12 for the latter, quoted at $4 05@$4 10 for Western, and $4 for Baltimore, from one.——Rye meal has been in better demand, with values ruling firm.——We quote: Dry Cod, at 2¾@2¾c. for Georges, and 3¾@3¾c. for Bank; Herring, $1 10@$1 12½ ₱ box.

FLOUR AND MEAL—A limited business has been reported in most descriptions of State and Western flour, for well for the local trade and shipments, at drooping rates, in most instances, receivers offering supplies with more urgency.——Sales have been reported since our last of 9,700 bbls. of all grades, including 1,000 bbls. Superfine Flour at $5 30@$5 75; 500 bbls. Extra State at $5 50@$6 00; very poor to choice No. 2 at $4 25@ $5, chiefly at $4 40@$4 75; very poor to very choice superfine Western, $5 30@$6 00, mostly at $5 50@ $5 75; good to good shipping do., $5 75@$6; good to choice do. at $6@$6 30; good city Mills Extra, shipping grades, $5 90@$7 10, nearly all for West Indies, on the basis of $6 75@$7 for good to choice. (with only 2 bbls. for small lots of choice); Rye mixtures quoted at $5@$5 50 for about choice to strictly fancy, for the South American trade, and quoted nominally at $5 50 asked for brands sunited to the English trade, (only one or two small lots were sold on this rate); very inferior to good shipping Extra Western, $5 75@$6; good to choice do., $6@$6 30; very poor to very choice Western Trade and Family Extras, spring Wheat stock, $6 10@$6 50; inferior to very choice do., do. and Amber Winter Wheat stock, at $6 20@$6 50; part for shipment at $6 75@$6, (of which 475 bbls. sold); ordinary to very choice White Wheat do., do., $6 25@$6 90; very poor to very fancy St. Louis Extras, $6 25@ $9 75; extra Genesee at $6 30@$7 50, the latter an extreme; very poor to very choice Minnesota clear and straight Extras at $6 25@$7 50; inferior to very fair to choice, and up to $8 25 for very choice, with up to $8 50 asked for fancy, (and very poor at $6 30@$6 50;) and Minnesota Patent extras, fair ordinary to fancy at $7 25@$10 50, many at $9 25@$10 25, with up to $10@$11 50 for small lots of fancy.——Included in the sales have been 2,800 bbls. shipping extras, of which 2,700 bbls. City Mills; 1,100 bbls. Minnesota clear and straight Extras; 600 bbls. do. Patent do; 475 bbls. Winter Wheat Extras, (for shipment;) 400 bbls. Superfine and 925 bbls. No. 2 at the quoted rates.——Southern Flour has been in moderate request, in a jobbing way, for export, on the basis of about previous prices.——Sales have been reported here of 2,100 bbls. in lots, at $6 00@$6 for poor to strictly choice Superfine; $6 25@$6 50 for poor to fair to fancy Extra, and $7 50@$8 50 for fair to fancy trade and family. The dealings were mostly in Extras at from $7 25@$8 25, and included 1,000 bbls. choice, for Baltimore delivery, on private terms.——Rates for South American trade have been somewhat firmer in a jobbing way, at essentially unaltered rates.——We quote at from $4 50@$6 20 for about fair Western to very choice State for superfine, and $5@$6 for poor to choice fine.——Sales reported of 235 bbls. in lots, chiefly at $5

SHIPPING.

CUNARD LINE B. & N. A. R. M. S. P. CO.

NOTICE.

With the view of accommodating the advance of collision the steamers of this line take a specified course for all seasons of the year.

On the outward passage from Queenstown to New-York or Boston, crossing meridian of 50 at 43 latitude, everything to the north of 43.

On the homeward passage, crossing the meridian of 50 at 42, or nothing to the south of 42.

FROM NEW-YORK FOR LIVERPOOL AND QUEENSTOWN.

ALESIA.....WED. Feb. 7 CHINA.....WED. Feb. 21
PARTHIA...WED. Feb. 14 BATAVIA....WED. Feb. 28

Saloon passage, $80, $100, and $130, gold, according to accommodation. Return tickets on favorable terms.

Steerage tickets to and from all parts of Europe at very low rates. Draughts and passage office, 4 and 5 Bowling green.

CHAS. G. FRANCKLYN, Agent.

PASSENGERS PER STEAM-SHIP ALSATIA embark from the Cunard wharf, foot of Grand st., Jersey City, at noon on WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7, 1877.

CHARLES G. FRANCKLYN,
No. 4 Bowling Green, New-York.

WHITE STAR LINE.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL. CARRYING UNITED STATES MAIL.

The steamers of this line take the Lake Routes recommended by Lieut. Maury, U. S. N., going south of the Banks on the passage to Queenstown all the year round.

ADRIATIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 10, at 2 P. M.
BRITANNIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
CELTIC.....SATURDAY, March 10, at 2 P. M.
GERMANIC.....SATURDAY, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

Pier 47 North River, foot Perry street.

These steamers are uniform in size and unsurpassed in appointments. The saloon, stateroom, smoking and bath rooms are amidships, where the noise and motion are least felt, affording a degree of comfort hitherto unattainable at sea.

Rates—Saloon $80 and $100; return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $30.

For further notice of plans and other information apply at the Company's offices, No. 37 Broadway, New-York.

J. J. CISCO & SON, Agents.

LIVERPOOL AND GREAT WESTERN STEAM COMPANY. (LIMITED.)

LIVERPOOL (Via Queenstown).
CARRYING THE UNITED STATES MAIL.

TUESDAY.

Leaving Pier No. 46 North River as follows:

DAKOTA.....Feb. 13, at 3 P. M.
NEVADA.....Feb. 20, at 10 A. M.
IDAHO.....Feb. 27, at 3 P. M.
MONTANA.....March 6, at 10 A. M.
WISCONSIN.....March 13, at 3 P. M.
WYOMING.....March 20, at 9 A. M.

RATES OF PASSENGERS REDUCED.

Steerage, $28; intermediate, $40; cabin, $35 to $80, according to state-room. Offices, No. 29 Broadway.

WILLIAMS & GUION.

ATLAS MAIL LINE.

BI-MONTHLY SERVICE TO JAMAICA, HAYTI COLOMBIA, and ISTHMUS OF PANAMA, and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall.) First-class full-powered iron screw steamers, from Pier No. 51 North River:

For KINGSTON (Jam.) and AUX CAYES.

ATLAS.....Feb. 8
For HAYTI, COLOMBIA, ISTHMUS OF PANAMA, and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall.)
ANDES.....Feb. 14
ALPS.....Feb. 28

Superior first-class passenger accommodations.

PIM, FORWOOD & CO., Agents.
No. 56 Wall st.

STATE LINE.

NEW-YORK TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, DUBLIN, BELFAST, AND LONDONDERRY.

These first-class full-powered steamers will sail from Pier No. 43 North River, foot of Morton st.:

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.....Thursday, Feb. 8
STATE OF VIRGINIA.....Thursday, Feb. 22
STATE OF NEVADA.....Thursday, March 1

First cabin, $80, $85, and $70. Second cabin passengers. Cabin passage, $80, $100, and $130, gold, according to accommodation. Return tickets on favorable terms.

Steerage tickets to and from all parts of Europe at very low rates. Draught and passage office, 204 Broadway.

CHAS. G. FRANCKLYN, Agent.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE.

SAILING FROM PIER NO. 29 NORTH RIVER, WEDNESDAYS and SATURDAYS at 3 P. M.,

FOR CHARLESTON, S. C., FLORIDA, THE SOUTH, AND SOUTH-WEST.

GULF STREAM.....WEDNESDAY.....Feb. 7
CITY OF ATLANTA.....SATURDAY.....Feb. 10

SUPERIOR PASSENGER ACCOMMODATIONS.

Insurance to destination in full or one per cent. Goods forwarded free of commission. Passenger steerage bills of lading issued and telegraphed at the office of

JAMES W. QUINTARD & CO., Agents,
No. 177 West st., corner Warren.

Or W. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 6 Bowling Green.
Or BENTLEY D. HASSELL, General Agent
Great Southern Freight Line, 317 Broadway.

ANCHOR LINE U. S. MAIL STEAMERS.

NEW-YORK AND GLASGOW

Follvia....Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | Anchoria...Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
Alsatia....Feb. 17, 8 A. M. | California..March 3, 8 A. M.

NEW-YORK TO LIVERPOOL, LIVERPOOL AND LONDONDERRY.

Cabin $65 to $80, according to accommodations; Intermediate, $35; Steerage $28.

NEW-YORK AND LONDON.

Italia.....Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | Circassia..Feb. 24, 2 P. M.

Cabins, $55 to $70. Steerage, $28. Cabin excursion tickets at reduced rates. Drafts issued for any amount at current rates. Company's Pier Nos. 20 and 21, North River, N. Y. HENDERSON BROTHERS, Agents, No. 7 Bowling Green.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD.

STEAM-SHIP LINE BETWEEN NEW-YORK, SOUTHAMPTON, AND BREMEN.

Company's Pier, foot of 3d st., Hoboken.

SHEER.....Sat. Feb. 10 | HERMANN.....Sat., Feb. 24
ODER.....Sat. Feb. 17 | NECKAR.....Sat., March 3

RATES OF PASSAGE FROM NEW-YORK TO SOUTHAMPTON, HAVRE, OR BREMEN.

First cabin.....$100 and upward
Second cabin.....60 gold
Steerage.....30 currency

Return tickets at reduced rates. Prepaid steerage certificates, $32 currency. For freight or passage apply to OELRICHS & CO., No. 2 Bowling Green.

INMAN LINE—MAIL STEAMERS.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.

CITY OF CHESTER, Saturday, Feb. 17, at 7:30 A. M.
CITY OF RICHMOND, Saturday, March 3, at 8 A. M.
CITY OF BROOKLYN, Saturday, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

From Pier 45 North River.

CABIN, $80 and $100, Gold. Return tickets on favorable terms. STEERAGE, $28. Currency Drafts for sale at low rates.

Saloons, State-rooms, Smoking, and Bath-rooms, Midships. JOHN G. DALE, Agent, Nos. 15 and 33 Broadway, N. Y.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO FRANCE.

THE GENERAL TRANSATLANTIC COMPANY'S MAIL STEAMERS BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND HAVRE, Calling at PLYMOUTH (G. B.) for the landing of passengers.

Will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Morton st., every alternate Saturday, beginning with:

LABRADOR, saniier.....Saturday, Feb. 10, 3 P. M.

For particulars address
LOUIS DE BEBIAN, Agent, No. 55 Broadway.

FOR SAVANNAH GA.,

THE FLORIDA PORTS,
AND THE SOUTH AND SOUTH-WEST.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE, CENTRAL RAILROAD OF GEORGIA, AND ATLANTIC AND GULF RAILROAD.

WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY.

GENERAL BARNES, Capt. CRESSWELL, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7. Pier 16 East River, 3 P. M. MURRAY, FERRIS & CO., Agts., 42 South st.

SAN SALVADOR, Capt. HALLET, SATURDAY, Feb. 10, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

EL DORADO, Capt. MALLORY, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14, Pier No. 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

SAN SALVADOR, Capt. NICKERSON, SATURDAY, Feb. 17, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

Insurance ONE-HALF PER CENT. Superior accommodations for passengers. THROUGH rates and bills of lading in connection with Central R. R. of Georgia. Atlantic and Gulf Railroad, and Florida steamers City Point and Thomaston also, with the steamer J. W. SCHUYLER, which has been placed on the inside route from Savannah to Florida, and offers unsurpassed accommodations.

C. H. OWENS, Agent A. & G. R. R. No. 315 Broadway.
GEORGE YONGE, Agent U. S. R. R. of Ga., No. 409 Broadway.

FLORIDA.

Caution to travelers! Great reduction in fare via the inland route from Savannah to all Florida ports. Only $25 to Jacksonville. Meals and state rooms extra. The elegant steamer J. B. SCHUYLER makes close connection with all Savannah steamers, thus forming the quickest and most agreeable route as well as the lowest in time. Accommodations for passengers unsurpassed. Travelers are cautioned against purchasing through tickets via any other route.

PACIFIC MAIL AND PANAMA TRANSIT STEAM-SHIP LINES.

FOR CALIFORNIA, JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, NEW-ZEALAND, BRITISH COLUMBIA, OREGON, &c.

Sailing from Pier No. 42 North River.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

Steam-ship COLON.....Thursday, Feb. 15

connecting for Central America and South Pacific ports.

From SAN FRANCISCO to JAPAN and CHINA.

Steam-ship CITY OF TOKIO.....Thursday, March 1

From San Francisco to Sandwich Islands, Australia, and New-Zealand.

Steam-ship CITY OF SYDNEY.....Wednesday, Feb. 28

For freight or passage apply to
WM. P. CLYDE & CO., or H. J. BULLAY, Superintendent, No. 6 Bowling Green. Pier No. 42 N. R., foot Canal st.

NEW-YORK, HAVANA, AND MEXICAN MAIL S.S. LINE.

Steamers leave Pier No. 3 North River at 3 P. M.

FOR HAVANA DIRECT.

CITY OF NEW-YORK.....Wednesday, Feb. 7
CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17
CITY OF VERA CRUZ.....Wednesday, Feb. 21

FOR VERA CRUZ AND NEW-ORLEANS, Via Havana. Proposed to touch at Tuxpan and Tampico.

CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17

Passengers will leave New-Orleans Feb. 28 and March 15 on the connecting steamers of the above ports.

For freight or passage apply to
FALKENDER & SONS, Nos. 31 and 33 Broadway.

NEW-YORK AND HAVANA DIRECT MAIL LINE.

These fast-sailing steamships will regularly sail at 3 P. M., from Pier No. 13 North River as follows:

COLUMBUS.....WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14
CLYDE.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24

Accommodations unsurpassed. For freight or passage apply to WM. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 6 Bowling Green. MORALES, LULING & CO., Agents in Havana.

SHIPPING.

RED STAR STEAM-SHIP LINE.

Appointed to carry the Belgian and United States mails. The following steamships are appointed to sail

From Philadelphia.	From New-York.
VADERLAND.....Feb. 15	KENILWORTH.....Feb. 3
FREDERLAND.....March 10	SWITZERLAND.....Feb. 27

Saloon passage to ANTWERP:
First Cabin, $90. Second Cabin, $60. Steerage, $30.
PETER WRIGHT & SONS, General Agents, Philadelphia.

JOHN McDONALD, No. 5 Battery place, New-York.

HAMBURG American Packet Company's Line.

For PLYMOUTH, CHERBOURG and HAMBURG.
FRISIA.....Feb. 8 | POMMERANIA.....Feb. 22
GELLERT.....Feb. 15 | SILESIA.....March 1

Rates of passage to Plymouth, London, Cherbourg, Hamburg, and all points in Scotland: First Cabin, $100 gold; Second Cabin, $60 gold; Steerage, $30, currency.

KUNHARDT & CO., C. B. RICHARD & BRO.,
General Agents, General Passenger Agents,
67 Broad st., N. Y. 61 Broadway, N. Y.

NATIONAL LINE—Piers 44 and 51 North River.

FOR LONDON.

CANADA.....Saturday, Feb. 10, at 9 P. M.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.

Helvetia...Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | England..Feb. 17, 7:30 A. M.

Cabin and steerage passage, and drafts from £1 upward, issued at very low rates. Company's offices No. 69 Broadway. J. W. J. BURST, Manager.

RAILROADS.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD, GREAT TRUNK LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

Trains leave New-York, via Desbrosses and Cortlandt Streets Ferries, as follows:

Express for Harrisburg, Pittsburg, the West and South, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, 8:30 A. M., 6 and 8:30 P. M., daily.

For Williamsport, Lock Haven, Corry, and Erie, at 8:30 P. M., connecting at Corry for Titusville, Petroleum Centre, and the Oil Regions. For Williamsport and Lock Haven, 8:30 A. M.

For Baltimore, Washington, and the South, "Limited Washington Express" of Pullman Parlor Cars daily, except Sunday, 9:30 A. M.; arrive Washington 4:10 P. M. Regular at 8:40 A. M., 9:1, 6, and 9 P. M. Sunday, 6 and 9 P. M.

Express for Philadelphia, 7:30, 8:30, 8:40, (9:30 Limited,) 10:30 A. M., 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30, 9 P. M., and 12 night. Sunday, 8:30 A. M., 5, 6, 7, 8:30, and 9 P. M. Emigrant and second-class, 7 P. M.

Accommodation for Trenton, 7 A. M., 2 and 4:10 P. M. For trains to Newark, Elizabeth, Rahway, Princeton, Trenton, Perth Amboy, Flemington, Belvidere, and other points, see local schedules at all Ticket Offices.

Trains arrive from Pittsburg, 6:20 and 10:30 A. M., and 10:20 P. M. daily; 10:10 A. M. and 6:50 P. M. daily, except Monday, from Washington and Baltimore, 6:30, 9:50 A. M., 4:10, 5:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday 6:30, 9:50 A. M. From Philadelphia, 5:05, 6:20, 6:30, 9:50, 10:10, 11:50 A. M., 2:10, 4:10, 5:10, 8:50, 9:40, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday 5:05, 6:20, 6:30, 9:50, 11:50, A. M., 6:50, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M.

Ticket Offices, Nos. 526 and 944 Broadway, No. 1 Astor House, and foot of Desbrosses and Cortlandt streets; No. 4 Court street, Brooklyn; Nos. 114, 116, and 118 Hudson st., Hoboken; Depot, Jersey City. Emigrant Ticket Office, No. 8 Battery place.

FRANK THOMSON, Gen'l Manager. D. M. BOYD, Jr., General Passenger Agent.

NEW-YORK CENTRAL AND HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—Commencing Dec. 26, 1876, through trains will leave Grand Central Depot:

7:15 A. M., Western and Northern Express, with drawing-room cars to Canan laigua.

8:30 A. M., special Chicago and St. Louis Express, with drawing-room cars to Rochester and Buffalo. Also, through car to St. Louis.

11:00 A. M., North-ra and Western Express.

3:30 P. M., special Albany, Troy and Western Express arrives at Buffalo 7:10 A. M.

5:00 P. M., Express, with sleeping cars, for Watertown and Canandaigua. Also for Montreal via Plattsburgh.

8:30 P. M., Pacific Express, daily, with sleeping cars for Rochester, Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Cleveland, Indianapolis, and Louisville. Also for Chicago, via both N. S. and M. C. Railroads, and to Montreal via St. Albans.

11:00 P. M., Express, with sleeping cars, for Albany and Troy. Western as per local Time Tables.

Tickets for sale at Nos. 252, 261, and 413 Broadway, and at Westcott Express Company's offices, Nos. 7 Park place, 785 and 942 Broadway, New-York, and 353 Washington st., Brooklyn.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

ERIE RAILWAY.

Winter Arrangement of through trains. From Chambers street (Cortlandt ferry) and 23d st. as follows:

9:00 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Cincinnati and Chicago Day Express, drawing-room coaches to Buffalo.

11:45 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Express Mail for Buffalo and the West. Sleeping coach to Buffalo.

7:00 P. M., daily, Pacific Express to the West. Sleeping coaches through to Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Cincinnati, and Chicago without change. Hotel dining-coaches to Chicago.

7:00 P. M., except Sundays, Western Emigrant train.

Above trains leave Twenty-third Street Ferry at 8:45 and 10:15 A. M. and 6:45 P. M.

For local trains see time-tables and cards in hotels and depots.

JNO. N. ABBOTT, General Passenger Agent.

NEW-YORK, NEW-HAVEN, AND HARTFORD RAILROAD.

After Dec. 10, 1876, trains leave Grand Central Depot (42d st.) for New-Canaan Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1, 4:40 P. M.; Danbu y and Norwalk Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1, and 4:40 P. M.; Naugatuck Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3 P. M.; Housatonic Railroad at 8:05 A. M. and 3 P. M.; New-Haven and Northampton Railroad at 8:05 A. M. and 3 P. M.; for Newport at 8:05 A. M. and 1 P. M.; Boston and Albany Railroad at 8:05 and 11 A. M., 3 and 9 P. M. (9 P. M. on Sunday;) Boston, (via Shore Line,) at 1 and 10 P. M., (10 P. M. on Sundays.) Oliver's Ferry, Boston and New-York Air Line, 8 A. M., 1 and 11:35 P. M.

Way trains as per local time-tables.

LEHIGH VALLEY RAILROAD.

ARRANGEMENT. PASSENGER TRAINS. JAN. 1, 1877.

Leave depots foot of Cortlandt and Debrosses sts., at 6:30 P. M.—Night Express, daily, for Easton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Wilkesbarre, Pittston, Sayre, Elmira, Ithaca, Auburn, Rochester, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and the West. Pullman's sleeping coaches attached.

General Sales office corner Church and Cortlandt sts., CHARLES H. CUMMINGS, Agent.

ROBERT H. SAYRE, Superintendent and Engineer.

WICKWORD RAILROAD ROUTE TO NEWPORT, R. I.—Passengers for this line take 8:05 A. M. and 1 P. M. express trains from Grand Central Depot, arriving at 4:18 and 9 P. M. at Newport.

THEODORE WARREN, Superintendent.

STEAMBOATS.

STONINGTON LINE

FOR BOSTON AND ALL POINTS EAST.

REDUCED FARE.

Elegant steamers leave Pier No. 35 North River, foot of Jay st., at 4:30 P. M.

Tickets for sale at all principal ticket offices. Staterooms secured at offices of Westcott Express Company and at No. 363 Broadway.

PROVIDENCE LINE.

Freight only, steamers leave Pier No. 27 North River, foot of Fulton place, at 4 P. M. Freights via either line taken at lowest rates.

D. S. BABCOCK, Pres. L. W. FILKINS, G. P. Agent.

FALL RIVER LINE FOR BOSTON AND THE EAST.

FARES REDUCED.

Leave New-York daily, (Sunday excepted,) from Pier No. 28 North River, foot of Murray st., at 5 P. M.

BORDEN & LOVELL, Agents.
GEO. L. CONNOR, General Passenger Agent.

FOR NEW-HAVEN, HARTFORD, &c.—Fare $1; steamers leave Peck slip for New-Haven at 5 and 11 P. M., connecting with road.

FOR BRIDGEPORT AND ALL POINTS ON Housatonic and Naugatuck Railroad.—Fare $1. Steamers leave Catharine slip at 11:30 A. M.

INSTRUCTION.

THOROUGH INSTRUCTION IN GERMAN Language, literature, and history. Private classes at reduced rates; best references. Address PROFESSOR, Box No. 274 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

CHARLIER INSTITUTE, CENTRAL PARK, NEW-YORK.

Boarding and Day School for boys from seven to twenty years old.

DREW SEMINARY FOR FEMALE COLLEGE, Carmel, N. Y.—For both sexes. Rates reasonable. A school for earnest work. Spring session Feb. 19.

GEO. C. SMITH, A. M.

MRS. PARKS' BOARDING AND DAY school for young ladies, New-Brunswick, N. J., opens its next session Feb. 5. Circulars sent if desired. Terms moderate.

HEIDENFELD INSTITUTE, NO. 822 LEXington av., north-west corner of 83d st.—English and German day and boarding school; new session begins Feb. 7.

TEACHERS.

MISS M. J. YOUNG RESPECTFULLY informs her friends and the educational public that in consequence of the bankruptcy of J. W. Schermerhorn & Co., she has severed her connection with the "American School Institute," and will open her own educational agency at No. 23 Union square on THURSDAY, Feb. 8; office hours from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M.

GOVERNESS WANTED FOR ONE LITTLE girl for one hour from 11 to 12 o'clock, every day. Call at the St. Cloud Hotel, Room No. 86, between 2 and 3 o'clock.

NO. 336 6TH AV.—FRENCH LESSONS, WITH a pure pronunciation, given in private families or at Professor's residence, by M. GARNIER, formerly a magistrate and member of the University of France.

FINANCIAL.

ELIZABETH CITY 7s,

MATURING 1878 TO 1896.

FOR SALE BY

VERMILYE & CO.,

Nos. 16 and 18 Nassau st.

SINKING-FUND NOTICE.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, AND ST. PAUL RAILWAY CO., No. 68 WILLIAM st., NEW-YORK, Dec. 26, 1876.

Notice is hereby given that the following bonds of this company, of $1,000 each, known as Consolidated Sinking-fund Bonds, have been designated by lot to be paid at par and accrued interest on presentation at this office, according to the provisions of the deed of trust securing the same. The numbers are as follows:

31,	269,	350,	580,	609,	1,158,	1,191,
1,223,	1,431,	1,471,	1,482,	1,485,	1,673,	1,744,
1,774,	1,813,	2,034,	2,105,	2,121,	2,187,	2,205,
2,306,	2,416,	2,538,	2,639,	2,673,	2,723,	2,765,
2,808,	2,812,	2,865,	2,910,	2,925,	3,096,	3,124,
3,245,	3,309,	3,315,	3,452,	3,508,	3,559,	4,073,
4,173,	4,309,	4,533,	5,020,	5,256,	5,294,	5,298,
5,326,	5,463,	5,473,	5,617.

Interest on these bonds will cease on the 1st day of July, 1877.

JULIUS WADSWORTH, Vice President.

CHASE & ATKINS, BANKERS AND BROKERS,

NO. 18 BROAD STREET, NEW-YORK.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS SUBJECT TO DRAFT AT SIGHT.

GOLD, GOVERNMENT, STATE, MUNICIPAL, AND RAILROAD SECURITIES BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION FOR CASH OR UPON MARGIN.

THE NEW-YORK MINING STOCK EXCHANGE,

No. 19 Broad st. Organized in 1864.

This association has been reorganized for the purpose of facilitating dealings in the stocks of the prominent mining companies, and thus meeting the demand of business arising from the increased developments and growing importance of the mining interests of the country: 135 of its members are also members of the NEW-YORK STOCK EXCHANGE; 50 of its members are also members of the NEW-YORK GOLD EXCHANGE.

Parties desiring information relative to the business of the Exchange or membership therein, may apply to the Secretary, J. WYMAN MORRIS, at its temporary rooms, No. 19 Broad st.

JOHN STANTON, JR., President.

THE GOLD MORTGAGE BONDHOLDER'S Committee are now prepared to purchase all or any portion of the outstanding thirty-two Gold Mortgage Bonds of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railway Company, for the sum of $550 for each bond, which is the amount of the dividend in cash arising from the sale under the foreclosure proceedings. Or if the holders of any of these bonds wish to join the other bondholders and receive the new bonds, the same parties, they may do so, providi d they notify us by the 15th of February. Apply to W. A. V. POST, Secretary of the Foreclosure Committee, at the office of Perkins, Livingston, Post & Co., No. 23 Nassau st.

New-York, Jan. 27, 1877.

OFFICE METROPOLITAN INSURANCE CO., No. 108 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK, Jan. 29, 1877.

THE UNDERSIGNED HAS MADE AN Arrangement with the CONTINENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY, No. 102 Broadway, assets over $3,000,000, whereby that company will substitute its policies in place of those issued by the Metropolitan Insurance Company, to take effect in each case upon the surrender of the policies of this company.

Policy-holders are invited to send in their policies for such substitution at once.

CHARLES R. APPLEBY, Receiver.

OCEAN NATIONAL BANK. ASSETS AT AUCTION,

MARCH 27, 1877.

For catalogue apply to ADRIAN H. MULLER & CO., No. 7 Pine st., or to the Receiver, No. 21 Nassau st.

THEODORE M. DAVIS, Receiver.

CINCINNATI 7 3/10 PER CENT

MUNICIPAL BONDS, DUE 1906. A LIMITED AMOUNT FOR SALE BY

KUHN, LOEB & CO., NO. 31 NASSAU ST.

UNITED STATES EXPRESS COMPANY, TREASURER'S OFFICE, No. 82 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK, Jan. 27, 1877.

THE TRANSFER BOOKS OF THIS COMpany will be closed Feb. 3, at 2 P. M., and reopened Feb. 16. THEO. F. WOOD, Treasurer.

A HAND-BOOK OF COMMERCE, FINANCE, AND INVESTMENTS.—The FINANCIAL REVIEW, (Annual,) price $1 25, is now ready. Address for book or circular of contents, The Commercial and Financial Chronicle, No. 79 William st.

A. C. BURNHAM, NO. 33 PINE ST., NEW-YORK.—Investment securities paying eight to ten per cent. for sale. Western mortgages a specialty for sixteen years. References in New-York, Boston, Hartford, and Philadelphia. Send for lists.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO., NO. 59 WALL ST., ISSUE COMMERCIAL AND TRAVELERS' CREDITS AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

$200,000 TO LOAN ON BOND AND mortgage on New-York City improved property. Apply to GRANT BROTHERS, No. 2 Exchange court.

FIRE INSURANCE STOCKS BOUGHT AND SOLD BY E. S. BAILEY, No. 65 Wall st.

TO LOAN ON BOND AND MORTGAGE.—ON City and Brooklyn improved property. Address Box No. 5,434 Post Office.

DIVIDENDS.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.

The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts. Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

Fiftieth Dividend.

CLINTON FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

NO. 156 BROADWAY.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 4, 1877.

The usual semi-annual Dividend of TEN PER CENT. is payable on demand. G. T. PATTERSON, Jr., Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE NEW-YORK, PROVIDENCE AND BOSTON RAILROAD COMPANY. (STONINGTON RAILROAD.) NEW-YORK, Jan. 25, 1877.

QUARTERLY DIVIDEND OF TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT., out of the earnings of the past three months, will be paid at the office of Messrs. M. Morgan's Sons, No. 32 William st., New-York, on the 10th day of February.

The transfer-books will be closed from the 1st to the 10th, both inclusive. F. B. NOYES, Secretary.

CLEVELAND AND PITTSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.—Office of Secretary and Treasurer, Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 3, 1877.—The regular guaranteed quarterly dividend of this company, at the rate of Seven per Cent., per annum on the new guaranteed stock, will be paid on and after the 1st March proximo, at the office of the Farmer's Loan and Trust Company, No. 26 Exchange place, New-York.

The transfer-books will close on the 10th inst. and reopen on the 2d March.

C. A. INGERSOLL, Secretary.

THE ST NICHOLAS NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK, No. 7 Wall st. NEW-YORK, Jan. 30, 1877.

DIVIDEND.—A SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND OF Four per Cent. has been declared by the Directors of this bank, payable on and after the 15th day of February next. The transfer books will be closed from the 1st to 15th proximo.

A. PARKHURST, Cashier.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC, NEW-YORK, Jan. 31, 1877.

A DIVIDEND OF THREE AND A HALF per cent., free of tax, has this day been declared, payable Feb. 8, proximo, till which date the transfer-books are closed.

H. W. FORD, Cashier.

ELECTIONS.

OFFICE OF THE CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY OF MARYLAND, No. 71 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK, Feb. 2, 1877.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STOCKholders of this company for the election of President and Directors, and transaction of other business, will be held at noon on WEDNESDAY, the 21st inst. The transfer-books will close at 2 o'clock P. M., on the 10th inst., and reopen on the 22d inst.

H. C. HICKS, Secretary.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR THIRTEEN Directors of the sixth Avenue Railroad Company will be held at the Depot, 8th ave., corner of 42d st., on TUESDAY, Feb. 13, 1877, from 12 to 1 o'clock.

H. S. MOORE, Secretary.

LECTURES.

ERELL INTERNATIONAL ACADEMY, LECTURES.

NO. 19 COOPER UNION, 8:30 P. M.—Geological lectures by H. LE S. FAIRCHILD, A.M., New-York Manager. WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7.—"Glaciers."

THURSDAY, Feb. 8.—"Corals and Coral Islands."

FRIDAY, Feb. 9.—"Early Life of the Earth."

Illustrated with stereoptican views, drawings, models, fossils, &c. Admission, 50 cents; reduced rates to schools. Lectures daily afternoons.

DRY GOODS.

A. T. STEWART & CO.

HAVE RECEIVED and WILL OFFER a

Special Importation

Of NEW DESIGNS in REAL

INDIA CASHMERE SHAWLS,

Of RICH PATTERNS and PECULIAR COMBINATIONS in COLOR, HAVING BEEN PURCHASED Under VERY ADVANTAGEOUS CIRCUMSTANCES. They will be OFFERED at PRICES MUCH BELOW THOSE HERETOFORE PREVAILING For SIMILAR QUALITIES. Among them WILL be FOUND a FEW CAMEL'S HAIR SHAWLS,

Made Expressly

For the Russian Trade,

To WHICH the ATTENTION Of CONNOISSEURS is INVITED.

BROADWAY, 4th AV., 9th and 10th STREETS.

R. H. MACY & CO.

SPECIALTIES.

DRESS-MAKING.

BLACK DRESS SILKS. BOYS' CLOTHING.

UNLIKE any other establishment in the country.

FOREIGN DRY GOODS, FANCY GOODS, and NOVELTIES by every EUROPEAN STEAMER.

ORDERS BY MAIL RECEIVE SPECIAL CARE.

CATALOGUES FREE.

14TH ST. AND 6TH AVENUE, N. Y.

BANKRUPT NOTICES.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the District of New-Jersey.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of CHRISTIAN SAUERWEIN and WILLIAM SAUERWEIN, bankrupts.—District of New-Jersey, ss.:—A warrant in bankruptcy has been issued by said court against the estate of Christian Sauerwein and William Saurwein, of the County of Essex, and State of New-Jersey, in said district, who have been duly adjudged bankrupts upon petitions of their creditors, and the payment of any debts and the delivery of any property belonging to said bankrupts, to them or to their use, and the transfer of any property by them, are forbidden by law. A meeting of the creditors of said bankrupts, to prove their debts and choose one or more Assignees of their estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at No. 823 Broadway, in the City of New-York, before John Fitch, Register, on the 20th day of February, A. D. 1877, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the office of Isaac Dayton, Esq., one of the Registers in Bankruptcy of said Court.

OLIVER WISE, Marshal.—Messenger.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the District of New-Jersey.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of JOSEPH LIEBSTEIN, bankrupt.—District of New-Jersey, ss.:—A warrant in bankruptcy has been issued by said court against the estate of Joseph Liebstein, of the County of Essex, and State of New-Jersey, in said district, who has been duly adjudged bankrupt upon the petition of his creditors, and the payment of any debts and the delivery of any property belonging to said bankrupt, to him or to his use, and the transfer of any property by him are forbidden by law. A meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt, to prove their debts and choose one or more Assignees of his estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at Newark, in said district, on the 20th day of February, A. D. 1877, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the office of Stasts S. Morris, Esq., one of the Registers in Bankruptcy of said District, No. 633 Broad street. SAMUEL PLUMMER, United States Marshal for said District,

Per JOHN C. BAILEY, Deputy.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the District of New-Jersey.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of JOSEPH WEBBER, bankrupt.—District of New-Jersey, ss.:—A warrant in bankruptcy has been issued by said court against the estate of John Werder of the County of Hudson, and State of New-Jersey, in said district, who has been duly adjudged bankrupt upon petition of his creditors, and the payment of any debts and the delivery of any property belonging to said bankrupt, to him, or to his use, and the transfer of any property by him, are forbidden by law. A meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt, to prove their debts and choose one or more assignees of his estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy to be holden at Jersey City, in said district, on the 28th day of February, A. D. 1877, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the office of Stasts S. Morris, Esquire, one of the Registers in Bankruptcy of said district, No. 1 Montgomery st.

SAMUEL PLUMMER, United States Marshal for said district.

Per JOHN C. BAILEY, Deputy.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE—THAT ON THE 19th day of February, A. D. 1877, a warrant in bankruptcy was issued against the estate of ASAHEL H. KINGSBURY, EDWIN E. ABBOTT, ALEXANDER SULLETT, and JOHN A. KINGSBURY, of New-York, in the County of New-York and State of New-York, who have been adjudged bankrupts on their own petition; that the payment of any debts and delivery of any property belonging to such bankrupts, to them or for their use or the use of either of them, and the transfer of any property by them or either of them, are forbidden by law; that a meeting of the creditors of the said bankrupts, to prove their debts and to choose one or more Assignees of their estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at No. 345 Broadway, in the City of New-York, before John Fitch, Register, on the 19th day of February, A. D. 1877, at two o'clock P. M.

OLIVER WISE, United States Marshal.

As Messenger, Southern District of New-York.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of JOHN FERRIS, bankrupt.—In Bankruptcy.—Southern District of New-York, ss.:—At the City of New-York, the 27th day of January, 1877. The undersigned hereby give notice of his appointment as assignee of the estate and effects of JOHN FERRIS, of the City of New-York, in said district, who was, on the third day of January, A. D. 1877, adjudged a bankrupt upon his own petition, by the District Court of the United States for the said Southern District of New-York. WILLIAM T. CARLISLE, Assignee, No. 322 Broadway.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, Southern District of New-York.—In Bankruptcy.—Southern District of New-York, ss.: At the City of New-York, the 8th day of January, 1877.—The undersigned hereby gives notice of his appointment as assignee of HENRY S. JONES, known as and doing business under the name of HENRY J. HARMONY, of the City of New-York, in the County and State of New-York, within said district, who has been adjudged a bankrupt upon his own petition by the District Court of said district. JOHN H. PLATT, Assignee. Jan24-law3wW*

IN BANKRUPTCY.—IN THE DISTRICT COURT for the United States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of JOHN W. COOK and CHARLES M. FAIRBANKS, bankrupts.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by John W. Cook, in said district, duly declared a bankrupt under the Act of

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

VOLCANOES OF THE UNITED STATES.

LECTURE BEFORE THE GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY BY S. F. EMMONS, ESQ.—AN ACCOUNT OF HIS EXPLORATIONS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

The regular meeting of the American Geographical Society was held at Chickering Hall last evening, Chief Justice Daly, the President, in the Chair. The following gentlemen were elected members of the society: Andrew Fiske, Le Grand Lockwood, William J. Flagg, Clarence King, Theodore Rose, Christian Börs, F. L. Crosby, Prof. Charles A. Briggs, A. T. Rice, E. B. Elliott, Cornelius Vanderbilt. Corresponding member, Prof. William H. Brewer, New-Haven. The President then introduced to the society Mr. S. F. Emmons, who spoke as follows:

THE VOLCANOES OF THE UNITED STATES.

After a few remarks upon volcanoes in general, their geographical distribution, and the theories of their formation, the speaker described the principal volcanoes of the Pacific coast of the United States. The western range of the great Cordilleran or Rocky Mountains system is formed by the chain of the Sierra Nevada, and its northern continuation, the Cascade Mountains of Oregon and Washington Territory, which run parallel to the present coast line. In former geological periods the Pacific Ocean extended up to the western base of the Sierra Nevada, whose geological continuation to the northward is found in the Blue Mountains of Eastern Oregon. North of the parallel of 40° north there is a break in the continuity of the Sierra Nevada chain, which finds its topographical continuation in a series of high volcanic peaks, capped with perpetual snow, standing at distances of about 50 miles apart, and which in Northern Oregon and Washington Territory rise out of the very summits of the Cascade Mountains. These are Lasser's Peak and Mount Shasta, in Northern California—the former, about 10,000 feet in height, forms the northern extremity of the crest of the Sierra Nevada; the latter, a peak of surpassing grandeur, rises to an elevation of 14,440 feet above sea-level, and stands, as it were, isolated, being surrounded on the east by low forest-covered ridges, and on the west by broad, open valleys between 200 and 300 feet above sea-level, through which runs the projected line of the California and Oregon Railroad. It has two summits, the westernmost being a perfect crater, its interior 1,000 feet deep, and its wall a narrow rim of rock about 2,000 feet below the main summit. On the main summit are found traces of recent solfataric action—hot springs, from which issue sulphurous gases and steam—while on the northern slopes are several active glaciers. Mount Shasta, while ranking among the highest peaks in the United States, is of comparatively easy access, and its ascent is, although somewhat laborious, a by no means dangerous undertaking, and, when the railroad reaches its base, will no doubt be a favorite resort of tourists.

The volcanic peaks of Oregon are, commencing at the southward, Mount Pitt, the Three Sides, Mount Jefferson, and Mount Hood. While the three former present outlines of great beauty, raising their snow-white crests above the pine-clad ridges of Oregon, they reach elevations of less than 10,000 feet, and are surpassed in majesty and grace of outline by Mount Hood, which rests upon the summit of the Cascade range, about 25 miles south of the Columbia River. When first discovered by Vancouver it was estimated to be at least 25,000 feet in height. Recent measurement by the barometer has reduced this to 11,225 feet. It is an exceedingly sharp peak, its summit being formed by a single block of lava. Its ascent, though difficult and even dangerous, has been accomplished several times, owing to the fact that its base is of comparatively easy access.

Washington Territory east of the Cascade Mountains, except in the region immediately bordering Puget Sound and the valley which stretches southward to the Columbia River, is covered by dense, almost impenetrable forests, which render the exploration of its mountains extremely difficult. Owing to their higher latitude, and still more to the greater fall of rain and snow, the volcanic peaks of this region are rendered more imposing than their more southern brethren by the great masses of snow and ice which clothe their slopes and send out great glaciers into the surrounding forests. The principal ones are Mount St. Helens, Mount Adams, Mount Rainier, and Mount Baker. The two former are in about the same latitude, about 30 miles north of the Columbia River, and probably not more than 10,000 feet in height. St. Helena is said to have been in eruption in 1842. Those seen from Puget Sound, which is an arm of the sea, are much more imposing. Mount Baker, near the boundary of British Columbia, though but little over 10,000 feet in height, presents an enormous extent of snow and ice covered surface. Mount Rainier, however, which is 14,444 feet in height, is the grandest of all the peaks described. The broad summit is surmounted by three distinct peaks, one of which is the more recent crater, while the two others represent remnants of the wall of a pre-existing and larger crater, several miles in diameter, long ago destroyed. From its sides extend out seven less than 15 large glaciers. The geography of the region immediately surrounding the peak is misrepresented on the existing maps.

After giving a short description of the attempts to reach the summit of this peak, only one of which (that of Messrs. Stevens and Van Trump) had been successful, the speaker then proceeded to present an interesting narrative of an exploration of the peak and its surroundings by Mr. A. D. Wilson and himself, members of the Government exploration of the fortieth parallel, in the Autumn of 1870, as part of a series of monographs of the volcanoes of the Pacific coast, undertaken by that corps, but never brought to completion.

HOTEL-KEEPERS EMBARRASSED.

G. F. & W. D. Garrison, the well-known hotel-keepers, have failed and have assigned all their property to Judge John J. Monell, of Newburg, for the benefit of their creditors. Each makes a separate assignment. Mr. G. F. gives up the Highland House, at Garrisons, and his brother gives up his cottage and all other property. The cause of the assignment is the unexpected call of loans by the Fishkill Bank, which recently suffered a heavy defalcation. The bank held $12,000 of Mr. G. F. Garrison's paper, which was abundantly secured and would have been met in the Summer. Mr. Garrison could not meet the demand without a sacrifice of his friends, and to give all the creditors an equal chance the assignment was made.

Mr. G. F. Garrison's liabilities will not exceed $25,000, exclusive of a mortgage for $10,000, and the hotel furniture will realize $16 000. The property of Mr. W. D. Garrison, who was on his brother's paper for $10,000, will realize at least $5,000. Mr. W. G. Garrison said yesterday that the matter was wholly unexpected, and they had given up every dollar to their creditors; he deemed the bank's action very unjust, as they could have readily met the loan in the Summer, and could have paid up three-quarters of their indebtedness. It was the intention of the Assignee to effect a settlement at from 50 to 75 cents on the dollar, but no matter what the legal arrangement might be, they would honorably consider themselves bound to pay in full, and would do so as fast as their business profits would admit. As far as the Grand Union Hotel, in this City, is concerned it is not affected at all, as the Garrisons are managers and not proprietors.

THE GRAND CENTRAL DEPOT POLICE.

At a meeting of the Board of Police yesterday the subjoined letter was concurred in, and the Clerk was ordered to transmit it to the Executive Committee of the Municipal Society as a reply to a recent inquiry of that body:

E. M. Streburgh, Esq., Secretary Executive Committee Municipal Society:

SIR: At the request of Mr. C. H. Watrous, who desired further information in relation to the query of the Municipal Society, "Whether there is not an unnecessary number of policemen employed at the Grand Central Depot, &c., I would state that the Nineteenth Sub-precinct, located at the Grand Central Depot, generally supposed to be used for the purpose of guarding that building alone, comprises a district extending from Forty-second to Forty-ninth streets, and from Lexington to Madison avenues, including the passenger and several freight depots, and all the approaches thereto. The Police force (consisting of 39) is assigned to duty as follows: Sergeant in command, 1; acting Sergeants, 2; roundsmen, 2; doormen, 2; patrolmen, performing day and night duty—New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad waiting-room, 2; New-York and Harlem waiting-room, 2; New-York and New-Haven waiting-room, 1; inside platform where all trains arrive, 1; regulating hackmen in front of depot, 3; freight depots, 1; regular patrol duty upon avenues and all cross streets, 2; special duty in citizens' dress around depots and precinct, 2; on Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth streets bridges, (2) men, 3; total number of patrolmen, 25. The total number of passengers transported to and from New-York during the year 1876 via the Harlem, New-York Central, and New-Haven railroads, including only those who arrived at or departed from the Grand Central Depot, is as follows:

New-York and Harlem Railroad	2,041,899
New-York Cent al Railroad	1,201,960
New-Haven Railroad	1,732,218
Total	4,976,077

Free riders, employes, and persons visiting the depot awaiting the arrival of trains are not included in the above estimate. Within the last two years many arrests at this point have been made of well-known thieves and suspicious characters, yet during that period not one report has been made of baggage lost, pocket-books or watches stolen, swindling by confidence operators, or any other class of robbery or theft. It is assumed that in no other place are the services of the Police more required to protect citizens and strangers from imposition, robbery, and personal injury than in this great thoroughfare, and the force assigned is not too great in number for the duty to be properly performed. The station-house is located in the depot building, and is furnished to the City for the use of the Police without charge. A diagram showing the space covered by the Nineteenth Sub-Precinct is herewith inclosed.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

PREPARING FOR COMING MATCHES AT CREEDMOOR—APPOINTMENTS OF COMMITTEES.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Rifle Association was held at No. 23 Park row yesterday afternoon, Judge N. P. Stanton in the chair. The members present were Judge H. A. Gildersleeve, Col. C. D. Scott, Major Joseph Holland, George S. Schermerhorn, Jr., E. H. Sanford, Capt. J. G. Story, Gen. John B. Woodward, Hon. D. W. Judd, Gen. Daniel D. Wylie, Gen. M. T. McMahon, Major Henry Fulton, Gen. Alexander Shaler, Col. John Ward, Gen. T. S. Dakin, and Col. G. W. Wingate. The report of the Secretary stated that the contract for printing the annual report of the association for 1876 had been given to a party who proposed to furnish 2,000 copies of the report and to pay $100 cash to the association in consideration of being allowed the privilege of retaining the amount necessary from the advertisements in the report. The report of the Treasurer showed a balance on hand of $931 86. Judge Gildersleeve, Chairman of the special committee appointed to examine into the legality of the by-laws, reported that the committee had been unable to arrive at any definite conclusion, and had referred it to eminent legal talent for decision. Capt. Story offered a resolution directing the Treasurer to call upon the officials of the Long Island Railroad, and endeavor to secure a lower rate of fare from Long Island City to Creedmoor than prevailed last year, and to provide increased facilities for the transportation of passengers. Gen. Woodward offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to communicate with the proper persons representing riflemen in each State of the Union, inviting them to participate in the inter-state rifle Matches, to be shot at Creedmoor at the April meeting.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be directed to prepare the terms and conditions of such matches.

Col. Scott offered a motion directing the Secretary to secure offices for the use of the association at a reduced rental. The motion was adopted. Major Wylie resigned his position as Director, but retained his office as ex-officio Director. Brig. Gen. W. G. Ward was elected to fill the vacancy. On motion of Gen. Shaler, the President was requested to appoint a Prize Committee for the current year. The following gentlemen were appointed: Col. John Ward, Capt. W. C. Casey, and Major Joseph Holland. On motion the Secretary was instructed so secure badges for ex-officio Directors. On motion of Mr. Sanford, it was decided to publish the scores made in the "Leech Cup" match in 1876, in the annual report of the association. Capt. Casey said that Company I, Seventh Regiment, wished to affiliate with the association if proper arrangements could be made with the Long Island Railroad Company by which better accommodations and lower fares could be secured. The following committees were appointed by the President for the current year: Executive—Col. G. W. Wingate, G. S. Schermerhorn, Jr., Gen. D. D. Wylie, Gen. Alexander Shaler, Gen. T. S. Dakin, and Col. H. A. Gildersleeve. Range—Col. G. W. Wingate, Capt. J. G. Story, and Col. G. D. Scott. Finance—Hon. D. W. Judd, E. H. Sanford, and Gen. W. G. Ward. The meeting then adjourned.

A THIEVING LOVER.

Joseph D. Lehaye, a Frenchman, residing at Twenty-eighth street and Sixth avenue, was arraigned before Justice Otterbourg, at the Washington Place Police Court yesterday on a charge of grand larceny. The complainant in the case is Marie Cocheteaux, a young Frenchwoman, residing at No. 83 South Fifth avenue. From the statement made by the complainant it appears that she came to this country from France with the accused about three months ago, and they took apartments at No. 83 South Fifth avenue, where they lived as man and wife. Last Thursday De Lehaye, on coming home, found his mistress entertaining a rival, and a quarrel ensued, during which the couple agreed to separate. Marie went out for a few minutes and when she returned she discovered that De Lehaye had departed, taking with him $100 in money and her trunk containing nearly all her wardrobe, valued at over $300. On Monday Mlle. Cocheteaux received a message from her former lover telling her that if she would give him money enough to return to France he would return her clothing. The woman told the messenger to call again during the afternoon, and in the meantime she informed Detectives Murphy and Reynolds, of the Eighth Precinct. When the messenger returned he received a negative reply, and when he left the house in South Fifth avenue the officers followed him and saw him deliver his message to his employer at the corner of Sixth avenue and Twenty-eighth street. De Lehaye was thereupon arrested. The prisoner admitted taking the money and wearing apparel, but said it was all a joke. Justice Otterbourg committed him for trial in default of bail.

A LANDLORD CENSURED.

The death of Ella Bernstein, aged 6, of No. 153 Forsyth street, was investigated yesterday by Coroner Croker. This child was one of six young children who, while playing in the yard at the rear of No. 40 Delancey street on Jan. 19, were injured by the fall of a brick cornice from a rear building. Several persons testified in regard to the immediate circumstances of the accident, and to the alleged fact that the cornice was in a dilapidated condition. Abraham D. Carlock, an Inspector of Buildings, testified that a few days previous to the accident he examined the premises, and saw nothing warranting an unfavorable report. He also examined the house after the fall of the cornice, and then discovered several holes in the gutter, through which water had leaked into the cornice, saturating the mortar, and thus depriving it of its adhesiveness. In his opinion, the cornice was defective in its mode of construction. The jury rendered the subjoined verdict:

"We find that Ella Bernstein came to her death by injuries received by the falling of bricks upon her, said bricks being a portion of the cornice of the premises No. 40 Delancey street, on the 19th day of January, 1877, death following on the 22d day of January, 1877, at No. 153 Forsyth street, and we are of the opinion that the landlord of the said premises is censurable for not properly attending to needed repairs."

BURIAL OF A FEMALE DWARF.

Mrs. Louisa Shepherd, better known to the frequenters of circus side-shows as Lulu Van Pelt, a woman of remarkably diminutive stature, was buried yesterday afternoon at Keyport, N. J. She died on last Saturday evening, at No. 41 East Broadway, in this City. Her disease was pneumonia, and she was sick only four days. Mrs. Shepherd was 21 years of age, and had been exhibited as a curiosity for eight or ten years. Although only 31 inches high, and weighing but 39 pounds, her figure was exquisitely proportioned, and she appeared as a perfect woman in miniature. Her mental powers were good, and she was a lively, entertaining conversationalist. Unlike most dwarfs, she was kind-tempered, and it is said she was never irritated nor querulous. A most remarkable fact in the life of Mrs. Shepherd is that her husband is a man five feet ten inches in height and of corresponding weight. "Lulu," as Mrs. Shepherd is styled on the canvas in front of her last place of exhibition on Chatham square, was born in the Van Pelt homestead, at Keycort, N. J., where her family has lived for many years.

GETTING HIS PRODUCE FREE OF EXPENSE

For several months past, Mr. Frederick Olmstead, proprietor of the Continental Market, at No. 1,266 Broadway, has been missing quantities of provisions from his place of business, and suspicion finally rested on Oscar Flock, who for a year past has been employed as a salesman in the market. His movements were watched, and it was learned that on the morning of the 4th inst. Flock ordered the delivery clerk to send to his home in East Thirty-fourth street, a turkey, some sweet potatoes, and other provisions, amounting in all to over $4. The articles were sent as directed by Flock, and as no entry was made on the sales-book, he was charged with the larceny of the provisions sent to his house. He was arrested and arraigned before Justice Otterbourg at the Washington Place Police Court, and gave bail in $1,000 for trial at the General Sessions. The complainant stated in court that he had lost several hundred dollars' worth of goods by transactions similar to the above.

EXCESSIVE BANK TAXATION.

The committee appointed at the special meeting of merchants, manufacturers, and bankers, held in the Chamber of Commerce on Jan. 11, to go to Washington to protest against excessive bank taxation by the National Government, left this City last night. Its members are S. Babcock, of S. D. Babcock & Co.; B. G. Arnold, of B. G. Arnold & Co.; G. Schwab, of Oehlrichs & Co.; James Hazlehurst, of Hazlehurst Brothers; James M. Constable, of Arnold, Constable & Co.; George W. Lane, of G. W. Lane & Co.; Franklin Edson, ex-President Produce Exchange; Charles S. Smith, of George C. Richardson & Co.; Harvey Farrington, of H. & G. B. Farrington & Co. Several other gentlemen went with the committee. The delegation of business men will be heard at 10:30 this morning by the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

BRAZILIAN EMIGRATION.

Mr. Salvador de Mendonca, Brazilian Consul General at this port, has addressed a communication to THE TIMES in regard to an article that appeared in the edition of the 5th inst., concerning the complaints of a German emigrant to Brazil. Mr. Mendonca says that it is possible that the person in question was deceived by some agent engaged in contracting workmen for colonies established by private companies, and who assumed to have official authority for his acts in order to gain the confidence of his victims. Mr. Mendonca also says that he deems it proper to state that his Government has no agent in this country to promote emigration to Brazil.

THE INSURANCE TROUBLES.

RECEIVER ANDERSON'S ACCOUNTS.

FURTHER TESTIMONY BEFORE MR. WILLIAM ALLEN BUTLER—A BUSY SUNDAY IN THE COMPANY'S OFFICE—MR. LUTHER W. FROST'S "COMMUTED COMMISSIONS"—THE NEW RECEIVER TO ENTER UPON HIS DUTIES TO-DAY.

Mr. William Allen Butler, the Referee appointed by Justice Pratt to examine into the condition of the assets of the Continental Life Insurance Company of this City, and also to examine and pass upon the accounts of the ex-Receiver, Mr. John J. Anderson, continued the inquiry yesterday at the company's office, No. 20 Nassau street. Mr. Lefevre V. Styles, the Cashier of the company, who could not be found yesterday when Mr. Anderson desired to obtain the key of the safe containing the company's bonds and mortgages, and who was supposed to have possession of the key, was present and was the first witness called. He stated to a reporter of THE TIMES that when he left the office yesterday afternoon he understood that the other witnesses were to be called before Mr. Anderson, and that he had no intention of evading an examination. The key of the safe which he was said to have in his possession, he said was in a drawer in one of the desks, and could easily have been found.

Mr. Styles being placed on the stand, identified a statement of receipts which he said he had no doubt contained all the items of checks given for dividends. He could not recollect any conversation with Mr. Thomas, the book-keeper, to the effect that the examination should be stopped. Three weeks ago Sunday, as nearly as he could recollect, he went into the safe with Mr. D. J. Noyes, Mr. Luther W. Frost, Mr. R. C. Frost, and Mr. Crofut. He had the key of the outer door, but not of the inner safe, nor did he know whether Mr. Noyes or Mr. R. C. Frost opened the inner door, although one of the two must have opened it, as he did not do it himself. He stayed in the vault while the others were there, but did not know whether they examined papers or not, but did not think they did. He saw them take out two bundles of papers which he thought were private papers belonging to Mr. Luther W. Frost, which were not examined at the time. He had no knowledge that there was anything besides letters in the bundles, nor did he notice that Mr. Noyes or Mr. Frost put papers in their pockets. He saw the papers the next day. He had owed the company a mortgage of $9,500, which he had paid, and the fact of its payment was shown by an entry in the company's books, the money having been paid to him by the company, and by the witness used for the purpose of clearing off the mortgage. The original mortgage was for $5,000; it was raised to $5,500, and afterward to $7,000, and he had paid $5,000 on it before the final payment was made.

The books and vouchers for the payment of the mortgage were produced and identified by the witness, who pointed out that the last payment was made on Dec. 30. He explained that his presence in the company's vault on the Sunday referred to, was arranged between himself and Messrs. Frost and Noyes, for the purpose of writing up a list of bonds and mortgages, the witness believing that a new book was to be made up. They met on Sunday because it was understood to be necessary, in consequence of some transactions to take place on the following Monday. He could not recollect that Mr. Frost had given him any reason for the Sunday meeting. He did not know of any necessity to conceal the fact that his mortgage had been paid off. He had met Mr. Frost on the Saturday evening before, between 9 and 12 o'clock, and agreed to meet him at the bank, no threat or coercion being used to compel his attendance. It was under the impression that Mr. Anderson came in, Mr. Rogers, the Secretary, gave him the key of the vault. He thought Mr. Frost got his letters or papers on the Sunday referred to from a side closet or till. The papers were left on a chair in the President's room. A record of mortgages was identified as a list made for the new company, in which the old one was to be merged, the list amounting to $107,000, all of which were to be transferred to the New-Jersey Mutual. The witness did not know anything positively about the Empire stock, but his impression was that the company redeemed it—paid 100 cents on the dollar for it.

Mr. William Fullerton produced the stipulation of settlement between the Continental Life and the New-Jersey Mutual, and the contract for the transfer by the Continental of its securities to the New-Jersey company. The contract was made on Oct. 10, the day after the application was made for a Receiver, and the order for a Receiver was served on the 11th, the day after. It was signed by J. H. Stedwell, President of the New-Jersey Mutual, and L. W. Frost, President of the Continental. Mr. Fullerton testified essentially to the same effect concerning his fees and the services he had performed for the company, as Mr. Anderson had done on Monday, saying that he had received $102,000 of the transferred securities, which were held subject to the order of the court, but the balance of the $314,000 could not be found. The case was then adjourned until Thursday.

Mr. William R. Grace, the newly appointed Receiver of the Continental Life Insurance Company, appeared yesterday in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, and furnished the necessary bond in $400,000 for the proper performance of his duties, his sureties being Mr. Eugene Kelly, of the firm of Eugene Kelly & Co.; Mr. James E. Ward, Mr. Benjamin Flint, and Mr. Isaac F. Chapman, of the firm of Chapman & Flint. After the filing of his bond; Mr. Grace proceeded to the office of the company and saw Mr. Anderson, when an arrangement was made that he should take possession of the affairs of the company to-day.

THE NEW-JERSEY MUTUAL.

THE ARGUMENT BEFORE CHANCELLOR RUNYON FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER—THE FINAL JUDGMENT TO BE RENDERED TO-MORROW.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1877.

Chancellor Runyon sat in Chancery till late this evening to hear argument in the application made last week by Attorney General Vanatta for the appointment of a Receiver for the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Newark. The Attorney General was assisted by Ludlow McCarter. Hon. Thomas N. McCarter began by asking the court to hear an application for an adjournment of the hearing. He said that an actuary had been engaged in ascertaining the condition of the company; and having concluded his investigation, had placed in his hands last evening a report showing the result of his labors. The figures which had been supplied by the actuary went to show that the company was in a state of solvency, and that there was no reason whatever for winding it up. The report of the actuary had been placed in his hands at so late an hour as to render it impossible for him to draw an answer to be placed before the Chancellor to-day. He based his application for postponement on that state of facts.

Attorney General Vanatta replied that the Secretary of State had given the company 10 days to satisfy him of their solvency, and that they had since had seven days in which to bring evidence of that fact into court. Instead of establishing their solvency during the time allowed them by Mr. Kelsey, they had employed it in making a fraudulent transfer of their assets to a foreign corporation without either status or capital. It was unsafe to leave the affairs of the company longer in the control of its officers. The court should appoint a Receiver to take care of the assets which were left, pending the final order of the court throwing the company into liquidation, or until the court shall have been assured of its solvency.

Mr. McCarter resisted the proposition that a Receiver could carry on the company. A Receiver could be appointed only to wind up its affairs. The statute, he said, required the court to take evidence, and if satisfied from the evidence of the insolvency of the company, to appoint a Receiver to wind it up. The court ought not to make the appointment on an ex parte showing, because if the company were solvent, the mere appointment of a Receiver would so weaken public confidence in it as to hopelessly bankrupt it.

The Attorney General answered that the court had the right to presume, from the failure to answer to-day, that the company could not and would not answer the allegations of the information; that the company could be justified, unless great doubt were thrown over the prima facie case of the Attorney General, to go on and appoint a Receiver, pending inquiry into its affairs. The construction put on the statute by Mr. McCarter would, Mr. Vanatta contended, be the most perfect shelter the officers of a corporation could want while they were engaged in robbing it.

Mr. McCarter also made the point that no stockholder or policy-holder had been enough alarmed about the condition of the company to take steps against it, to which Mr. Vanatta replied that all were waiting for the pending proceedings. Some question having been raised as to the parties whom Mr. McCarter represented in the proceeding, he explained that he represented the Mutual Life Company, though he had not seen the officers lately. He presumed the officers were in New-York. "Diligent search," remarked the prosecuting attorneys, "fails to reveal their whereabouts."

The Chancellor said that the court was satisfied that prompt action ought to be taken. In some aspects a Receiver would be desirable; in others he would not. He would not compel counsel to file a written answer, but he expected him to make some kind of a return to the rule. He could not adjourn the case for a week. It must be heard and decided sooner than that; and he would adjourn the hearing until Thursday morning next. Meanwhile the temporary injunction granted last week should stand.

It is probable that after the hearing Thursday, Henry W. Duryea, of Newark, will be appointed Receiver.

AFFAIRS OF THE COMPANY IN THIS CITY.

Mr. Henry D. Walker, the Vice President of the National Capital Life Insurance Company, stated yesterday to a reporter of THE TIMES that it was the intention of the company he represented to abide by the decision of Chancellor Runyon, whether it be adverse to the company or not. Should a Receiver be appointed and a decision given that the transfer of the New-Jersey Mutual's assets was illegal, they would at once hand them over to the officer of the court, and that would end the matter.

AID FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

THE BALANCE REMAINING OF THE FOURTH OF JULY FUND GIVEN TO THE LADIES' UNION RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

The President of the Ladies' Union Relief Association, for the care of sick and disabled soldiers, and the widows, and orphans of those who fell in the late war, have received the following letter:

Mrs. John A. Kennedy, President of Ladies' Union Relief Association for care of Disabled Soldiers and their Families:

DEAR MADAM: The undersigned, who were charged with the responsible duty of raising and disbursing funds for the Fourth of July Centennial Celebration of last year, finding a balance remaining in their hands, have, after due consideration, decided to donate the same to the above-mentioned association, of which you are the honored President. They have made this selection because they have personal knowledge that all donations to that association go directly and entirely to the relief of a class of our fellow-citizens, who, by their heroic services in the late war, the honorable scars of which many of them bear, and from the disabling effects of which they and their families are now suffering contributed largely toward making such a celebration possible. Satisfied that the appropriateness of this action will commend itself to the approval of the donors to the original fund, they have the pleasure to inclose a check for $398 98, the amount of the balance above referred to, which you will please cause to be applied to the purpose indicated. Respectfully,

RUSH C. HAWKINS, Chairman.
HENRY HAVEMEYER, Treasurer.

AID FOR POOR FAMILIES.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your readers can hardly be aware how great the suffering is now among the honest and industrious poor of the City. Great numbers of hard-working laborers and mechanics have consumed their savings, pawned a great deal of their little property, are utterly without work, and see nothing before them but hunger and extreme poverty. Our visitors and teachers in the industrial schools find every day cases of such suffering in the poor quarters. Last week a woman was reported near Avenue D as nearly dying of starvation, with a family of seven children to care for. It has been our custom for the last few years, if special funds are supplied, to send off industrious and destitute families, who are ready to do hard work, to places in the West or South. We are prepared this Winter thus to relieve hundreds of very needy cases, by placing them where food and work are in plenty, provided special donations are sent in by the charitable. Donations for this object, marked "Emigration," may be sent in checks, payable to the order of J. E. Williams, Treasurer, to the Metropolitan Bank, or to this office.

C. L. BRACE,
Secretary Children's Aid Society, No. 19 East Fourth street, City.

THE DUMPING OF SNOW INTO THE RIVERS.

Corporation Counsel Whitney yesterday furnished the following opinion to the Police Board in answer to its query, whether the Street-cleaning Bureau may lawfully dispose of snow and ice removed from the streets in the condition it is usually found by dumping it into the waters of the adjacent rivers:

Section 4, chapter 671 of the laws of 1857, provides that "any person wilfully throwing or putting any stones, earth, shavings, night-soil, dirt, or rubbish into any dock or slip in the Port of New-York, or on any public pier or bulkhead in said port, shall forfeit and pay to the Commissioner of Pilots $25 for each offense." The snow which falls in the streets of the City, if not very soon removed, becomes mingled with one or more of the several articles above mentioned. If the snow is removed soon after a snow-storm, before it has become mingled with any of the said articles, I think it can be lawfully thrown into the adjacent rivers; but I think that the throwing of snow and ice which have become mixed with any of said articles is forbidden by the provisions of the statute.

CHARGES AND COUNTER-CHARGES.

Some very queer charges and counter-charges were made in the suit of Christopher H. Hall against Charles Koch which was brought to trial before Judge Donohue and a jury in Part I, of the Supreme Court, yesterday. The plaintiff sues on a note for $975, liability on which the defendant denies. The latter alleges that Hall was his barkeeper, and had admitted stealing $1,000 from the till of his saloon. Hall, he says, gave back the money. Koch had Hall indicted, but the latter was acquitted at the trial. Hall says Koch himself was indicted for stealing gas and escaped punishment only by a disagreement of the jury before which his case came. The Presidents of the Bleecker Street and Greenwich Savings Banks were subpœned as witnesses yesterday, but were not present in court when called on to testify, and Judge Donohue ordered affidavits to be made on which he might issue warrants of commitment for contempt of court.

STREET-CAR RUFFIANS ARRESTED.

John Thompson, of No. 146 East Forty-seventh street, and Henry Beack, of No. 416 East Seventy-second street, were arraigned on charges of disorderly conduct at the Essex Market Police Court yesterday. The complainant was Edward J. Cabil, of No. 2,116 Second avenue, conductor of car No. 73, of the Second Avenue Line, who made an affidavit to the effect that the two men entered his car in Grand street, near Forsyth street, and began to act in a very disorderly manner, and finally persisted in sitting on the laps of several ladies. When some of the male passengers remonstrated with them the rowdies pulled off their coats and, assuming pugilistic attitudes, dared the men in the car to "come on." The Conductor interfered and was assaulted by the two men. Patrolman Kelly of the Seventeenth Precinct arrested them, and they were arraigned before Justice Murray. Each was held in default of $1,000.

THE DEAD ALIVE AGAIN.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican has the following brief account of a startling incident in Plainville, that State: "Deacon Hamlin died of paralysis, as was supposed, and a large assembly gathered in the church for the funeral Friday afternoon. But, during the services, the audience grew restless, the corpse stirred, was hastily carried from the house, restoratives were applied, and, at the last accounts, the good deacon seemed to have taken a new lease of life."

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The annual dinner of the Palette Club will be given in the club-house to-morrow evening.

The annual election for officers of the American Institute will take place to-morrow evening.

The Municipal Committee on the Water Supply, of which Alderman Tuomey is Chairman, will meet to-day.

Gilmore's Garden will be reopened this evening, and the entertainment will consist of trotting, running, and athletic sports.

Rev. Robert Collyer will lecture before the Young Men's Christian Association of Elizabeth, this evening, on "Clear Grit."

Capt. Brackett continued his investigation of alleged sugar smuggling frauds yesterday, but no further facts of importance were elicited.

No further news has been received at the office of either company in regard to the fate of the long-overdue steam-ships George Cromwell and Colombo.

Controller Kelly yesterday signed a warrant for $59,781 66 to the order of the Street Cleaning Bureau, and also one of $30,935 04 for the Foundling Asylum.

The annual grand masquerade of the German Liederkranz takes place to-morrow evening in the Academy of Music. It is expected to surpass all its predecessors.

Patrolman John Gallagher, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, died on the 10th inst. of consumption, at Belfast, Ireland, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health.

The public is cautioned against a swindler who is imposing upon the charitably inclined by selling them tickets for a dramatic performance at the Harlem Music Hall for the benefit of St. John's Guild. No such performance is authorized by the Guild.

The sale of a number of lots in this City for non-payment of the interest on loans advanced by the United States Loan Commissioners, which was to have been held at the City Hall yesterday, was postponed until September next. It is said that in the meantime many of the lots will be redeemed.

The Governors of the Woman's Hospital meet this afternoon at 3 o'clock to receive from the architect and builder the Baldwin Pavilion, which has been erected on the grounds of the hospital, at Lexington avenue and Fiftieth street. Messrs. John Jacob and William Astor each contributed $3,500 toward the building of the Pavilion.

The Aldermanic Committee on Public Works, who were directed to inquire into the charge of Mr. Tuomey that Commissioner Campbell, of the Department of Public Works, had neglected his official duties, met yesterday, and decided not to proceed with the investigation until they received further instructions from the Board of Aldermen.

The managers of the Home for the Blind are obliged to appeal to their friends for contributions of men's and children's clothing. The severe weather brings to their Home hundreds of poor creatures wanting food and covering, and without some assistance the ladies must send them away. Donations may be sent to the Home, No. 219 West Fourteenth street.

A concert for the benefit of the Italian Protestant Episcopal Church will take place this evening at Steinway Hall. Mrs. Dora Gordon Steele, Mme. Oaksmith, Mrs. C. Stauder, Mme. Corinne Thomaselli, Senor Jose Godoi, Mr. Edward Gilbert, Herr Herman Brandt, Signor Salvatore de Carlo, and an orchestra conducted by Prof. Thomas G. Boettger, will interpret a fine programme.

A woman of respectable appearance is obtaining money from charitable individuals by means of letters assuming to be addressed to them by the Sister Superintendent of St. Luke's Hospital, and signed, by a forgery, with her name in full. The Sister states that in no case is a recommendation for pecuniary assistance ever made by her, either verbally or in writing, through the parties seeking relief.

A resolution has been adopted by the New-York Chamber of Commerce approving and indorsing the act recently introduced into the Legislature, fixing the rate of interest to be charged. In the opinion of the Chamber, the enactment of the proposed measure would contribute largely to the interests of the commercial, manufacturing, and agricultural industries of the State. The early passage of the bill is earnestly urged by the Chamber.

At the meeting of the Board of Health held yesterday, a report concerning the importation of rags into this port was received from Sanitary Inspector Trask. The demand for rags is so great in this country, he says, that a cargo rarely remains in the City more than six hours after being landed. A communication was also received from the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, asking the board to take charge of the fever hospitals on Blackwell's Island.

Early yesterday morning Patrolman A. H. Schmitt, of the Sixteenth Precinct, noticed two young men, named George Harris and Henry Keppler, acting in a suspicious manner in front of the premises No. 136 Ninth avenue. The officer arrested them, and pursuing the assistance of his side-partner proceeded to search them. While they were so engaged a pistol shot was fired at the police officers, but failed to take effect. The would-be assassin, who is unknown, succeeded in making his escape.

When the store of Messrs. Hahn, Benjamin & Co., importers and manufacturers of cloaks at Nos. 313 and 315 Broadway, was opened for business on Monday morning last, it was discovered that the place had been visited by burglars and robbed of goods valued at $3,000. An examination of the stock showed that 69 black silk cloaks, 3 colored figured silk cloaks, 46 cloth cloaks, and 1 linen dress had been carried off. As a gray packing-trunk and a small case were also missing, it is believed that the goods were taken away in the trunk and case.

BROOKLYN.

The body of a woman about 50 years of age was found in the water at the foot of Little street yesterday.

Supervisor Curran, after visiting the public store-rooms, reports that the quality of the supplies furnished the poor is not up to the samples sent in by the contractors.

No disturbance was created by the 'long-shoremen on strike yesterday, but it is still deemed advisable to keep a large force of Police stationed at various points along the river front.

An anonymous circular has been placed on the desks of the Aldermen, asking for a meeting of the Aldermen elected last November, with the view of breaking the present dead-lock, the necessary votes to be obtained by a distribution of patronage.

On Monday evening the residence of Mr. John J. Walton was entered by a thief, who stole $800 worth of jewelry. The thief was seen by a servant, who raised an alarm. Officer Boyle responded, and was just in time to see the thief jump out of the window. Chase was given, but without avail.

Detective Price, while attempting to arrest Daniel Calahan, a member of the notorious "Jackson Hollow gang," on a charge of burglary, drew his pistol to prevent a rescue by Calahan's companions. The pistol was seized by Oscar Wilbur, who struck Price on the head with it. The officer fell to the ground in an unconscious condition, and Calahan escaped. Wilbur subsequently gave himself up, and said that Price was an insane man who was trying to shoot Calahan. Wilbur's character will be investigated.

LONG ISLAND.

Richard Everett, while driving on Monday night on College Point Causeway, was waylaid by two highwaymen, who jumped into his wagon, robbed him of $200, and then fled.

James Skidmore, Michael Sharp, and John Munchen, news-boys, in the employ of the Union News Company, were arrested yesterday morning by Officer Mitnocks on the charge of breaking open and robbing the news-stand in the Long Island Railroad Depot on Sunday night of money and cigars to the value of $50. Upon arraignment before Justice Purcell, of Astoria, the prisoners pleaded not guilty, and were fully committed to await the action of the Grand Jury.

The body of John Schleider, who was buried by the caving of the well on the Valentine farm, town of Flushing, on Thursday afternoon last, was recovered yesterday at noon. The body, when reached, was lying in the water at the bottom of the well. His head was badly crushed by a large stone, and death must have been instantaneous. An inquest was held on the body by Coroner Burns, after which it was taken in charge by his brother and forwarded to his home for burial. The well was found to be caved to the bottom curb, and now that the body has been recovered it will be filled up.

NEW-JERSEY.

The

The New-York Times.

VOL. XXVI.....NO. 7927. NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1877. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

THE DECISION IN THE FLORIDA CASE.

THE COMMISSIONERS VOTE AGAINST GOING BEHIND THE GOVERNOR'S CERTIFICATE BY EIGHT TO SEVEN—THE ACTION ON THE ALLEGED INELIGIBLE REPUBLICAN ELECTOR— TESTIMONY AS TO WHETHER HE WAS A FEDERAL OFFICER TO BE TAKEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The essential action of the Electoral Commission, to-day, can be briefly stated, and it was such as to give all but absolute assurance that the next President will be Rutherford B. Hayes. The first resolution voted upon had the effect to bar the consideration of any testimony except the papers referred to the Commission by the President of the Senate. These include the three sets of certificates and the papers attached, and the various objections, and nothing else whatever. The vote on this resolution was 8 to 7, as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Morton, Garfield, and Hoar, and Justices Strong, Miller, and Bradley.

Nays—Messrs. Thurman, Bayard, Payne, Hunton, and Abbott, and Justices Clifford and Field.

The Commission on this question divided on a party line, the Republicans and the Democrats voting together on their respective sides.

This resolution was supplemented by a second, which provides for hearing testimony as to the eligibility of Humphreys, one of the Florida Electors, to whom objection was made by the Democrats on the ground that he held the Federal office of Shipping Commissioner for the port of Pensacola, and was ineligible under the Constitution. The vote on the question of taking testimony in this case was the same as on the first resolution, except that Justice Bradley voted with the Democrats, and thus decided the passage of the resolution. These two resolutions sum up the decision of the Commission on the important question of going behind the returns.

The Commission will meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock, when counsel will be given an opportunity to present evidence in respect to the eligibility of Humphreys, and then there will be two hours for argument on each side upon the merits of the Florida case, as shown in the papers to be considered.

The Elector Humphreys is in town, and has the evidence of his resignation, of which the Democrats have been well enough apprised. He presented his resignation to Judge W. B. Wood, of the Circuit Court, on the 24th of September, and he was given notice of its acceptance on the 2d of October, on which date Judge Wood instructed the Collector of Pensacola to perform the duties of Shipping Commissioner. Mr. Humphreys resigned expressly to remove the disqualification a month before the election, and there is absolutely no ground whatever for the Democratic objection to counting his vote.

This settles the effect of the second resolution in favor of Hayes, and leaves the first resolution to determine the result. Under it all the papers submitted are examined, and the Governor's certificate is not considered conclusive, but only one piece of evidence in the case. His certificate would not be regarded as valid if it should be found to misrepresent or contradict the action of the State Canvassing Board, whose duty it is to determine and certify who are elected. In the case of Florida, it cannot be questioned that the Governor's certificate is in accordance with the action of the Returning Board, and consequently the votes of the Hayes Electors must be counted. The formal decision of the Commission as to which votes shall be counted will probably be made day after to-morrow, and there will be a joint meeting of Congress to continue the count on Saturday.

The arguments and debate in the Commission were marked by kind feeling and were free from excitement, generally, though the points made on either side were earnestly and vigorously maintained. Senator Morton insisted that the Commission had no power to go behind the action of the State in the appointment of Electors as determined and expressed by the proper State authority. He claimed that the election of Electors on the 6th of last December was final, and could not be disturbed by any subsequent proceedings whatever. His views were earnestly sustained by Senator Edmunds, Representative Garfield, and other Republicans. Senator Thurman endeavored to persuade the Commission to consider Thompson's report on the Florida case, and the proceedings of the Court in the quo warranto case. He was seconded in his efforts by the Democratic Commissioners. All the Republicans were firm in their position, and the Democrats were also unyielding. The first resolution was offered by Justice Miller, and was in the following language:

Ordered, That no evidence will be received by the Commission which was not submitted to the Joint Convention of the two Houses by the President of the Senate, with the different certificates, except such as relate to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys.

The language of the other resolution, to which the exception in the above quoted resolution conforms, was as follows:

Resolved, That in the case of Florida, this Commission will receive the evidence relating to the eligibility of Frederick C. Humphreys, one of the persons named in the certificate No. 1 of election.

The discussion in the Commission on these resolutions was of a colloquial character, and, as above noted, was free from anything whatever that could give personal offense to any member. But the Justices, who gave very little expression to their views yesterday, to-day declared their positions. The greatest partisanship shown in the Commission, is, by common report, attributed to Justice Field, the brother of David Dudley. Justice Bradley spoke but briefly, though he stated his views with great clearness and precision, and was the last to be heard before the vote was taken.

The Democrats are reticent to night, and do not like to talk. They claim that the decision is not conclusive against their case, as they have still a chance in Louisiana and Oregon. When they can be got to express their private opinions, they give up the situation. They will continue the contest, however, and are talking about the two ineligible Electors in Louisiana as liable to rejection under the ruling of the Commission. The fact is that the two ineligible Electors there were disposed of in an entirely legal manner. Their next hope is in Oregon, but the decision of the Commission in its scope permits just that kind of investigation which will show that Grover's certificate is not in accordance with the canvass of the votes, and therefore is not conclusive. The Commission could not have decided a preliminary question more favorably to the Republican position in Oregon. The truth is that very few men of either party have any doubt that the action of the Commission will result in the inauguration of Mr. Hayes. The Republicans are in the best of spirits, and while they have no doubt of the result, they restrain their expressions till the last point to be raised shall have been decided.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

The Electoral Commission commenced their session to-day at 10 o'clock, and continued it until 4. A large crowd of interested persons were in front of the doors of the court-room expressing great anxiety to learn the result of the deliberations. As members of the Commission came into the lobby on their way out of the Capitol, they were eagerly surrounded by their personal friends and interrogated. As the injunction of secrecy had been removed there was no objection to giving the desired information. The following is a copy of the minute on the official record of the Commission:

On motion of Mr. Justice Miller, ordered: That no evidence will be received or considered by the Commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two houses by the President of the Senate with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the Electors. The vote was as follows:

Yeas.—Messrs. Bradley, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, and Strong.

Nays.—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman.

On motion of Mr. Abbott

Resolved, That in the case of Florida, this Commission will receive the evidence relating to the eligibility of Frederick C. Humphreys, one of the persons named in certificate No. 1 as Elector.

Yeas—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Bradley, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman—8.

Nays—Messrs. Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, and Strong—7.

The Secretary of the Commission was instructed to inform the counsel on the respective sides that at 11 o'clock tomorrow it will be prepared to hear argument on the question of the eligibility of Frederick C. Humphreys as an Elector. Mr. Humphreys is one of the Republican Electors, and the question raised as to his eligibility is that he was at the date of his election a United States Shipping Commissioner, which is alleged to be such an office of trust and profit as to disqualify him from acting as Elector; but which office, it is asserted by the Republicans, he resigned before the election.

EFFECT OF THE DECISION.

The Commission, by their decision to-day, will have before them in the Florida case three sets of papers, namely, first, the certificate of the Hayes Electors; second, that of the Tilden Electors, and, third, the paper containing the record of the Circuit Court of Florida on the quo warranto, and the subsequent action of the Legislature of that State. The Republicans express themselves gratified with the decision of the Commission, while the Democrats are somewhat discouraged by it. The former claim that no consequence will be attached to the quo warranto proceedings of the Circuit Court of Florida, as they are now under appeal to the Supreme Court of that State, and, therefore, not final. It seems to be the prevalent belief that the ultimate decisions will be in favor of the Hayes and Wheeler Florida Electors, and that the course in this case will be pursued with regard to Louisiana, where there are two alleged ineligible Electors and more than one return. A prominent Democratic member of the Commission said this afternoon that the meaning of the vote of the Commission is that the ministerial acts of State executive officers are to be respected, but not those of the judiciary. He added, however, that as the Democratic certificates embody the proceedings of the court, they will by this decision be fully opened up for consideration and argument. The Democrats also find some satisfaction in the fact that the rule established by the Commission will lead to the ascertainment that Watts, the Republican Elector in Oregon, was ineligible at the time of his election, and hence only two Republican Electors from that State can be counted—Cronin, Democrat, being the third Elector. On this supposition they think the Democrats still have a chance for the Presidency, and that the election may be thrown into the House, where Tilden would be elected, and that in such event the choice of Mr. Wheeler as Vice President would devolve on the Senate.

The decision of the Commission is discussed at the hotels and in private political circles to-night, all conceding that the Republicans seemingly have the advantage. The Democrats express their regret that parties were strictly divided on the subject.

TESTIMONY IN MR. HUMPHREYS' CASE.

As pertinent to the subject of inquiry into the eligibility of Frederick C. Humphreys, as proposed by the Commission, the Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day examined that gentleman, in accordance with the instructions of the Senate, as follows:

Frederick C. Humphreys sworn and examined:

By the Chairman—Where do you reside? A.—Pensacola, Fla.

Q.—You were a candidate for election at the last Presidential election in Florida? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—On what ticket? A.—On the Republican ticket.

Q.—You were certified as elected and acted as such Elector? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Before that time had you held any office under the United States Government? A.—Yes, Sir; I was United States Shipping Commissioner at the port of Pensacola.

Q.—When were you appointed? A.—I have forgotten the exact date of my appointment; it was about two years since.

Q.—Somewhere about two years before the election? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you hold the office of Shipping Commissioner at the time of the election? A.—I did not.

Q.—Had your term expired or had you resigned? A.—No, Sir; I had resigned.

Q.—Did you resign in writing? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Have you a copy of your resignation with you? A.—I have not; I did not keep a copy of it, or I mislaid it; but I have the original of the acceptance of my resignation.

Q.—You made out and presented to the District Judge a resignation of Shipping Commissioner, did you? A.—Oh, yes, Sir.

Q.—About what time was that? A.—That was in September, I think. At any rate I indorsed the date of the receipt of the acceptance of the resignation. Here also is a letter from the Collector of the Port assuming the duties and asking me to turn over the records of the office.

Witness here handed the Chairman a letter.

Q.—Some time in September last, a month or more before the election, you handed in your resignation in writing to W. B. Woods, United States Circuit Judge? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—From whom you had received your appointment as Shipping Commissioner? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—In reply to that you received the following letter? A.—Yes, Sir.

The Chairman—The letter reads as follows:

SIR: Your letter of the 24th of September, 1876, resigning your office of Shipping Commissioner for the port of Pensacola, in the State of Florida has been received by me, and your resignation of said office is hereby accepted. Very respectfully your obedient servant,

W. B. WOODS, United States Circuit Judge.

To F. C. HUMPHREYS, Esq., Pensacola, Fla.

Oct. 2, 1876.

Q.—That letter you received from the Judge? A.—Yes, Sir.

The Chairman—The following indorsement is upon the back: "Judge W. B. Woods, Oct. 2, 1876."

Q.—That is simply an indorsement made by the person who received it? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Following that is the indorsement, "Accepting the resignation of Shipping Commissioner?" A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Also "Received, Oct. 5, 1876." A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—That is the date you received the acceptance of your resignation? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where was Judge Woods at the time this letter was written? A.—I think he was in Newark, Ohio.

Q.—He was there visiting at that time, was he? A.—He was there visiting; yes, Sir; there is another letter in relation to it.

Witness handed a letter to the Chairman.

Q.—You sent your letter to him by mail? A.—By mail, yes, Sir.

Q.—And received this reply by mail? A.—Yes, Sir.

The Chairman—This is another letter from him dated at Newark, Ohio, Oct. 2, 1876, and reads as follows:

DEAR SIR: I enclose the acceptance of your resignation as Shipping Commissioner. The vacancy can only be filled by the Circuit Court, and until I can come to Pensacola to open court for that purpose, the duties of the office will have to be discharged by the Collector. Respectfully yours,

W. B. WOODS.

Major F. C. HUMPHREYS, Pensacola, Fla.

The witness hands a letter to the Chairman.

Q.—The letter which you now hand to me is signed, "Hiram Potter, Jr., Collector Customs." Is he the Collector of Customs at Pensacola? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—This letter you received from him at the time it bears date, Oct. 5, 1876? A.—Yes.

Chairman—It reads as follows:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, PENSACOLA, FLA., COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Oct. 5, 1876.

SIR:—I am informed by Judge Wood that he has accepted your resignation as United States Shipping Commissioner, and that it devolves upon me to assume the duties of the office until a regular appointment shall be made by the Circuit Court. I respectfully request, therefore, that you will turn over to me such public books, papers, records, &c., as may pertain to the business. I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HIRAM POTTER, JR., Collector of Customs.

F. C. HUMPHREYS, Esq., Pensacola, Fla.

Q.—Did you so turn over to him all the public property he refers to in this document? A.—No, Sir; there was no public property; it was all my private property; the blanks and books pertaining to the office were purchased by myself, and I did not turn them over to Mr. Potter.

Q.—Were there any records in the office? A.—No, Sir; except what belonged to me individually; but he assumed the duties; from that date he assumed the duties, and has been discharging them ever since.

Q.—Have you had anything to do with the office in any way since? A.—No, sir; nothing at all.

Q.—Have you discharged any of its functions or assumed to be Shipping Commissioner in any way? A.—No, sir.

A.—You have not done so since the 5th of October, 1876? A.—No, Sir.

By Mr. Cooper—You did not turn over the books? A.—No, Sir; I had a lot of blanks on hand, but they were my private property, purchased in New-York.

By Mr. Teller—They were purchased with your own money? A.—My own money; yes, Sir.

An objection will be made from the Democratic side to the counting of the Electoral vote of Illinois when the two houses shall again meet in joint session to count the Electoral vote. The basis of such objection is the following information received this afternoon by Hon. William M. Springer, of that State, and dated Springfield, Ill., Feb. 7:

Chaffee, a Hayes elector, was United States Commissioner for the Southern District of Illinois when elected. He acted as an Elector without resigning his office; the proof is positive; he is here and admits it and the records show it.

G. W. WENDLING.
JOHN H. OBERLY.
E. L. MERRITT.

As there is only one return from Illinois, the objection to counting the vote is required to be signed by at least one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives, whereupon the two houses will separate for action. No vote or votes from any State from which but one return has been received can be rejected except by the affirmative vote of the two houses. This case will not be subject to the Electoral Commission.

TILDEN'S DISPATCH FROM "GOBBLE."

THE TELEGRAM UNQUESTIONABLY SENT BY GOV. GROVER—HIS DECISION AGAINST THE REPUBLICAN ELECTOR ANNOUNCED TO TILDEN FIVE DAYS BEFORE THE PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT — PATRICK'S MINING STOCK BROKERS' KEY USED BY THE GOVERNORS OF OREGON AND NEW-YORK.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Feb. 7.—The Detroit Tribune publishes to-day a translation of the famous "Gobble" dispatch from Oregon to Tilden on Dec. 1. The key was furnished to it by a man who knows of a cipher used by some mining operators in the West and their brokers, Patrick, of Omaha, being one of the men who has made use of it in his business operations. The base of operations is a small pocket dictionary of English publication and peculiar arrangement. This dictionary has three columns on each page, and in this case the plan was to choose the word desired, then turn back two pages, and the corresponding word in the same column of words, counting from the top of the page, was the one that was taken for use in the cipher dispatch. The original dispatch, it will be remembered, read as follows:

PORTLAND, Oregon, Dec. 1, 1876.

To the Hon. S. J. Tilden, Gramercy Park, New-York:

Reed. Scantiness. Cramp. Emerge. Peroration. Hot-house. Survivor. Browse. Of. Piameter. Dottish. Hot-house. Exactness. Of. Survivor. Highest. Cunning. Dottish. Afar. Galvanic. Survivor. By. Accordingly. Respectful. Merciless. Of. Senator. In. Consequence Coalesce. GOBBLE.

These words are deciphered by the reversal of the above-noted plan into the following:

"I shall decide every point in the case of Post Office Elector in favor of the highest Democratic Elector, and grant the certificate accordingly. Rule morning of sixth, in consequence. (Confidential.)"

Concerning the matter, the Tribune editorial says: "We have seen the dictionary and deciphered the entire dispatch by its use. The right word was looked for and found every time two pages in advance of the word found in the dispatch, and at the same numbered word from the top of the column. The demonstration is perfect. It would be utterly inconceivable that the translation which we have traced out, word by word, in this particular dictionary, could fit the political situation in Oregon as it does, if it were not the correct and absolute key. The signature alone defies translation, in this or any other way, and was undoubtedly agreed upon beforehand and understood. The same key reveals the fact that in some of the Patrick telegrams, where the word 'medicine' was used, the word money should be substituted, to ascertain the real meaning."

A BANK STOLEN BY ITS CASHIER.

FURTHER PARTICULARS OF THE ABSCONDING OF THE CASHIER OF THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF FRANKLIN, IND.—LOSS, $140,000, FALLING ON FARMERS MAINLY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 7.—The particulars of the robbery of the First National Bank at Franklin, Ind., show it to have been one of the most daring and successful crimes ever perpetrated in the State. The Cashier, R. T. Taylor, deliberately loaded up all the important books and the entire available funds of the bank, amounting to not less than $140,000, and was beyond reach before his absence was noticed. Up to the hour of closing the bank at noon yesterday he had borne a good character for honesty. When it was found that he had gone and taken the bank with him, the apathy shown by the Directors and other officers in his pursuit gave rise to suspicions that others beside himself were implicated in the robbery. An examination of the concern made to-day showed that nothing but the shell was left. It seems almost incredible to the people that he could have perpetrated the crime so successfully without accomplices in the bank. He left a curt note behind, saying that Chicago speculations did the business, and that it would be useless to attempt to find him. The affair has caused great excitement among the inhabitants of the little town, and creates considerable interest throughout the State. The loss falls mainly on rural depositors.

A MISSING MUSIC TEACHER.

Information reached Police Head-quarters yesterday that a French music-teacher named Duplat mysteriously disappeared from his boarding-house, No. 50 Irving place, three weeks ago, leaving his effects behind, and had not been heard of since. M. Duplat is 30 years of age, five feet ten inches in stature, has large gray eyes, prominent nose and large light side whiskers. He had been at No. 50 Irving place about a year, and during that period frequently received letters from Europe, which apparently caused him great uneasiness. When he left the boarding-house Duplat was a little indebted to the landlady. Detective Tieman was assigned on the case.

WASHINGTON.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

THE ROYALTY TO MR. BARCLAY FOR HIS DIGEST OF THE DECISIONS OF THE SPEAKERS TO BE DISCONTINUED—THE EADS APPROPRIATION—RATES OF WAGES IN THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—A paragraph in the General Deficiency Appropriation bill repeals a House resolution passed in July, 1871, authorizing the payment of $1 for each copy of Barclay's Digest, ordered by the House. This work is printed at the expense of the Government, and is simply a compilation of the parliamentary decisions made in the House by the Speaker. It is said Mr. Barclay has already received for his compilation over $50,000, and it is now proposed that in future the House Journal Clerk shall continue the work of compilation and receive for the slight additional labor imposed $1,000 per annum. The paragraph gave rise to a long debate, the friends of Mr. Barclay contending that the Government had no right to deprive him of his copyright. There is no reason why the House should continue to pay an extravagant price for this work. Any publisher in the country would be glad to publish the book, bearing all the cost of publication, and sell 3,000 copies per annum at the rate of $1 per copy. The royalty paid Mr. Barclay for adding each year about five pages to his work is 50 per cent. greater than that paid the most distinguished authors for their labors. The same magnificent gratuity is annually voted the Chief Clerk of the Senate for compiling the parliamentary discussions of that body. The House passed the paragraph to discontinue the payment to Mr. Barclay.

In the Senate this morning the Eads Jetty bill and the bill which provides for the repayment of the money advanced by the United States Government to the Pacific railroads were considered at some length, but no action was taken upon them. From the House the bill providing for an appropriation to meet the deficiency in the expenditures for public printing was reported back with an amendment providing that hereafter no higher rate of wages be paid for printing or binding than is paid in New-York and other large cities by private establishments. Such an enactment would not only reduce the pay of the employes of the Government Printing Bureau, but would also have the effect of increasing their hours of labor. For this reason the amendment was opposed by Senator Sargent and others, and was non-concurred in by a vote of 28 to 20.

THE TAX ON BANK DEPOSITS.

A LARGE DEPUTATION BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS—THE REPEAL OF THE PRESENT LAW ASKED FOR.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—A large and influential deputation was heard to-day before the Committee of Ways and Means, on the repeal of the taxes on bank capital and deposits. About 50 gentlemen were present, representing the national banks, State banks, private, and savings banks, with the clearing-houses, chambers of commerce, and boards of trade of almost every large city in the United States. The American Bankers' Association, by which this movement for the repeal of the taxes on the banking business was first originated, comprises 2,000 banks in various parts of the United States; and it has also the aid of a large proportion of the other banks, from which petitions and letters are daily received by members of Congress in regard to the repealing of bank taxation. So great was the interest excited by the deputation that almost every member of the committee was present. The committee was addressed by Messrs. Patterson, of Philadelphia; J. D. Hayes, of Detroit; Norris, of Baltimore; Buell, and George S. Coe, President of the American Exchange Bank, of New-York. The last-named gentleman said there was not only an immediate necessity for the repeal of the taxes on bank deposits and capital, but that the Treasury could easily spare the $8,000,000 of annual revenue from this source. What was the state of the Treasury, as exhibited in the report just presented to Congress by Secretary Morrill? Was there a deficit? Did the Secretary complain of failing taxes or unpaid appropriations? On the contrary, after every needful expense had been paid for the carrying on of the Government the Secretary reports a surplus of no less than $26,000,000. With such a surplus as this in the Treasury it was idle to talk of the inability of the revenue to spare $8,000,000 of taxation which was so mischievous and so destructive as that which Congress was now asked to repeal. He desired the committee to consider what a tax on deposits of banks really was. It was not a tax, as some persons supposed, upon money, but it looked upon the matter we should find that the bank deposits in the United States were almost three times as great as the volume of money. For every dollar of outstanding currency we had at least $2 or $3 of bank deposits. This being so, it must be clear that a tax on deposits was not a tax on money. Every one at all familiar with practical banking knew that the deposits were not created chiefly by the actual use of currency. They did not represent greenbacks or bank notes passed over the bank counter by its customer. They represented cotton, tobacco, wheat, pork and a multitude of other commodities, which were passing from one city to another, and created in each city through which they passed an instrument of credit, which, being placed in a bank, became converted into the deposits of that bank. When the same commodities reached another city or port in their passage from the producer to the consumer, they again added to the volume of bank deposit. In this way the same parcel of goods created, very often a half a dozen successive deposits, all of which were running at the same time, and were paying taxes to the National Treasury just as if they were separate, independent, and wholly distinct masses of capital. When once our legislators could be induced to study this aspect of the tax on deposits, our cause would be immediately gained. No further argument would be necessary to show that the tax on bank deposits, which in all other countries had been rejected and disused, was more mischevious in a young country like the United States than in older nations where capital is more abundant, better organized, and less sensitive to injury from injudicious fiscal or other legislation. Congress was asked to repeal the taxes on bank deposits, not only because the Treasury had a large surplus which it could only use in paying off unmatured debts, which the creditors did not wish to have paid off, but because in their very nature bank deposits were so fugitive and traveled so fast from bank to bank, and from city to city, that we could not tax them at all without frequently taxing them many times over. Gentlemen had been complaining of double taxation, but it would be hard for an advocate of bank taxes to prove that tax on deposits did not involve three-fold, five-fold, or even seven-fold taxation.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

A PROPOSITION SUBMITTED TO CONGRESS BY A REPRESENTATIVE FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The following is the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to-day by Representative Malsh, of Pennsylvania, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Article II., section 1, paragraph 2 to be made to read as follows: "Each State shall be entitled to a number of Electoral votes equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State shall be entitled in Congress." The first division of the twelfth amendment to the Constitution, ending with the words, "directed to the President of the Senate," to be struck out, and the following substituted: "The citizens of each State who shall be qualified to vote for Representatives in Congress shall cast their votes for candidates for President and Vice President, and by ballot, and proper returns of the votes so cast shall be made under seal within 10 days to the Secretary of State, or other officer lawfully performing the duties of such Secretary in the Government of the State, by whom the said returns shall be publicly opened in the presence of the Chief Magistrate of the State, and of the Chief Justice or Judge of the highest court thereof, and the said Secretary, Chief Magistrate, and Judge, shall assign to each candidate voted for by a sufficient number of citizens a proportionate part of the Electoral votes to which the State shall be entitled in the manner following; that is to say: They shall divide the whole number of votes returned by the whole number of the State's Electoral votes, and the resulting quotient shall be the Electoral ratio for the State; and shall assign to candidates voted for one Electoral vote for each ratio of popular votes received by them respectively, and, if necessary, additional Electoral votes for successive largest fractions of a ratio shall be assigned to candidates voted for, until the whole number of the Electoral votes of the State shall be distributed. And said officers shall thereupon make up and certify at least three general returns, comprising the popular vote by counties, parishes, or other principal divisions of the State, and their apportionment of Electoral votes as aforesaid, and shall transmit two thereof, under seal, to the seat of Government of the United States, one directed to the President of the Senate, and one to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and a third unsealed return shall be forthwith filed by the said Secretary in his office, be recorded therein, and be at all times open to inspection."

ILLNESS OF SECRETARY MORRILL.

A STATEMENT OF MR. MORRILL'S CONDITION BY HIS ATTENDING PHYSICIAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—Dr. Pope, who is attending Secretary Morrill, furnishes the following statement of his condition at 9 o'clock to-night: "Secretary Morrill has typho-malarial fever of a severe grade. The pulmonary complications, fraught with imminent danger a few days ago, have been measurably relieved, and his condition to-night is in many respects more favorable." The Secretary's friends to-day have increased hopes of his recovery.

REDEMPTION OF BANK NOTES.

REGULATIONS ISSUED BY THE UNITED STATES TREASURER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The United States Treasurer has issued regulations governing the redemption of national bank notes in lieu of all others, by which it is provided: Every newly organized national bank, with the exception of national gold banks, is required immediately on the receipt of its circulation from the Controller of the Currency, to deposit in the Treasury of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent. thereof in lawful money of the United States. The notes of national banks other than gold banks, may be forwarded to the Treasurer of the United States and Redemption Agent under the contract with Adams' Express Company in sums of $1,000, or any multiple thereof by any company, firm, bank, or corporation situated within the territory covered by the contract. The law officers of the department having decided that national bank notes stolen when unsigned, and put in circulation with forged signatures, are not obligatory promissory notes of the bank under section 5,182 of the Revised Statutes, such notes are not redeemed by the agency. Immediately on receipt of the Treasurer's notification advising them of the redemption of their notes, national banks are required to remit the whole amount due.

The express charges on national bank notes received for redemption or credit on United States currency returned for national bank notes redeemed, and on assorted national bank notes fit for circulation, forwarded to the banks of issue, are advanced by the agency and afterward assessed upon the several national banks in proportion to the amount of their circulation redeemed. No new currency is ordered to be printed, except on requisitions from the banks, specifying the amounts and denominations desired. Banks usually order supplies in advance, from which Controller remits from time to time new notes of their issue in return for their notes unfit for circulation destroyed. Under section 3 of the Redemption act, the expense incurred by the agency for "the charges for transportation and the costs for assorting the redeemed notes of national banks," are assessed upon the several banks in proportion to their circulation redeemed, and are charged to them in their 5 per cent. accounts.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITOL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The House Ways and Means Committee, to-day, heard argument in advocacy of the proposed repeal of all Federal taxation on the circulation, deposits, and capital of banks. Between 40 and 50 gentleman from various parts of the country were present to urge the repeal, in accordance with the resolution of the Executive Council of the American Bankers Association, which includes in its membership about two thousand national and savings banks and private bankers. The oral arguments before the committee this morning were made by Joseph Patterson, President of the Western National Bank of Philadelphia; James Buell, President of the Importers' and Traders' National Bank of New York; J. D. Hayes, President of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Bank of Detroit; George S. Coe, President of the American Exchange Bank of New-York; J. S. Norris, President of the First National Bank of Baltimore, and Gustav Schwab, on behalf of the New-York Chamber of Commerce.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day: Charles H. Phelps, to be United States Marshal for Wyoming Territory; Luther C. Stevens, to be United States Attorney for the Western District of Missouri; Charles C. Goodenow, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at New-Ulm, Minn. To be Postmasters; T. Blair Patton, at Altoona, Penn.; John A. Hubbard, at Lockport, N. Y.; Miss S. E. Richardson, at Gardner, Mass.; Elisha P. Liscomb, at Lebanon, N. H.; S. W. Osborne, at Darlington, Wis.; Leonard Wilson, at Marshall, Mo.; Mrs. Emma E. Hotten, at Versailles, Ky.

Mr. Morrill took a little nourishment this morning, after which he fell asleep, and upon awakening said he felt better. At 2 o'clock P. M. he drank a little beef soup, and his physician and family think that if he continues to take nourishment he will soon rally.

The operation of all offers of pecuniary reward hitherto made for the detection and punishment of persons employed in the illicit distillation of spirits is suspended until further notice, so far as regards the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, and the Second District of Tennessee and the Second District of Alabama. Commissioner Raum informs Collectors and agents that other and more effective methods for the suppression of illicit distillation in these localities are now being put in operation.

First Lieut. James M. Ingalls, of the First Artillery, has been detailed for duty as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at the Houghton High School, Houghton, Mich. Lieut. Col. James A. Ekin, Deputy Quartermaster General, is ordered to report in person to the Secretary of War.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $230 793 60, and from Customs, $448,836 68.

The following were the balances in the Treasury of the United States at the closing hour to-day: Currency, $10,496,063; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $35,170,000; coin, including $55,012,100 in coin certificates, $88,739,561; outstanding legal tenders, $364,484,812.

Applications are being made by parties now here for the pardon of the notorious counterfeiter Tom Ballard. His wife is now in Washington engaged in the business, and Ballard himself has written a letter to several well-known citizens of Washington, with whom he had an acquaintance, soliciting their influence in his favor. If a pardon cannot be granted, every effort will be made to obtain the remission of a portion of the sentence, which is 30 years in the Albany State Prison. Applications are also moving for the pardon of Wilson Rigge and Ben Boyd, also well-known counterfeiters.

The following dispatch was received at the Internal Revenue Office to-day from Revenue Agent Warner, at Greensboro, N. C.: "Deputy Marshal Robertson, of South Carolina, just reports two men killed and several wounded by illicit distillers raided on by him without troops. Am hurrying to provide Major Stewart with horses so we can stop this resistance."

Senator Gordon, of Georgia, who has been suffering from severe indisposition for several days past, was in his seat in the Senate to-day, and spoke in advocacy of the bill recently introduced by him to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness to the Government of the Pacific railroads.

Owing to his physical condition he was unable to treat the subject as fully as he desired. After leaving the Senate he had a severe chill, and is again confined to his bed to-night; but his physician hopes to have him out in a day or two.

Mr. A. H. Herr, of Georgetown has been appointed by the President a member of the Board of Police Commissioners in place of Frederick Douglass, from whom nothing has been heard in connection with his appointment. Mr. Herr, not having qualified, took no part in the proceedings of the board to-day.

THE GORGED RIVERS.

DANGER STILL THREATENING AT PORT DEPOSIT—CONDITION OF THE RIVER AT OTHER POINTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 7.—The people at Port Deposit are to-night hopeful that the danger which has been threatening that town from the ice-gorges of the Susquehanna, has passed. The river still remains choked with ice opposite the town, and at various other points up the stream. The masses which have clogged at these points still retain their gigantic proportions, the mild weather having had but little effect upon them. The water which had flooded the country above McCall's Ferry has receded, and is sinking in the river and passing under the numerous gorges slowly. A sudden rise of the waters would break the ice barriers and probably do much damage upon the farms and in the villages along the river. The hope of all now is that the present mild weather will last one week longer, which is scarcely probable, as nothing but a gradual thaw can avert the menacing danger.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Feb. 7.—There is no change in the ice here, except that it has melted very much to-day. There is very little current in the river, which below the light-house is nearly clear of ice.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 7.—Advices from points along the Susquehanna north of here, state that the river is falling, and that there is no change in the condition of the ice since last night.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF OREGON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PORTLAND, Feb. 7.—Last evening ex-Gov. Grover arrived at Salem, overland from the East. Mr. Grover, after formally turning over the executive office to Secretary Chadwick, now acting Governor, will return immediately to Washington to assume his seat in the Senate on March 4. There was no demonstration or enthusiasm among the Democracy on the occasion of Grover's return.

TRIAL OF FOUR MOLLY MAGUIRES.

SCRANTON, Feb. 7.—The trial of four Molly Maguires, named Patrick Hester, Peter McHugh, Alexander Graham, and Patrick Tully, on a charge of having murdered Alexander Rea, nine years ago, at Centralia, was commenced in Bloomsburg this evening. The Grand Jury brought in a true bill, and the prisoners pleaded not guilty. Hester entered a special plea, and claimed that he ought not to be tried on the ground that he had been indicted and held in jail on the same charge ever two terms of the court nine years ago, and was not granted a trial at the time, although claiming one, but was discharged. His plea was filed, together with the answer on the part of the Commonwealth, after which the court adjourned until 9 o'clock to-morrow. The town is thronged with strangers, and a large number were unable to gain admittance to the court-room.

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

BROWNSVILLE, Feb. 7.—Gen. Revueltas and several subordinate officers are preparing in evident haste to quit Matamoras. It is understood that they will cross the Rio Grande to-night and take the steamer to-morrow at Brazos, Texas, for New-Orleans. Although Revueltas for weeks past has proclaimed that he was acting by authority of Diaz, it is now believed that his pretended orders from Diaz were not genuine, and that after plundering all the foreign merchants he could he is now to fly to avoid Gen. Canatelis, who is said to be on the way to take command of this frontier for the Diaz Government. It is not known who will command until Canatelis comes, but it is feared that Corinna's bandits will come in to-morrow. There is consequently great excitement among the foreign residents, who apprehend that they will again be plundered.

BANK IRREGULARITIES IN HARTFORD, CONN.

HARTFORD, Feb. 7.—The Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank of this city, which has a capital of $1,105,000, and a surplus of over $400,000, was found to-day to be a heavy loser on overdrafts and loans made without the knowledge of the Directors. The extent of loss is not known; but the capital is probably not impaired, or if so the impairment is slight. Nothing implicates the officers as participating in the misused funds, and affairs are very peculiar.

YACHTING REGATTA ON THE HUDSON.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Feb. 7.—A special to the Eagle from New-Hamburg says that on short notice the regatta of the New-Hamburg Ice Yacht Association, for a service of silver, occurred to-day. The Flyaway, Commodore Grinnell's yacht, won the prize. During the race three yachts, the Zigzag, Flying Cloud, and Zephyr, broke through the ice, but were rescued without damage.

NOMINATED FOR ASSEMBLYMAN.

MIDDLETOWN, Feb. 7.—The Republicans of the Second District of Orange County to-day nominated for Assembly, to fill a vacancy, Charles W. Douglass, formerly Superintendant of the Delaware Division of the Erie Railway, later of the Southside Railroad of Long Island, and since connected with a railroad in Texas.

THE FAMILY OF THE LATE MR. BLISS.

BOSTON, Feb. 7.—The following card is published to-day:

I am glad to announce to the Christian public that contributions for the family of Mr. P. P. Bliss, have been so liberal, that with the addition of what he left they are well provided for, and collections should now cease. D. L. MOODY.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 7.—The Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren in Christ met in this city to-day, Bishop Dickison, of Illinois, presiding. About 40 delegates were present. The sessions of the conference will continue during the remainder of the week.

ROYAL ARCH MASON

witness' show, but he was to have two-thirds of the receipts and pay the expenses; then came back to New-Orleans and was appointed Clerk of the Court of Natchitoches Parish; was a railroad clerk for a year afterward; was appointed by Gov. Warmoth Assistant Secretary of State; was reappointed under the McEnery Government; this was considered as employed by that Government until the Wheeler compromise, although he received no salary; was called to Washington as a witness in the McEnery-Kellogg affair; next held the position of Post Office clerk, which he holds still; the man doing his work is now drawing witness's pay; was appointed clerk immediately after the Returning Board commenced its sessions; knew Littlefield when he kept a billiard saloon; was one of the patrons of the establishment, although he didn't know that Littlefield kept it; all the betting at the pool table was done by the players; thought Littlefield's reputation then was good, but didn't know much about him; did not drink anything at the supper of the board on the 3d of December, although the others did; didn't know that the money for the supper was paid by the Republican Central Committee at Mallet's request, although he knew that neither himself nor Littlefield paid it; didn't think any of the clerks were intoxicated; had seen liquor in the rooms of the Board; was taking off the tabulated returns of the State Electoral vote that night; don't remember what parishes he was at work on; thought Littlefield was making reductions on polls stricken out and calling off the figures; did not remember Gov. Wells being in the room with the night until he started home, about 2 o'clock; Gov. Wells returned from supper first; Littlefield remained until the bill was paid; when witness returned thought the office room was empty; the discrepancy between the Electoral votes from the report of the Supervisors of Registration and the returns of the State Board of Canvassers in the Concordia, Nachitoches, and Vernon Parishes witness could not explain, as he simply made the tabulated statements from the copies returned; first knew of a manufactured return from Vernon Parish last Saturday.

In answer to Senator Saulsbury, witness said no member of the board ever gave witness instructions for changing returns, nor did Mr. Ray, the attorney of the board.

T. W. Eaton was examined by Senator Wadleigh. He testified that he was a Clerk of the Louisiana Returning Board; attended the supper on the 3d of December, and afterward returned to the office; saw Littlefield there; did not see him or any one make erasures on original returns; first heard of alterations in the Vernon return in the examination of Judge Davis by the Morrison Committee; Littlefield never asked him to assist in making alterations; first heard of the loss of the original return by the newspapers; did not see any of the clerks intoxicated the night of the supper referred to; have resided in New-Orleans for nine years; was first in the Custom-house, and then in the Internal Revenue Department; afterward Storekeeper until 1873; then a gauger in the Internal Revenue Department; Gen. Sheridale gave him all the above appointments; held the last position until August, 1874; was then unemployed for three months; then went in the State Auditor's office as clerk and holds that position still; there are 57 parishes in Louisiana; don't know the number of polls; the Board passed on all the polls of all the parishes in secret session; the work of tabulation of returns was completed the evening before the promulgation of the returns; witness knows nothing of the action of the board while in secret session; never had anything to do with affidavits or with more than one or two to the clerks of the House Committe who were taking copies.

Judge Davis was recalled and was examined by Mr. Wadleigh. Witness stated that he had furnished the memoranda from which had been prepared a list of discrepancies between the Electoral returns as published by the Returning Board and that made by the Democratic State Committee.

Mr. Saulsbury objected to the reading, on the ground that the committee had called for the original reports, and that the list referred to would be incompetent when the original returns of discrepancies were accessible.

Mr. McDonald sustained the objection, on the ground that the statement of Davis was mere parol proof.

The Chairman (Mr. Howe) held that the statement of Davis was competent in all respects, and was as full from the standpoint of view of Messrs. Saulsbury and McDonald as from the ground taken by any members of the committee.

The committee sustained the Chairman, after discussion, and witness stated, (reading from his statement:) There was a discrepancy in the Parish of Avoyelles as to the vote for De Blanc, a Democratic Elector, giving the candidate 1,400 votes more than allowed by the Returning Board; in the Parish of West Baton Rouge the canvass shows slight differences; similar discrepancies were reported by the witness from this statement in the returns from Bienville, Caddo, Carroll, Iberville, Lincoln, Plaquemines, Point Coupee, Rapides, Red River, St. John Baptiste, St. Martin, Terre Bonne, Vermillion, Calcasien, Concordia, Jefferson, St. James, St. Mary, Madison, La Fourche, Orleans, Caldwell, and De Soto. The discrepancies reported were slight in nearly all cases. The witness was dismissed till to-morrow for cross-examination.

William H. Green was sworn and examined by Mr. Wadleigh. Witness was minute clerk of the Returning Board; he described his duties as such; he had charge of the papers forwarded to the board; he add-essed them, verified them, and kept a record of them in a book; was present at the office of the board Dec. 3; was there after the dinner which had been referred to, and remained until a little after 12 o'clock; was in all the offices of the board; saw Littlefield there; he may have been making erasures, but witness paid no more attention to him than to any other clerk; witness just heard of the alteration in Vernon Parish, when summoned before the Morrison Committee, Dec. 13, as a witness; first heard of the destruction of the original return a few days ago; affidavits from Vernon Parish were before the board, and in witness' charge; don't remember the date when they were received; the board gave no orders that no original papers were not to be altered.

Cross-examination by Mr. McDonald—Was with the board from their organization until the 31st of December; the minute-books kept by witness are in New-Orleans; the minute-books contain copies of all affiants in relation to election returns on both sides, and show the parishes from which all affidavits were received; don't know who has the custody of the board-books at the present time.

Isaiore McCormick was sworn and examined by Mr. Wadleigh: Was one of the Returning Board clerks; returned to the board rooms after the Sunday night dinner, and remained until all the clerks left. The witness corroborated the testimony of previous witnesses as to Littlefield's operations in the board-rooms that night; also in relation to the alteration and destruction of original papers, testified to by Littlefield. Saw Spearing after Littlefield was gone, and he said the Republican Party had gone back on Littlefield; the expression was, "Given Fred the goose, and now Fred was going to take care of himself;" Spearing had been an active Republican, and at the election had supported the side of Nicholls.

Cross-examined by Mr. Saulsbury, the witness said: Littlefield might have done writing at some of the desks the night of the alleged alteration of the Vernon return, but is of the impression that he was mostly, or altogether, occupied in reading off the returns to the other clerks; if he did any other work than reading, it must have been tabulating; don't think Gov. Wells had any conversation that night with Littlefield; at the Returning Board dinner referred to, John Ray, a Republican lawyer, was present.

In answer to Mr. McDonald, witness said he read the Republican paper published at New-Orleans; that paper published a synopsis of the testimony taken before the committee at New-Orleans; don't remember reading the testimony of Gov. Wells before that committee, in which Wells referred to the matter of the altered Vernon report as a clerical error; only heard of the altered return after the testimony of Murphy was given before the committee in this city.

At 3:45 P. M. the committee adjourned until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

THE OREGON ELECTORAL CASE.

GEORGE L. MILLER BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE—COPIES OF TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCHES PRESENTED BY SENATOR KERNAN.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The Senate Committee investigating the Oregon Electoral case examined this morning Dr. George L. Miller, of Omaha, Neb., who is a member of the National Democratic Committee. He testified in reply to Senator Mitchell that he had a telegraphic correspondence with W. T. Pelton, of New-York, in November last, in relation to the Oregon case; he was requested by Peiton to go to Oregon and do what he could to prevent Watts' getting a certificate, as it was believed that the Democrats had a good case there; could not go, but sent J. H. N. Patrick.

In reply to Senator Kernan, witness stated that nothing was ever said about the illegitimate use of money to him in connection with the Oregon case; he told Mr. Patrick that necessary expenses for a trip to Oregon would be paid from head-quarters; saw Patrick upon his return to Omaha from Oregon; Patrick told him that lawyers had been retained to argue against the issuing of a certificate to Watts; witness thought that Patrick said something about a member of the law firm which had been retained by the Democrats being connected with the Oregonian, a daily paper published at Portland, but did not understand that this was the main reason for employing the firm; he received no dispatches asking him to help raise money to pay expenses of any sort in connection with the Oregon case.

Senator Kernan introduced the following dispatches in evidence:

NEW-YORK, Feb. 8.

To John H. Mitchell, or H. W. Scott, Portland, Oregon:

We are now absolutely certain of 185 votes for Hayes if Oregon is safe, and Tilden is sure of the rest. Can you certainly defeat all Democratic attempts by fraud, false counting, or bribery, to capture? Answer when sure. CHANDLER.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Nov. 9.

Hon. Z. Chandler, New-York:

It is absolutely certain Have no fear for Oregon. for Hayes and Wheeler. Our majority at least 1,000. Every precaution has been taken from the first against fraud. Democrats concede the election has been fair, and admit publicly that we have the State by at least 800. Our anxiety is not for Oregon, but other States. Give me the latest reliable information. JOHN H. MITCHELL.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.

Hon. John H. Mitchell, Portland, Oregon:

Gaves is almost if Oregon is certain. Get returns as soon as possible and announce result. Make special arrangement against fraud, which will be attempted. Watch every precinct. Answer. A. A. SARGENT.

John H. Mitchell, Portland, Oregon:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 8.

Without Oregon Hayes is defeated. Don't be defrauded. Hasten returns. Answer. W. E. CHANDLER.

Hon. J. H. Mitchell;

NEW-YORK, Nov. 9.

Returns elect Hayes sure with Oregon, which is indispensable; use utmost vigilance. W. E. CHANDLER.

Hon. John H. Mitchell, Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.:

PORTLAND, Nov. 15, 1876.

Democrats claim that Watts is ineligible, being Postmaster at the time of election. He has now resigned, and resignation accepted. Vote not being canvassed yet. He will undoubtedly be all right. In event of Secretary of State refusing to give certificate to Watts, and recognizing Democrat having next highest vote, Cartwright and O'Bell will refuse to recognize, and will appoint Watts, and they vote. Have you any good news? STEELE.

LOW CANAL TOLLS.

MEETING AT THE COOPER INSTITUTE—DOUBLE TAXATION ON CANAL-BOATS DENOUNCED—RESOLUTIONS ADVOCATING THE ABOLITION OF DIRECT REVENUE ON THE ERIE CANAL.

The large hall of Cooper Union was more than half filled last evening, the occasion being a mass-meeting called in favor of "low tolls or no tolls" on the Erie Canal. On the platform were many gentlemen well known in local commercial circles. Hon. Peter Cooper presided, and opened proceedings in a short speech. Mr. Emerson Foote read a telegram from Hon. L. Bradford Prince, regretting his inability to be present, and expressing his sympathy with the object of the meeting. Mr. Wadsworth, of Buffalo, read a series of resolutions denouncing double taxation on canal-boats and their appliances as suicidal and contrary to sound political economy; advocating the abolition of direct revenue as applied to the Erie Canal, and the substitution of increased business therefor; the issuance of new bonds by constitutional amendment if necessary for the payment of all liens imposed by the Constitution on the so-called surplus revenues, sufficient revenue not being obtainable under the present system; the making of the Erie Canal a public highway, and its surrender to the National Government and conversion into a national highway. The resolutions were frequently applauded and were carried unanimously. Mr. Foote then read a three-column letter from Hon. Horatio Seymour arguing strongly in favor of the abolition of tolls on the canals. It recites the injustice that has been done to the canal boatmen by improper legislation and corrupt management, and says that the public mind has been misled by the habit of grouping together the canals that pay and those that waste, and comparing them with the railroads. The boatmen of the Erie, Oswego and Champlain Canals pay for the cost of building and keeping in order all the other water routes. They have paid into the Treasury $120,000,000, a profit of more than $40,000,000 above cost of construction and maintenance. The railroads, on the contrary, pay no tolls. These tolls are in reality taxes, and most hurtful to the community in general, as the chief articles carried on canals are food, fuel and lumber, the basis of all industry. It is also a well-known fact, he says, that the railroads regulate their charges according to the increase or decrease of canal tolls, and the difference reacts on the tax-payer, who, if he gains $1 from the canal, loses $3 to the railroads. Trade is diverted by high rates of freight, and property decreases in value in proportion. The notion that the canals are of local benefit merely is ill-founded. The cities along the line of the Erie Canal are taxed greatly in excess of their wants for the benefit of the outlying counties. New-York City alone pays $1,000,000 annually for the education of the children of other portions of the State. This sum would be sufficient to keep the canals in proper repair, and the Metropolis would doubtless be glad to undertake the job if relieved of the other imposition.

Mr. Wadsworth then addressed the meeting. He compared the present movement to that which secured the repeal of the Corn Laws in England, and said that this transcended that in importance. It described the system of thieving under which the canals have labored from the contractors, then from the boatmen, and finally from the officials, as unparalleled in the annals of corruption. For the good the Erie Canal had done and the good it was capable of doing he demanded that it should be made free as the river, the lake, and the sea. Taxes on consumption are, he claimed, fatal always. The commerce of the Metropolis is fast slipping from its grasp, and the people sit supinely by. Philadelphia and Baltimore on the south, and Montreal and Quebec on the north, are getting it all, and where the cereals go in the spring-time vessels are sure to go out. Liverpool has its six miles of magnificent docks inviting the world's commerce. New-York has been eight years building one dock, and that is in great danger of falling in. Warehouses are open all over Philadelphia, and cars traverse the city from end to end. This great railroad system has been agitated in New-York for more than 10 years past; yet, New-York-like, nothing has yet been done. The other day, Controller Kelly advised the sale of all dock property belonging to the City to men who would farm it out and ruin commerce by their extravagant charges. These docks should be given over to the Erie Canal boatmen. There are now only four piers at the disposal of canal-boats, and a ferry company has asked for the use of two of them. The boatmen are compelled to pay one tax on their boats to the State on account of personal property, and another for the use of the canal, which is their property. Their cause is the cause of every citizen, and they should be supported in their struggle.

Mr. A. H. Humphreys followed. He advocated the closing of the lateral canals, citing figures from the report of the Canal Auditor for 1874 to show that the cost of collection on those canals was 18 and 20 times in excess of the revenue derived from them.

Mr. Theodore F. Lees made the point that no railroad was ever constructed except as a speculation, whereas the inception of the Erie Canal was with a view to the benefit of commerce in general. Not until it was constructed did New-York City enter upon its career as the commercial metropolis of America. The Western people are waiting to build a small canal from the Mississippi to Lake Michigan, which will throw the commerce of 1,500 miles of territory into New-York through the Erie Canal. They passed resolutions calling upon our State Legislature to reduce the tolls on the Erie, and as soon as their request is complied with the work will be begun.

After the passage of a resolution of thanks to Mr. Cooper for his interest and aid in the movement, the meeting adjourned,

BALL OF THE HEAVY WEIGHTS.

THE FAT MEN AT IRVING HALL—THEIR GRACE AED AGILITY MUCH ADMIRED.

The annual ball of the "Heavy Weights" of New-York was given last night at Irving Hall.

The heaviest man at the ball was Mr. Samuel C. McGraw, whose present weight is 327 pounds. He looked sad and gloomy, and when railled by a friend, who exhorted him to cheer up, and prepare to enjoy himself, shook his head, and remarked that he had lost 40 pounds since the last ball. Among the other heavy weights who were present were Messrs. John Green, 235 pounds; President of the Association, Joseph Hall, 230 pounds; Vice President D. M. Fifield, 260 pounds; Treasurer, N. Brewster, 230 pounds; Secretary Peter Reed, 290 pounds; S. Stout, 310 pounds; A. C. Craft, 270 pounds; L. Sarles, 225 pounds; J. Heatherton, 270 pounds; F. Page, 210 pounds; George Leland, 220 pounds; H. H. Covert' 325 pounds; John Gault, 230 pounds; E. N. Crow, 220 pounds; Harvey Marsh, 210 pounds; P. Bogart, 200 pounds; H. W. Heniey, 220 pounds; George trott, 290 pounds; Richard Heather, 200 pounds; and George Green 205 pounds. About 10:30 o'clock the band struck up, and the ball was opened with a promenade by the company to slow music, the heavy weights marching solemnly around the room, each with a lady on his arm. After the promenade, sufficient time having been given for the stout men to recover their wind, a quadrille was danced, and this was followed by Les Lanciers and round dances. The spectators in the galleries watched the dancers with much interest, and many expressions of surprise at the grace and agility shown by the fat men in their terpsichorean exercises were heard. It was thought that as the night wore on they would become tired out and leave the floor to those of their guests who were not so stout as their entertainers. But this was not so; the heavy weights kept their duty nobly, and danced through the whole programme without missing a set. At 12:30 o'clock a sumptuous supper was served in the basement of the building, and there, too, the heavy men did well. About 1 o'clock a large deputation of the Fat Men's Association of the United States made their appearance in the hall, having arrived on a late train from Norwalk, Conn. They received an enthusiastic welcome, and were conducted to the supper-room. After supper all proceeded to the ball-room, where the dancing was kept up until a late hour.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

LAWRENCE, Feb. 7.—About six months ago Judge Pendry, of Leavenworth, brought suit as an informer, in the name of the United States, against the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company for $10,000,000, for alleged fraudulent claims against the Government. Judge Foster, of the United States District Court, has just decided these cases in favor of the Railroad Company, on demurrers to a petition.

INSURANCE TANGLES.

THE NEW RECEIVER OF THE CONTINENTAL LIFE.

THE AFFAIRS OF THE COMPANY TAKEN POSSESSION OF BY MR. WILLIAM R. GRACE—ALL THE OLD EMPLOYES DISMISSED—THE APPLICATION FOR THE DISSOLUTION OF THE CONCERN NOT TO BE MADE AT PRESENT.

Mr. William R. Grace, the new Receiver of the Continental Life Insurance Company, of this City, went to the office of that concern yesterday morning and took formal possession of its affairs. Mr. William Allen Butler, the Referee appointed by Judge Pratt, was present during the day, and witnessed the transfer. An inventory of all the securities, and other assets, and the books of the company, had been made, and a receipt was given to Mr. Anderson for the articles named therein, and for $164,554 11 in cash, and a protested check for $303 13. The statement of the accounts of Mr. Anderson, which was put in evidence before the Referee on Monday last, shows his entire receipts from the date of his appointment, Oct. 25, to the date of his suspension, including the proceeds of the sale of bonds, interest on mortgages, agents' accounts, &c., to have been $194,851 78. His disbursements during the same period were as follows: Incidental expenses, $3,259 56; salaries, $11,747 78; counsel fees, $11,441 60; fire insurance, $373 75; premiums returned by order of the court, $3,047 67; premiums returned, $119 85; total, $29,990 21, leaving a cash balance of $164,861 57. Soon after Mr. Grace took possession, he caused the combination of the vault locks to be changed, and then summoning all of the clerks and attachés of the office, who had been employed by Mr. Anderson, into the President's room, informed them that their services were no longer required. Mr. Grace, when questioned by a reporter of THE TIMES, stated that he would proceed at once to the performance of his duties, but if he should be relieved from the responsibility of the receivership by the action of the Attorney General, he would willingly retire and make room for his successor.

It is understood that the application of the Attorney General for the appointment of a new Receiver and the dissolution of the company will not be made for some time yet, and if this is the case, the same questions that it will raise will in a certain measure come before the Supreme Court in Brooklyn next week in the case of Charles T. Hartwell against the company, in which the validity of the Receiver's appointment is questioned. Hartwell was a policy-holder in the company, and claimed that he had not been paid his share of the profits of the concern as provided for by the charter, section 16 of which, after specifying what amount shall be paid to the stockholders, says:

The remaining seven-eighths of such profits or surplus shall be placed to the credit of the policy-holders who may be entitled to participate in the profits or surplus of the company, in proportion to the amount of premium paid respectively, as hereinafter provided, which certificate may be represented by scrip, subject to all of the provisions of this charter; but no credit or scrip shall be made for any fractional part of a dollar; nor shall any policy-holder be entitled to a credit for profits who has not been insured for one full year, and whose policy for life or for endowment is not in actual force and existence at the time.

SEC. 17. Every person insured for the whole term of life, or by endowment policy or policies, and paying to the company the premium agreed upon, shall participate in all of the profits of the company to the extent of seven-eighths of such profits.

Mr. Hartwell claimed, first, that profits had been made by the company, and secondly, that the division among the policy-holders was made on a different system than that set forth in the charter, so that he did not get his share. In ignorance of that fact, he paid up all the premiums on his policy—ten much, as he claims, by about $1,000. This over-payment he looked upon as money obtained from him by constructive, if not actual, fraud, and he therefore brought an action before the Receiver's appointment for its recovery. In the confusion resulting from Mr. Anderson's appointment, a judgment was obtained against the company by default, and by reference was ordered to ascertain the exact amount of his claim. Meanwhile the company was dissolved, so that he obtained no technical judgment before the dissolution. Thus, if the present decree is valid as a dissolution, he is not a judgment creditor, while, on the other hand, if it is invalid, he is a judgment creditor. On the other side it was claimed that this would make no material difference, because all the title of the property had passed to the Receiver many days before the default, so that there was no real estate on which the judgment could be a lien. The court was informed that the Receiver had to pay the amount of the judgment to the plaintiff and the order was granted. Mr. John L. Hill, of counsel for the Receiver, appealed from the judgment and procured a stay of proceedings. Mr. Raphael J. Moses, of Hartwell's counsel, then made a motion to vacate the stay, which was denied, so that the appeals are still pending, and will be argued next week, when, as above stated, the same questions, virtually, that will be raised in the suit of the Attorney General will be submitted to the court.

BAIL GIVEN BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE SECUITY LIFE INSURANCE AND ANNUITY COMPANY.

Robert L. Case, Sr., President of the Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company, left his home in Newburg, N. Y., yesterday, and appeared in the District Attorney's office to give bail on the indictment for perjury found against him. The indictment sets forth that Mr. Case was President of the Security Life, and as such was compelled annually to certify in a report to the Superintendent of Insurance of the State of New-York to the assets and liabilities of the company, the manner in which the assets were invested, the amount on bond and mortgage, the amount on loans on stocks, and amount of premium notes, credits, and other securities. In pursuance of this requirement, it is set forth that Mr. Case filed and swore to a statement purporting to show the affairs of the company for the year ending Dec. 31, 1875. In this statement the cost value of the company's real estate was set forth at $400,875; the cost value of stocks and bonds absolutely owned by the company at $592,197 75; the cash in office at $4,818 18, and the amount on deposit to bank at $172 890 57. These figures, it is charged, were grossly and wilfully overestimated, the assets in question not being of the value set forth. Mr. Case, as President of the corporation, swore to the correctness of the statement, and is charged for perjury for so doing. Bail in Case's indictment was fixed at $20,000, as in the case of the other indicted officials. John E. Williams, President of the Metropolitan National Bank, and Warren Delano, of Newburg, N. Y., became bondsmen for Mr. Case, and he was formally released. Robert L. Case, Jr., Actuary of the company, has not yet put in an appearance, nor is it expected that he will do so, he being, as alleged, a fugitive.

SUSPENSION OF THE FARMERS' JOINT STOCK FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Another insurance failure was yesterday added to the long list of those already reported by the action of the Insurance Department in suspending the Farmers' Joint Stock Fire Insurance Company of Meridian, N. Y., which has been ordered to wind up its affairs. This action has resulted from an examination made a short time ago, when the discovery was made that its capital was impaired, and that a continuation of its business might result disastrously to its policy-holders. The Farmers' Joint Stock Company was organized in 1861 with a cash capital of $100,000, and was for a time prosperous, but during late years its losses have been very heavy, amounting, it is stated, to about 88 per cent. of the premium receipts, while its expenses are 27 per cent. In this way the company was obliged to pay out $1 15 for every dollar received in premiums, and its capital was necessarily impaired. The policy-holders will lose nothing, the loss falling entirely on the stockholders. The official statement of the concern, made Jan. 1, showed its gross assets to be $233,848, with liabilities, including reinsurance and capital, amounting to $229,728.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

Charles Rogers and Charles E. Rogers assigned their property to John W. Bartow yesterday.

Samuel Harris made an assignment for the benefit of creditors to Herman Harris.

In the assignment of Herman Fersenheim, mirrors, of No. 76 Beekman street, to Watson J. Hildreth, the liabilities are $82,947 11, the nominal assets $22,938 42, and the real assets $7,095.

Albert S. Gallup has been adjudicated a bankrupt on his own petition before Register Dayton. His liabilities are very heavy, and are mainly in connection with the firm of Hoyt, Sprague & Co., the Providence manufacturers, in which Mr. Gallup was a partner, and is jointly liable for the indebtedness, which amounts to $3,345,000, and on which a dividend of 10 per cent. has been paid by the Receiver. His individual debts are as follows: Rodney F. Dyer, $100,000; W. D. Prince, $16,000; W. G. R. Mowry, $12,000; R. S. Hazard, $8,500; these are secured by mortgage on real estate. B. E. & R. Knight, $18,437; Grocers' and Producers' Bank of Providence, $11,884; Butchers' and Drovers' Bank of Providence, $12,809; Potter, Dennison & Co., $2,850. His real estate in Providence has realized $70,000 for his creditors.

THE BROOKLYN POLICE FORCE.

The annual report of the Board of Police and Excise shows that during the year 20,779 males and 5,890 females were arrested, of whom 11,746 were found guilty and punished. The total number of men on the force is 621, and they are required to cover a City containing forty miles more of paved streets than New-York. Not more than half of this force can be on duty at one time, and when a strike such as is in progress at present among the dock laborers requires a considerable force of men to be stationed in one place, a large part of the City is necessarily left unprotected, notwithstanding the fact that the officers available for patrolling the streets are required to be on duty almost incessantly. Attention has repeatedly been called to the inadequate size of the force for the work it is required to perform. Inspector Wadey, who sometimes uses up two horses a day in his business, and who is probably the hardest worked Police officer in the country, asks for the appointment of an Assistant Inspector. Mr. William H. Muldoon, Police Property Clerk, reports that the value of the property that passed through his hands during the year was $100,000.

THE WATER FRONT.

COMMERCIAL BODIES DISCUSSING WHAT THE WIDTH OF WEST AND SOUTH STREETS SHOULD BE—THE PRESENT BULKHEAD LINE INADEQUATE.

The Conference Committee of the various Boards of Trade and Exchanges met in the Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon to listen to the reports of the several Sub-committees on Docks and Terminal Facilities. Capt. Snow was in the Chair, and Mr. H. M. Beers acted as Secretary. Mr. William H. Webb, for Committee No. 1, reported progress. The committee called on Commissioner Wales on Monday, and were courteously received. Mr. Wales said that it would be impossible for him to impart all the information he could wish at that time. He was making some calculations which would require time to finish. He asked for two more days, but as that would bring it up to meeting day, they had been unable to meet his views. They accordingly asked for more time, which was granted.

Mr. Seth Low, for the Committee on Width of Bulkheads and Terminal Facilities, asked that the report or the committee printed last week be taken up and reread. Permission being accorded, he recited its first recommendation—that West street be continued on a line of 200 feet in width, except between Canal and West Eleventh streets, where it has already been commenced at 250 feet, and that South street be made a uniform width of 100 feet. In support of this recommendation he reviewed the history of the present bulkhead line, and said that in 1857 a commission of engineers reported that 115 feet was needed. Then there was no thought of providing for the running of freight railways. The committee thought 200 feet would give the additional space required for those.

Mr. A. B. Miller was opposed to the construction of great, unsightly wooden bulkheads. Stone bulkheads, requiring less space, could be built almost as expeditiously and at very little additional cost, and would need comparatively little repairs.

Mr. Edward Hincken said that the report of the commissioners of 1857 did not contemplate the subsequent growth of commerce. It did not require an engineer's eye to see that the present bulkhead line was entirely inadequate.

Mr. Low said that the present bulkhead line and width of streets were not based on the recommendations of the commission of 1857, but on those of 1801. In few places the actual space for use exceeds 70 feet.

Mr. Hincken said that taking Cortlandt street, where the line is widest, as a criterion, he could not see that less than 200 feet would be sufficient. He suggested that 250 feet would be better.

Mr. Miller said that the use of freight railways would do away with many of the street needs. Most of the work now done by trucks would be removed from the streets. He thought 200 feet would be enough. It was inexpedient to make the line wider, as that would necessitate encroachment on the river, and this would have a dangerous effect on commerce. He was in favor, however, of removing from the City authorities the power of licensing obstructions.

Mr. Henry moved the adoption of the 200 feet line.

Mr. Underhill supported the 250 feet proposition. He considered the keeping of bills waiting for amendments prejudicial to their passage. A proper freight railway would require four tracks, and the street railways would easily fill up the remaining space.

Mr. Beers said that it was a mistake to suppose that the cost of filling the cribs would be insignificant. The works would be solid piers of filling of nothing, but in this case the material would have to be scowed at large expense. He estimated the cost of a stone pier at $25,000 per each 50 feet.

Mr. Low said that the committee had taken into consideration the time consumed by the Dock Department in building stone piers, when recommending wooden bulkheads, but the matter had only come before them incidentally while discussing freight railways, and belonged properly to another committee.

On motion, 250 feet was adopted as the proper width for the West street bulkhead line, and 100 feet for that of South street.

At the suggestion of Mr. Cole, the clause allowing all railroads to make use of the Belt Line for the carriage of freight, was amended so as to confer that privilege upon every body.

Mr. Beers thought it important that the conference declare how much of the dock front should be broken up and altered each year.

Mr. Underhill said the more the better. At the present rate of depletion of commerce, the entire water front will be at the service of the Dock Department in two years.

After considerable discussion, it was resolved to table the undigested portion of the report out of courtesy to Committee No. 1, and the conference adjourned until Monday afternoon next.

CONDEMNED MURDERERS RESPITED.

Oschwald and Ryan, the condemned Newark murderers, who were to have been executed to-morrow, have secured another unexpected lease of life, Gov. Bedle having yesterday granted them a respite for one week, in consequence of the action of the Legislature in passing a law providing for a writ of error in capital cases. The following is the text of the Governor's communication: "Yesterday a bill came to my hands, passed by both houses, requiring the allowance of a writ of error, and stay of execution as a matter of course, in all cases punishable with death. It was evidently intended to reach the Ryan and Oschwald case. The change proposed is so important to the administration of criminal law in this State, that it becomes my duty to grant a further respite, in order that the bill may receive due consideration, and, if it is to become a law, that the will of the Legislature may not be frustrated, I have, therefore, reprieved the prisoners until Thursday, the fifteenth day of February, inst." The impression prevails that the Governor will veto the bill and that it will be passed over his veto. Mr. Morrow, of counsel for the prisoners, secured an affidavit yesterday which, it is thought, will have some bearing on the case should a writ of error be granted. James Delaney makes an affidavit that he visited John Fussell, one of the important witnesses for the State, and recognized him as a man who resided in London, England, in 1848, and who, with himself, was a member of the "Charter Party," which had for its object the overturning of the Government. The society was a secret one, and in the meetings Fussell advocated the wholesale assassination of the nobility and the heads of the Government. He was subsequently arrested, tried, and convicted of conspiracy to overthrow the Government and assassinate its rulers, and sent to prison for two years. It is hoped by this statement to weaken the force of Fussell's testimony at the trial.

MORE WAR MATERIAL FOR THE EAST.

The activity in the export of arms and munitions of war to both the contending powers shows no diminution. On Friday of last week the brig Fanny sailed from this port for Cronstadt, Russia, with a cargo of powder and metallic cartridges, valued at $250,000. The powder was supplied by the Ladin & Rand Powder Company, of this City, and the cartridges by the Union Metallic Company, of Bridgeport, Conn. The cargo of the Fanny on its arrival at Cronstadt will be immediately transported to the scene of army operations in South-west Russia. A large iron steam-ship of 2,000 tons burden is loading at New-Haven with a consignment of 25,000 Peabody-Martini rifles, and 20,000,000 cartridges for Constantinople. The rifles are supplied by the Providence Tool Company, and the cartridges by the Winchester Repeating Arms Company and the Union Metallic Company. The total value of this cargo will be over $800,000, and like that of the Fanny will be insured for its full value. The steamer is expected to sail on Thursday, the 15th inst. Orders for warlike material of all kinds continue to pour in from both the Russian and Turkish Governments, so that if fighting does not commence this Spring, it will not be from lack of equipment on both sides. The amounts expended during the past year in this City and the manufacturing towns of New-England by different European governments, principally the Turkish, is variously estimated at from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000. The Turks, notwithstanding their financial difficulties at home, pay for their arms in "cash at sight," and are considered the best of customers.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The report of Chief Eli Bates, made yesterday to the Board of Fire Commissioners in their regular meeting, showed that during the month of January there were 106 fires. The estimated loss by these fires was $72,213, of which $10,440 was on buildings, and $61,775 on contents. The uninsured loss was $1,620 on building and $1,520 on contents. The insurances were, on buildings, $397, 250; on contents, $372,550; total, $769,800. On Jan. 26 Samuel Hibbs was found guilty of arson in the third degree for setting fire to the mail of James M. Bennett, on the 31 of July, 1876, and was sentenced to State Prison by Judge Gildersleeve for four years.

ONE OF THE CINCINNATI REPEATERS.

A man named Eph Holland, from Cincinnati, was arrested yesterday in this City by Deputy United States Marshals Crowley and Newcombe, on a warrant charging him with having participated in the election frauds committed in Cincinnati during the late election. Holland was brought before United States Commissioner Deuel, who, after a preliminary hearing, committed him to Ludlow Street Jail to await further examination. The case will probably come up to-day, when, if sufficient evidence can be produced against him, he will be held to await extradition.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

CONDITION OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT—DECREASE IN THE NUMBER OF PUPILS—THE COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE LAW CRITICISED—TRUANCY STATISTICS—BUSINESS IN THE MONTHLY MEETING.

The regular meeting of the Board of Education was held yesterday afternoon in the hall of the Commissioners in Broome street, President Wood in the chair. Soon after the opening of the meeting, Superintendent Henry Kiddle handed up his annual report, which embraced elaborate statements by the Assistant Superintendents. The following is a summary of the report:

The whole number of schools is 308, in which, during the year, 222,155 pupils were taught, the average daily attendance being 128,518, showing a decrease in 1876, as compared with 1875, of 2,567, and an increase in the average attendance of 1,560. The average attendance in the grammar and primary schools, exclusive of the colored schools, shows an increase of a little more than 2½ per cent. during the year, the increase last year being about 3 per cent. and the year previous 7½ per cent. The number of pupils was 157,423 as compared with 157,000 last year. The average enrollment during the year is 113,867, about 72 per cent. of the total enrollment, and the average attendance is nearly 90 per cent. of the average enrollment, showing a little more than 10 per cent. as the average rate of absenteeism. According to the reports of principals there are accommodations for 133,573 pupils. The number of teachers in the several schools is as follows:

	No. of Teachers.	Average Attendance.	Pupils to Each Ass. Teacher.
Male Grammar	548	18,395	36
Female Grammar	534	17,515	36
Mixed Grammar	86	2,492	34
Primary Departments	947	43,172	49
Primary Schools	495	20,176	45
Colored Schools	37	805	27
Evening Schools	403	9,273	25
Corporate Schools	177	9,565	63
Total	3,247	121,353	41

Examinations made in all the schools, with the view of ascertaining the grade and proficiency of the pupils, show that of 2,085 classes, either inspected or examined in detail, the discipline of the pupils was excellent in 1,690, good in 330, fair in 61, and indifferent in 4. The number of pupils refused admission was 9,142. The inefficiency of the school system as to means of correction and coercion is referred to, as it neutralizes to a considerable extent the operations of the compulsory attendance department. Parents of boys expelled from the public schools as incorrigible, send them to the parochial or corporate schools. It is of interest that at the close of 1875 the number of pupils enrolled in the Catholic parochial schools was 30,732, while in 1867 it was only 16,342, showing an increase in less than 10 years of nearly 90 per cent., while the increase in the attendance of pupils in the public schools during the same time has been only about 13 per cent. The increase in attendance at the corporate schools during the year has been more than 57 per cent. The course of instruction, under pressure of public opinion, has been simplified and reduced. Phonetic lessons have been abandoned in reading classes, and penmanship has been carried down to third grade. The report to the City Superintendent of the Assistant Superintendent of Music, indicates that the principals of the schools are generally dissatisfied with the progress in this branch of instruction since the adoption of the separate class plan of teaching. The teaching of German is now confined to the three higher grades, and the number of classes has been smaller than during the previous years, having been reduced from 431 in 1875 to 124 in 1876. Only seven classes in French were examined. This language is now taught in 10 schools, while German is taught in 65 of the departments of grammar schools. The number of pupils attending the evening schools, exclusive of the high schools, was 20,672, of which number 2,694 were over 21 years of age, 1,139 could not read when admitted, and 1,468 could not write. The average attendance was 9,036. The sanitary condition of the schools, the Superintendent thinks, must be affected by the new regulation against overcrowding. Some class-rooms were found on examination to be overcrowded. Some are insufficiently lighted, or the windows and desks are so placed as to compel the pupils to assume injurious positions during study. It is considered desirable that in the erection of new school-houses sanitary features should not be overlooked for mere adornment. The modes of egress are under skillful management, the pupils' stairs and staircases being in most cases of brick and stone. The practice of keeping children standing or sitting long in one position is now greatly guarded against as prejudicial to the health of pupils, and frequent changes of position encouraged as conducive to mental activity as well as bodily health. The problem of ventilation is still unsolved. The school-house and premises are in most instances kept in a cleanly condition. Superintendent Kiddle's opinion of the operation of the compulsory attendance law is as follows:

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE.

"It cannot be said the Board of Education has been in the least derelict in the discharge of the duties imposed upon it by the 'the act to secure to children the benefits of an elementary education.' Indeed, in no other part of the State have any practical steps been taken to enforce its provisions. The amendment to the law enacted May 20, 1876, which strengthened considerably the powers of Ice Company; argued by S. P. Nash for appellant and James Thomson for respondent.

The following is the Court of Appeals calendar for Thursday, Feb. 8: Nos. 84½, 84¾, 12, 121, 135, 147, 134, and 140.

COURT NOTES.

Ah Fung, the Chinaman recently committed on a charge of homicide, obtained from Judge Barrett yesterday a writ of habeas corpus returnable on the 9th inst.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday denied motions for a Receiver and an injunction of the property of the defendant in the divorce suit brought by Mrs. Jamison.

Solomon Siegler sued to recover $3,000 for injuries received by him in being run over by a wagon owned by James H. Slocum. He recovered $500 in Part II. of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday.

In the suit of Rounerberg against McDermark and Deno, the jury, in Part II. of the Common Pleas, yesterday, gave a verdict for the plaintiff for six and one-quarter cents. He sued to recover $500 for false imprisonment.

In the suit of Mohr against Parmelee, the plaintiff recovered a verdict for $2,011 50 in Part I. of the Superior Court yesterday, because the title of a house purchased by him from the defendant was burdened with an easement giving a neighbor the right to put beams into the wall of the house.

Judge Lawrence, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday granted an application for leave to renew a motion to open a default obtained by Robert Martin, Executor of Daniel Marley, against Catherine N. E. Hicks, otherwise known as the Countess Heinreuth. The action, which has been fully reported hitherto, was brought on a bond for $14,700, and a judgment was entered by default in October, 1875.

John A. Murphy was arrested last Tuesday evening at the report of Mr. Varian, a butcher doing business in Sixth avenue, who charged that he had endeavored to pass a counterfeit $20 bill on him. Mr. Murphy was locked up all night, and on being taken before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday it was proved that the bill was genuine. Mr. Murphy was at once discharged from custody.

Patrick Dickie, who owns about $800,000 worth of property, was recently adjudicated a lunatic, and his children sought, by application to Judge Brady in the Supreme Court, to have their allowances out of their father's property increased. Judge Brady rendered a decision yesterday, giving to Mrs. Emma D. Van Vleck, one of the daughters, $3,500 per annum, and to two other daughters $1,550 and $1,700 respectively.

The Third National Bank of Sandusky, Ohio, recovered judgment for $9,075 37 against Alonzo B. Cornell and others on June 21, 1875. George B. Prescott was appointed as Receiver of Mr. Cornell's property, and applied to Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, for an accounting to settle the fees of the Receivership, and also for leave to sell at private sale some of the assets which came into his hands as Receiver. Decision was reserved.

Judge Van Vorst, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision in the case of Frederick H. Greer against C. and J. B. Lippincott. The latter were sued as members of the firm of Lippincott & Co., and demurred to the complaint because all the members of their firm were not made parties to the action. Judge Van Vorst sustained the demurrer, with leave, however, to the plaintiff to amend his complaint on payment of costs.

The suit of Messrs. Marcus and Seligman Oppenheimer against Messrs. Redlict and Schnitzler, was argued before Judge Sedgwick in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday. The plaintiffs sue on a note for $1,694 51, made by the defendants on March 1, 1876. The defendants in answer allege that after giving the note they failed, and made a composition deed giving 30 cents on the dollar to their creditors. The plaintiffs, however, retort by alleging fraud on the part of the defendants. Decision was reserved.

Thomas Clark sued the Central Park, East and North River Railroad Company to recover damages for personal injuries received by him, and the case was brought to trial before Judge Larremore and a jury, in Part II. of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday. He says that in getting off one of the defendant's cars on April 28, 1874, the car was started suddenly, and he fell. He was dragged along the street, and had his left hip-bone broken. He asks $15,000 damages. The company says the accident was due to his negligence. The case is still on.

Edwin S. Tomlinson, a bookbinder, was sued by one of his female employes named Ellen Haggerty, who claimed $7 25 as wages. The case was tried in the District Court, and judgment was given against Tomlinson. In such a case, the defendant is liable to arrest and imprisonment for five days. Tomlinson, having failed to file a proper bond on appeal, was arrested, and sought to be released by writ of habeas corpus. The case came up before Judge Sedgwick, in the Superior Court, yesterday. It appearing that the proper bond had been filed, the prisoner's release was ordered.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday reserved his decision in the case of Martin T. MacMahon, Receiver of Taxes, against Thomas C. Courtney, in which the plaintiff sues to recover $33 60, the amount of personal tax due by the defendant for 1874. The defendant says that when the tax was confirmed his store had been consumed by fire, and that he received only $1,000 insurance and lost about $12,000 by the fire. He distributed the amount of the insurance among his creditors. Judge Barrett reserved his decision on a motion to enforce the payment of the tax.

AN IMPORTANT PILOTAGE DECISION.

Judge Benedict, sitting in the United States Court, Brooklyn, yesterday gave a decision in the case of James Callahan, pilot, against the brig Nellie Husted, to recover damages, based on a tender and refusal of services, at such a distance from Sandy Hook that it could not be seen from the deck in fair weather. The answer avers that a pilot was subsequently taken on, and paid, but no evidence to support the averment is produced. The libelant proved that he was the first pilot tendering his services. The question with defendant was whether a recovery for pilotage could be had on proving a tender of services and refusal, without the added proof that no pilot was taken. The court held that, although under an old view of the statute a pilot could recover without proving that no pilot had been taken subsequent to his tender of services, in the new view of the law he must not only prove a tender and refusal, but subsequent failure of the vessel to take a pilot, in order to recover; also that where the libelant is bound to prove the negative fact that no pilot was taken, slight evidence should be considered sufficient, and that the statement of the master of the vessel that the bill presented by the libelant in port was "all right" was sufficient evidence that no pilot had been taken in this case. Accordingly a decree in libelant's favor for the amount claimed, with interest and costs, was rendered.

AN ELECTION DAY FRACAS.

James Boylan was placed on trial before Judge Sutherland yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, charged with felonious assault. It appears that on last election day he met Edward Rooney, of No. 225 East Forty-first street, in the liquor saloon of Patrick McGinnis, Fortieth street and Second avenue, and a dispute arose upon the merits of various political candidates. Both men were under the influence of liquor, and, as alleged, after Rooney had left the saloon, Boylan followed him across the street, and deliberately fired a revolver at him, the shots taking effect, one in the leg and the other in the abdomen. The wounded man was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he remained six weeks. One of the bullets was extracted, but the other still remains in Rooney's body, and gives him considerable trouble. The defense set up was, that the complainant had threatened him, and had run across the street to a stable to procure a knife, and that the prisoner drew his pistol in self-defense. Assistant District Attorney Lyon, in summing up submitted that the guilt of the prisoner was clearly established, the shooting having been done without provocation, Judge Sutherland will give the case to the jury this morning.

"HAZING" AT THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

Yesterday afternoon while Officer George R. Braisted, of the Tombs Police Court, was in the Stock Exchange for the purpose of serving a subpœna upon Sylvester L. Blood, a broker occupying the same office as George L. Maxwell, to appear as a witness to-morrow in the examination of Maxwell in the Union Trust Company forgery case, he was "hazed" by some hilarious brokers, who, noticing that he was a stranger, knocked his hat off, seized him by his coat collar, and roughly shoved and pushed him about. He showed his subpœna and announced his business, and was soon left alone. He thought he recognised Edward Hornbostel, a broker at No. 56 Broadway, as one of his principal assailants, and arrested him. The broker was subsequently arraigned before Justice Duffy, at the Tombs Police Court. Justice Duffy animadverted very strongly against the "hazing" practices indulged in at the Stock Exchange, and, after a protestation of innocence on the part of the accused, he was discharged.

A MILLIONAIRE'S WILL CONTESTED.

William Thomson, of this City, died in January, 1872, leaving about $1,000,000 of property. His wife, Ellen A. Thomson, and three children, survived him. By his will he left his wife one-fourth of the estate. The remaining three-fourths he ordered to be invested by the Executors for the benefit of his children. In case of the death of the latter the property was to go to the testator's brothers and sisters. The testator appointed his Executors as guardians of the children. Mrs. Thomson brought a suit to test the validity of the will. She claimed that her husband had no right to appoint guardians for her children without her consent; that as the proper guardian for the children, she has the right to the control and management of the property; and that the remainder to her husband's brothers and sisters was void as in violation of the statute against perpetuities. Judge Van Vorst, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday, decided the last point in favor of Mrs. Thomson. The other points he decided against her claim.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Donohue.

Matter of Bohm.—Memorandum.

Matter of Bebe.—Bond approved.

Waterbury vs. Bouker.—Motion denied without costs.

Marsh vs. Marsh.—Decree of divorce granted to plaintiff.

Matter of Bebe, and Matter of Hofman.—Granted.

The Mechanics Savings Bank vs. Carman.—Motion denied. Memorandum.

Jamieson vs. Jamieson.—Motion to discharge denied. Memorandum.

Jamieson vs. Jamieson.—Motion denied without costs. Memorandum.

Evenson vs. The London and Liverpool Globe Insurance Company.—Granted. Memorandum.

Mount vs. Warner.—Report confirmed. I do not think the parties are entitled to fees to a greater extent than the Referee makes them.

By Judge Van Brunt.

Tyng vs. Clark.—Motion granted and allowance of $200.

By Judge Lawrence.

Martin vs. Hicks.—Motion for leave to renew motion is granted.

Matter of Kirkland.—I wish to hear counsel.

The Marine Bank of Chicago vs. Van Brunt.—The affidavit presented by Mr. Flandrow shows sufficient grounds for granting a stay pending the appeal, and it is accordingly granted. The order for a stay should be a separate order.

By Judge Barrett.

Van Dolsen vs. Van Dolsen.—Referee's report confirmed, and judgment of divorce granted.

Motions Granted.—Asniari vs. Newton; Olive vs. Brunjes.

Blackwell vs. Mulligan.—Granted for third Friday.

Matter of Graham.—Report confirmed, and Mr. James L. Graham appointed Trustee.

Kneeland vs. Husted.—Motion denied with $10 costs to abide event. Memorandum.

Moore vs. Fairchild.—Motion granted. Memorandum.

Matter of The Bullion Mining Company.—The attorney should see that the day fixed, May 16, does not fall on Sunday. Order granted.

The Third National Bank of Sandusky vs. Cornell.—Motion granted, and Mr. Edward Hartnagle appointed Referee to pass Receiver's accounts.

Matter of Clemens, jr.—The proofs and proceedings before the Referee should be app-nded to his report.

Pettibone vs. The Massachusetts Life Insurance Company.—The plaintiff admits the offsets. Now the only issue is whether the assignment was for value. Motion granted.

Foher vs. Nicl.—Motion granted on payment of $10 term fee. $10 costs of motion, and court disconsents on dismissal of complaint.

Hall vs. Braine.—Report confirmed and decree signed except as to the allowances. The question as to the amount of such allowance can be reserved until it is ascertained how much the property brings.

Luggett vs. Kreiling.—I have no objections to appoint Mr. Dunn, but I would prefer that the selection should be left, as the rule requires, to the court; besides Mr. Dunn has little to do with it; the persons really interested are the Kreilings.

Matter of Weinberg.—I have examined the law applicable to this case, and my impression is rather in favor of the Judge who refuses to pass on putting in and perfecting special bail, under the act of 1845, but I will hear counsel further before making up my mind.

Randall vs. Hackett et al.—After reading Porter vs. Kingsbury, 30 Barb., I am not prepared to say that the demurrer is frivolous; indeed, I would advise the plaintiff not to go to an argument at Special Term, but to amend; the motion is denied, with $10 costs, and will leave to the plaintiff, if so advised, to amend within 20 days, on payment of such $20 costs.

Burchill vs. Stafford, Nos. 1 and 2; Burchill vs. Hinman.—Walter J. Stafford should have consulted also other defendants' counsel as it is only to compute, the rule need not be enforced.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Speir.

Smith vs. Cantrell.—The plaintiff must have judgment in accordance to the prayer of the complaint, with costs. Findings to be submitted on notice.

By Judge Sedgwick.

Naylor vs. Lunt et al.—Plaintiff's complaint dismissed.

Martha vs. Garrison.—Ordered on special calendar.

Knabe vs. Eberhard.—Undertaking approved.

Jones vs. Barlow; Cook vs. Evans et al.—Orders granted.

COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Robinson.

Stewart vs. Weld.—Motion denied, with $10 costs. See memorandum.

By Judge J. F. Daly.

Drew vs. Thomas.—Final decree signed.

MARINE COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge McAdam.

Opinions.—McGee vs. Cole; Ryan vs. Foley; Herts vs. Steward; Tompkins vs. Cohen; Finney vs. Barrett.

Motions Granted.—Grogan vs. McAvoy; Herbert vs. Murphy.

Brown vs. Boes; Lazers vs. Same.—C. G. Macy, Esq., appointed Referee.

Judgment for Plaintiff.—Crichton vs. Gibbons; Schuneman vs. Gillespie.

Kochler vs. Cumisky.—Commitment ordered.

Safeguard Insurance Company vs. Leake.—Attachment ordered.

Smith vs. Babcock.—Order settled.

Speer vs. Veimeister.—Proceedings dismissed.

Boorman vs. Gassin.—H. A. Tober, Esq., appointed Receiver.

Defaults Noted.—Poyson vs. Jordan; Long vs. Ensg; Christopherson vs. Wilson.

Grant vs. Campbell.—Motion denied; no costs.

McCallum vs. Dunning.—Motion granted.

Eberhard vs. Rockland Nickel Company.—Order settled.

Orders Granted.—Stern vs. Peas; Brown vs. Turley; Gutherie vs. French; Sessongood vs. Sinclair; McAllester vs. Lewis; Weeahhausen vs. Bryant; Fritze vs. Fritze; Solomon vs. Maing; Kaifen vs. Cushman; Wilson vs. Schmidt; Speir vs. Leonister; Sedwick vs. Hayse Steinhardt vs. Sperling; Porter vs. Davenport; Smith vs. Farley; Vacula vs. Capek; Reece vs. Honaur; Eddy vs. Faribert; Ogden vs. Fransman; Lippe vs. Reid.

By Justice Sheridan.

Lake vs. Conner; Fox vs. McKenzie.—Motions denied with $10 costs. Memorandum.

COURT CALENDARS—THIS DAY.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Held by Van Vorst, J.

Nos.	Nos.
147—Reilly vs. Dil'on et al.	143—Hatch vs. Atlantic &
100—Fowler vs. Mehrbach et al.	Pacific Tel. Co.
105—The Harlem Bank vs. Decker et al.	281—Nicoll vs. Scrymser.
106—Thurne vs. Gratton et al.	114—Kinney vs. Cohen.
50—De Zavala vs. Hart et al.	115—Kinney vs. Basch et al.
121—Sea Park Bank vs. Dwight.	283—Duncan vs. Duncan et al.
122—Bucking vs. Hauselt et al.	67—Berriott vs. Herriot.
128—Grinslater et al. vs. Powers, &c.	26—Bard vs. U. S. Life Ins. Co. of New York.
130—Jones vs. Jones.	28—Beamish &c., vs. Rushton et al.
133—Busteed vs. Busteed.	36—Youngs vs. Carter et al.
135—Jacobs vs. Miller.	63—Sandford vs. Union Dime Savings Institution.
141—Steinbrecher vs. Beyer et al.	72—Union Dime Savings Institution vs. Clark et al.
142—Guidet vs. Brown et al	73—Same vs. Same.
143—Lynes vs. Brander, Jr.	76—Burtis vs. Timpson et al.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART I.

Held by Donohue, J.

Nos.	Nos.
2011—Rodman vs. King.	2943—Kinney vs. Basch et al.
1825½—Duryea vs. The Mayor, &c.	2955—Post, &c., vs. Diefendorf.
2719—Haden et al. vs. Coleman.	2957—Cohn et al. vs. Waters.
2725—Strauss vs. Wolf.	2969—Harris vs. Hirsch.
4291—Finn vs. Mayor, &c.	2971—Tarter vs. Small.
2591—Gillet al. vs. Conner.	2979—Butler, &c., vs. Seymour et al.
2637—Picard vs. Bernheimer.	2983—Merch's Nat. Bank vs. Smith Jr., et al.
1993—Fitts et al. vs. Orendorf.	2985—Mech. Bank vs. Adams.
1—Latourette vs. Clark.	2995—Springer et al. vs. Herman.
2539—Bord vs. Jackson.	2999—Man. & Build's' Bank vs. Kerwin et al.
1513—Brown vs. Decker, &c.	3001—Dowell vs. McGuire.
2991—Carroll vs. Cassidy.	3005—Baldwin et al. vs. Judson.
2364—The Excelsior Pet. Co. vs. Fowler, &c.	3007—Hughes vs. Rubino, No. 1.
992½—Sabolin vs. Powers.	3009—Same vs. Same, No. 2.
4297—Gray et al. vs. Jobes.	3011—Samuels vs. Klein.
2751—Beaumont et al. vs. Newman.	3013—Suffern vs. Nat. Shoe and Leather Bank.
2803—L. R. Powder Co. vs. Gallaudet.	3017—Meyer vs. Engel.
2849—Frane vs. Delaware, Lack. & West. R. R. Co.	3027—Merrill vs. Potter et al.
2871—Archer vs. O'Brien, &c.	3029—Craven vs. Frond et al.
2883—Scharbank et al. vs. Burr.	3031—Lyles et al. vs. Davenport et al.
2891—Conner, &c., vs. The Mayor, &c.	3033—Trusin vs. Schafer.
2901—Kain vs. Scheffield et al.	3035—Moran vs. Watkins et al., &c.
2909—Breen vs. Mulcoh et al.	3037—Green vs. Bracken.
2921—Pezzara et al. vs. Adams.	3039—Cossens vs. Rowland et al.
2933—Kochler vs. Schwartz et al.	3041—Whittens vs. Peckham.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART II.

Held by Lawrence, J.

Nos.	Nos.
1742—The Grader Cotton Co. vs. The Cotton Mfg. Co.	1794—Elliott vs. The Western Union Tel. Co.
280—Lynch, &c., vs. Butler.	1680½—Doolittle vs. Butler.
1768—Nichols et al. vs. Devlin et al.	1550—Fallenbee vs. Slyverstone, &c.
1784—Brennan vs. The Mayor, &c.	1870—Parut et al. vs. Smith et al.
1822—Morris vs. Elliott.	1872—Argal vs. Smith et al.
1826—Ballard vs. Schackelford.	1874—Barrett vs. Hall et al.
1586—Roth vs. Mora.	1878—Casode et al. vs. Pascal et al.
1473—Haldmore vs. Fuller.	1880—Woodruff vs. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. of London.
3689—Ring et al. vs. The Mayor, &c.	1888—De Haven vs. Rogers.
1844—Dunkin vs. Allerton et al.	1892—Williams vs. Kobbe et al.
1036—Schall et al. vs. Collier.	1894—Heasgue vs. Leneit, &c.
2110—De Lavalette vs. Wendt, &c.	1900—Dientegard et al. vs. Buteaux et al.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART III.

Held by Van Brunt, J.

Nos.	Nos.
631—Averill vs. Webster et al.	419—McComb vs. Jones.
278—Reck vs. Phenix Ins. Co.	1097—Norton vs. Buchy et al., &c.
3023—Mack vs. D. D. E. R. and R. R. Co.	554—Penn vs. Ward.
718—Wann vs. Ashley.	557—Tyng vs. Serred.
151½—Hugart vs. The Mayor, &c.	923—Fessenden vs. N. Y. C. S. & Rubber Co.
2277—Delamater vs. The A. & R. C. Egg Co.	1444—Slattery et al. vs. The Mayor, &c.
1148—Loughran, &c., vs. Mathews et al.	301—Lee vs. Sayles et al.
2287—Blake et al. vs. Obright et al.	1503½—Robinson vs. Watkins et al.
636—Davison et al. vs. Willetts et al.	1558½—Sullivan, &c., vs. Doerbecker.
1741½—Faithe vs. Hammond.	1735—Henderson vs. White et al.
418—McComb vs. The Ex	3098—Hart vs. Taylor et al.
	1811—Dickinson vs. Dudley
	1159—Abrahams vs. Hyman.
	1988—Schaefer vs. Gibson.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Held by Barrett, J.

Nos.	Nos.
47—Ferrigan vs. Mullins.	172—Holmes vs. Schmah.
99—Eriest vs. Priest.	175—Gates vs. Gates.
108—Howland vs. Curtis.	192—Blossom vs. Hatfield.
114—Miller vs. Board of Police Comrs.	198—Rogers Locomotive Co., &c., Works vs. Ellis.
143—Shayne vs. Colles.
168—Courtois vs. Muller.

Call from No. 218 up to and including No. 263. The assessment calendar will also be called.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Held by Sedgwick, J.

Nos.	Nos.
19—Nitzahka vs. O'Neill et al.	18—Offinger et al. vs. De Wolf.
41—Benner vs. Dudas et al.	26—Bradford vs. Bissel et al.
52—Reed vs. Livingston.	28—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. vs. Davis et al.
54—Boody vs. Tilden et al.
56—Mitzscherling vs. Van Winkle et al.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART I.

Held by Speir, J.

Nos.	Nos.
1058—Caffe vs. Lord, Jr., et al.	875—Woodruff vs. Beekman.
817—Mullvan vs. O'Hara, &c.	456—Gilman vs. Stevens.
402—Landon vs. Simm.	475—Morgan, &c., vs. McVickar.
405—Kneeland vs. Spitzer.	446—Boyd vs. Phœnix Ins. Co. of Hartford.
477—Cooper et al. vs. Smith et al.	629—Leporin vs. Kasefang.
812—Thomas vs. Knight.	631—Johnson, &c., vs. Oppenheim et al.
179—Moore vs. Tower.	1076—Zucker vs. Harris.
468—Wray vs. Fedderke.	795—McCauley vs. Gans.
886—Diamont vs. White.	1070—U. S. Reflector Co. vs. Sparks.
318—Selling vs. Legendre et al.	736—Niell et al. vs. Waggoner.
924—Hannigan, &c., vs. Crimmins et al.	737—O'Rourke vs. Taylor, &c.
959—Heydecker vs. Camp	738—Sealy vs. Roe.
349—Cassidy vs. Leetch.
1281—Demarest vs. The Mayor.
892—Shandley vs. The Mayor.
600—McCormack vs. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co.
693—Wellington vs. Newton.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

Held by Freedman, J.

Nos.	Nos.
1069—Quinn vs. Van Pelt.	748—Davis vs. Blauvelt.
570½—Glogner vs. Berlin.	743—Uhl, &c., vs. Cromer.
346—Farmers' & Mechanics' National Bank of Buffalo vs. Brown et al.	744—Same vs. Same.
347—Same vs. Same.	745—Hoffman vs. H. R. & N. Y. C. R. R. Co.
684—Smeas vs. Hoops.	746—Jones vs. Barlow.
686—Franklin vs. Catlin et al.	747—Worth vs. Simon.
637—Same vs. Same.	748—Bergenstein vs. Simon.
572—Harrison vs. Reford	749—Eads vs. Jewitt.
573—Same vs. Same.	750—Friedman vs. Brandies et al.
572—Harrison vs. Reford	751—Buckley vs. Selover et al.
573—Same vs. Same.	752—Barnard vs. Bound et al.
740—Worth vs. Simon.	753—O'Neill, &c., vs. Wilcox.
741—Same vs. Same.	754—Lawson et al. vs. Myerson.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART III.

Held by Curtis, C. J.

Nos.	Nos.
661—Churchill vs. Bradley.	707½—Richards et al. vs. Camen.
698—Aaron vs. Godsband.	708—Muller vs. Elbert.
478—Rathbun vs. N. Y. Life Ins. Co.	709—Morch vs. Priest et al.
647—Emanuel vs. The Mayor, &c. vs. The Mayor, &c.	710—Joynson vs. Richard et al.
430—Oakley vs. Baron.	711—Murphy vs. Raphael.
921—Same vs. Same.	712½—Dorman et al. vs. Pacific Mail S. S. Co.
942—Stevenson vs. Samuels.	713—Farrell vs. Van Tuyl et al.
1194—Weidhng vs. The Mayor, &c.	714—Braun vs. Rathgen et al.
570—Israel vs. Nicholson.	715—Plunkett vs. Appleton.
1179—Nessel versus The Mayor, &c.	716—Archer vs. Garde.
498—Brewer vs. Dayton.	717—Hasbrouck vs. Garde.
1249—Bachmann vs. Lyons et al.	728—Owenboro Bav. Bank vs. Burbank et al.
1079—Spencer vs. O'Brien.	729—O'Rourke vs. Taylor.
	730—Powers vs. Gallaudett
	731—Owenboro Sav. Bank vs. Burbank et al.
	732—Mill vs. Wagenen.
	733—Owenboro Sav. Bank vs. Burbank et al.
	734—Murray versus The Mayor, &c.

COMMON PLEAS—EQUITY TERM.

Held by Robinson, J.

Nos.	Nos.
2—Campbell vs McKwen	20—Hill vs. Conkling.
15—Goldshearvs. Levy et al	21—Weiner, Jr, versus Monrange.
18—Siegbardt vs. Wetzel.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM—PART I.

Held by Van Hoesen, J.

Nos.	Nos.
868—Walker vs. New Central Coal Co. of Maryland.	1156—Seligman vs. South & North Alabama R. R. Co.
1004—Lamberti vs. Montezuma.	1206—Penn. Hor. Society vs. Webster.
877—Wilson vs. Pine.	1342—Broadway StableCo. vs. Connor.
583—Howard, Jr., vs. McCullough.	1223—McIntyre vs. Carroll
370—Reynolds vs. Erie R. R. Co.	965—Gardner vs. Dayton.
395—Phillipsvs. Hamilton	471—Snyder vs. Mschauer
723—O'Donnell vs. N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co.	352—Giles vs. Weizlar.
959—Heydecker vs. Camp	940—Kand vs. Stoughton.
349—Cassidy vs. Leetch.	945—Dun vs. Brown.
1281—Demarest vs. The Mayor.	284—Mott vs. Consumers Ice Co.
892—Shandley vs. The Mayor.	1142—O'Brien vs. Royal Ins. Co. Liverpool.
600—McCormack vs. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co.	1076—Zucker vs. Harris.
693—Wellington vs. Newton.	795—McCauley vs. Gans.
	1070—U. S. Reflector Co. vs. Sparks.
	936—Amadell vs. Garde.
	1213—Steers vs. Seitz.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

Held by Larremore, J.

Nos.	Nos.
592—Lyons vs. Richards.	1091—Werwick vs. Ohlitweiler.
1072—Ryers vs. Haskin.	175—Newitter vs. Germania Fire Ins. Co.
996—Seligsbrg vs. Goldstein.	516—Malone vs. Devoy.
1131—Conroy vs. Boyce.	1454—Purvis vs. The Mayor
1095—Morgan vs. Nichols.	789—Eisner vs. Morgan.
143—Hunt vs. Roberts.	785—Donnelly vs. Mayor.
1311—Metropolitan Gas-Lt' Co. vs. The Mayor.	1126—McGowan vs. McGowan.
1159—Fitch vs. Bergen.	1090—Haubert vs. Lerch.
1197—Sylvester vs. Bernstein.	786—Schroeder vs. Lubacher.
659—Folsom vs. Fischer.	609—Levy vs. Sixth Av. R. R. Co.
560—Shelly vs. Yard, Jr.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM—PART III.

Held by J. F. Daly, J.

Nos.	Nos.
1085—Mayer vs. Redlich.	730—Roe et al. vs. Brophy.
589—Aaron vs. Godsband.	887—Walsh vs. N. Y. Floating Dry Dock Co.
478—Rathbun vs. N. Y. Life Ins. Co.	843—Second Nat. Bk. of Paterson vs. Porter et al.
647—Emanuel vs. The Mayor, &c. vs. The Mayor, &c.	1166—Martin vs. Gallagher
430—Oakley vs. Baron.	1190—Seaman vs. Noonan.
920—Same vs. Same.	710—Shipman vs. Pulsifer.
942—Stevenson vs. Samuels.	1252—Comss et al. vs. Masters.
1194—Weidhng vs. The Mayor, &c.	1254—Heinge vs. Farley, &c
570—Israel vs. Nicholson.	1255—Adams, &c., vs. Hunting.
1179—Nessel versus The Mayor, &c.	1258—Isaacs vs. Baer.
498—Brewer vs. Dayton.	1257—Dutel et al. vs. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique.
1249—Bachmann vs. Lyons et al.
1079—Spencer vs. O'Brien.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART I.

Held by Alker, J.

Nos.	Nos.
5993—Loeb vs. Levy et al.	6039—Meyer vs. Lucks.
5812—Callahan vs. Smith.	4988—Stockhammer vs. Marshall.
9075—Phelan et al. versus Stevenson.	4989—Reyher vs. Marshall.
4705—Parsons et al. vs. Reinhard.	6040—Beiser vs. Cuff.
5028—Wheeler vs. Dumont.	6042—Simonson vs. Spratt.
6036—Hathorne vs. Johnson.	6047—Rothschild vs. Seebacher et al.
6037—Fisher vs. Comstock.	6048—Kelly vs. Lorillard et al.
6038—Bockover vs. Haines et al.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

Held by Gorvp, J.

Nos.	Nos.
5609—Shaw vs. Collins et al.	5750—Lispe et al. vs. Rief.
8089—The Penrhyn Slate Company vs. Meyer.	5657—Kupfer vs. Brigg et al.
5856—Kronegard vs. Kuhuff.	5874—Daly vs. Annsl.
5945—Bromburger versus Connor et al.	5886—Nieficker vs. Keis.
5946—Rabenstein vs. Connor.	5528—Curry vs. Farley.
5947—McGregor vs. Connor.	5745—Shane vs. Bergan.
5948—Hess vs. Connor.	5915—Ferrier vs. Dick.
5949—Huber vs. Connor.	5885—Mills vs. Blont.
5862—Kasemeyer vs. Dresler.	5710—Weisel vs. Schaaf.
5897—Quimby vs. Graf.	2937—Intch vs. Dorner.
9038—Maguire vs. O'Day.	5807—Mandelick vs. Sanders.
	1589—Howell vs. Paul.
	5815—Kasemeyer vs. Goldstein.
	5852—Herts vs. Schachtel.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART III.

Held by Simnott, J.

Nos.	Nos.
5630—Cunningham et al. vs. Caro et al.	6053—Bornousky versus Schroff et al.
5551—Williams vs. Spaulding.	6055—Sullivan vs. Kelly.
7105—Leon vs. Connor.	6056—Cahagan et al. vs. Lawrence et al.
6017—Connors vs. Lutz.	6057—Sleight vs. Smith.
5681—Same vs. Fuchs.	6058—McFarlan vs. Bulowa.
5797—Brinkerhoff vs. Van Cleave.	6059—Carney vs. Evans.
5742—Bowes et al. vs. Hopkins.	6060—McNiven vs. Evans.
5793—Solomon vs. Hamburg.	6061—Donnolly vs. Kelly et al.
7009—Metzinger vs. Welde	6062—Bailey vs. Gardner.
8051—Fellows vs. Andrews	6065—Silverstein vs. Herman.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS—PART I.

Held by Hackett, Recorder.

Peter Quinn, robbery.	John Ryan, grand larceny.
James McLoughlin, felonious assault and battery	Richard Reed, grand larceny.
John McNulty, burglary.	John Quinn, James Stapleton, grand larceny.
William Parker, burglary.	John Bovie, James Clark, grand larceny.
Josephine Quigley, Seymour Smith, burglary.	John Johnson, grand larceny.
Mary McCourt, grand larceny.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS—PART II.

Held by Oldersleeve, J.

James Smith, John Garry, burglary.	Joseph Slater, grand larceny.
John Williams, burglary.	James Thompson, grand larceny.
Thomas Carroll, grand larceny.	Mary Craig, grand larceny.
William White, grand larceny.	Elijah W. Houghton, forgery.
Frank Smith, grand larceny.

A SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

Western papers say that a new party, styling itself the "Social Democratic Party," has organized in Wisconsin, claiming to be part of the National Working Men's Party of the United States. The plan calls for, among other things, equal taxation of all real and personal property above an exemption of several hundred dollars, and a system of compulsory education.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate insisted on its amendments to the Military Academy appropriations, and ordered a conference committee. A bill was introduced to repeal the act incorporating the National Capitol Life Insurance Company. The bill to allow the Commissioners of the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company to buy certain property and sell it at public or private sale was passed. The Eads Jetty Appropriation bill and the Pacific Railroad Sinking-fund bill were discussed without action. The House amendment to the Printing Deficiency bill, relating to rates for work, was not concurred in, and a conference was ordered.

In the House the bill to meet the deficiency in the appropriation for Public Printing was so amended as to prohibit payment of higher rates for work than are paid in New-York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore. The General Deficiency bill was considered in Committee of the Whole without final action. The Naval Appropriation bill was reported. It appropriates $12,494,752.

SENATE.

The Senate was called to order at 10 o'clock this morning by Mr. Windom, the President pro tem., Mr. Ferry having been called away from the Capitol, and on motion of Mr. SARGENT a further recess was taken until noon. Upon reassembling, on motion of Mr. WINDOM, the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill, and a committee of conference was ordered.

THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Mr. HOWE, of Wisconsin, from the joint Committee on the Library, reported a bill to provide for additional accommodation for the library of Congress. Placed on the calendar.

FAST MAILS AND FRANKING.

Messrs. Hamlin, Dorsey, and Davis were appointed the new Conference Committee on the part of the Senate on the bill establishing certain post routes, which involves the question of restoring Fast Mail trains and the franking privilege.

THE NATIONAL CAPITOL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. DORSEY, of Arkansas, introduced a bill to repeal the act to incorporate the National Capitol Life Insurance Company, and to provide for winding up the affairs of the said corporation. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE ELECTORAL COUNT AND THE SESSIONS.

Mr. BOU

The New York Times.

NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, FEB. 8, 1877.

AMUSEMENTS THIS EVENING.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—A MORNING CALL—MARRIED LIFE—Mr. Lester Wallack, Mr. John Gilbert, Miss Ada Dyas, Miss Effie Germon.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—THE DANICHEFFS—Mr. C. R. Thorne, Mr. W. R. Floyd, Miss Katherine Rogers, Miss Fanny Morant.

PARK THEATRE.—OUR BOARDING HOUSE—Mr. Stuart Robson, Mr. W. H. Crane, Mrs. A. F. Baker.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—LEMONS OR, WEDLOCK FOR SEVEN—Mr. C. P. Coghlan, Miss F. Davenport

BOOTH'S THEATRE.—FIFTH AVENUE—Mr. George Rignold. Miss Maud Granger.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—MARTON, LE JOLIE BOQUETIERE.

HELLER'S WONDER THEATRE.—PRESTIDIGITATION, MUSIC, AND HUMOR—Mr. Robert Heller, Miss Heller.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS (Spectacular)—Kiralfy Brothers.

EAGLE THEATRE.—LA PETITE MARIÉE (Opera Bouffe) Mlle. Marie Aimee.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—THE BIG BONANZA.

NEW-YORK AQUARIUM.—RARE AND CURIOUS FISH AND MAMMALIA, STATUARY, &c.—Day and evening.

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART.—EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT STATUARY, PAINTINGS, &c. Day only.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.—MINSTRELSY, FARCES and NEGRO COMICALITIES

CHICKERING HALL.—GRAND CONCERT—Mrs. Imogene O. Brown, Mrs. Anna B. Hills, Mr. A. Bischoff, Mr. F. Remmerts.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN.—EXHIBITION OF WATER COLORS. Day and evening.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—GRAND MASQUERADE BALL of the German Liederkranz.

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

People who think that the "Compromise bill" was the introduction to an era of good feeling may profitably study during the next few days the comments of the Democratic press on the Florida decision. Backed by the authority of Judges CLIFFORD and FIELD—the latter of whom is said to have exhibited the most bitter partisanship in the consultations of the Commission—Democratic newspapers will doubtless be prepared to denounce it as bad in law and outrageous in equity, and the personal imputations which have hitherto been mainly cast on Republican Senators and Representatives will be freely extended to Judges STRONG, MILLER, and BRADLEY. All this will, of course, greatly tend to strengthen the moral and judicial force of that great constitutional bulwark—the Supreme Court of the United States.

Representative MAISH, of Pennsylvania, introduced in the House yesterday a constitutional amendment embodying a rather cumbrous but ingenious plan for dividing the mass vote of a State for President by the number of Electoral votes possessed by the State, and crediting to each candidate his share of the Electoral votes of such State obtained on the basis of the Electoral average reached by the division of the mass vote. For example, let the mass vote of New-York be 1,000,000; this divided by 33 would, in round numbers, give 30,000 as the Electoral average. The Hayes vote divided by this average would have shown 16 Electoral votes for the Republican candidate, and the Tilden vote so divided would have given the remaining 17 votes to the Democrats. The plan has at least the merit of insuring a certain recognition to minorities, though a probably more effective provision for this end, and one not requiring a constitutional amendment to carry it into effect, is that proposed in the Assembly yesterday by Mr. HEPBURN, of St. Lawrence. This is simply the plan of choosing two Presidential Electors at large, and one from each Congressional district in a State, which has been favorably received by a good many of those who have reflected to most purpose on this knotty problem.

The Detroit Tribune has found a pocket dictionary which supplies a key to the celebrated "Gobble" dispatch received by Mr. TILDEN on Dec. 1, from Portland, Oregon. The dispatch has been deciphered in a way whose accuracy does not admit of a doubt, and the key fails only to explain the signature. The context leaves no doubt, however, that Gobble is merely another and very fitting name for GROVER. The Governor of Oregon informs TILDEN five days before he gave his decision that he will decide every point in the case of Post Office Elector in favor of the highest Democratic Elector, (CRONIN,) and that the certificate will be granted accordingly. The Tribune has also discovered that where the word "medicine" is used in PATRICK'S dispatch it should be translated "money," and it may reasonably be inferred that "Gobble" was a person who could take in a good deal of medicine. In this case it seems to have been prescribed for what the physicians call its "alterative" qualities.

The Assembly Committee on Cities appears to be overburdened with work, and its energies, unfortunately, seem to be paralyzed by the mass of bills before it. As the members of this committee were selected for their presumed honesty and ability to deal with municipal questions, it is to be hoped that they will shortly be able to give some evidence of both. Its Chairman, Mr. FISH, is a young man of considerable promise, and if he expects to have any political future, he will never have a better opportunity than the present to earn public confidence. Action on a good many of the bills recently introduced with the view of reforming local administration would be rendered unnecessary were the comprehensive measure introduced by him a few weeks ago reported to the House. In spite of the omission of some of its best feature, apparently at the dictation of the Police Commissioners, it retained a good many highly desirable provisions, and there is no good reason why it should not be at once acted on. The prompt report of the Senate Committee on Mr. WOODIN'S four bills in regard to the Register, County Clerk, Coroners, and Commissioner of Jurors, is a pledge that Mr. WOODIN'S committee will not fall behind its excellent record of last session.

Though the convivial "CLINT." WHEELER and his colleagues on the Police Board are credited with exercising a somewhat dangerous influence over the Assembly Committee on Cities, we trust that very little protest will be needed to defeat any favorable action on the numerous bills introduced for the purpose of enlarging the powers of that incompetent and grasping department of the City Government. The bill transferring the night-soil and offal contract from the control of the Board of Health to the Police Board is a transparent job, apparently in the interest of Gen. SMITH'S friend and business associate, Capt. SAMUELS. The bill to merge the Health Department into that of the Police, and another, introduced yesterday, to add the duties of the Excise Board to those of the political tricksters who are scheming to monopolize half the powers of the City Government, are measures which should be quietly buried in committee. Still another bill, designed to protect the Police Board against the service of injunctions, and thus to allow them to commit lawless acts without interference, is a very impudent attempt to clutch arbitrary powers from their desire for more work, it is evident that the Police Commissioners have too little to do—a fact which the frequent absence of one or other of the board from his duties seems to confirm. This can readily be cured by abolishing the sinecure offices possessed by two or three of the Commissioners.

An official statement from the Turkish Government gives as the reason of MIDHAT PASHA'S abrupt dismissal, his exercise of absolute power. In other words, he was convicted of exercising powers which the new Constitution denies even to the Sultan. If this were the exact truth, it would indeed be odd that the author of the paper Constitution should fall the first victim to its operations. The real accusation against MIDHAT undoubtedly is concealed in this guarded note. He has made himself obnoxious to the party about the Sultan by his immense energy and activity. An intrigue for his removal was begun as long ago as the early part of January, when English correspondents at Constantinople referred to it as a matter of current gossip. The report that MIDHAT was engaged in a conspiracy seems to be doubted by well-informed authorities. But all agree that the change is one of men, rather than of measures.

As the National Capitol Life Insurance Company has no assets save those derived from a broken-down New-Haven company, and no prospect of business beyond that which is contingent upon the bargain with the New-Jersey Mutual, the Senate bill to repeal the act under which it maintains a nominal existence is not open to the objection that it interferes with vested interests. The incorporation of the concern was a mistake in the first instance, and the results that have followed should prevent compliance with a proposal now before Congress for the creation of another "national" life insurance company. A charter granted by the Federal Government enables its possessors to acquire business without the restraints to which companies formed, say, under the laws of this State are subject. It is, therefore, a license to prey upon the ignorance or credulity of persons who attach undue importance to a national charter, and it may be used, as we have recently seen, for the most unworthy purposes. The President of the New-Jersey Mutual has, indeed, committed himself to the opinion that State supervision is an inconvenient thing—for bankrupt companies; that the Federal Government alone should have cognizance of life insurance matters. From his point of view, he is probably right. The New-Jersey Mutual might have gone on some time longer, squandering the assets of its policy-holders and helping companies like the Continental to victimize their members, had there been no check more efficient than an officer of the National Treasury would have been likely to enforce. Instead of granting more charters, it is to be hoped that Congress will extinguish the National Capitol, and thereafter leave life insurance wholly to the States.

THE COMMISSION'S FIRST DECISION.

The Electoral Commission decided yesterday to take notice of no evidence in the case of Florida except the certificates sent in from the two houses, and such extraneous evidence as may be submitted touching the eligibility of HUMPHREYS, one of the Hayes Electors. The decision was supported by the three Republican Senators, the two Republican Representatives, and Justices STRONG, MILLER, and BRADLEY. It was opposed by the Democratic Senators and Representives and by Justices CLIFFORD and FIELD.

The effect of this decision is simple, but important. It confines the attention of the Commission to the certificates, which are three in number. "Certificate" is a technical term used in the Constitution to indicate the package sent to the President of the Senate, and purporting to contain the vote of a State for President and Vice President. In the present instance, there were three such packages. One contained the vote of the Electors who were declared elected by the Board of State Canvassers, who held commissions as Electors issued by the Governor in accordance with the declaration of the State Canvassers, and who also forwarded with their vote, the certificate of the Governor, required by the Federal statute, stating the names of the Electors. The second "certificate" or package, contained a statement of votes cast on the 6th of December for TILDEN by a body of men claiming to be the Electors of the State, and sustaining their claim by the proceedings of a Circuit Court of the State, copies of which were inclosed. The third "certificate," or package, contained a statement of the same votes cast by the same body of men, with a certificate made out in January, by a new Governor, to the effect that by an act of the Legislature approved Jan. 27, a new canvass of the votes in the Presidential Election had been made, and that its result was to give the office of Electors to the men who had cast the alleged Electoral votes in December for TILDEN. These various papers, so far as the vote of the State is concerned, constitute all which the Commission consents to consider.

Some light is thrown on the disposition of the case likely to be made after consideration of the papers, by the arguments on which all other evidence was excluded. The Democrats asked the Commission to go into an investigation of the acts of the State Board of Canvass and of the facts on which they were based. They asked the Commission to inquire whether the board had exceeded its powers, and whether it had used them erroneously. These things the Commission declines to do. The Democrats produced certain proceedings in the Florida courts and certain acts of the Florida Legislature, based on the alleged error and abuse committed by the Board of Canvasers, and intended to remedy such error and abuse. The Commission having refused to enter upon an inquiry into the conduct of the board, will not probably give any weight to legal or legislative proceedings relating to that conduct. The only thing which remains for the Commission to decide is which "certificate" contained the votes of those Electors whom the State of Florida appointed, and on the face of the contents of the certificates there is hardly room for any doubt as to what the decision will be.

Concerning the eligibility of Mr. HUMPHREYS, it is on record that at the meeting of the Florida Electors HUMPHREYS, who had been a United States Shipping Commissioner, testified, under oath, that he had resigned his office previous to election; that his resignation had been accepted by the Judge to whom he was required to send it; that the letter of the Judge, notifying him of its acceptance, had been received a week or ten days before the election; that another person had been directed to perform the duties of the office, and had, in fact, performed them since before the election. These statements are now fully confirmed by documentary evidence. We know of no evidence capable of overturning this; and the decision of the Commission to consider this point does not seem of any essential importance in the Florida case. Of its force as a precedent it is too soon to judge.

Finally, in regard to the decision just rendered, it is to be remarked that it appears to exclude the evidence taken by Congressional Committees, a large amount of which the Democrats sought to introduce by the device of citing it in their objection and attaching it to that document. It is probable that the Commission, refusing to consider such evidence in the case of Florida, will do the same with reference to Louisiana and South Carolina. It will not, however, be bound to decline the consideration of evidence taken by committee in the Oregon matter.

It will be quite natural that Republicans should receive with gratification this, the first decision of the Commission, so clearly sustaining the view of the law, of the rights of States, and of the powers of Congress, which Republicans generally have adopted. But we venture to point out, with the more emphasis because the decision has been in favor of the Republican view, that at the very outset of its career, on the first essential question submitted to it, the Commission has confirmed the main arguments which we repeatedly urged against the bill creating it. It has decided a purely legal question by what, with all respect, must be called a strict party vote, and that decision was practically made by the vote of the odd Judge. The act will be generally accepted as a partisan act. The attacks which we anticipated upon the character of the Supreme Court Justices, to instances of which we have already called attention, will be made. The intense bitterness excited by partisan disappointment will be turned inevitably upon the Judges who have taken part in the decision. The passions, the prejudices, the animosities of that party which is notoriously the most violent and undisciplined, will be directed toward a portion of the Supreme Court. The presumption raised by the Compromise bill itself, that the members of that court can be relied on to carry their political predilections into the most solemn and momentous duties will be strengthened, and thousands of heated partisans will be eager to spread it. While the first substantial act of the Commission tends to advance the cause which we believe to be just, we cannot omit to direct attention to the support which it gives to the objections to the whole compromise scheme.

We may add, however, that we are not without sympathy for the Democratic apologists for the scheme at this juncture. They refused to believe that the Commission could divide on a party line. Such a suggestion shocked them, and because they would not entertain it, they scouted the idea that the net result of the law was to turn the question over to a single Judge. Yet the first decision of the Commission brings them to grief. They had erected a fanciful structure, which they chose to regard as the real Commission. It was to consist of men whose minds were wholly just and impartial, and who would decide the points that had been dividing the country for months as if they had never before heard of them. At the first touch this ideal structure tumbles like a house of cards. Not one Democratic Senator, not even one Democratic Justice, on a question as purely legal as can possibly come before the Commission, after patient and lucid and powerful argument, could be found impartial enough to sustain the decision which was finally reached. If it turns out at the end that our Democratic friends lie in an uncomfortable bed, we shall give them our commiseration; but they must remember that they made it for themselves.

MONOPOLY OR MANAGEMENT?

Yesterday's proceedings of the stockholders of the New-Jersey Central Railroad are suggestive as regards both the blunders of its past management, and the blunder on which it relies for the recovery of prosperity. The remarks of Mr. KNIGHT, the new President, respecting the sources of the company's difficulties are superficial and inconclusive. He adverts to one capital mistake, and one only—the payment of dividends in excess of the rate which prudence would have dictated. The stock of the company now amounts, at par, to $20,525,000, and the dividends declared since 1866 amount in the aggregate to $14,424,000. "These were too large," Mr. KNIGHT declares, and he proceeds to show that a large reserve might have been accumulated had lower rates of dividend been substituted for the high rates that were paid. This is obvious enough, so far as it goes, and it is a very serious reflection upon the sagacity of former managers. The question arises, however, whether excessive dividends were not an essential part of the policy which carried the company up to the point it once attained. It was managed on the balloon principle. It was all the time enlarging its operations and liabilities, and issuing bonds to meet them. It bought coal lands at extravagant prices. It assumed the debts of other companies. Its whole policy appeared to be predicated on the supposition that there were no limits to its growth. The sales of bonds were therefore a frequently recurring necessity, and the ability to float them depended upon the company's standing in the stock market. The price of the stock formed the readiest criterion of the company's credit, and nothing was more likely to enhance the former than the regular payment of heavy dividends. In this way the company acquired for its stock and bonds general recognition as investment securities.

The whole system was a vicious one. Each bad feature reacted upon others. The ease with which the company obtained all the money it wanted at once stimulated and enabled the Directors to carry out plans which a thrifty management would not have entertained. The true condition of the company was concealed. The stockholders and the public, deluded by factitious ideas of prosperity which large dividends conveyed, accepted every statement as gospel. There was an unwholesome tendency to expansion on one side—a blind credulity on the other. We understand Mr. KNIGHT'S motives in passing over all save one of the weak points in the company's history; but there will be no enduring reform in railroad management until the various causes of the collapse of a great enterprise are frankly stated and plainly condemned. It is idle to single out a palpable mistake and to pass in silence the manifold evils of which it was, in turn, the cause and the consequence.

Still more unsatisfactory is the method mainly relied upon by Mr. KNIGHT for the extrication of the company from its embarrassments. His inculcation of rigid economy in every branch of its affairs none will gainsay. Provided only that the efficiency of the road be not impaired, he can hardly go too far in this direction. The misfortune is that the injudicious policy of the past has fastened upon the company burdens which it cannot shake off. The ground upon which the shareholders are besought to take the three million loan is evidence of the existence of a crisis which no talk about earnings can explain away. In this dilemma Mr. KNIGHT holds out a hope of an arrangement with other coal companies whereby the public may be made to lift the companies out of the difficulties into which their own bad management has plunged them. "It was almost certain," Mr. KNIGHT is reported to have said, "that a new coal combination would be organized within a week, and with it would come an advance in the price of coal, which would put the company once more on a sound financial basis." If the companies concerned are willing to forfeit all that remains of their title to outside sympathy, they will join Mr. KNIGHT in an attempt to re-establish the odious coal monopoly. We scarcely think that the Delaware and Lackawanna and the Delaware and Hudson will encumber themselves with bargains that would ultimately lead to fresh disaster, for the sake of the New-Jersey Central and the Reading corporations. Let every tub stand on its own bottom.

Undoubtedly, the sources of trouble in all these companies are substantially identical. They have assumed too much and guaranteed too much. They have attempted to blend interests that should be kept separate. Their positions, however, are widely different, and for this reason it is not easy to suppose that companies which by comparison are strong will consent to the revival of a monopoly for the accommodation of the New-Jersey Central and the Reading roads. The proposition is not made more acceptable by the coolness with which Mr. KNIGHT assumes that it is fair to double the present price of coal to the consumers in order that a company which long-continued errors have brought to the verge of ruin may be placed "once more on a sound financial basis." He forgets that the public have some rights in the premises, and that in the prevailing condition of industry and trade they are in no mood to pay tribute to the policy of railroad inflation. The remedy for that lies, not in enhancing the cost of production and swelling the expenses of living by artificially forcing up the price of coal, but in reorganizing the embarrassed companies and adapting their management to their actual circumstances. "Robbing Peter to pay Paul" may be a possible process when the community is lulled into indifference by great prosperity. It would not be a safe experiment just now. And it will certainly not be rendered less objectionable by the fact that it is intended to transfer to the shoulders of the public losses and liabilities whose existence is traceable to a reckless management of corporate affairs.

PARLIAMENT AND THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT.

It is not improbable that the session of the English Parliament which commences to-day will end with the resignation of the present Government or a dissolution for the purpose of an appeal to the country in the shape of a general election. The blunders of the Government since the prorogation of Parliament last August have been many and grievous, and it will require all the ingenuity of Earl Derby and Lord Beaconsfield to satisfy the country that the honor and the interests of the Kingdom have been saved from injury at their hands. If the Adullamites would now all come out of their caves and agree to act together—if the various wings of the Liberal, Radical, and Home Rule Parties were to unite in support of a vote of censure upon the Administration—the Government would find it difficult to maintain its ground. The action of the Administration in the affairs of Turkey has reflected no credit upon the Foreign Office. Lord Salisbury, as the representative of England at the conference, has accomplished neither one thing nor the other. He has not constrained the Sultan to accept the reforms demanded by the powers represented at the conference, nor has he supported Turkey in her not wholly unreasonable request to be left alone to manage her own affairs in her own way. The majority of Englishmen who care anything at all about the matter probably wish that Turkey should be compelled to hereafter protect her Christian subjects in all their rights, but that she should not be driven to fight for her existence. At present, so far as England is concerned, Turkey is left to stand alone, and the conflict between her and Russia is adjourned only until the latter power is ready to begin the fight. The instructions given by the English Foreign Office to Lord Salisbury, and the manner in which he obeyed these orders, will form a legitimate subject of inquiry at the approaching session of Parliament, and it will not be surprising if the result of the investigation should prove disadvantageous to the Government. The usual method of reproof under such circumstances is to move an amendment to the address to the Crown in reply to the speech from the throne. If such an amendment be moved to-day, and if it be supported by the leaders of the various sections of the Opposition, the Government will at once be placed upon its trial and must stand or fall by the result.

The preponderance of numbers may carry the Government safely through this ordeal, and probably the opposition may not care to push its criticisms too far. The Queen's speech will, no doubt, contain a programme of legislation upon home affairs, and this programme, both for what it may contain and for what it may omit, will afford opportunity for attack. The representatives of the Ritualistic Party, which has of late developed unexpected strength, will probably move for a repeal or modification of the Public Worship Regulation bill, and in this they may count upon Mr. GLADSTONE'S support. The Secularists and Nonconformists will again agitate for such a modification of the Educational law as shall meet their views concerning denominational instruction in public schools. The great question of the extension of the franchise to the agricultural laborers must now come up for discussion, if not for settlement, and an omission in the Queen's speech of a reference to this subject will give occasion for remonstrance and complaint. The first trial of the Government, however, will be upon its policy in the East, and it is probable that the debates in Parliament will be for some days confined to this subject.

THE ZODIACAL LIGHT.

Within the last few weeks the zodiacal light, when not interfered with by the moon, has been rather unusally conspicuous. Not, of course, that its brightness is such as would attract the attention of the careless observer, or even make it easily visible in a sky illuminated by many gas-lights. But where the air is clear, and the sky unilluminated by light from terrestrial sources, it may easily be followed in the early evening by a sensitive eye from the horizon to a point far beyond the meridian; and by 9 o'clock the so-called "counterglow," at present situated between the constellations of Cancer and Leo, makes its appearance unmistakably. The brightest portion of this zodiacal light—that near the western horizon—is fully as bright as the most luminous portion of the Milky Way; the rest is much fainter. It has roughly the form of a pyramid, some twenty degrees wide at its base, narrowing and fading rapidly as the distance from the sun increases, but without definite outline or visible structure. Its central line seems to coincide quite accurately with the ecliptic, the great circle which the sun marks out in its yearly motion through the sky, and it is wholly contained within the zodiac or zone of constellations through which the ecliptic passes, deriving its name from this fact. It can be traced at present more than 120 degrees eastward from the sun, and just opposite to the sun is situated the faint "counterglow," so faint, indeed, that only a practical eye can make it out at all. In tropical skies the light often extends completely across the heavens, the "counterglow" forming merely a knot of somewhat greater brightness than the neighboring portions of the luminous band.

The zodiacal light appears to have been first observed in 1659 by DESCARTES, but did not attract much attention until 1683, when it was noticed and described by DOMINIC CASSINI, who gave it its name. The two centuries which have elapsed since then have not fully revealed the mystery of its nature and origin, although they have witnessed the promulgation and overthrow of many theories on the subject; as, for instance, that it is due to the solar atmosphere, or to a ring of nebulous matter encircling the earth as the rings of Saturn surround that planet. The most recent investigations go far to show that it is due simply to reflection from a countless host of minute bodies which move around the sun, just as the earth does, in the plane of the ecliptic, and in orbits some of them smaller than that of Mercury, and thus not much inferior to that of Mars. As to their magnitude, it is likely enough that they do not differ materially from the size of the ordinary shooting-stars, which are estimated, on very probable grounds, generally to weigh only a few grains. At any rate, the entire mass of matter contained in the whole multitude must be very insignificant compared with that of the earth, or very serious disturbances, of a kind which could not have escaped observation, must be produced in the motions of Venus and Mercury. The light, so far as can be made out by the best polariscopic and spectroscopic observations, (those of Prof. WRIGHT, of Yale College,) presents precisely the characteristics which should belong to sunlight reflected from minute particles of meteoric matter, and so far as we know none of the phenomena are inconsistent with the theory.

There have been many speculations as to the part played by this meteoric cloud in the economy of the solar system. MAYER found in it the fuel and the power which maintains the solar heat, supposing that the incessant fall of meteoric matter upon the sun's surface supplied the loss from radiation; an ingenious and beautiful hypothesis, but insufficient, as LEVERRIER demonstrated when he showed from the motions of Mercury that all the matter within the planet's orbit could not amount to a mass much greater than that of Mercury himself. Some portion of the sun's heat may, probably enough, be thus produced, but only a small percentage of the whole. Some have found in the action of this meteoric ring the cause of sun-spots, of their remarkable periodicity, and the peculiar law of the sun's rotation. Others think that the meteorological and climatic conditions of the earth are affected by it—that its varying density in different parts so changes the amount of sunlight which reaches the earth at different times and in different years, as to account, in part at least, for the great variety of seasons. There may be something in this. It is quite certain, as Sir G. AIRY recently remarked, that we must look outside the earth for the cause of such phenomena.

THE GREEN AND THE BLUE.

It is a striking illustration of the perversity of human nature that no sooner does some man invent something for the benefit of mankind, than some other person proceeds to invent a counterpoising evil. Thus the invention of iron armor for vessels stimulated the invention of monstrous guns to smash it; and the discovery of the beneficent lightning-rod was followed by the invention of the peculiar atrocities practiced by lightning-rod men. There is no rose without a certain amount of thorns, no home without taxes, no useful invention without its antidote. Gen. PLEASONTON has just taught us that blue glass is a cure for every ill, and while we are yet felicitating ourselves upon his discovery, a perverse Frenchman announces the discovery that green glass is a sure and deadly poison. The good that may be secured by the use of blue glass will be more than counterbalanced by the evils that will be inflicted through the medium of green glass. PLEASONTON may save his scores, but the Frenchman will assassinate his hundreds.

M. BERT, the Frenchman in question, had no sooner learned that light passing through blue glass calms the mind and strengthens the body than he began to experiment with glass of other colors. He found that plants submitted to the influence of green light soon wilted and died. The poison which slew them seemed to exercise a strange fascination over them, for they turned their leaves toward the fatal green glass with far more eagerness than they displayed when blue glass was set before them. The simple cabbage, the gentle asparagus, and the stalwart gooseberry were alike in this morbid thirst for green light, and they drank in its deadly rays until they sank forever into dishonored pots.

This discovery explains very clearly the injurious influence of green wall-paper. Hitherto chemists have asserted that green paper contains arsenic, and that the arsenic is the cause of the unpleasant symptoms developed in those who reside in green-papered rooms. We now know that the green color, and not the arsenic, is at fault. The rays of light striking upon the paper are tinged with green before they have time to rebound upon the occupants of the room, and thus the latter continually absorb the poisonous green light until their health and spirits give way.

Similarly, we can now understand why the typical villain of romance and the stage is represented as wearing green glasses. For ages mankind has mistaken the cause for the effect. Men do not wear green glasses because they are depraved, but they become depraved by wearing green glasses. It is frightful to think of the number of innocent and well-meaning men, who, having adopted green glasses from a mistaken belief that they would thereby benefit their eyes, have poisoned their bodies, perverted their minds, and warped their whole moral natures. What green glasses have done for men, green veils have done for women. In former years, when green veils were fashionable, our women were notoriously delicate and sickly. Now that blue veils have become popular, American women are beginning to rival their English sisters in vigor of constitution and ability to walk miles in thick shoes. Obviously, the green light filtered, through the green veils was the real source of the physical weakness formerly the reproach of American women, and the inventor of the blue veil was an unconscious but potent philanthropist. Who can tell to what extent the evils of intemperance are due to the effect of green glass bottles upon the wine and ardent spirits which they inclose? How much of the treachery of feline nature is due to the green eyes with which cats are fitted, and may not the popular conception of jealousy as a "green-eyed monster" be an unconscious recognition of the fact that, in proportion as a man sees things in a green light, he becomes a prey to jealousy and all other evil passions? The green flag excites rage and violence in the average Englishman, and green apples develop the most unholy impulses of the juvenile stomach. M. BERT'S discovery explains all these otherwise unaccountable facts, and finds in them the consistent manifestation of an inexorable law of nature.

In publishing this discovery M. BERT has placed a dangerous weapon in the hands of unprincipled men. The wretch who does not appreciate his wife's mother will present her with a green silk dress and a green parasol, and convince her that her complexion will suffer unless she wears a green veil. If she is an unusually vigorous old lady, and her constitution withstands the effect of the poison in moderate doses, he will put green curtains in her room, and so finish her at once. The wicked husband, instead of coarsely shooting his wife, or sweetening her coffee with arsenic, will wear large waistcoat buttons of polished green glass, and by them reflect rays of poisoned light upon his unconscious victim as she sits at the other end of the table. The assassin will safely smite his enemy at noonday, by concentrating upon his nervous centres rays that have passed through a small green burning-glass, and the colored voter will be intimidated to an unprecedented extent by ruthless Democrats, who will lure him to crush gigantic green cheeses with his unsuspecting head, and to thereby poison his mind against his true political friends. Crimes like these will be easy of perpetration, and the criminals will be almost certain to escape punishment. M. BERT may not have foreseen all this, but that fact—if it be a fact—does not excuse him. A man has no right to make reckless discoveries, and before M. BERT published the record of his cabbage-killing experiment he should have reflected upon the terrible consequences which it will inevitably entail.

ALBANY.

THE PUBLIC WORKS BILL.

THREE HOURS OF DEBATE AND NO DECISION REACHED—WHAT A YOUNG DEMOCRAT DID—THE MASS OF LEGISLATION PROPOSED FOR NEW-YORK CITY—INSURANCE LEGISLATION—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Feb. 7, 1877.

The bill in relation to the office of Superintendent of Public Works came up this morning in the Assembly on special order. Three hours were consumed in debate upon it, and it was then progressed, while, by vote of the House, the session was extended to allow the introduction of bills and other business. There was a square fight on every section of the bill between Mr. Alvord, second on the Canal Committee, and Mr. Baker, the Chairman. In the Committee, Mr. Alvord had been able to carry every point, so that he bill came to the House it was exactly in the form he wanted it to be In the interval between the time of the reporting and the discussion of the bill by the House, Mr. Baker had been hard at work among members, explaining, persuading, and arguing the matter, until he found he had enough votes to carry him through. So when the discussion commenced this morning, he made his attack, and first carried an amendment placing the financial work to be done under the operation of the bill in the hands of the Auditor of the Canal Department, where it belongs, instead of lodging it with the State Controller. Mr. Alvord proposes to abolish the office of Canal Auditor, and has a bill now pending for that purpose. The Alvord forces made a counter-attack on the very moderate salaries of the Superintendent and his assistants, endeavoring to cut them down about 25 per cent. Over this the debate was long, warm, and spirited, amendments, and amendments to the amendments, coming up thick and fast, but they were all voted down almost as fast as offered; and then Mr. Baker carried several amendments tending to simplify the bill. It seemed that the bill had at last floated into smooth waters, when Dr. Hayes proposed a new section which provided that the Superintendent and his assistants should not use their offices for the furtherance of party purposes; if they did, any two citizens might unite in a complaint to a Supreme Court Judge, who should hear the case, and if the Judge should be convinced that the complaint was well founded, he should certify the same to the Governor, who should thereupon remove such inculpated officer. To this amendment, Mr. Baker said he was opposed, for the reason that while its intent was good, it would be either inoperative in practice or would do more harm than good. Mr. Purdy pointed out that an officer holding so important a position as the Superintendent could be kept in court defending himself the whole year through, if he could be dragged there on complaint of only two men. Mr. Alvord was in favor of the proposition on account of the great power which the Superintendent would possess, and over which some such check as the one proposed was necessary. At this moment rose the young Mr. Grady, of New-York, and committed the almost incredible folly of raising a party question on the amendment. His speech was a furious stump oration, in the worst possible taste, and was pitched in the lowest possible key of partisan politics. The underlying principle of it was, "the other party is bad; let us be bad too. Because wrong exists, let us recognize wrong as our standard of action." This would have sounded bad from any one, but from a young man was as bad as bad could be. Mr. Cozzens, the silent Democratic leader, fell back in his seat, looking perfectly sick. Mr. Peter Mitchell sprang to the rescue of his party, and earnestly disclaimed any responsibility for the utterances of the gentleman who had just taken his seat. But it was too late. Mr. Gilbert, of Franklin, made a reply, dignified and pure, to Mr. Grady, and the bill seemed in serious danger when Mr. Husted, as it then wanted but 10 minutes of the hour of adjournment, moved that it be progressed, which was done. Mr. Baker moved to discharge the committee from its further consideration and that the bill be ordered to a third reading. Mr. Alvord moved to lay it upon the table, and as the easiest way out of the difficulty the House agreed to this motion. The bill can be taken up on vote of the House. The Democrats should do something to keep young Mr. Grady quiet, for his performance of this morning was the second of the same sort.

This business being disposed of, the introduction of bills was called for, and in 10 minutes 37 bills were poured into the Clerk's desk. Ten of these were bills relating to New-York. The amount of legislation proposed for that City is perfectly bewildering. The Committee on Cities is overburdened with the mass. Mr. Fleeke introduced the two bills he had in waiting yesterday, one to cause all the streets south of Fourteenth street to be repaired and repaved; the other to organize the Department of Taxes and Assessments. This gentleman has already introduced bills to merge the Department of Buildings in the Fire Department; to amend the Excise laws; to amend the law in regard to forfeited recognizances; to abolish the Park Department; to abolish the new Court-house Commission, and now he contemplates a raid on the Police Courts. Mr. Healy brought in a bill to abolish the present Commission of Charities and Correction, providing that the Mayor and Controller shall be ex officio Commissioners, and that the Mayor shall appoint a Commissionor, and the three together shall constitute the Board of Charities and Correction. The same gentleman has a bill pending to abolish the Dock Department, and to make it a bureau in the Department of Public Works. The Police Department is the subject of further proposed legislation and increase of powers, Dr. Hayes having presented a bill to abolish the Excise Board, and to vest all its powers in the Police Commissioners, all the moneys to be derived from license fees to be paid into the City sinking fund.

Among the large number of bills reported from committees this morning Mr. Nachtmann's bill, to allow civic processions to use music at public funerals on Sunday in the City, was reported adversely. Mr. Nachtmann asked that the report lie on the table, which the House allowed. Fourteen bills of various sorts and kinds were reported favorably, and went on to the general order calendar.

Mr. Hepburn, of St. Lawrence, introduced the following bill, amendatory of the existing State law in relation to Presidential Electors. The parts marked in italic are the alterations from the existing law, which is section 3, article 2, title 6, chapter 6, part first, Revised Statutes:

"At the general election in November preceding the time fixed by the law of the United States for the choice of President and Vice President of the United States, there shall be elected by general ticket, two Presidential Electors of President and Vice President, known as Electors at Large; and each Elector in this State shall have a right to vote for said two Electors; and there shall also be elected one Presidential Elector in each of the Congressional districts of this State; and the Electors of the respective Congressional districts shall, in addition to voting for said Electors at Large, have the right to vote only for the Presidential Elector to be chosen in the district where the Elector so voting resides; and the two persons having the highest number of votes in the State shall be declared and deemed duly appointed Electors; and the persons having the highest number of votes in each of the Congressional Districts shall be declared and deemed duly appointed Electors."

Mr. Husted will introduce a bill in relation to life insurance, providing for a commission to examine all laws on the subject. The first section of the bill declares that the Governor of the State, by and with the consent of the Senate, "is authorized to appoint five persons, three of whom shall be learned in the law, as Commissioners, who shall inquire into the practical workings and effect of all statutes of the State of New-York, now in force, relating to the organization, conduct, supervision, and liquidation of life insurance companies, and whether any changes, and if any, what changes in such legislation are necessary and proper to be made for the protection of the public and for the security and proper conduct of the business." The second section declares that the Commissioners shall send in their report at the opening of the next session of the Legislature, and shall accompany their report with a draft of a bill containing such amendments to the law as they may think necessary. The Commissioners shall receive compensation at the rate of $2,000 a year for the time actually engaged, and shall receive a sum not exceeding $3,000 for clerical services; and this shall be paid out of the same fund as the salary of the Superintendent of Insurance is now paid. Vacancies in the commission may be filled by the Governor.

The Clerk of the Assembly, Mr. Johnson, has been receiving during the past few days the replies of the insurance companies to the resolution offered some time ago by Mr. Fish, and idented by the House, calling upon them to report the amount of money loaned on real estate, the circumstances under which such loans were made, and the amount of counsel fees paid to secure these loans. The replies will make altogether a good-sized volume. They will be printed.

THE SENATE.

Senator Baaden introduced a bill authorizing the Commissioner of Public Works to repave and repair, wherever needed, all the streets in the City of New-York below Fourteenth street. Mr. Woodin, from the Committee on Municipal affairs, reported favorably the four bills introduced by him last week, for making the County Clerk, Register, and Coroners of New-York salaried officers. The bill fixing the salary of Commissioner of Jurors was reported with an amendment making the salary $4,000 instead of $5,000. In executive session of the Senate the nomination of ex Assemblyman Beardsley, of Auburn, for Captain of the port in place of Capt. Seaman, deceased, was received from the Governor and referred to the Commerce and Navigation Committee.

HOW NEW-JERSEY LAWS ARE MADE.

A DEMOCRATIC PATRIOT FROM NEWARK LOOKING FOR HIS PRICE—A SNAP DECISION BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE JOINT MEETING—THE JERSEY CITY BILL PASSES THE SENATE—A BILL PRACTICALLY ABOLISHING JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—THE NEWARK MURDERERS RESPITED.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Wednesday, Feb. 7, 1877.

The Democrats concluded, after all, to hold a joint meeting at noon to-day. They were not prepared to do any business. Kreuger's absence from the caucus last evening prevented them from taking final action. The Newark member demands a Judgeship in Essex for one of his friends, and declares he will have nothing more to do with Democratic joint meetings till his price shall have been paid him. In face of his refusal to co-operate with his party, the Democrats felt that they would rather face the perils of a joint convention to-day than run the risk of being unable to secure the passage by the House of another resolution calling a joint meeting. It was arranged in the first place, however, that nothing should be done in joint meeting, except adjourn to some day next week. At high noon, to-day, just as the Senators were marching, two by two, into the Assembly, the Newark Democrat might have been seen creeping from his seat to the door of the chamber. When the roll was called he failed to answer to his name, nor did he make his appearance again until the two houses had separated, Malone, Democrat, and Cooper, Republican, failed to respond to their names, but they appeared in their seats a few moments later. Senator Willetts was not present at roll call, and it is not known whether he subsequently put in an appearance or not. There was, at all events, so much doubt as to who of the absentees from roll-call subsequently put in an appearance that it became very uncertain which party had a majority. Just after the roll-call Mr. Bergen offered a resolution, providing that when the joint meeting rose, it should be to meet again at noon on Tuesday next. It was agreed to without a counting vote, and then Mr. Bergen moved that the meeting rise. President Abbett called for the "yeas" on the motion, and awaited his response. "All opposed say No; the ayes have it," said he, in one breath. It was done so quickly, that the negative response of the members came after the announcement of the result. The Republicans called for the yeas and nayes. "The meeting has adjourned," said President Abbett, as he coolly descended from his chair. The Republicans seem to think that the result would not have been changed if the yea and nay vote had been taken. They feel, nevertheless, as though the President had put himself to the unnecessary trouble of "euchering" them, when he had but one "point" to go. They complain that the spirit of the action was not fair, and feel pretty mad about it.

Senator Abbett's bill for the abolition of legislative commissions in Jersey City, and authorizing the election, by the city at large at the coming Spring election, of Commissioners to fill the Boards of Works and Police and the Fire Commissioners, was called up on its third reading and final passage in the Senate this morning. The bill was passed by a vote of 17 to 3; the three being Senators Sewell, Mathers, and Hobart, and Mr. Hill not voting.

In the House the bills introduced were one by Hannon to overcome the legal obstacles to the construction of a bridge over the Cove in Jersey City to the Central Railway depot; one by Tilden to prevent colonization at election times, which provides that voters shall have resided for the 30 days just previous to election in the district in which they vote; and one by Brigham authorizing railways to change the routes of their roads though not the termini. There was a long discussion over Payne's bill to punish by a fine of $500, employers who pay their laborers with grocery orders. The issuing of shin plasters by factory men, iron founders, and others to their laborers is an abuse prevailing all over the State. The sentiment of the House was decidedly in favor of allowing laborers to spend their earnings where and as they please. The bill was passed by a decisive vote of 37 to 23. It will go to the Senate to-day, but will not be acted upon till next week. The session adjourns to-day till Monday. To-morrow both branches will make their annual visit to the Jamesburg Reform School.

Mr. Grigg's bill for the establishment of District Courts in cities of more than 15,000 inhabitants led to a long and warm discussion this afternoon. The bill allows the establishment of one such court in cities of 15,000, or more; cities with 100,000 people to have two if they desire, but no more. It transfers to the Judge of the District Court, who is to be a competent and licensed attorney, and to be appointed by the Governor and the Senate, all the civil powers intrusted to the Justices of the Peace in such cities. The Justices of the Peace are constitutional officers, and cannot themselves be abolished, but the bill reaches that point as nearly as possible. The bill was supported on the ground that the Justices of the Peace in the cities are incompetent to discharge their duties; that they are often corrupt, and, in order to make business for themselves, encourage lawsuits and all forms of barratry; and that the want of confidence in their ability or honesty leads to numerous costly appeals from their decisions to the higher courts. After a hard fight, in which all amendments were voted down, the bill was ordered to the third reading by a vote of 34 to 22.

Gov. Bedle handed to THE TIMES correspondent to-day the following statement in relation to the fate of Ryan and Oschwald, the Newark murderers:

Yesterday a bill came to my hands, passed by both houses, requiring the allowance of a writ of error and stay of execution, as a matter of course, in all criminal cases punishable with death. It was evidently intended to reach the Ryan and Oschwald case. The change proposed is so important to the administration of criminal law in this State that it becomes my duty to grant a further respite in order that the case may receive due consideration, and if it is to become a law that the will of the Legislature may not be frustrated. I have therefore reprieved the prisoners until Thursday, the 15th day of February, inst.

J. D. BEDLE, Governor.

It is understood that the Governor will veto the bill, and a special session of the Senate will be held Friday morning to receive his message.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—1 A. M.—For New-York and New-England, rising barometer, cooler north-west winds, clear or clearing weather.

For the Middle Atlantic, States rising barometer, northerly winds, cooler clear weather, attending a low barometer to the south-west.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

Charles Corly's express stables in Springfield, N. J., caught fire about 3 o'clock yesterday morning, and were burned, with their contents, including seven valuable horses. The loss is about $2,000. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

Five buildings, including the store of the Susquehanna Coal Company, were destroyed by fire at Nanticoke yesterday morning. Loss, $50,000; insurance, $30,000. The fire was caused by incendiaries, who are supposed to be "Molly Maguires."

A fire occurred at East Nanticoke at an early hour yesterday morning, entailing a loss of about $50,000, by the destruction of Hildreth & Co.'s store and four other buildings. Loss mostly covered by insurance.

AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL.

MISS ABBOTT'S DEBUT.

Miss Emma Abbott, a young American songstress whose name and misfortunes have been before the public for many months, made her début in presence of an American audience, yesterday evening. The event occurred at Chickering Hall, which was crowded in every part. It is pleasant to record that it was at all points successful. The announcement of its success indicates, too, that the satisfactory result of the affair brought agreeable disappointment to many thoughtful persons. Without rehearsing, even laconically, the story of Miss Abbott's woes, we may be permitted to express the belief that, by a well-intended effort to describe her as a martyr to English jealousy and to her abhorrence of Italian ribaldry, the friends of the lady narrowly escaped ruining her career. That Miss Abbott's future, since last night's performance, has taken on a brightness it did not appear likely to have, a week ago, is simply thanks to her gifts and positive talent. A mere débutante could never have met public approval in the face of the same quantity of ill-advised and ill-directed energy. Miss Abbott's admirers claimed so much for her that nothing short of uncommon excellence was likely to render her acceptable. The fact that the impression she produced was not only strong, but that it was wrought by causes which seem likely to deepen it, speaks, as we have implied, with particular eloquence in her behalf. Miss Abbott is unquestionably the most promising American songstress that has trod the stage these 10 years. We say promising, not to suggest the existence in her work of nothing beyond possibilities, but simply in recognition of her youth, which leaves room for abundant fruition. Miss Abbott has apparently studied considerably, and to good purpose. She is most fortunate, in the first place, for she has a voice of rare beauty and power, which has been made as equal throughout its compass as it is strong and pure. The full tone is of perfect roundness and penetrative force, and the mezza voce is of delicious quality. A possession of this sort is half the battle a prima donna has to wage, and hence Miss Abbott goes forth remarkably well equipped. Her style is not faultless. Her phrasing of Italian music is sometimes objectionable, for she has not yet acquired absolute control of the art of managing her breath, and her tempo is now and them somewhat fitful. But time and familiarity with the platform and footlights will correct these defects, and observation, too, will improve a pronunciation of the Italian tongue not wholly exempt from nasality. In addition to the gift of a fine voice, the débutante has vivacity, warmth, and expressiveness of no ordinary kind. These will be specially apparent in opera, but they were never out of sight during yesterday's performance and, though scarcely legitimate weapons of combat in the concert room, they certainly conduced largely to the singer's triumph. Last evening, at all events, Miss Abbott won a victory to which no other word than this can with fairness be applied. The cordiality of the greeting was quite outdone by the applause which followed each of the numbers allotted to her. She first sang the familiar aria from "Robert," and, aside from one or two lapses into inartistic phrasing—as for example, when she breathed in the very middle of the word pietà—she interpreted the sweet and plaintive music with real feeling and a freshness and richness of tone seldom associated with the same degree of skill in lyric art. A stormy encore brought about a delivery of one of Sullivan's songs—"Looking Back," we believe is its title—this piece affording the audience a notably good opportunity of admiring Miss Abbott's half-voice; and, in deference to a third recall, the lady had to return and sing "Home, Sweet Home." We were not as favorably impressed by Miss Abbott's ballad singing as by her interpretation of Italian dramatic music, but the sentiment with which the English songs were rendered was too genuine not to be effective, and the plaudits were literally tempestuous. In the second part of the programme, the debutante sang "Ah! non credea" and "Ah! non giunge," from "La Somnambula;" in response to an encore, she supplemented these excerpts from Bellini's opera by "Within a mile of Edinboro' town;" and she rounded off the concert by executing, with Signor Ferranti, the "Rataplan" duett from "La Figlia del Reggimento." The andante from "La Somnambula" was given with infinite taste, but we were not so well pleased with the rondo; Miss Abbott is clearly a dramatic prima donna, and should sedulously avoid florid music. The final duet was capitally done, and the vivacity of the acting,—for at this stage of events the songstress did not attempt to restrain her dramatic impulses—more potent even than the vim of the singing, was followed by a scene of enthusiasm not paralleled in the concert-room for years. Besides the co-operation of Signor Ferranti, Miss Abbott had that of Signor Brignoli, who was in excellent vocal condition, and had to supplement "In terra ci divisero" and Mattei's lovely "T'amo," which was nearly spoiled by its accompaniment, by two additional and well-known compositions; and that of Mr. W. R. Case, a young pianist who has just graduated at the Paris Conservatoire. Mr. Case has plenty technique and is not deficient in taste, but he was so nervous, last evening, that no estimate of his talent can, with justice, be gotten from his American début. Mr. Maretzek directed the orchestra. The second concert of the series occurs to-morrow night.

THE ENGISH OPERA.

"The Flying Dutchman" was represented at the Academy of Music, last night. Miss Kellogg being still unable to sing, Senta was embodied by Miss Rosewald. In other respects the performance was unchanged as to cast, Mr. Carleton repeating his fine personation of Vanderdecken. In connection with this effort of that young and gifted artist, it may be well to state in this place that no less authority than that of Herr Wagner himself is adduced in justification of the almost statue-like impassiveness of the Hollander. Herr Wagner, in a brief treatise on the mise en scène of the opera, supplies formal instructions as to the slowness and sleepiness of movement of Vanderdecken, whose whole demeanor is to express utter mental and physical prostration; hence, a comparative want of dramatic force for audiences in general in an orthodox portrayal of the character, spite of Herr Wagner's personal and not always infallible opinions on the subject. On Friday evening, when Miss Kellogg will surely be sufficiently re-established to sing, "Mignon" will be given for the only time this season.

"A WAGNER FESTIVAL."

The admirers of Wagner's music—and, in the United States, they are by no means few—will be glad to learn that a "Wagner Festival" will be held in this City during the fortnight commencing on March 12. The proposed solennité—to borrow a French word particularly expressive, we think, of the nature of the affair—is to include representations of "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," "Der Fliegende Holländer," and "Die Walküre," these operas being produced at the Academy of Music, with a powerful distribution of rôles, a strong orchestra, and appropriate scenery. The projector and manager of this festival is Mr. J. C. Fryer, well-known in connection with operatic enterprises, and the musical director is Mr. Adolph Neuendorff. A force of 60 of the best instrumentalists has already been organized, and, thus far, arrangements have been made with the artists whose names follow. Mr. Fryer's company embraces Mmes. Pappenheim and Perl, Mesars. Bischoff, Fritsch, Preusser, Blum, and Formes. "Tannhäuser" will probably be the first opera of the series.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

"A Morning Call" and "Married Life" were represented at Wallack's Theatre last evening. Dance's pretty comedietta was delightfully acted by Mr. Wallack, whose grace and brilliancy of style are admirably suited to the male rôle, and Miss Dyas proved a worthy associate of the artist who is still the best of light comedians on the English or American stage. "Married Life" elicited the usual hearty merriment, and, with "A Morning Call," will doubtless constitute a potent attraction during the remainder of the week.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES IN CUBA.

A letter received in this City from Havana, dated Feb. 3, says: "The burning of the five plantations previously reported is confirmed, and information was received to-day of the burning of the cane-fields on the Encarnacion and Santa Rosalia plantations, near Cienfuegos. It is not stated, however, whether these burnings were the result of accident or the work of insurgents. Advices from the interior report the continued activity of the Spanish troops and numberless skirmishes."

OBITUARY.

PROF. HENRY B. SMITH.

Rev. Henry B. Smith, D. D., LL.D., a theologian of very high standing, died yesterday in the sixty-fourth year of his age. The deceased was born in Portland, Me., in 1815, and received a regular College education at Bowdoin, from which he was graduated in 1834. After leaving college he studied theology at Andover, and some years later became a Pastor in West Amesbury. Later he was appointed Professor of Mental Philosophy, in Amherst College and in 1850 was made a Professor of Church History in this City. Five years later he accepted the Professorship of Systematic Theology in the Union Theological Seminary. He was elected Moderator of the New School Assembly in 1863, and took a deep interest in the reunion of the Presbyterian Church, and strongly advocated all measures that tended to bring about that event. About three years ago he was compelled to resign his position as Professor, his health having been injured by protracted mental exertion. The funeral will take place on the 9th inst., and will be attended by the Faculty of the Union Theological Seminary, and representatives from other institutions with which deceased was connected during his life.

OBITUARY NOTE.

Rev. Dr. George S. Boardman, one of the oldest Pastors of the Presbyterian Church, died suddenly yesterday at Cazenovia, from an affection of the heart. He was 88 years old.

IS THE WASHINGTON WRECKED?

REASONS FOR BELIEVING THAT THE BODIES FOUND BELONGED TO THE CROMWELL, INSTEAD OF THE WASHINGTON—THE WASHINGTON HAD NO WOMAN ON BOARD, BUT THE CROMWELL HAD A STEWARDESS—OTHER NOTABLE FACTS POINTING THE SAME WAY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is extremely doubtful if the reports published in the journals this morning of a terrible shipwreck at French Mistaken Point, on the Newfoundland coast, refer at all to the steamer George Washington. Despite the plain, unvarnished tale these telegrams seem to tell, a glance at the following points will render it tolerably certain that the vessel which went to pieces at the inhospitable cove off Newfoundland was none other than the missing George Cromwell, the sister ship of the George Washington.

The dispatches say that one of the bodies of the unfortunates picked up was "that of a woman—probably the stewardess." There certainly was no female on board the George Washington. The stewardess of the George Washington did not sail on the last trip, and is at her residence on Sheffield street, East New-York, to-day. The George Cromwell, however, had a stewardess aboard. The wife of Capt. Whitehead, of the George Washington, left her husband on board the ship at 9 o'clock the evening before he sailed, (the George Washington sailed at 5 in the morning,) and at that time there was no female on board. The steamer proceeded to Halifax direct, where she embarked passengers, but according to telegrams to the agents here, no females. Of course she has not been heard of since, certainly not at any port.

Much stress has been laid upon the fact that the wrecked stuff picked up was marked "George Washington." This, however, proves nothing. There have been many transfers of clothing, bedding, life preservers, &c., from time to time from the better equipped George Washington to the George Cromwell. So frequent and wholesale, indeed, were these transfers, that it was a standing joke with the Washington's crew that "they would take the whole ship next."

According to all accounts, the wreck occurred on the 20th or 21st ult., and the bodies were found on the 25th; and yet we are told they were "decomposed, stripped of clothing, and broken and torn to pieces." Is it likely that bodies in the water only three or four days, at this season of the year, in a high northern latitude, would decompose and be torn in pieces? The incident is explicable, however, if we substitute the George Cromwell, which most likely has been lost for weeks, and it will account, also, for the presence of the body of a woman.

The dispatches state that on one of the bodies was found a "heavy gold ring." The Captain of the George Cromwell wore such a ring. The clothing of the Captain and Steward of the George Washington was plainly marked, and it is utterly incomprehensible how three or four days' submersion could eliminate the marks. Capt. Whitehead himself is a strongly marked man, having a large lump on the side of his head, and a scar or seam across his face. All things considered, the Captain's wife has by no means given up hope, her gallant husband having been in shipwrecks on several previous occasions. WILLIAM APLIN,

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, Feb. 7, 1877.

DEATH OF ANOTHER BOY ORATOR.

The San Francisco Alta of Jan. 31 says: "Master Willie Brown, the boy orator, died yesterday morning of diphtheria, at the residence of his parents, Hon. L. A. Brown and M. Augusta Brown, M. D., No. 14 O'Farrell street. This sad event will be noted with deep regret by thousands who, struck with wonder at this boy's precocious intellectual maturity, and fascinated with his remarkable oratorical development, had looked forward to a career of extraordinary power for the baby orator. Master Willie was born in San Francisco, and was 8 years and 3 months old when he died. His aptitude for repeating from memory, with great facility, fragments of prose and verse, and his uncommon powers of declamation, were observed at an early day. At 5 years his mind had become a store-house of elaborate quotations, both serious and comical, which he would recite with fidelity to the text, and an unmistakable appreciation of sentiment. Extended pieces he would learn after three or four hearings. He never went a day to school—his parents restraining all artificial education for fear of stimulating his mind, already crowding upon itself; nor was he drilled and rehearsed up to a point of apparent phenomenal development. All the matter in his mind, with which he was wont to amuse and charm audiences by his wisely and effective delivery, was the result of an intuitive, instantaneous lodgment, controlled by an occult force, the analysis of which is a puzzle to the speculations or psychologists. The spiritualists did, indeed, not hesitate to claim with some triumph that the gift was mediumistic, that the sensitive boy orator was controlled by the spirit of some deceased orator of magnificent attainments. His voice was unusually strong and flexible, with a wonderful power of modulation. His personal appearance was extremely prepossessing, with his bright, earnest eyes, handsome, spiritual face, his active and vivacious temperament. During the past three years he had been permitted to appear occasionally in public in this State, in Nevada, and in Utah, always to large audiences, and winning decided encomiums. His fame was ex-territorial, having reached to the Atlantic States. On the 20th of April, 1876, in Platt's Hall, in this city, he was the recipient of a benefit, when a number of ladies and gentlemen eminent in the theatrical and musical professions appeared. Last Fall he appeared for the last time in public at a benefit tendered by the Hayes and Wheeler Invincibles to a distinguished lady elocutionist."

COMPENSATION.

The Syracuse Christian Advocate says: "A sound-minded physician of this city remarked the other day, not altogether complainingly, that the amount of sickness now prevalent is much smaller than is usual for this particular month. He also said, not altogether jokingly, that this condition of the people may be partly due to the hard times. May there not possibly be some ground for this opinion? Our sickness is largely self-sought, a kind attaché to luxury, or is itself a luxury; for the nearer we approach the state of nature the less become our ailings, and those creatures least under the control of man—the wild birds—are seldom out of sorts. The hard times may yet be found responsible for many benefits, as well as discomforts, to us, complain as we may."

GOV. VANCE AND THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The Raleigh (N. C.) News contains the following: "Gov. Vance is in receipt of a letter from the Secretary of War demanding of him the records of the office of the Adjutant General of this State for the years 1861 to 1865, inclusive. Gov. Vance has replied, refusing to comply with the demand, in the course of his reply referring to certain North Carolina letter books now in possession of the Federal Government, to which he is not permitted access, but which have been garbled by designing men and used to his detriment. He tells the Secretary of War some things which are more truthful than palatable."

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE GRAND VIZIER'S DISMISSAL.

DOUBTS EXPRESSED AS TO THE CHARGES AGAINST MIDHAT PASHA—THE EFFECTS OF HIS BANISHMENT—A GREAT OBSTACLE TO PEACE—THE SULTAN'S DECLARATION.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—A dispatch from Constantinople quotes newspaper accounts of Midhat Pasha's fall, substantially corroborating the Pall Mall Gazette's special dispatch of yesterday on that subject, and adds: "The authenticity of these details, however, is contested, and in diplomatic circles it is doubted that Midhat Pasha really contemplated overthrowing the Sultan."

A correspondent at Constantinople, in a dispatch to that journal, says: "Midhat Pasha's banishment has produced a profoundly painful feeling. There is general gloom and depression, and more uneasiness and irritation than for many months. My own very earnest feeling is that a great misfortune has befallen Turkey, and her best friends must now give up all hope of her."

A special dispatch from Constantinople says: "Midhat Pasha was the greatest obstacle to peace. It was dangerous to allow him to remain here. Disgust is expressed by the anti-Salisbury party. The change has been accomplished without disorder. A great opportunity is now offered Turkey still to arrange with the powers and secure peace by making concessions beneficial to the Christians."

An afternoon paper says it doubts the Constantinople correspondent's account of Midhat Pasha's fall, but has no doubt that the account originated in an official assertion or suggestion. The paper adheres to the belief that Midhat Pasha fell from personal, not political, reasons. Another dispatch from Constantinople received to-night says the dismissal of Midhat Pasha does not imply change in Turkey's foreign or internal policy. Her present foreign policy will not only be maintained, but will be pursued with greater firmness. An official statement is published declaring that Midhat Pasha was exiled because he was inclined to a course contrary to the spirit of the Constitution. His action indicated that absolute power, which had been abandoned by the Sultan, would be exercised by others. Some individuals had formed plans against the Sultan's prerogatives, and against public tranquility. Midhat did nothing to oppose these intrigues. The Levant Herald reports that Midhat Pasha, on being shown documents produced in evidence against him, declared he was the victim of a Russian plot. A later dispatch from Constantinople says Midhat's complication with the plot against the Sultan, and even the existence of a plot, continues to be doubtful. Midhat has only been exiled temporarily.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The correspondent at Constantinople of a morning paper telegraphs the following: "I am informed on good authority that the Sultan has declared to the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires that Midhat Pasha was not banished for plotting, but for unguarded and improper language, and for using the Constitution in a manner opposed to the Sultan's interests." A special from Pesth reports that the Special Envoy of the Porte has had interviews with Prince Milan and Minister Ristics. The disposition of M. Ristics and of the people is very pacific.

A despatch from Belgrade states that Edhem Pasha has by telegraph confirmed the appointment of Perten Effendi, who was nominated by Midhat Pasha as Envoy to Prince Milan, and has directed him to proceed with his mission. Perten Effendi has accordingly presented the condition demanded by the Porte, he being as yet only authorized to discuss them in a preliminary way. The conditions are substantially the same as those given by the politician correspondence. Both the Vienna and the Belgrade correspondents of the Times point to the fact that Servia appears to object only to the stipulation that the negotiations be carried on at Constantinople. The Belgrade correspondent continues: The Servian Cabinet say they are desirous of speedily reaching an agreement, and wish the negotiations to proceed in Belgrade so as to avoid loss of time.

Reports have reached Belgrade of great military activity along the shores of the Black Sea and the banks of the Pruth. It is said that the Russians have placed pontoons over the river. It is believed in some circles in Belgrade that Midhat Pasha still really controls the Turkish Government, and has only retired temporarily to permit concessions which would have been inconsistent with his former attitude.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says it is asserted in some quarters that Midhat's difference with the Sultan arose because the latter refused to dismiss Satvet Pasha, with whom Midhat disagreed as to the terms to be offered to Servia.

RUSSIA STILL INTENT ON WAR.

EFFORTS TO SECURE THE NEUTRALITY OF AUSTRIA—VIEWS OF ENGLISH JOURNALS ON THE RUSSIAN CIRCULAR.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The Berlin correspondence of a morning paper says the Russian overtures to secure the assistance of Austria in the event of war appears to have been hopelessly unsuccessful. Russia is now endeavoring to obtain from Austria a promise of benevolent neutrality.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says Count Adlerberg is mentioned as most likely to succeed Prince Gortschakoff as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

A morning paper of yesterday, commenting on the full text of the Russian circular, says: "There is no suggestion of anything which can properly be called a threat. The circular does not seem to seek a pretext for breaking out. Its object seems rather to ascertain how far Europe would continue to co-operate with the Czar, he not being bound by any special course, but prepared to modify the plans of action he might favor if he could thereby prolong European concert without neglecting the purpose for which that concert was constituted. But under no circumstances could this purpose be laid aside. The circular is a continuation of Gen. Ignatieff's policy during the conference. The Russian Government is determined that Russia shall not be placed in the wrong. We, for ourselves, may declare we are satisfied with what has been done, but we cannot blame Russia if she proceeds to accomplish what we all joined in desiring." The paper advises that England should await the result of the change at Constantinople before replying to Russia, and if it be the inauguration of a policy of deference to European counsels, it will cut away the ground from under the Russian circular. England might, meanwhile, inquire what course Russia favored.

An evening paper fails to discover a pacific tendency in the Russian circular, and believes it is a confirmation of the Czar's Moscow speech in the polite phrases of diplomacy, and intended to cut off the Russian retreat from the fulfilment of the pledges given last November.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S SPEECH.

INDICATIONS THAT IN WILL BE GUARDED IN ITS EXPRESSION—LORD SALISBURY TO BE COMPLIMENTED—SHE HOPES FOR A RESTORATION OF DIPLOMATIC INTERCOURSE.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The Times in its leading article says: "We may be sure the Queen's Speech will be more than usually guarded. Its references to the Eastern Question will be brief as possible, and almost exclusively of a historical character. The Queen will express the satisfaction with which she joined the Allies in procuring an armistice. She will accord to Lord Salisbury the meed of well-merited praise, and will express deep regret that the Porte declined proposals which were not prejudicial to the interests of Turkey, and which would have restored peace to Europe. Her Majesty will state that she has withdrawn her Ambassador as a mark of high dissatisfaction. The speech would naturally have gone on to express hope that the Sultan would spontaneously agree to terms of peace with Servia and Montenegro such as could be sanctioned by the powers, and introduce reforms into the disturbed provinces, which would make further interference neither necessary nor justifiable. The events of this week, however, have necessarily modified the concluding phrases relative to the Eastern Question. Without specially referring to the fate of Midhat Pasha, the speech will express the hope that what has happened will prove favorable to conciliatory counsels and the restoration of diplomatic intercourse; but nothing will be said as to the course of the future. Gortschakoff's circular will not be mentioned, unless it has been already been officially communicated to the Government.

A morning paper announces that the Marquis of Salisbury will probably make a statement in the House of Lords to-night in reference to the Conference.

THE FEELING IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—At the opening of Parliament to-morrow, two blue-books will be laid on the tables of the houses, one containing the papers on the Eastern Question to the assembling of the conference, and the other including the conference proceedings. Copies of the first volume for distribution to members of Parliament and the press will not be ready until Friday, and the second volume next week. Debate on the question will probably begin after the distribution of the second volume.

A general impression prevails that the opposition will not make a direct attack on the Government's Eastern policy, even the Liberal organs admitting it to be impossible to do so successfully in the face of circumstances now known. Rumors, however, are circulating in Liberal circles, of grave differences between the Marquis of Salisbury and his colleagues, and the probable resignation of Lord Salisbury. These reports assert that Earls Beaconsfield and Derby are not only pleased by the Marquis of Salisbury's failure, but that they largely contributed to it through the instrumentality of Sir Henry Elliot, the British Ambassador at Constantinople. The rumors of differences of opinion are doubtless well founded, as the the proceedings of the Conference show that Lord Salisbury's speeches went far beyond the views of Earls Beaconsfield and Derby. With this exception, the reports in circulation are probably mere inferences.

The Manchester Guardian's special from London says:

"Public rumor attaches so much importance to divergences between the Marquis of Salisbury and Earl Beaconsfield, that it is stated to-night that Lord Salisbury has resigned. To say the least this is premature, though people well informed consider that the danger to the Government respecting the Eastern Question is quite as great within the Cabinet as on the opposition side of the House. A singular incident occurred to-day in connection with Lord Salisbury's return. He crossed from Boulogne in the tidal steamer, on board of which he found Sir Henry Elliott. Instead of the two coming to London together, Lord Salisbury came alone on a special train, and Sir Henry came by the ordinary tidal train three-quarters of an hour afterward."

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The Times hints rivalries in the Cabinet as follows: "There can, of course, be no trace in the speech of the personal speculations with which the air is rife. It is doubtful whether more curiosity is felt in the political world as to the secret of Midhat's bill or concerning the spectacle of Beaconsfield and Salisbury sitting side by side on the bench of the Lords."

THE ATLANTIC CABLES.

DEFEAT OF MONOPOLISTS AND SPECULATORS—HOW THIS RESULT WAS BROUGHT ABOUT.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—The following is from the London Times of Tuesday morning: "The contest now going on for possession of the Direct United States Cable Company is of a very curious kind. To-day it may be said to have reached the second stage, and, so far, the monopolists and speculators have been beaten. Their defeat was immediately reflected on the Stock Exchange, where the price of the shares fell, as well as those of the Anglo-American Company's. It is not our province to say whether the decision of the Chairman, by ruling out the excess of votes over 100, which, he said, was the maximum that any one corporation could use under the articles of the association, and which caused the defeat of Mr. Pender's party, is based on strict legal rights or not, but every independent shareholder must feel that it is, at least, equitable. Nothing could well be devised more destructive to a joint stock enterprise than this machinery of "trusts," by which the controlling power over companies may be acquired and exercised, in defiance of every private right, by a group of speculators. That this movement to get possession of the Direct Cable Company is an enterprise of a few, working partly through the Globe Telegraph and Trust Company, is beyond question, for the movement did not begin before last September, and we have a list of the shareholders of the Direct Cable Company in our possession, which shows that the bulk of shares held by fusionists has been acquired since then. Their interests in the welfare of this company are therefore of remarkably recent origin. It, in fact, dates from the time when the competition of the Direct Cable Company may be said to have begun to tell seriously on the receipts of its rivals, and, therefore, on the value of the enormous stake which the Globe Telegraph and Trust Company has in the stock of that rival.

[The decision referred to by the Times was given by Mr. E. H. Lushington, the Chairman, as follows: "Article 56 of the articles of the association said 'no member holding less than 10 shares shall have any vote. Every member holding at least that number of shares shall have one vote for every complete number of shares, with this limit, that no shareholder shall be entitled to more than 100 votes in all.' That article was to prevent the company from being overriden. Instead, therefore, of allowing the Globe Company 149 votes he should allow them only 100. He should allow 100 votes to the Banque Centrale who claimed 300 votes, and he should rule out 400 of the votes in behalf of Messrs Morris & Puckle. This reduced the number of votes against Mr. Bramwell's amendment by 649, leaving the number of votes against at 1,945, and giving a majority in favor of the amendment of 509 votes." He then declared the amendment carried. The amendment was received with cheers and hisses, and followed by a great uproar. After some further discussion the meeting was adjourned till the 5th of March.]

WRECK OF A BRITISH STEAMER.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER ETHEL—NINETEEN LIVES LOST.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The British steamer Ethel, bound from Bilbao for Newport, Wales, went ashore yesterday on Lundy Island and became a total wreck. Nineteen persons were drowned.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 7.—All but three of the students who, on the 18th of December, (St. Nicholas' Day) during service in the Cathedral of Kazan, made a demonstration and unfurled a red flag bearing the inscription "Union and Liberty," have been sentenced to penal servitude or transportation. The participators in this demonstration were 11 women and 21 men.

An explosion took place yesterday in the Fass Colliery, near Bolton, by which 10 men were killed.

VIENNA, Feb. 7.—The Ministerial crisis, which has been lingering since the opening of negotiations on the bank question, has now become acute. The demand of Hungary and Austria regarding the constitution of the Board of Directors of the bank are irreconcilable, the former demanding equal representation while Austria demanded nearly two-thirds of the number of Directors. Negotiations, therefore, are broken off. The Hungarian Ministers have left for Pesth, having, it is stated, tendered their resignations. Even if their resignations are accepted, it is unlikely that any other Ministerial combination can be made at this time to carry through the Hungarian Parliament the Bank bill projected by the Austrian Ministry, while dissolution would make matters worse instead of better.

GLASGOW, Feb. 7.—A fair business is doing in the sugar market here. Prices are about 3 pence per 100 pounds, lower, except for the finest crystals, which are rather dearer.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—A dispatch from Bombay to Reuter's Telegram Company says: "The cotton crop of the Presidency has been severely damaged by excessive rains.

A dispatch from Cairo says official dispatches have been communicated to the British representative announcing that the Abyssinian Envoy has safely returned home. Note.—The illegal detention of this envoy by the Khédive had been regarded as likely to cause a renewal of war between Abyssinia and Egypt.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The Queen received the Ambassador of China yesterday.

Silver closed at 57¼d. per ounce. India Council Bills were allotted to-day at about ½d. per rupee decline.

CAARGES AGAINST INSURANCE MEN.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 7.—The Grand Jury handed in a number of indictments to the court to-day, and report says (and the rumor is published) that two of the indictments are against John F. Douglass, Vice President, and E. W. Bryant, Actuary, of the Columbia Life Insurance Company of this city, for perjury in the matter of sworn statements made by them concerning the affairs and transactions of the company.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED IN CONNECTICUT.

The Senate of Connecticut on Tuesday rejected two proposed amendments to the Constitution of that State. The first amendment discussed, No. 5, provided that members of the Legislature and all executive and judicial officers shall, on entering upon the duties of their respective offices, take oath that they have neither directly or indirectly contributed any money or valuable thing for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the election at which they were chosen to office, making any person convicted of having taken such an oath falsely liable to all the pains and penalties of perjury. Senator Bishop explained the favorable report of the committee on the amendment on the ground that they were unwilling to go on record as opposed to a measure so apparently worthy of legislative approval. There were elements of evil as well as good in the amendment, but on the whole he favored its adoption. Senator Brown also spoke in favor of the amendment, while Senators Hoyt, Houston, and Bowers opposed it. The ground taken by those in opposition was that while any measure tending to lessen the evils of bribery, &c., in elections was praiseworthy, there was a proper use for money in elections which the amendment, if enforced, would punish as severely as its corrupt use. The amendment was rejected by the vote of 4 yeas to 15 nays. The proposed amendment No. 6, next taken up, provided for biennial sessions of the General Assembly. No. 7, a supplementary amendment relating to the choice of Representatives under the biennial system, was discussed at the same time. The favorable report of the committee was defended in a rather conservative manner by Senator Bishop, and vigorously opposed by Senators Houston, Bowers, and Brown. The vote on amendment No. 6 was 7 yeas and 12 nays, two Senators being absent. The other amendment, being of a supplementary nature, useless in view of the rejection of amendment No. 6, was defeated, the only vote recorded in its favor being that of Senator Bray.

A DEFAULTER PARDONED.

Gov. Kemper, of Virginia, has extended Executive clemency to Samuel H. Thorburn, a young bank officer of Petersburg who was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary for false entry and larceny. The Governor, in granting this pardon, gives the following reasons: "The prisoner is a young bank officer who took funds of the bank, fled the country, then voluntarily returned, made every possible restitution and reparation, and surrendered himself for arrest and trial. His previous life, through peace and war, was one of unblemished honor and of the best domestic and social relations. Insanity had existed on both sides of his family, and it has marked his own mind, which was one of morbid excitability and insane manifestations in times of trouble. Many leading citizens, including eminent professional men, furnish proofs which exclude the idea that he could have been sane, when in an hour of frenzy he contradicted the tenor of his life by committing crime. He was convicted on his own voluntary plea, no testimony and no defense being heard. The question of his sanity was not then tried, as it should have been. The application for his pardon is signed by 31 officers of the court, including the prosecuting attorney, all the members of both juries which indicted and tried him, all the officers of the bank, many public officials, and more than 500 citizens. I am led to believe that this pardon rescues a young man from ruin and shame and restores him to a life of usefulness and honor."

A CHANCE MEETING AT THE COUNTER.

The St. Louis Republican relates the following as an actual fact, lately transpiring in that city:

"Not long ago two ladies stood at the shawl counter of one of the two leading dry goods stores in St.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

SALES AT THE STOCK EXCHANGE—FEB. 7.

SALES BEFORE THE CALL—10 A. M.

$7,000 D. of C. 3.65s. 72⅜
1,000 C. & Tol.new. 106¾
3,000 W. U.R.,1900. 105
2,000 do. ..s3. 105
225 Del. & Hudson.... 59
100 do.....s3. 59
69 do..... 58⅞
905 do..... 59
800 West. Un..... 72⅝
1500 do..... 72⅝
200 do..... 72⅝
1500 do..... 72⅝
1700 do..... 72¼
500 do.....s3. 72
1500 do..... 72
1300 do..... 71⅞
1000 do.....c. 72
600 do..... 71⅞
300 do.....c. 72⅛
1000 do..... 72
200 do..... 72⅜
2500 do..... 72⅜
2500 do..... 72
300 do.....c. 72⅛
1000 do.....c. 72
1200 do..... 72
700 do..... 72⅜
300 do.....c. 72⅝
500 do.....s3. 72⅜
700 do.....b3. 72⅜
600 do..... 72⅜
1500 do..... 72
1200 do..... 71⅞
1300 do..... 72
500 do..... 71⅞
1800 do..... 71⅞
1000 do..... 71⅞
500 do..... 71⅞
1000 do..... 71⅞
1000 do.....c. 72
1200 do..... 72
300 do.....c. 72⅛
700 do..... 72⅜
300 do..... 72⅝
1100 do..... 72⅝
500 do..... 72⅝
1000 do..... 72⅝
1000 do..... 72⅝
200 do..... 72⅝
1000 do..... 72⅝
1000 do..... 72⅝
200 do..... 72⅝
1000 do..... 72⅝
1000 do..... 72⅝
1000

SHIPPING.

WHITE STAR LINE.
FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL. CARRYING UNITED STATES MAILS.

The steamers of this line take the Lane Route, recommended by Lieut. Maury, U. S. N., going south of the Banks on the passage to Queenstown at this year round.

ADRIATIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 10, at 3 P. M.
BRITANNIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
CELTIC.....March 10, at 3 P. M.
GERMANIC.....SATURDAY, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

From White Star Dock, Pier No. 52 North River.

These steamers are uniform in size and unsurpassed in appointments. The saloon, staterooms, smoking and bath rooms are amidships, where the pains and motion are least felt, affording a degree of comfort hitherto unattainable at sea.

Rates—Saloon, $80 and $100, gold; return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $30.

For inspection of plans and other information apply at the Company's offices, No. 37 Broadway, New-York.
S. J. SOTTIS, Agent.

CUNARD LINE B. & N. A. R. M. S. P. CO.
NOTICE.

With the view of diminishing the chances of collision the steamers of this line take a specified course for all seasons of the year.

On the outward passage from Queenstown to New-York or Boston, crossing meridian of 50 at 43 latitude, or nothing to the north of 43.

On the homeward passage, crossing the meridian of 47 at 42, or nothing to the north of 42.

FROM NEW-YORK FOR LIVERPOOL AND QUEENSTOWN.
PARTHIA.....WED., Feb. 14 | ATLANTA.....WED., Feb. 28
CHINA.....WED., Feb. 21 | ABYSSINIA.....WED., March 7

Steamers marked "do not carry steerage passengers. Cabin passage, $80, $100, and $130, gold, according to accommodation. Return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage tickets to and from all parts of Europe at very low rates. Freight and passage office, No. 4 Bowling Green.
CHAS. G. FRANCKLYN, Agent.

LIVERPOOL AND GREAT WESTERN STEAM COMPANY. (LIMITED)
LIVERPOOL (Via Queenstown),
CARRYING THE UNITED STATES MAILS.
TUESDAY.
Leaving Pier No. 46 North River as follows:

DAKOTA.....Feb. 13, at 3 P. M.
NEVADA.....Feb. 20, at 10 A. M.
IDAHO.....Feb. 27, at 3 P. M.
MONTANA.....March 6, at 10 A. M.
WISCONSIN.....March 13, at 3 P. M.
WYOMING.....March 20, at 9 A. M.

RATES OF PASSENGERS REDUCED.
Steerage, $26; intermediate, $40; cabin, $65 to $80, according to state-room. Offices, No. 29 Broadway.
WILLIAMS & GUION.

ATLAS MAIL LINE.
BI-MONTHLY SERVICE TO JAMAICA, HAITI, COLOMBIA, and ASPINWALL, and to PANAMA and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall).
First-class full-powered iron screw steamers, from Pier No. 51 North River:

For KINGSTON (Jam.) and AUX CAYES.
ATLAS.....Feb. 8
For HAITI, COLOMBIA, ISTHMUS OF PANAMA, and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall.)
ANDES.....Feb. 14
ALPS.....Feb. 28

Superior first-class passenger accommodations.
PIM, FORWOOD & CO., Agents.
No. 56 Wall st.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE.
SAILING FROM PIER NO. 29 NORTH RIVER,
WEDNESDAYS and SATURDAYS at 3 P. M.,
FOR CHARLESTON, S. C., FLORIDA, THE SOUTH, AND SOUTH-WEST.
CITY OF ATLANTA.....SATURDAY.....Feb. 10
GEO. W. CLYDE.....WEDNESDAY.....Feb. 14
SUPERIOR PASSENGER ACCOMMODATIONS.

Insurance to destination one-half of one per cent. Goods forwarded free of commission. Passenger tickets and bills of lading issued and signed at the office of
JAMES W. QUINTARD & CO., Agents,
No. 177 West st., corner Warren.
Or W. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 5 Bowling Green.
Or BENTLEY D. HASELL, General Agent Great Southern Freight Line, 317 Broadway.

STATE LINE.
NEW-YORK TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, DUBLIN, BELFAST, AND LONDONDERRY.

These first-class full-powered steamers will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Canal st.
STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.....Thursday, Feb. 8
STATE OF VIRGINIA.....Thursday, Feb. 22
STATE OF NEVADA.....Thursday, March 1

First cabin, $60, $65, and $70, according to accommodations; return tickets, $110, $125. Second cabin, $45; return tickets, $80. Steerage at lowest rates. Apply to
AUSTIN BALDWIN & CO., Agents,
No. 72 Broadway, New-York.

STEERAGE tickets at No. 45 Broadway, and at the company's pier, foot of Canal st., North River.

ANCHOR LINE U. S. MAIL STEAMERS,
NEW-YORK TO GLASGOW AND LIVERPOOL.

Eolivia....Wed., Feb. 14 at 2 P. M. | Anchoria....Wed., March 7, 8 A. M.
Alsatia....Feb. 17, 8 A. M. | Californian, March 3, 8 A. M.
TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, OR DERRY,
Cabins $65 to $80, according to accommodations. Intermediate, $35. Steerage, $28.
NEW-YORK AND LONDON.
Italia.....Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | Utonia, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
Canada, $55 to $70. Steerage, $25. Cabin excursion tickets at reduced rates. Drafts issued for any amount at current rates. Company's Pier Nos. 20 and 21, North River, N. Y.
HENDERSON BROTHERS,
Agents, No. 7 Bowling Green.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD.
STEAM-SHIP LINE BETWEEN NEW-YORK SOUTHAMPTON AND BREMEN.

Company's Pier, foot of 20th st., Hoboken.
RHEIN.....Sat., Feb. 10 | HERMANN.....Sat., Feb. 24
ODER.....Sat., Feb. 17 | NECKAR.....Sat., March 3
RATES OF PASSAGE FROM NEW-YORK TO SOUTHAMPTON, HAVRE, OR BREMEN.
First cabin.....$100 gold
Second cabin.....60 gold
Steerage.....30 currency
Return tickets at reduced rates. Prepaid steerage certificates, $32 currency. For freight or passage apply to OELRICHS & CO., No. 2 Bowling Green.

INMAN LINE.—MAIL STEAMERS,
FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.

CITY OF CHESTER, Saturday, Feb. 17, at 7:30 A. M.
CITY OF RICHMOND, Saturday, March 3, at 8 A. M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS.....Saturday, March 17, 6:30 A. M.
From Pier 45 North River.

CABIN, $80 and $100, gold. Return tickets on favorable terms. STEERAGE, $24, currency. Drafts at lowest rates.
Saloons, state-rooms, Smoking, and Bath-rooms amidships.
JOHN G. DALE, Agent,
Nos. 15 and 33 Broadway, N. Y.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO FRANCE.
THE GENERAL TRANSATLANTIC COMPANY'S MAIL STEAMERS BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND HAVRE, calling at PLYMOUTH (G. B.) for the landing of Passengers.

Will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Morton st., every alternate Saturday, beginning with LABRADOR, commander.....Saturday, Feb. 10, 3 P. M.
For particulars address
LOUIS DE BEBIAN, Agent, No. 55 Broadway.

FOR SAVANNAH GA.,
THE FLORIDA PORTS,
AND THE SOUTH AND SOUTH-WEST.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE, CENTRAL RAILROAD OF GEORGIA, AND ATLANTIC AND GULF RAILROAD.

WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY.
SAN JACINTO, Capt. HAZARD, SATURDAY, Feb. 10, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 109 Broadway.
St. LIVINGSTON, Capt. MALLORY, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agent, No. 109 Broadway.
SAN SALVADOR, Capt. NICKERSON, SATURDAY, Feb. 17, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 109 Broadway.
GENERAL BARNES, Capt. CHESEMAN, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 21, Pier 16 East River, 3 P. M. MURRAY, FERRIS & CO., Agts., 62 South st.

Insurance ONE-HALF PER CENT. Superior accommodations for passengers. Through rates and bills of lading in connection with Central R. R. of Georgia, Atlantic and Gulf Railroad, and Florida steamers City Point and Metamor; also, with the steamer H. B. SCUYLER, which has been placed on the inside route from Savannah to Florida, and offers unsurpassed accommodations.
C. OWENS, Agent A. & G. R. R. No. 315 Broadway.
GEORGE YONGE, Agent C. R. R. of Ga., No. 409 Broadway.

FLORIDA.

Caution to travelers! Great reduction in fare via the inland route from Savannah to all Florida ports. Only $2 to Jacksonville. Meals and state rooms extra. The elegant steamer J. B. SCHUYLER makes close connection with all Savannah steamers, thus forming the quickest and most agreeable route as well as the lowest in fare. Accommodations for passengers unsurpassed. Travelers are cautioned against purchasing through tickets via any other route.

PACIFIC MAIL AND PANAMA TRANSIT STEAM-SHIP LINES.

FOR CALIFORNIA, JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, NEW-ZEALAND, BRITISH COLUMBIA, OREGON, &c.
Sailing from Pier No. 42 North River.
For SAN FRANCISCO, via ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.
Steam-ship COLON.....Thursday, Feb. 15
connecting for Central America and South Pacific ports.
From SAN FRANCISCO to JAPAN and CHINA.
Steam-ship CITY OF TOKIO.....Thursday, March 1
From San Francisco to Sandwich Islands, Australia, and New-Zealand.
Steam-ship CITY OF SYDNEY.....Wednesday, Feb. 28
For freight or passage apply to
WM. P. CLYDE & CO., or H. J. BULLAY, Superintendent, No. 6 Bowling Green, Pier No. 42 N. R., foot of Canal st.

NEW-YORK, HAVANA, AND MEXICAN MAIL S. S. LINE.
Steamers leave Pier No. 3 North River at 3 P. M.
FOR HAVANA DIRECT.
CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17
CITY OF VERA CRUZ.....Wednesday, Feb. 21
CITY OF NEW-YORK.....Wednesday, Feb. 28
FOR VERA CRUZ AND NEW-ORLEANS,
Via Havana, Progreso, Campeachy Tuxpan, and Tampico.
CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17

Steamers will leave New-Orleans Feb. 23 and March 16 for Vera Cruz and all the above ports.
For freight or passage apply to
FLAGLER, ANDRE & SONS, Nos. 31 and 33 Broadway.

NEW-YORK AND HAVANA
DIRECT MAIL LINE.

These first-class steamships sail regularly at 3 P. M., from Pier No. 13 North River as follows:
COLUMBUS.....WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14
CLYDE.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24

Accommodations unsurpassed. For freight or passage apply to WM. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 5 Bowling Green. MCKELLER, LULING & CO., Agents in Havana.

NATIONAL LINE—Piers 44 and 51 North River.
FOR LONDON.
.....Saturday, Feb. 10, at 2 P. M.
CANADA.....
FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.
Helvetia...Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | England, Feb. 17, 7:30 A. M.

Cabin and steerage passage, and drafts from £1 upward, issued at very low rates. Company's offices No. 69 Broadway.
F. W. J. HURST, Manager.

SHIPPING.

HAMBURG American Packet Company's Line for PLYMOUTH, CHERBOURG and HAMBURG.
FRISIA.....Feb. 8 | POMMERANIA.....Feb. 22
GELLERT.....Feb. 15 | SILESIA.....March 1

Rates of passage to Plymouth, London, Cherbourg, Hamburg, and all points in England, First Cabin, $100 gold; Second Cabin, $60 gold; Steerage, $30, currency.
KUNHARDT & CO., Agents, C. B. RICHARD & BOAS, General Agents, 61 Broadway, N. Y. General Passenger Agents, 61 Broadway, N. Y.

Merchants' Steam-ship Line to Brazil.
FOR PERNAMBUCO AND BAHIA.

Steam-ship CASSINI will sail about MARCH 1. Rates of passage and freight have been fixed on a low basis. For further information apply to the agent,
R. B. BORLAND, No. 70 Wall st., New-York.

SITUATIONS WANTED.
FEMALES.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.
The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at
No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts.
Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M.
Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

CHAMBER-MAID.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG woman as chamber-maid and nurse; willing and obliging; no objections to country; best City and country reference. Call at or address E. Keeley, No. 246 West 35th st.

CHAMBER-MAID, &c.—BY A RESPECTABLE young girl, as chamber-maid and waitress; willing to assist with washing; in a private family; good City reference. Call at 308 East 60th st., near 2d av.

CHAMBER-MAID, &c.—BY A YOUNG GIRL AS chamber-maid and waitress; City reference. Call at No. 246 West 30th st., first floor.

CHAMBER-WORK AND LAUNDERING.—By a competent young girl; no objection to a boarding-house; best City reference. Call at No. 512 2d av.

CHAMBER-MAID.—BY A YOUNG AMERICAN girl as chamber-maid and waitress; City or country; best City reference. Call at 211 West 29th st.

CHAMBER-MAID AND WAITRESS.—BY A young girl as chamber-maid and waitress; best City reference. Call at No. 146 East 30th st.

CHAMBER-MAID.—BY A COLORED GIRL AS chamber-maid and waitress; in City or country; good references. Call at No. 102 West 32d st.

CHAMBER-MAID.—IN A PRIVATE FAMILY AS chamber-maid, or waitress preferred; good reference. Call at No. 1,067 3d av.

CHAMBER-MAID.—FOUR YEARS IN LAST place. Apply at No. 166 Elm st., Jula Juge.

COOK, &c.—CHAMBER-MAID, &c.—BY A respectable Englishwoman and her daughter to cook, wash, and iron; daughter to do light chamber-work and waiting; good City reference. Call for two days at No. 104 Grove st., one flight up; inquire for Mrs. Lake.

COOK—CHAMBER-MAID AND WAITRESS.—By two sisters in one house, both good laundresses; will do the work of a small family, if required; first-class City references. Call at No. 40 East 41st st.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS COOK; UNDERstands English, French, and American cooking; excellent breakfast bread baker; good City reference. Address H. E., Box No. 289 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COOK, WAITRESS.—BY A SCOTCH COOK AND laundress; seven years' reference; also by a Canadian waitress and chamber-maid in a private family; City or country; together or separately. Address No. 365 6th av., near 23d st.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS SWEDISH PROTESTant cook, with good City reference; wages $25 per month. Address Swedish, Box No. 295 TIMES UPTOWN OFFICE, No. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COOK.—BY AN EXPERIENCED YOUNG WOMAN as good cook, washer, and ironer in a small private family; is a good baker; good City reference. Call at No. 324 East 36th st.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS FRENCH AND AMERican cook; excellent baker; will do coarse washing; best City reference. Call at No. 327 West 30th st., 1st or two days.

COOK.—FIRST-CLASS; UNDERSTANDS ALL KINDS of family baking; would go to the country; don't object to a boarding-house; five years' reference. Call at No. 57 West 18th st., rear.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS COOK IN A SMALL private family; fully competent; good City and country reference. Call at No. 126 West 24th st., between 6th and 7th avs., top floor.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE GIRL AS GOOD plain cook, washer, and ironer in a private family; best City reference. Address B. K., Box No. 283 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COOK.—BY AN EXCELLENT COOK IN A PRIVATE family; fully competent to take charge of kitchen; best City reference. Address S. N., Box No. 298 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE FRENCH WOMAN in a private family; City or country; good reference. Call or address, for two days, No. 226 West 31st st., basement.

COOK.—FIRST-CLASS; UNDERSTANDS HER business in all its branches; good baker; City or country; best reference. Address Cook, Box No. 302 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, 1,257 BROADWAY.

COOK.—BY A THOROUGH, COMPETENT WOMAN. Can cook; understands all kinds pastry and fancy deserts; best reference. Call at No. 241 West 18th st., rear.

COOK OR GENERAL HOUSE-WORK.—BY A respectable woman; no objections to half washing. Call at No. 5 2 1st av., between 32d and 33d sts.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG WOMAN IN a private family; will do the coarse washing. Call for two days at her present employer's, No. 211 West 44th st., between Broadway and 8th av.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG GIRL, AS first-class cook; willing to do coarse washing; first-class reference. Call at fancy store, 422 East 15th st.

COOK.—BY A COMPETENT WOMAN AS GOOD cook, washer, and ironer; thoroughly reliable; best City reference. Call at No. 115 West 19th st.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE GIRL TO COOK, wash, and iron, or will do general house-work; City reference. Call at No. 430 West 46th st.

COOK.—BY A COMPETENT WOMAN; WILL assist with washing; City reference. Call for two days at No. 304 West 38th st., Room No. 15.

COOK.—BY AN EXPERIENCED COOK IN A PRIvate family; is fully competent; best City reference. Call at No. 260 West 35th st.

COOK AND ASSIST WITH WASHING.—By a respectable woman; excellent baker; best City reference. Call at 109½ West 15th st., rear.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG WOMAN AS first-class cook; understands French cooking; has the best references. Call at No. 307 East 44th st.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE WOMAN AS COOK; can be seen at her late employer's, No. 12 West 37th st.

COOK.—BY A COMPETENT WOMAN AS COOK and assist with the washing; is an excellent baker; City reference. Call at No. 897 8th av.

COOK, WASHER, AND IRONER, OR HOUSEwork.—By an American woman, capable of her business; City reference. Call at No. 43 King st., rear.

COOK.—BY AN ENGLISH PROTESTANT YOUNG woman as first-class cook; good City reference. Call at No. 124 West 33d st.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS PROTESTANT COOK in a private family; best City reference. Call at No. 454 4th av.

COOK, &c.—BY A RESPECTABLE GIRL AS plain cook, washer, and ironer; good City reference. Call at No. 303 East 60th st., near 2d av.

COOK, &c.—BY A FIRST-CLASS COOK; CITY or country. Call at No. 320 East 34th st., between 1st and 2d avs.

DRESS-MAKER.—BY A THOROUGH FIRSTclass dress-maker; will go out by the day to make ladies' suits and evening dresses, or will make suits at moderate prices at home. Address Dressmaker, No. 100 West 24th st., corner of 6th av.

DRESS-MAKER.—BY A PROTESTANT YOUNG woman a few engagements to go out by the day or week; understands cutting and fitting; operates on different machines. Address E., Box No. 282 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

DRESS-MAKER.—BY A COMPETENT DRESSmaker, a few more engagements by day or week. Address G. L., No. 261 West 38th st.

HOUSEKEEPER.—AS WORKING HOUSEkeeper, by a middle-aged woman; is a good seamstress; can operate on sewing machines; no objection to a widower and children; City or country; good reference. Call at No. 376 7th av., corner of 31st st.

HOUSEKEEPER.—BY A RESPECTABLE WOMan as housekeeper, or to take care of children; can be highly recommended. Call at 196 East 28th st.

HOUSE-WORK, &c.—BY A YOUNG GIRL TO do light house-work and make herself useful; a good and permanent home the chief requisites. Address M. B., Box No. 307 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

HOUSE-WORK.—BY A NEAT, COMPETENT, middle-aged woman to do general house-work; best City reference; no objection to the country. Call at No. 143 West 49th st.

HOUSE-WORK.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG girl to do light house-work, washing, and ironing; reference. Call or address present employer, No. 102 West 56th st., basement.

HOUSE-WORK.—BY A YOUNG WOMAN IN A small family; City or country; best City reference. Call at No. 407 West 25th st., near 9th av.

LADY'S MAID.—BY A COMPETENT PROTESTant person; Scotch; tasty hair-dresser; can operate on different machines; City obliging; City reference. Call for two days at No. 269 West 34th st.

LADY'S MAID.—BY A YOUNG ENGLISH GIRL AS lady's maid and seamstress. Can be seen at present employer's, No. 60 East 34th st.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A COMPETENT PROTESTANT woman; would assist with chamber-work if required; can come well recommended. Address R. S., box No. 273 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A COMPETENT LAUNDRESS; understands all kinds of French work; will assist with a little chamber-work in a small family; has the best of reference from last employer. Call at No. 326 East 36th st., first floor.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A FIRST-CLASS LAUNDRESS; can do all kinds of fluting, laces, and fine work; willing and obliging; no objection to the country; has the best of reference from last employer. Call at No. 320 East 36th st., in the store.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A FIRST-CLASS LAUNDRESS; understands her work thoroughly; four years of best City reference; City or country. Call for M. at No. 129 West 10th st., one flight up.

SITUATIONS WANTED.
FEMALES.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.
The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at
No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts.
Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M.
Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

LAUNDRESS.—AS FIRST-CLASS LAUNDRESS IN a private family; City reference; can be seen for two days; City or country. Call at No. 476 2d av., top floor.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG woman as laundress; has the best City reference; no objections to a private boarding-house. Call at or address No. 320 East 26th st., first floor, room No. 3.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A YOUNG RESPECTABLE GIRL as laundress in a private family; best City reference. Call at No. 160 East 53d st.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A NORTH OF IRELAND PROtestant; has good City reference; no objection to the country. Call at No. 114 West 33d st.

NURSE.—BY A SCOTCH PROTESTANT WOMAN; is capable of taking full charge of an infant from its birth; very good with bottle baby; no objection to the country; good reference. Call at No. 715 6th av., in millinery store.

NURSE AND SEAMSTRESS.—BY A COMPEtent person; understands all kinds of family sewing; operates on sewing machine; or would wait on a lady; good City reference. Call for two days at No. 579 7th av., corner 41st st.

NURSE.—BY A RESPECTABLE WOMAN AS child's nurse; can take care of a baby from its infancy; willing to make herself useful; not long in the country; one year and nine months' reference from her last place. Can be seen at No. 305 3d av., third floor.

NURSE.—BY A RESPECTABLE, HEALTHY, YOUNG widow, (having a five-weeks old infant,) as wet nurse; best reference; will go to New-York or Brooklyn. Address Kate, care of James Hart, No. 58 Bowery, Newark, N. J.

NURSE.—BY AN AMERICAN YOUNG WOMAN AS children's nurse or do chamber-work and sewing. Can be seen until suited as No. 150 East 42d st., between 3d and Lexington avs.

NURSE.—BY A FIRST-CLASS FRENCH PROTESTant infant's nurse; good City reference; to be seen at present employer's. Address French, Box No. 287 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

NURSE.—BY A RESPECTABLE PROTESTANT woman as infant's nurse; can take entire charge from birth; good City reference. Call for two days at No. 109 West 33d st.

NURSE.—BY A FIRST-CLASS CHILD'S NURSE; take full charge from birth; willing and obliging; no objection to travel; best City reference. Call at No. 109½ West 15th st., rear house.

NURSE.—BY A FIRST-CLASS SCOTCH PROTESTant woman as nurse and fine seamstress; has no home; can devote her time to her charge; best of reference. Call at No. 113 41st st., near 8th av.

NURSE AND SEAMSTRESS.—BY A RESPECTable young girl, Protestant; best City references. Address C. W., Box No. 289 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, No. 1,257 BROADWAY.

NURSE.—MONTHLY OR INVALID; UNEXCEPtionable reference, medical and otherwise. Apply to Mrs. Van Nest, No. 325 West 11th st.

NURSE.—BY A PROTESTANT WOMAN AS NURSE; can take charge of baby from its birth; good City reference. Call at No. 348 West 37th st.

OPERATOR.—BY A COMPETENT OPERATOR on Wheeler & Wilson machine on fine white work, a few engagements to go out by the day. Address A. B., Box No. 286 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

PANTRY-MAID.—BY AN AMERICAN GIRL IN a private family; good City reference. Address K. B., Box No. 275 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

SEAMSTRESS.—BY A YOUNG GIRL IN A PRIvate family as seamstress; will do light chamber-work, or will go with a lady that boards; three years' City reference from last place. Call at No. 442 West 36th st.

SEAMSTRESS.—BY A PROTESTANT GIRL AS seamstress; would go out by the day or week, or would assist in chamber-work. Address No. 169 West 25th st.

SEAMSTRESS.—BY A FIRST-CLASS SEAMstress by the day; can cut, fit, and trim in every style; first-class reference for capability and character. Address No. 164 West 25th st.

SEAMSTRESS.—BY A FRENCH SEAMSTRESS TO Sew work by the day, week, or month, or general family sewing; best of references. Inquire at No. 319 1st av.

SEAMSTRESS.—FIRST CLASS; UNDERSTANDS dress-making and all kinds family sewing; best City reference. Call at millinery store, No. 715 6th av., near 40th st.

WAITRESS.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG GIRL as first-class waitress; understands all kinds of salads; three years' reference from her last place. Can be seen for two days at 779 3d av., second floor.

WAITRESS.—BY A LADY GIVING UP HOUSEkeeping, for her waitress, who is thoroughly competent. Call at No. 53 West 36th st.

WASHING.—A FEW RESPECTABLE FAMILIES' fine washing; dresses and children's clothes neatly done; shirts finely polished; French fluting and puffing in superior style; most respectable City reference for honesty and ability. Call or address Laundress, No. 146 East 39th st., near Lexington av., Room No. 15.

WASHING.—BY A FIRST-CLASS LAUNDRESS TO go out by the day or take in families' washing at reasonable terms; can do all kinds of fluting, laces, and fine work; has best of reference from last employer. Call or address Mrs. Piunkett, No. 320 East 36th st.

WASHING.—BY A FIRST-CLASS LAUNDRESS, to go out by the day; would do any kind of housework at 75 cents per day. Apply at No. 322 East 25th st., first floor, rear.

WASHING.—BY A RESPECTABLE COLORED woman; gents' and families' washing; 50 cents to $1 per dozen; good references. Apply at No. 118 West 26th st., near 6th av., basement.

WASHING AND IRONING DONE BY MRS. Spencer, (colored,) No. 159 West 52d st.

CLERKS AND SALESMEN.

BOOK-KEEPER, SALESMAN, &c.—A RESponsible position where fidelity, earnestness, and integrity can be appreciated; 10 years as bookkeeper, salesman, traveler, and four years in business on own account. Address K. B., Box No. 152 Times Office.

MALES.

BUTLER.—BY AN ENGLISH BUTLER. SINGLE and Protestant, in a private family; thoroughly understands his business in all its branches; no objection to the country; can be highly recommended by his last employer, who lives in the City. Address H. K., Box No. 271 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COACHMAN AND GROOM.—BY A SOBER, strictly trustworthy, Protestant single man; understands gardening, milking, and proper care and management of horses, carriages, and harness; good careful driver; willing to make himself generally useful; moderate wages. Call or address Coachman, No. 218 Times Office.

COACHMAN AND GARDENER.—BY A RESpectable single German; thoroughly understands the treatment of horses, carriages, &c.; can milk; and is willing to make himself useful; good reference from former employers. Address F. L., Box No. 267 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COACHMAN AND GROOM.—BY A RESPECTable Protestant Scotchman; single; thoroughly understands his business; careful City driver; excellent groom; honest, sober, willing, and obliging, as references will state. Call or address Coachman, No. 111 West 29th st., private house.

COACHMAN AND GROOM.—BY A RESPECTable man, married; experienced, capable, and trustworthy; generally useful and attentive to his duties; good reference from last employer, who can be seen. Address for three days T. H., Box No. 318 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COACHMAN AND GARDENER.—BY A SINGle man; understands the proper care of horses, harness, and carriages; is a good groom and careful driver; will be found willing and obliging; can milk; is not afraid of work; best of reference. Address for three days, E. B., Box No. 223 Times Office.

COACHMAN.—BY A SINGLE YOUNG MAN, who understands the business thoroughly; seven years' very best of City reference; willing and obliging; call or address Coachman, No. 131 west 32d st., private stable.

COACHMAN.—BY AN ENGLISHMAN, MARRIED. One incumbrance; two years with the last family who have just turned out their horses; can show excellent references from other families in the City. Call or address G. B., No. 40 East 32d st.

COACHMAN.—BY A PROTESTANT MARRIED man; fully competent in every respect; first-class vegetable gardener if required; City or country; nine years' City references. Call or address No. 22 East 39th st.

COACHMAN.—BY AN ENGLISHMAN; THOROughly understands his business; has three and a half years' good City reference. Address R. M., No. 347 7th av.

COACHMAN.—A GENTLEMAN WISHES A PLACE for his coachman; married; no family; strictly temperate, and perfectly trustworthy. Address O. K., No. 113 East 22d st.

COACHMAN.—BY A MARRIED MAN AS COACHman in the country; will make himself generally useful; four years' reference. Call at No. 332 West 38th st.

COACHMAN, GARDENER, AND GENERALly Useful Man.—By a single, sober, steady man; three years' reference from last place. Address for two days, J. C., Yonkers Post Office.

COACHMAN AND GARDENER.—BY A COMpetent married man; understands the care and management of a gentleman's place. Address F. S., No. 71 Franklyn st., Green Point, Long Island.

COACHMAN.—BY A GENTLEMAN FOR HIS coachman; Scotch, single, strictly temperate, and obliging; no objections to the country. Call or address C. J. Cromwell, No. 34 Liberty st., Room No. 4.

COACHMAN.—BY A SCOTCHMAN; MARRIED, NO family; understands the care of horses. Best of references. Address R. W., 67 Nassau st., seed store.

COACHMAN.—BY AN ENGLISHMAN; MARRIED; two years' good reference from last place. Call or address M. J., No. 40 East 32d st.

COACHMAN.—BY A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN, MARried, as coachman or groom; has the best of City reference. Call or address No. 219 West 12th st.

FARMER OR GARDENER.—BY AN AMERIcan, with first-class references, as farmer or gardener; one who thoroughly understands the care of stock; engagement desired by the 1st of April. Address M. H., Orange Post Office, New-Jersey.

FOOTMAN AND USEFUL MAN.—BY AN EXperienced young man; single; will tend furnace, clean silver, windows, shoes, &c.; five years' City reference. Call or address Footman, No. 144 5th av., harness store.

FLORIST AND VEGETABLE GROWER.—By a married man, (French,) on a gentleman's place; no children; best recommendations. Address J. B., Box 237 Times Office.

GARDENER AND FARMER.—BY A YOUNG German as gardener and farmer; best references; address W. J., Williamsbridge Post Office, New-York.

SITUATIONS WANTED.
MALES.

GARDENER.—BY A MARRIED MAN; ENGLISH; no family; has 20 years' successful experience in green house, graperies, fruits, flowers, and vegetables; the care and management of stock farm, &c.; wife is fully competent to take charge of dairy, poultry, &c.; best of references. Address J. B. C., Box No. 295 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

GARDENER.—BY A PRACTICAL MAN, MARRIED, who thoroughly understands his business; is 10½ years in the present situation; will be disengaged the 1st of March; has good City references. Address William Grady, Palisades, N. Y.

GARDENER.—FIRST CLASS; MARRIED, WITH small family; knows his business in every department; first-class recommendations as to character and capability; is also a first-class farmer. Address P. K., Sea st., Sea st., No. 15 John st.

GARDENER AND GENERAL MAN.—BY A single man on a private place; understands fruits, flowers, and vegetables thoroughly; can do all carpenter repairs necessary; has undoubted references. Address S., Stapleton Post Office, Staten Island.

GARDENER.—BY A SCOTCHMAN; THOROUGHly understands his business in all its branches; fifteen years' first-class references. Address L., care of Peter Henderson, Esq., No. 35 Gortlandt st.

GARDENER.—BY A THOROUGHLY COMPETENT Gardener; single man; reference as to character and ability first class. Address Gardener, care of Mr. John Cooley, White Plains, Westchester County, N. Y.

GARDENER AND COACHMAN.—BY A RESpectable German man; City or country; good reference. Apply at No. 295 West 30th st.

NURSE.—BY A COMPETENT AND TEMPERATE man as nurse or attendant to a sick or invalid gentleman; good City reference. Address Harvey, Box 265 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

USEFUL MAN.—BY AN AMERICAN; CAN milk cows, drive horses or oxen; is willing and obliging. Call or address T. C. Hull, No. 118 Java st., Greenpoint, Long Island.

WANTED—AN AGENCY FOR A RELIABLE FIRM or manufactory; any location from Maine to Texas, or Florida to Oregon; compensation moderate; business experience over twenty years. Address M. J., Box No. 152 Times Office.

WAITER.—BY SINGLE COLORED MAN, IN A private family, as waiter, or in an office; is a very good penman; has good reference for honesty and capability. Address for two days J. P. S., No. 148 West 27th st.

WAITER.—BY AN ENGLISHMAN IN A PRIVATE family; knows his duties as a good servant; no objection to the country; good City reference. Address G. S., Box No. 316 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

WAITER.—IN A PRIVATE FAMILY, OR TO travel with a gentleman; no objections to going in the country; can give City reference. Call or address J. C. Martin, No. 253 West 26th st., between 9 and 12 o'clock A. M.

WAITER.—BY A SOBER, STEADY MAN, WHO thoroughly understands his business, and refers to his last employer, where he lived for a number of years. Address Waiter, No. 398 4th av., fish store.

WAITER.—BY A YOUNG FRENCHMAN AS first class waiter in a private family; best City references. Call or address M. N., at Salters', No. 835 Broadway.

WAITER.—BY A SWEDE AS A FIRST-CLASS waiter in a private family; good City reference. Address W. H., No. 400 4th av., for three days.

WAITER.—BY A FRENCH WAITER TO MAKE himself generally useful in a private family. Inquire at No. 313 1st av.

WAITER.—BY A FIRST-CLASS WAITER, (French;) six years' City reference. Address K. D., care of Hathaway, No. 52 West 32d st.

WAITER.—BY A FIRST-CLASS FRENCH WAITer; two years' City references from last places; in private family. Address L. S., No. 122 West 33d st.

WAITER.—BY A SWISS YOUNG MAN AS FIRSTclass waiter in a private family; best City reference. Call or address Luzen, No. 150 East 42d st.

WAITER.—BY A FIRST-CLASS GERMAN WAITER, with experience. Call at No. 322 East 31st st., first floor.

WAITER.—BY A FRENCHMAN IN A PRIVATE family; best reference from last employer. Address A. C., No. 152 East 42d st.

IN

NEW-JERSEY CENTRAL.

COMPANY'S FINANCES.

A LARGE MEETING OF THE STOCKHOLDERS — DISCUSSING THE PROPOSITION TO SUBSCRIBE FOR CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS AMOUNTING TO $3,000,000 —ONLY ONE-THIRD OF THE AMOUNT SUBSCRIBED—APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE THE BOOKS OF THE COMPANY,

A very large public meeting of the stockholders of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company was convened at noon yesterday, in the offices of the company in Liberty street, for the purpose of taking into consideration a proposition of the Board of Directors calling upon the stockholders to subscribe for certificates of indebtedness for an amount equivalent to 15 per cent. of the stock held by them, the subscription not to be binding unless the entire amount of $3,000,000 is subscribed.

On motion, Mr. George H. Potts was elected Chairman, and Mr. Samuel Knox, Treasurer of the company, was made Secretary. After Mr. Knox had read the call, Mr. Knight arose to speak on the "past, present, and future of the company." He first touched upon the question of passed dividends from a general standpoint. The Central Railroad of New-Jersey had declared since 1866 dividends aggregating $14,400,000. Had these been averaged at 8 per cent. there would have been left in the treasury $3,413,666 31; at 7 per cent., $5,133,812 54; at 6 per cent, $7,145,737 39. It was these extravagant dividends that had in a great measure weakened the company. He instanced the North Pennsylvania Railroad of Philadelphia, which in 1859 was in a worse condition than the New-Jersey Central is to-day. The par value of its stock being $50 per share, it had out $3,000,000 of 6 per cent. mortgage bonds; its stock sold on the market at from $5 50 to $6 per share and its bonds at 40 cents to 50 cents on the dollar; it had a floating debt of $2,000,000, to carry which it was obliged to pay from 1 to 2 per cent. a month, besides which the current rates of interest and the future prospects were very different from what they are to-day. The Directors were obliged to obtain a chattel mortgage at 6 per cent., which they sold at 62½ to 75 cents on the dollar. This mortgage falls due in April next, and the money—some $500,000—is provided to pay it. The Finance Committee asked the bondholders to fund their coupons for a few years. They did so, and received scrip for the amount. That scrip was redeemed through economy and increased business. Then the company felt able to declare a 6 per cent. dividend, and for six or eight years has continued to declare similar dividends. But they never exceeded that amount, even when 18 per cent. profit was earned. The balance was kept in the treasury. The stock is now selling at 98 cents, and the bonds brought at auction, on Tuesday, 107¼. The trouble with the New-Jersey Central was that the stockholders had received too large dividends. At the present market value of the stock, earnings amounting to $400,000 would amount to 2 per cent. on the capital and 4 per cent. on the value, and so on. The speaker then read the following statement of the financial condition of the company for the year ending 1876:

Receipts		$6,846,000
Expenses		3,684,000
Balance net earnings		$3,262,000
Less interest account	$1,575,000
Less taxes account	142,000
Rent L. & S. R. R.	922,000	$2,639,000
		$623,000
Loss on canals		172,000
Balance		$451,000

This was a dividend, he said, of 8 per cent. on the present value of the stock. With the introduction of a rigid economy and the prospect of a better state of affairs, it might be increased this year to $1,600,000. The road is in first-class condition; its equipment is ample; the new line to Philadelphia is doing an increasing business, and the Long Branch route is paying. There is no need for further present outlay. Its equipment represents the value of between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000. Last year $4,000,000 were expended on the road. Speaking of the proposed loan, Mr. Knight explained that the new certificates of indebtedness were to be issued on security valued at 60 cents on the dollar, were payable in 10 years, and bore 7 per cent. interest, payable semi-annually, and that the security cost $4,500,000 cash, and was a mortgage on 25,000 acres of the best coal land. He asserted that all the coal roads were in a similar predicament to the New-Jersey Central, and that unless they come to some arrangement to get more for their coal than it costs to produce, they must remain crippled. On Feb. 5, 1876, the market price of Delaware, Lackawanna and Western was 119; of Reading, 105¾; of New-Jersey Central, 109. Now it is: Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 70; Reading, 30; New-Jersey Central, 27—showing an aggregate depreciation of $54,224,000. In conclusion, Mr. Knight claimed that the destruction of the road would be a public calamity, and that the panic that would wreck the New-Jersey Central would rebound upon the other coal companies. The loan will probably save the road. Nothing less can.

Mr. F. Worden Gedney wanted to know whether the proposed security was really worth as much as claimed. He had been informed that 25 could not be got for them. He asked for a statement of the present condition of the Central Road, its bonded and collateral securities; whether $3,000,000 would pay all debts, including the interest accruing in three months; whether its employes have been paid their wages and what the amount due them is; whether the company had any further securities to offer; whether any part of the Wilkesbarre bonds, amounting to about $230,000, have been hypothecated for call loans; what the actual debt of the company is for rolling stock; how much of the amount said to have been expended on that account last year remains unpaid; whether it be true or not, as reported, that the last three or four dividends were paid by issuing bonds, as in that case the stockholders are liable for the return of the money until the creditors or their parties are paid. There was a brief silence, and then Mr. Gedney was asked to say whether he was a bona fide stock owner, or was merely present for the purpose of making trouble. Cries of Good! Good! Jay Gould!] Mr. Gedney answered that he was a bona fide owner.

Mr. W. M. Imbrie asked permission to propound a series of questions, which, with their answers, were as follows:

Q.—What is the floating debt? A.—From $2,500,000 to $3,000,000, but more than half that amount is due from the Wilkesbarre Coal Company for freights.

Q.—Does this amount include indorsements of the coal company's paper, and the blanket mortgage? A.—It includes the latter.

Q.—How much do the indorsements amount to? A.—There is about $1,000,000 out.

Q.—What is the condition of the Wilkesbarre Coal Company; is it making or losing money? A.—Ask a Director of the company.

Q.—Will the $3,000,000 cancel the blanket mortgage? A.—No.

Q.—Did the New-Jersey Central have to provide the interest, or part of it, to pay the Wilkesbarre Company's bond? A.—No.

Q.—Has the New-Jersey Central received interest from the Wilkesbarre Coal Company on the bonds of the latter held by the former? A.—It was charged on the regular account against the Wilkesbarre Company.

Q.—Were the earnings of the last four months of 1876, after the publication of the annual report, better or worse than those of the eight months previous? A.—They have not been compared.

In regard to this last question Mr. Imbrie stated that if they were on the same ratio there would be a deficiency. He expressed the utmost confidence in Mr. Knight, but thought stockholders would keep aloof until satisfied as to the exact condition of the company's affairs. The company's credit had suffered more injury from the refusals of the officers to impart information than from any other source. [Applause.] In conclusion, he moved the appointment of a committee of five, four to be stockholders and the other to be President Knight, to examine the books of the two companies and render a report at a future meeting. Mr. Knight refused to serve, but promised to throw no obstructions in the way of the committee. After considerable discussion it was agreed that the committee be instructed to go their work without adjournment, and their appointment was confided to the Chair.

Mr. Gedney asked that the committee endeavor to supply answers to the following questions, in addition to those already propounded: Has any portion of the $5,000,000 Lehigh and Wilkesbarre bonds been hypothecated, and, if so, when said loans will fall due, and what will be their amount? Has the New-Jersey Central Company any debts on account of rolling stock and rails, and what is its amount? In reply to another gentleman Treasurer Knox said that the total bonded indebtedness of the company is $25,000,000, and that the interest was all paid up, some of the bonds not being out a year yet.

Mr. Waterman, of Philadelphia, spoke severely against the disturbing element in the meeting, which, he said, was evidently seeking for outside effect. He spoke in eulogistic terms of the company's officers, and made a strong appeal in favor of the loan. In conclusion, he said that no coal company is making a cent. He had conversed with several of the leading coal men, and he found them all anxious to enter into a new combination which shall include a clause requiring each company to deposit with the combination a sufficient amount of property as security that it shall not send too much coal to market. He predicted that between now and March 1 the six great companies will be reunited, and coal will have advanced $1 50 per ton.

President Knight said that he believed that a meeting of representatives of the several coal companies was in progress in the City at the time, and he knew that such another meeting was to be held in Philadelphia to-day.

The President announced the composition of the committee as follows: John U. Brookman, Samuel Wetmore, J. S. Waterman, George W. Cullum, and J. B. McCrarey. The committee retired.

During the recess, several speeches were made in advocacy of the loan, and frequent appeals were made to the stockholders to come forward and subscribe. Mr. McCrarey, a wealthy operator, described the Wilkesbarre Company's land as the best coal land he had ever seen. The Chairman, Mr. Potts, said he was the oldest anthracite miner in the country, and drew from his experience the deduction that the business is subject to alternate periods of deep depression and great financial prosperity. Before two years the condition of affairs would be altered so that they would hardly be able to realize their present predicament. An advance of $1 per ton would add $20,000,000 to the resources of the coal companies next year. Coal ought never be sold in New-York for less than $5 per ton, on account of the value of the coal lands belonging to the companies and the capital invested. He found, however, that the companies would be satisfied with $4 per ton, an advance of $1 15 on present prices.

Ex-Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. John C. Bullitt, representative of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, eulogized President Knight, drew flattering pictures of the prospects of the New-Jersey Central Company, and tongue-lashed the "wreckers" who were endeavoring to destroy it.

Mr. Knight said that he had certain information that a new coal combination would be effected during the present week.

The committee returned at 3:10 o'clock and reported that the short time given them did not permit an examination of the books. They had been obliged to rely upon the balance sheets for the following figures: Floating debt of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company on Jan. 1, 1877, including bills payable and bills paid, amounts due Lehigh and Susquehanna Railroad Company for rent and amount due employes, $2,543,000. Bills indorsed by the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company for the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, $1,141,000. The indebtedness of the two companies is secured by the use of $3,178,000 blanket mortgage bonds and $4,995,000 Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal bonds. The coal company is indebted to the New-Jersey Central in addition $1,620,000, on account of freight and earnings. The true condition of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company could not be ascertained, as there were no accounts or vouchers at hand, but the committee believed it to be seriously in debt. This indebtedness was thought to have accrued through purchase of additional mining property and improvements. The committee suggested that a new committee be appointed, with time to investigate carefully the past of the two companies, and ascertain how the large amounts of money that had been raised from time to time had been expended. It was thought that the property had not been paid for entirely out of the proceeds of bonds, but that a part had been brought in as floating debt.

Mr. Gedney asked how much coal the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Company had on hand to offset its indebtedness. The response was, "about 200,000 tons."

It was moved and carried that the committee be continued, in accordance with its own suggestion, with power to fill vacancies; and another committee of 10 was appointed to solicit subscriptions. Mr. Knight saying that upon the success of the $3,000,000 loan depends the destruction or revival of the New-Jersey Central Railroad. Mr. L. Bennett made a strong appeal for the loan. He deprecated the apathy of the stockholders in vigorous terms, and said that the meeting reminded him of a stockboard with the bears predominating. The names of the subscribers and the amounts were then read out, by request, for the purpose of encouraging others. The total footed up $1,027,600. An old gentleman added his name for $5 00 more, and the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.

A "CHARITY" WHICH SHOULD BE EXAMINED.

The statement published in THE TIMES about the Free Dormitory, of which Valentine Hammann is President and George H. Stout is Secretary is likely to result in an investigation at the hands of the Board of Apportionment, which meets to-morrow. About a month ago Messrs. Hammann and Stout applied to the board for an appropriation, the money to be used in defraying the expenses of their institution, which was intended they said, to furnish shelter to poor women at night. They received $1,000. On Feb. 1 they applied for a further donation of $5,000, stating that the Free Dormitory was conducted by the "Women's Friend Association," This last application, like the previous one, was signed by Hammann and Stout. These philanthropists in writing to the newspapers say: "The impression has gone abroad, without any action on our part, that this charity is the same that was in existence two years ago." The impression here alluded to very naturally went "abroad," because Hammann and Stout distinctly stated in their application to the Board of Apportionment that it was the same charity which existed two years ago. They alluded to the great good which that charity had done in the past, said that it "temporarily suspended a few months ago," and that "in view of the prevailing destitution, the Free Dormitory will resume operations at once." Hamman and Stout, in stating that the charity had only suspended operations "a few months ago," stated what is contrary to the fact, as "The Free dormitory" has not been in existence for two years. The action of the Board of Apportionment in making an appropriation for Hammann and Stout's dormitory has created a good deal of discussion among a large number of persons who are acquainted with the facts in this case, and it is expected that some steps will be taken to recover the money already paid. An intelligent lady whom is cautioned against to mar the prospect of securing a new appropriation. A lady who announced herself as Mrs. I. J. Reed, of West Eleventh street, called yesterday upon Mr. John Haruy, the Mayor's Secretary, and expressed the hope that no donation would be given to the dormitory until a thorough examination of its management was made. Mayor Ely's attention was subsequently called to the fact. He is Chairman of the Board of Apportionment.

SALE OF THOROUGHBREDS.

The racing establishment of Thomas Puryear & Co. was sold at auction yesterday, at the Valley Brook stud farm, Rutherfurd Park, New-Jersey, to settle the estate of the late David Crawford. The stable was formerly known as Dennison & Crawford, but latterly Mr. Thomas Puryear, the well-known trainer, took charge of the stud, and became a partner. Under his name the Valley Brook string of horses has been very successful, particularly in the year 1875. As the announcement read that the entire stud was to be sold without reserve, there was a good attendance of turfmen, and among those present were Messrs. P. and G. L. Lorillard, M. A. Littell, Capt. Coffin, R. Center, Jetu and Wyndham Walden, and the Dwyer brothers. The stallion Narragansett was the first on the catalogue, and Pierre Lorillard started the bidding at $500. It was slowly run up, in small amounts, to $1,010, and bought by a Mr. Vandenhoff for that figure. The bidding for some of the colts was spirited, especially Kingsland and Palmetto. The following are the figures for the 19 head offered:

1. Narragansett, br. s., foaled 1866, by imp. Eclipse, out of Josie Dixon; Mr. Vandenhoff	$1,010
2. Warwick, b. h., foaled 1872, by imp. Leamington, out of Minnie Minor; Thomas Puryear	220
3. Meco, ch. h., foaled 1872, by Narragansett, out of Juliette, by Censor; J. Hinchman, New-Jersey	300
4. Lizzie Berry, b. m., foaled 1859, by Lexington, out of Louisa N. Berry; P. Lorillard	500
5. Minnie Minor, b. m., foaled 1861, by Lexington, out of Julia, by Glencoe; P. Lorillard	600
6. Chignon, b. m., foaled 1861, by imp Balrownie, out of Jewel, by Arab; P. Lorillard	350
7. Julietta, ch. m., foaled 1867, by Censor, out of Julia, by Glencoe; D. D. Withers	325
8. Pastura, b. m., foaled 1867, by Censor, out of Pasta, by Revenue; R. Wilmer, Maryland	150
9. B. m., foaled 1873, by Narragansett, out of Pastura; Edward Clarke, New-York	225
10. Kingsland, ch. c., 3 years, by Narragansett, out of Isalestone, by Censor; George L. Lorillard	1,270
11. Black Cloud, br. c., 3 years, by Narragansett, out of Lizzie Berry; Thomas Puryear	115
12. Top, c. c., 2 years, by Narragansett, out of Chignon, by imp. Balrownie; E. Clarke	$410
13. Palmetto, b. f., 3 years, by Narragansett, out of Minnie Minor; Dwyer Bros	1,700
14. C. c., 2 years, by Narragansett, out of Minnie Minor, by Lexington; James Kelly	110
15. B. c., 2 years, by Narragansett, out of Chignon, by imp. Balrownie; George L. Lorillard	400
16. B. c., 2 years, by Narragansett, out of Pasta, by Revenue; Thomas Puryear	190
17. C. c., 2 years, by Narragansett, out of Pastura, by Censor; Thomas Puryear	145
18. C. c., 2 years, by Narragansett, out of Julietta; Dwyer Bros	700
19. B. c., (very small,) 2 years, by Narragansett, out of Lizzy Berry; J. W. Stout, New-York	180
Total amount of sale	$8,939

THE LIEDERKRANZ BALL.

The Liederkranz Ball, one of the great events of the ball season, will take place this evening at the Academy of Music. The opening procession, which formed so attractive a feature of the masquerade during past years, will be dispensed with, but its absence will no doubt be compensated for by other attractions, among which may be mentioned the series of dances to be given by a troupe of professionals and gymnasts.

NEGLECTED CHILDREN CARED FOR.

A few days ago Officer Lundberg, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, while passing through Avenue C, noticed two children standing on the sidewalk in front of No. 183 crying piteously. On questioning them the officer learned that their mother, Mary Ward-occupying rooms on the third floor, had locked them out, and was then lying in a condition of beastly intoxication in her room. The officer at once applied for, and was granted, a warrant for the arrest of the woman, and the document was given to Court Officer Harrigan, who invaded the premises yesterday morning. In the cheerless and filthy apartments were found five children, ranging from 18 months to 13 years, one of them entirely naked, and the others miserably clad. The mother was arrested on the street near the house, and when arraigned at the Essex Market Police Court stated that her husband, John Ward, was a cooper earning $15 per week, the largest portion of which was spent in the purchase of liquor for the husband and wife. She also admitted that she recently returned from Blackwell's Island, where she spent a term of three months for habitual drunkenness. An examination in the case will be held to-day, and pending the result the poor children will be cared for by the society.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

John Lehnard, aged 28, a tailor, of No. 51 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, fell dead last evening while at work in a store at No. 413 West Forty-sixth street.

Rev. Dr. Charles E. Lord will lecture in Chanler Chapel to-night on "The Huguenots in the Old and New World," in aid of the new Huguenot church in process of erection near Pelham Bridge.

Ephraim Holland, a Cincinnati gambler, was arrested yesterday by Officer Crowley on a charge of complicity in the recent election frauds in Ohio. He will be sent to Cincinnati on a requisition from Gov. Hayes.

Prominent grain shippers say that they have no knowledge of the reported cutting under of rates to the West, and that the various assertions to that effect published during the past few days in the local newspapers are probably without foundation.

Aaron B. Longstreet, a mason, who resided in One Hundred and Thirty-second street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, fell from a scaffold on Tuesday in West Fifty-seventh street, and died yesterday from the effect of his injuries, at St. Luke's Hospital.

Andrew J. Lane, Captain of the canal-boat T. P. Demorest, lying at the foot of East Twenty-third street, died yesterday on board of his vessel from the effect of a fracture of the skull, accidentally received by the falling of a coal-bucket on his head several days ago at Mott Haven.

The fines paid into the various Police Courts last month were as follows: First District Court, $495; Second District Court, $1,227; Third District Court, $576; Fourth District Court, $500; Fifth District Court, $26; Sixth District Court, $20; Special Sessions Court, $1,084. Total, $3,858.

Mr. Leonardo Delmonte, Dominion Consul at this port, and engaged in mercantile business at No. 50 Exchange place, called at the Police Central Office last night, and reported to Inspector Thorne that his son, Leonardo Delmonte, aged 15, had not been home since 9 A. M., at which hour he left for school. A general alarm was telegraphed to all the Police-stations to look out for the boy.

The Grain Trade held an adjourned meeting in the Produce Exchange yesterday morning, and adopted the new rules proposed by the Grain Committee in relation to oats, rye, barley, and peas. The new rules in regard to Winter wheat were referred to Messrs. W. S. Preston, George C. Martin, and E. W. Coleman, as a committee to confer with the Grain Committee and report at another meeting to be held this morning.

BROOKLYN.

The annual dinner of the Palette Club takes place this evening.

Schuyler Colfax will deliver a lecture at Plymouth Church on the 15th inst., entitled, "Life and Services of Abraham Lincoln."

Meissonier's original painting, "The Rainbow," which was lost three years ago, has at last been found. The present owner, W. H. Shaw, Esq., has consented to have it placed on exhibition at No. 805 Broadway.

A number of the longshoreman who have been on strike for 25 cents an hour, were allowed to go to work at that rate in the Empire Stores yesterday. The strikers are willing to go to work for 20 cents an hour, if the employers will guarantee eight hours' work a day.

The druggists of this city are about to memorialize the Legislature for the passage of a law compelling drug clerks employed in Brooklyn to pass an examination and hold a license, as they are required to do in New-York, before being permitted to dispense prescriptions.

An entertainment will be given by St. John's Guild at the Academy of Music and Nilsson Hall on the 22d inst. The programme of the evening comprises a Martha Washington reception and garden party, under charge of a Board of Managers composed of leading citizens.

At a meeting of the Board of Supervisors a resolution was passed directing the Jail Committee to purchase for $25,000 from the Directors of the City Hospital a site for the jail. The building will be erected over the site of the present Raymond Street Jail, and will adjoin the City Hospital.

Gen. Roger A. Pryor applied on behalf of Mrs. C. B. Price to allow her to revive an action for $100,000 against the Executors of her deceased husband, the late Walter W. Price. Price was married three times, and a decree from two of his wives on the ground that a former wife was still living. The particulars of the various divorce suits have been repeatedly published.

The committee appointed by the Republican General Committee to investigate the colonization frauds, have made a long report detailing many facts, most of which have already been published in connection with the colonization practiced in the odd-numbered wards by the Democrats last November. Were it not for these frauds the Republicans would have a majority in the Board of Aldermen. The committee recommend legislation which shall have the effect of preventing frauds in the future.

NEW-JERSEY.

The young daughter of Mr. Kain, of Court street, Newark, who was so badly burned by the explosion of a kerosene-oil lamp on Sunday night, has since died of her injuries.

Michael Stern lies in a very critical condition at St. Michael's Hospital, in Newark. Instead of jumping from a window, as was at first reported, he proves to have been a somnambulist, and met with the accident while walking in his sleep.

John Kroner, aged 37, who was employed by Theodore Gerth, of No. 81 Market street, Newark, as a hostler, was found dead yesterday in the cellar of his employer's house. It was found, on examination, that he was suffocated by coal-gas, having fallen asleep near the door of the furnace.

The New-Jersey Sabbath Union held its third annual meeting in the Central Baptist Church, Trenton, on Tuesday, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Rev. W. J. R. Taylor, of Newark, President; Rev. A. H. Brown, of Camden, Secretary; Whitall Stokes, of Trenton, Treasurer.

Thomas Schoonmaker, aged 25, who was convicted recently of shooting William Blackmore at Lexington, Ky., and who escaped with two companions, Michael Collins and Charles Jepson, from Lexington Jail, surrendered himself to the Jersey City Police last night. He was serving out a sentence of two years. His companions were sentenced to 10 years each. He said that he became tired of roving around, was convinced that he did wrong, and was willing to serve out his term. He will be sent to Kentucky to-day.

CONFERENCE ON CITY AFFAIRS.

Soon after the recent conference between the committee of merchants, bankers, and others, of which Mr. William A. Booth is Chairman, with the Mayor and Controller, Mr. Purroy, the President of the Board of Aldermen, had a resolution passed by that body requesting the Mayor to summon the heads of departments, except the Police Commissioners, called upon the Mayor for that purpose, and, after consulting together for a short time, it was decided to meet again on Saturday at noon, and to invite the committee, of which Mr. Booth is Chairman, and the members of the Legislature from this City, to be present. The meeting will be public.

ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

Gen. J. B. Stonehouse, of Albany, is at the Hotel Brunswick.

Prof. B. Waterhouse Hawkins, of Princeton College, is at the Grand Hotel.

Hon. James M. Ashley, of Ohio, and Capt. Hamilton Perry, of the steam-ship Adriatic, are at the St. Denis Hotel.

Gen. Charles Hughes, of Gov. Robinson's Staff, and Judge Stephen Brown, of Glen's Falls, N. Y., are at the Sturtevant House.

Ex-Gov. Andrew G. Curtin, of Pennsylvania; Carroll Hyde, of Binghamton, and Joseph Pulitzer, of St. Louis, are at the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

COGNACS bottled at Jonzac Distilleries; also in wood. VICTOR E. MAUGER, sole importer, 110 Reade st. —Advertisement.

PASSENGERS ARRIVED.

In steam-ship Columbus, from Havana.—F. Heria, N. Samuels, A. Sanches Garcia, C. Garcia Camps, R. F. Saaredra, Mr. and Mrs. Ramon Ortis, Mrs. Rosaria Downing, D. Salazer, R. B. Denig, S. Goetz, I. F. St. Julian, D. W. Randall, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Needham, Capt. F. Reybold, Mrs. A. De Oribuella.

In steam-ship San Jacinto, from Savannah.—Miss Ida Howe, Miss J. Z. Robinson, Capt. E. Grant, W. O. Neil, C. M. Chase, miss K. Mahony, R. Thompson, M. Monahon, F. T. Cushing, O. H. Stetson, T. Barns, P. Sullivan, T. Dodd, A. Skillen, N. Moran.

PASSENGERS SAILED.

In steam-ship Algeria, for Liverpool.—Mr. and Mrs. Aitken, F. P. Buckley, Miguel Capia, Rev. J. B. Chevir, Hon. Samuel C. Cobb and wife, C. G. Cookson, M. Devris, Ulysse Defevrimont, Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Fiske, Jacques Hartog, W. Herrick, Mr. and Mrs. William Hilton, Joshua B. Holden, Capt. T. Jessop, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Kemble, A. W. Lelton, J. H. Lewis, Dr. S. H. Linn, James McDowell, Montgomery Moore, William Morrison, William Morton, Mr. and Mrs. L. Nicholsky, Rev. Charles Noble and wife, Charles Oliver, George H. Osthelmer, J. R. Paton, Miss Isabella A. Pleasant, Mr. Sewell, William Small, William H. Thornberry, Jr., F. C. White, L. J. White, Thomas Vought, John T. Drew, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Satfield.

In steam-ship General Barnes, for Savannah.—Mrs. E. Hennessy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Craig, Mrs. Chapin, William Spaulding, W. B. Beers, C. F. Preston, J. W. Preston, Mrs. J. B. Denton, S. Cahome, S. M. Sisman, Mrs. M. Sisman, S. Corsell, Geo. [illegible]

F. Brookhoff, J. H. Page, George F. Partigh, Mr. and Mrs. L. Lambert, Mrs. Broadwell, Mrs. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. A. Shearer, A. B. Watson, J. Denton, P. Graef, J. Stillman, F. A. Warth, H. Audonier, H. Orseaut, V. Hansen, J. Spencer, O. Smith.

MINIATURE ALMANAC—THIS DAY.

Sun rises....7:02 | Sun sets....5:27 | Moon rises..4:18
HIGH WATER—THIS DAY.
Sandy Hook...4:13 | Gov. Island...5:02 | Hell Gate....6:24

MARINE INTELLIGENCE.

NEW-YORK.....WEDNESDAY, FEB. 7.

CLEARED.

Steam-ship Algeria, (Br.,) Watson, Liverpool, via Queenstown, C. G. Francklyn; Algiers, Hawthorn, New-Orleans, &c., Bogart & Morgan; Gulf Stream, Crowell, Charleston, J. W. Quintard; Gen. Barnes, Cheeseman, Savannah, Murray, Ferris & Co.; Benefactor, Jones, Wilmington, N. C., Wm. P. Clyde & Co.

Ship Marianna V., (Port.,) Ferreira, Lisbon, G. Amsink & Co.

Barks Samuele, (Ital.,) Rallo, Gibraltar for orders, John C. Seager; David Babcock, Colcord, Cadiz via Seville, A. Mudgett & Co.; Americo, (Ger.,) Koper, Leith, Scotland, H. Koop & Co.; Lamech, (Ital.,) Boggia, Cork or Falmouth for orders, Slocovich & Co.; Stefanino, (Ital.,) Genta, Genoa, Slocovich & Co.

Brig Sirius, (Br.,) McDonald, St. John's, P. R., Gerhard & Brewer.

Schrs. Impulse, (Br.,) Rountree, Belize, Hon., Leycraft & Co.; Eugene Borda, Bailey, Norfolk, Slaght & Petty; S. P. Goodwin, Williams, Bridgeport, Conn., Stamford Manufacturing Co.; M. A. Forsyth, Hobbie, Stamford, Stamford Manufacturing Co.; O. C. Acken, Toms, Stamford, Stamford Manufacturing Co.; Bella Russell, Smith, Georgetown, S. C., E. D. Hurlbut & Co.; Wm. Todd, Wood, St. Thomas and Sombrero Island, Peniston & Co.

ARRIVED.

Steam-ship City of Atlanta, Woodhull, Savannah Feb. 3, with mdse. and passengers to J. W. Quintard & Co.

Steam-ship Albemarle, Gibbs, Lewes, with mdse. and passengers to Old Dominion Steam-ship Co.

Steam-ship San Jacinto, Hazard, Savannah Feb. 4, with mdse. and passengers to Geo. Yonge.

Steam-ship Lone Star, Forbes, New-Orleans Jan. 31, with mdse. and passengers to Bogart & Morgan.

Steam-ship Old Dominion, Walker, Richmond and Norfolk, with mdse. and passengers to Old Dominion Steam-ship Company.

Steam-ship Eleanora, Johnson, Portland, with mdse. and passengers to J. F. Ames.

Steam-ship Columbus, Reed, Havana Feb. 3, with mdse. and passengers to Wm. P. Clyde & Co.

Ship Tewksbury, (of Liverpool,) Davies, Liverpool Nov. 24, via South-west Pass Jan. 17 in ballast to Barclay & Livingston.

Bark Jason, (Norw.,) Thorsen, Hamburg 73 ds., in ballast to Benham & Boyesen.

Bark W. D. Stewart, (of Prince Edward's Island,) Munster, Liverpool 51 ds., in ballast to order.

Barr Windward, (of St. John, N. B.,) Baker, Hamburg 60 ds., with mdse. to master.

Bark Maud Scammell, (of St. John, N. B.,) Thompson, Dublin Dec. 4, in ballast to Scammell Bros. Anchored at Sandy Hook for orders.

Bark Costante, (Ital.,) Gnchetti, Ipswich 59 ds., in ballast to Benham & Boyesen.

Bark Giuseppe Rocco, (Ital.,) Castellano, Bordeaux 67 ds., in ballast to Funch, Edye & Co.

Bark Capri, (of Maitland, N. S.,) Barker, Alloa 68 ds., in ballast to J. F. Whitney & Co.

Bark Columbia, (of New-Haven,) Dickerson, St. Pierre, Mart., 14 ds., with sugar to H. Trowbridge's Sons.

Brig Union, (of Jersey, Eng.,) Le Dain, Santos Dec. 11, with sugar to order.

Schr. Little Annie, Roberts, (of and from St. John, N. B., 30 ds.,) with potatoes to A. T. Heney.

Schr. Eben Parsons, (of Gloucester, Mass.,) Dagle, Fortune Bay, N. F., 10 ds., with fresh frozen herring to Benj. West.

Schr. M. G. Moseley, Urann, Georgetown, S. C., 8 ds., with naval stores to Parsons & Loud.

Schr. Montana, Bearse, Norfolk, with corn and lumber to A. Dayton & Co.

Schr. M. A. Davis, Long, Somerset, to A. Dayton.

Schr. Edward Johnson, (of Belfast, Me.,) McDonald, Rio Janeiro 45 ds., with coffee to order—vessel to A. Mudgett.

Schr. B. I. Hasard, Brewster, Georgetown, S. C., 9 ds., with naval stores to Dollner, Potter & Co.—vessel to E. D. Hurlbut & Co.

Schr. Mary J. Russell, Steelman, Jacksonville 8 ds., with lumber to Drew & Buckie.

Schr. Marcus Edwards, Pearson, Jacksonville 8 ds., with lumber to Drew & Buckie.

Schr. Eleanor, Squires, Georgetown, S. C., 8 ds., with naval stores to E. D. Hurlbut & Co.

Schr. Helen A. Hoyt, Parker, New-Bedford.

Schr. Nelson Harvey, Cobb, New-Bedford.

Schr. Mexican, Haskell, Bristol.

Schr. Samuel P. Godwin, Morrell, Stamford.

Schr. Oscar C. Acken, Toms, Stamford.

Schr. Z. A. Paine, Jones, Eastport, with fish to John Boynton's Son.

Schr. Snow Bird, (of St. John, N. B.,) Cripps, Providence, in ballast to P. L. Nevins & Son.

Schr. Martha A. Brewer, McFarlan, Belfast, for Baltimore.

Schr. Sallie W. Kay, Tilton, Providence, for Philadelphia.

Schr. Anna Sheppard, Gray, Providence, for Philadelphia.

Schr. Mary L. Varney, Rowe, Providence, for Philadelphia.

Schr. Julia Baker, Baker, Providence, for Philadelphia.

Schr. Forest City, Hodgon, Providence, for Philadelphia.

Schr. Florence V. Turner, Walker, Providence.

Schr. James H. Deputy, McMahon, Providence.

Schr. Wm. N. Gessner, Edgbert, Providence.

Schr. Rebecca A. Carter, Tomlin, Providence.

Schr. Forest Oak, Parker, New-Haven, for Baltimore.

Schr. Henrietta, Allen, New-Haven.

Schr. Wm. Gillum, Hall, Boston.

Schr. Sallie B., Bateman, New-Haven.

Schr. Harvest, Corwin, Bristol.

Schr. Wm. H. Bowen, Jackson, Bristol.

WIND—sunset, moderate, W. N. W.; clear.

SAILED.

Steam-ships Algeria, for Liverpool; City of New-York, for Havana; Albemarle, for New-Orleans; Gen. Barnes, for Savannah; Gulf Stream, for Charleston; Benefactor, for Wilmington, N. C.; barks Hattie Gondey, for Havre; Commodore Dhpont, for Cadiz; Cuba, for Gibraltar; Falconi, for Messina; Joseph, for Cette; brigs F. H. Todd, for Key West; Atalaya, for Cienfuegos. Also, via Long Island Sound, bark Everhard Delius, for Portland; schrs. Active, for St. John, N. B.; John D. Griffin, for Salem.

SPOKEN.

By schr. Edward Johnson, Jan. 31, lat. 29, lon. 72 40, schr. Delhi.

MARINE DISASTERS.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 7.—The schr. T. J. Trafton, from Wiscasset, had a boat stove and her stern slightly damaged on the 6th inst., by collision with oyster-boat Sarah Ann while beating down the bay.

The barks Kings County and Malta, while coming up the river to-day collided, carrying away the Malta's bowsprit and damaging the Kings County's after-rail.

BY CABLE.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—Sld. 26th ult., Gaeta; 1st inst., Gjallarhorn, the latter for Smyrna; 3d inst., Lohengrin; 6th inst., Hermon, Capt. Dingles; Dartmouth, oliver Cloud; 7th inst., Mary S. Ames, the latter for Arr. 1st inst., Paul Thormann; 4th inst., Chebucto, Sigrid, Tancock, W. H. Jenkins; 5th inst., Annie Murr, J. Simonson, Alma, Capt. Lahmeger; 6th inst., Vasron, E. M. Golder, the latter at Liverpool; Germania, Capt. Veimow; 7th inst., America, Capt. Emerson; Harmonia, Capt. Gorstad; Rescue, Thredale, and Dumeo.

HAVRE, Feb. 7.—The General Transatlantic Co.'s steam-ship France, Capt. Trudelle, from New-York Jan. 27, arr. here at 8 o'clock this morning.

GLASGOW, Feb. 7.—The National Line steam-ship Spain, Capt. Grace, from New-York Jan. 28, for Liverpool, arr. here at midnight last night.

BRISTOL, Feb. 7.—Sld. steam-ship Arragon, Capt. Symons, for New-York.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—The Danish ship St. Albans, Capt. Beck, from London Jan. 24, for Pensacola, has put back to Deal.

LAUNA, Feb. 8.—The steam-ship State of Nevada sld. from here Sunday at 3 P. M. for New-York.

HAVANA, Feb. 7.—Arr. schr. Charles Platt, from Cardiff.

HAZELTON PIANO
TRIUMPHANT.
Excelsior! AT THE GREAT INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION, 1876.
OFFICIAL.
The undersigned have examined the
Grand, Square, and Upright PIANO-FORTES
OF HAZELTON BROTHERS
and unanimously recommend for the same the Highest Award, for the following reasons, viz:
ELASTIC TOUCH!
SINGING QUALITY!
DELICACY AND POWER OF TONE
WITH HIGHEST EXCELLENCE OF WORKMANSHIP.
(The above embrace all the qualities of a first-class Piano-forte.)
REPORT SIGNED BY ALL THE JUDGES.
Warerooms: 34 and 36 University Pl.

HERRING'S SAFES
THE
'World's Champions'
AT
GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.
ANOTHER GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES. THE LARGEST STOCK OF THE BEST SAFES IN THE WORLD TO SELECT FROM.
ALSO 200 SECOND-HAND SAFES (ALL MAKES) AT VERY LOW PRICES.
HERRING & CO.,
NOS. 251 AND 252 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK

STATEMENT
OF

The New-York Times.

VOL. XXVI.....NO. 7928. NEW-YORK, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1877. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

WASHINGTON.

DEMOCRATIC CRUELTY TO POLITICAL OPPONENTS.

THE CASE OF MESSRS. WELLS AND ANDERSON, OF THE LOUISIANA RETURNING BOARD—THEIR CLOSE IMPRISONMENT IN A DUNGEON—MR. HALE'S EFFORTS TO HAVE THE PRISONERS HUMANELY TREATED DEFEATED BY THE DEMOCRACY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—In the House today, Mr. Hale called attention to the cruel treatment to which Messrs. Wells and Anderson, of the Louisiana Returning Board, are treated by officers of the House, and introduced, a resolution directing that the gentlemen named be removed from the dungeon where they are now confined and placed in a room to be selected by the Speaker. Mr. Hale's remarks describing the unhealthy dungeon in which Messrs. Wells and Anderson are incarcerated, aroused some of those on the Democratic side who are smarting under the irritation caused by the decision of the Electoral Commission in the Florida case, notably S. S. Cox, who made a characteristic speech denouncing Wells and defending the officers of the House for their exhibitions of malice toward the two prisoners. With a clownish flourish he introduced the bill of fare furnished by the House restaurateur to show how comfortable an old man of near fourscore years can be made in a damp, badly-ventilated dungeon in the crypt of the Capitol. No complaint is made with reference to the feeding of the prisoners, but complaint is very justly made that these two men are selected for Democratic vengeance and treated with more severity and harshness than is exhibited toward common felons. If they were sent to the common jail they might not be fed so well as they now are, but they would be made comfortable in their lodgings, which is of as much importance to a man nearly 80 years of age as is his bill of fare. The previous question on Mr. Hale's resolution was voted down, when the matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges of the House, with instructions to make an early report.

Immediately after this matter was disposed of, Mr. Carr, of Indiana, who succeeded the late Speaker Kerr, introduced a preamble and resolutions declaring that as the Electoral Commission had rendered a decision that made it useless to continue taking evidence before committees of the House touching the Presidential election, therefore the Louisiana Returning Board should be immediately discharged from the custody of the House. This was intended as a reflection upon the action of the Commission, and indicates the feeling of the Democrats on this subject. Objection being made, the resolution could not be considered.

THE BOTTOM HAS FALLEN OUT.

THE TILDEN INQUISITION NO LONGER OF USE TO THE PARTY—NO FURTHER INTEREST TAKEN IN THE LOUISIANA INVESTIGATIONS—COMPLETE FAILURE OF A PETTIFOGGING CONGRESSMAN—ON THE RAGGED EDGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—David Dudley Field, who was sent to Washington by Mr. Tilden for the express purpose of frightening the Louisiana witnesses into making some statement damaging to the Republican cause, has been a complete failure. For a time it seemed as if, supported by his pet witnesses Littlefield and Maddox, he was going to do great things for the great reformer; but within the past few days the lying testimony of those adventurers has been completely broken down, and by their own words they have been proved to be, indeed, what Gov. Wells called them, "unmitigated liars," Mr. Field seems now to have given up the battle which he commenced with so much vigor a few days ago, and he does not take any prominent part in the investigation. A number of minor witnesses were examined to-day, among them Mr. E. W. Barnes, the Western Union Telegraph Manager in New-Orleans, but nothing new of importance was learned. It seems to-day as if the Florida investigation was to be entirely abandoned by the Democrats. Mr. Field has notified Gov. Stearns, Gen. Martin, and other witnesses that they will not be called upon to testify until next week, and that they might not be called at all. And so David Dudley's great scheme to bully his political opponents into making capital for his party friends falls to the ground. As the counsel for the old Boss, Tweed, he was not a success, and as the legal advisor of the would-be Boss, Tilden, he has been a decided failure.

THE SOUTH PASS JETTY BILL.

THE QUESTION OF PAYING CAPT. EADS THE HALF MILLION DUE HIM IN MONEY OR IN BONDS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—There is likely to be a sharp struggle between the House and the Senate over the bill appropriating $500,000 to Capt. Eads, as part payment for his Mississippi River improvements. The act of Congress provides that Eads shall be paid in money, or in bonds should no appropriation be available when his installment becomes due. The House passed a bill appropriating the money, but the Senate to-day amended the bill, making the amount payable in 5 per cent bonds, thus giving Eads a premium of $60,000, and adding $500,000 to the bonded debt of the United States, and issuing bonds at a higher rate of interest than is paid by the Government on its bonds now being negotiated. There can be no reason why the Government should run into debt and pay $60,000 as a premium for the privilege of doing it when its Treasury shows a large available balance. Mr. Eads, it is claimed, has the technical right to demand bonds, the appropriation not having been available when his money became due last month; but his demand for bonds has the appearance of a sharp business trick. The provision was made to allow him to claim bonds if no appropriation was available, in order that if his money became due during a recess of Congress, he might not be compelled to wait for many months for his pay. It was not expected when his bill was passed that the bonds would be at a premium. Of this unexpected fact Mr. Eads seeks to take advantage to obtain $60,000 more than his contract gives him.

THE SUIT AGAINST GEN. BELKNAP.

THE CASE DISMISSED AT THE REQUEST OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The case of the United States against Gen. Belknap was to-day dismissed on motion of the District Attorney, in accordance with the directions of the Attorney General, for the reason that the evidence would not sustain the prosecution. The action of the Attorney General is taken on the direction of President Grant, who indorses a report by the District Attorney as follows:

"In view of the within statement of the District Attorney of the District of Columbia to the effect that he believes a conviction improbable, and in view of the long suffering of the accused, and the great expense to which he has already been subjected, I think the District Attorney should be directed to dismiss the suit. U. S. GRANT."

The formal order of the Attorney General follows, and Judge MacArthur indorsed it:

"On reading the papers and instructions filed, and on motion of H. H. Wells, United States Attorney, it is ordered that the case—being indictment No. 11,262—be and the same is hereby dismissed. McARTHUR, Justice."

BREACH OF PROMISE SUIT.

A LADY CLERK IN THE TREASURY BRINGS SUIT AGAINST SENATOR SIMON CAMERON—DAMAGES CLAIMED IN THE SUM OF $50,000—WHAT IS SAID BY THE FRIENDS OF THE SENATOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The political and, to some extent, the social world of Washington was startled to-day by the announcement that a well-known law firm, on behalf of Mary S. Oliver, a lady employed in the Treasury Department, had brought a suit against the venerable Senator Simon Cameron for breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff is said to be a person of good appearance and address, and is between 35 and 40 years of age. She asks for damages in the sum of $50,000. Senator Cameron, as it is perhaps unnecessary to state, is nearly 80 years old. In her complaint the lady states that on the 7th day of December, 1875, "in consideration that the said plaintiff, who was then sole and unmarried, at the special instance and request of the said defendant, had then agreed and undertaken to marry and take the said defendant to husband, he, the said defendant, then, to wit on the day and year last aforesaid, undertook and faithfully promised the said plaintiff to marry and take her, the said plaintiff, to wife in a reasonable time, then next following, and she avers that although a reasonable time for that purpose hath long since elapsed, and although she, the said plaintiff, confiding in the said last-mentioned promise, hath always been ready and willing to marry and take to her husband him, the said defendant, yet defendant hath not taken her to wife, although often requested so to do." Senator Cameron's friends state that the suit is brought for the purpose of levying blackmail.

PRIVATE CLAIMS IN CONGRESS.

AN ATTEMPT TO SMUGGLE THROUGH A LOT OF CLAIMS—HOW THE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL WAS LOADED DOWN—ADVOCATES OF THEIR PAYMENT AFRAID OF THE RECORD—THE AGGREGATE AMOUNT INVOLVED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—While the Deficiency Appropriation bill was under consideration in the House yesterday in Committee of the Whole, a long list was presented of private claims against the Government, relating mainly to furnishing supplies to the Indian Bureau, some of them going back to 1861. The claims vary in amount from $20 to $47,000, and aggregate $465,000. They have been before Congress several times. Last year they were referred to the House Committee on Appropriations, reported back by that committee for investigation, and referred to the Committee on Claims. They remained in possession of that committee until last week, when they were again reported to the House without recommendation, and once more referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations refused to incorporate the claims in the Deficiency bill, because they believed they should receive proper investigation from a committee of the House. After some debate the claims were inserted in the bill yesterday as an amendment, by a vote of 97 to 53. To-day when the bill was reported to the House, a separate vote was demanded on this amendment, and it was stricken out on a division. Had it not been for the determination of those opposed to the amendment to call the yeas and nays to retain it in the bill, it would undoubtedly have succeeded. These claims may be just and proper, but they should be passed on individually after investigation, and not dumped into a general appropriation bill. The fact that those who advocated their payment shrink from putting themselves on record to direct their payment is a suspicious circumstance.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO.

THE BILL FOR THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE AWARD UNDER CONSIDERATION—TEN YEARS TO PAY OFF THE WHOLE AMOUNT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The Foreign Affairs Committee of the House had quite an extended session this morning, considering a bill for the distribution of the awards made by the Mexican Commission, which concluded its labors some days since. This commission has been in existence some years, and was created by a treaty made in 1868, between this country and Mexico, by which the claims of American citizens against Mexico, and the claims of Mexicans against the United States, were to be adjusted before this tribunal. The number of cases heard and adjudicated by the commission was very large, the awards being in favor of the United States claimants to the amount of $4,000,000. By the terms of the treaty Mexico is only required to pay $300,000 per annum of this amount until the entire sum of $4,000,000 is canceled. The first installment of $300,000 has been deposited by the Mexican Government, and the bill agreed upon by the committee to-day, and which will be offered to-morrow, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay this sum pro rata to the claimants who have been awarded judgments by the commission. An effort has been made to get such legislation as would direct this Government to pay the $4,000,000 awarded by the commission, the Government to have claim for that amount upon Mexico. This the committee would not agree to, but agreed upon the bill for a pro rata distribution of the $300,000 per annum. By this bill it will take about 10 years to pay off the whole award.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Yesterday's examination of Frederick C. Humphreys, the Florida Republican Elector, was not conducted by the Chairman of the Senate Privileges and Elections Committee, (Mr. Morton,) nor was it made under any special instructions of the Senate, as may have been inferred from the published report. Mr. Humphreys was subpœnaed and examined by Senator Sargent, as Chairman of the branch of the Privileges and Elections Committee which is known as the Senate Florida Committee.

The House Committee on Appropriations to-day commenced the preparation of the Army Appropriation bill, and agreed that all its items shall be framed upon the basis of a reduction of the force from 25,000 to 23,000 men.

The Senate Committee on Patents, owing to the absence of several of its members on investigating committees, did not meet to-day, and the important House bill, in regard to infringements of patents, requiring all suits to be commenced within 12 months from date of infringement, &c., therefore still remains on the docket of the committee without action.

The Post Office Appropriation bill as reported by the Senate Committee to-day is increased in amount about $1,800,000 over its total of $33,221,000 as passed by the House. The principal items of increase are as follows: For mail transportation by railroads, $800,000, (making the total for this purpose, $9,600,000;) compensation of Postmasters, $250,000; payment of letter-carriers, $150,000; railway Post Office clerks, $175,000; route agents, $105,000; mail-messengers, $100,000; clerks in Post Offices, $100,000; manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, $64,000; postal cards, $50,000; advertising, $20,000; miscellaneous and incidental expenses, $5,000. The total of the bill as now reported exceeds that of last year by about $450,000, but is $1,683,000 less than the estimates.

The Senate Committee on Finance will, at its meeting early next week, take into consideration the recent financial Message of President Grant.

The certificates of Electoral votes thus far acted on by the two houses in joint session are in charge of the tellers, and those not yet opened are in custody of the President pro tem. of the Senate. These certificates are carefully guarded by the respective parties against all possible danger.

The Senate, in executive session, to-day confirmed the following nominations: R. F. Kelly, of West Virginia, to be Register at Santa Fé, New-Mexico; Edward Chadel, to be Postmaster at Corning, N. Y.; T. B. Patton, to be Postmaster at Altoona, Penn.; J. H. Marsten, to be Postmaster at Cohoes, N. Y.

The following is a statement of the balances in the United States Treasury to-day at the close of business: Currency, $10,816,976; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $35,310,000; coin, including $55,235,600 in certificates, $88,115,562; outstanding legal tenders, $364,984,812.

Albert Peyser, an alleged ineligible Democratic Elector from West Virginia, arrived here this morning in obedience to a subpœna from the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is claimed that Peyser is a native of Poland, and has never been naturalized as a citizen of this country. Several witnesses have been subpœnaed to testify in the case. Mr. Peyser claims to be a native of New-York State.

The receipts from Internal Revenue to-day were $400,697 32; and from Customs, $584,457 70.

The Smithsonian Institute to-day received a dispatch from France announcing the discovery of a new planet of the twelfth magnitude by Mr. Barnelly, of the Paris Observatory. The planet was observed on Feb. 5, 10 hours and 36 minutes right ascension, 9° 29 north declination; motion north.

Lieut. Commander Thomas Nelson has been ordered to the Hydrographic Office on the 15th inst.; Assistant Surgeon George P. Lumsden to the training-ship Minnesota at New-York, and Passed Assistant Engineer William A. H. Allen to duty in the Bureau of Steam Engineering. Lieut. L. C. Logan has reported his return home, having been detached from the Tennessee, Asiatic Station, on the 17th of December last, and has been placed on waiting orders. Chief Engineer William B. Brooks has been ordered from the Marion and fleet engineership of the European Station on the reporting of his relief, and ordered to return home and await orders.

RAID ON A LOT OF COCK-FIGHTERS.

BRUTAL SPORTSMEN UNDER ARREST IN PHILADELPHIA — ONE OF THEIR NUMBER FATALLY SHOT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 8.—This morning before daylight a detachment of Police officers made a raid on a cock-pit located on Forty-first street, near the Centennial Buildings, where some 200 persons were witnessing a main. The building in which the fights took place was used as a restaurant during the Centennial, and had been excavated and all the appliances of a pit introduced. Forty-five persons were arrested, and one man named Patrick McGrory, living in the extreme south-western part of the city, was shot and killed. It is supposed that he was killed by some of the parties inside, as the Police fired but one shot, and the ball lodged in the ceiling. All the parties arrested were discharged from custody to-night by Chief of Police Jones, there being no tangible evidence to hold them. He consulted with Assistant District Attorney Hagert on the subject, and ascertained there was no law to suit the case. McGrory, who was employed to handle some of the birds, leaves a wife and six children. The participants comprised some of the lowest thieves in the city, and their statements are so conflicting regarding the death of McGrory that additional investigation will be necessary before it can be determined who is the murderer.

THE BALL TO THE GRAND DUKE AT NORFOLK.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NORFOLK, Feb. 8.—The naval ball of the officers on this station in honor of the Grand Duke Alexis and the Russian naval officers took place to-night. The ball-room for the occasion was the sail-loft in the Navy yard, which was most elaborately decorated. The banquet hall was over the main entrance to the yard, where several tables were spread, elegantly decorated with bouquets and novelties in the culinary art. All that art could devise, experience suggest, or money purchase, has been exhausted in making this an event in the history of naval balls. Commodore McCready, of the Old Dominion Steam-ship Company, placed the steamer N. P. Banks at the disposition of the Committee of Arrangements to transport the guests from this City to the Navy-yard. Over 1,200 invitations were sent out.

INDIANS AND WHITE HORSE-THIEVES.

CHEYENNE, Feb. 7.—The following report is brought by a herder who arrived here last night. It lacks confirmation. He says that on the 5th inst., while he was herding cattle 12 miles south of Pine Bluffs, and about 50 miles south-east of this city, he came upon about 30 Cheyenne Indians, who appeared to have gone into camp permanently. The herder was on foot when he discovered the Indians and hid himself in the bushes until he could escape unobserved. The Indians found his pony and took it into their camp. Night before last the Indians drove off seven head of stock from Sabelle's ranch. The herders were chased by the Indians, but escaped. Last week a lot of ponies were stolen from the Red Cloud agency by white horse-thieves. A party of soldiers went in pursuit, and yesterday overtook and captured two of the thieves, recovering 26 ponies. There was a third man with the stolen ponies, who managed to get away.

MEETING OF THE CANAL BOARD.

ALBANY, Feb. 8.—At the meeting of the Canal Board to-day, the proposition of Daniel Candee to settle his pending contracts was agreed to. The Committee on Construction reported in favor of granting the petition to complete the Oneida Lake Canal to a depth of five feet, the State to be secured to the extent of $5,000 annually for 10 years, against loss for deficiency of revenue, and that the rates of toll be sufficiently high to cover expenses. The matter of the toll sheet was taken up, and Mr. Walrath's motion to adopt the toll sheet of 1876 for 1877 was lost, 2 to 5. On motion of Mr. Dorsheimer it was resolved to hold a meeting on March 31 next, when the appeal calendar will be taken up. The complaint against W. H. Bunn, Superintendent of Section 9 of the Erie Canal, after the examination of several witnesses, was dismissed.

THE PORT DEPOSIT ICE.

PORT DEPOSIT, Feb. 8.—The ice-gorge at this point continues to waste away. The ice field below is still unbroken, but is hourly growing weaker. The rolling stock of the railroad companies will remain here to-night for the first time since Saturday night, but the steam will be kept in the engines, and a watchman will remain on duty to give the alarm and have them removed in case of danger. All trains leave and arrive at the depot now, as usual, and little apprehension is felt of another inundation.

NEWSBOYS AIDING STRIKING PRINTERS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Following in the wake of the printers' strike, the newsboys yesterday struck against the Post, and becoming riotous and abusive toward the proprietor and policemen, five were taken into custody and this morning sent to Bridewell for 30 days. The Post, on its bulletin-board this morning, announced that it would keep up the fight and manage its own business. It charges that the newsboys were hired by the discharged printers and by the union to strike, and gives notice that the carriers will sell the papers on the streets. The "cases" were taken by new men in sufficient number to admit of the issue of to-day's edition as usual.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

ELIGIBILITY OF AN ELECTOR.

THE CASE OF MR. HUMPHREYS, OF FLORIDA—SHARP PRACTICE BY THE DEMOCRATIC LAWYERS CHECKED — ARGUMENTS OF MESSRS. HOADLEY, GREEN, AND MERRICK ON THE DEMOCRATIC SIDE, AND MESSRS. SHELLABARGER AND EVARTS ON THE REPUBLICAN SIDE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The meeting of the Electoral Commission to-day was regarded with great interest, because of the knowledge that the decision made yesterday was to be announced, and the public hearing was to be continued. The court-room, however, was not so much crowded with spectators as usual. Particularly was the absence noted of Senators and members of the House who have been regular in attendance at the sittings. There was no appearance of excitement, and one would not have guessed from the appearance of the Commissioners or the counsel, that an important and probably a conclusive decision had already been rendered in the great case pending. The Democrats, who last night for a time completely surrendered, collected their senses and determined to renew the contest. They even professed to be entirely satisfied with the decision of the Commission. Many of them seem even to have reasoned themselves once more into a feeling of confidence. Thus excitement was allayed and disappointment was covered up. They thought they could gain something under the second order of the court concerning evidence in the cases of ineligible Electors, and will make that hereafter the leading issue which they will urge in Louisiana and Oregon, and will rest upon the argument of Judge Hoadley. Of his position, it must be said that it is taken and sustained with great ingenuity, and his argument reminds one of some curious and wonderful contrivance, amusing and interesting to examine, but which is of no sort of use except to display the skill of the inventor. It will not stand the test of common sense or of the settled authorities. He makes, for instance, the point that, where ineligible Electors are voted for, instead of producing a vacancy in the college, it is a failure to elect, which is not a vacancy within the meaning of the State laws which authorize the college to fill up the places of missing members. His theory, carried into practice, would compel Electoral Colleges, before filling a vacancy, to make an investigation and determine whether the absentees were eligible or ineligible; which is, of course, wholly impracticable. The Commission at 5 o'clock adjourned till to-morrow morning, when the private consultation on the final question in this case will begin. There was a motion to take a recess of half an hour with a view to deciding the case to-night, but the motion to adjourn was made, and it was noted that it was carried by Justice Bradley voting with the Democrats. Probably he voted against prolonging the wearisome session of to-day, because his own physical strength is not very great, and he is anxious not to become sick and unable to discharge his duty.

The long day of argument on the Florida case made the session a dull one, as there were no new points under consideration, except that relative to the eligibility of Humphreys. The Democratic counsel began the day with a characteristic trick, which illustrates the Democratic methods in the management of their case. The Commission announced through its presiding officer, Justice Clifford, that evidence would be received relative to the ineligibility of Humphreys. Mr. Green, the New-Jersey counsel, called to the stand the Democratic Attorney General of Florida, and, after asking him the usual formal questions without making any reference to the case of Humphreys on which the Commission had directed evidence to be taken, asked a direct question as to the bringing of the quo warranto proceedings against the Hayes Electors. The coolness, the indescribable impudence of this attempt of the Democrats astounded the audience and the Commission, and even the Republican counsel hesitated a moment before Mr. Evarts offered an objection to the question, on the ground that it was not within the scope of the order of the Commission. Mr. Green seriously proposed to go on and present evidence as to the quo warranto proceedings, but was ruled out by the Commission. He then dismissed his witness, who knew nothing at all about Humphreys. Another witness was called who had dealings with Humphreys as Shipping Commissioner up to last August. A copy of Humphreys' appointment was produced, and that concluded the Democratic case. Mr. Humphreys himself, was called, and briefly examined by Mr. Stoughton, and he produced the resignation and acceptance already published. This ended the taking of evidence. The attempt of the Democrats to get in other testimony, in spite of the Commission, was laughed at and ridiculed on all sides.

They asked for an hour more of time for argument than was allowed them under the rules, and the request was granted. Mr. Evarts declined to have any additional time given to the Republicans, who did not consume all of their two hours. The demand for time on the part of the Democrats was to enable Judge Hoadley, of Cincinnati, who fortified the Grover trick by a legal opinion, and sent to Oregon the brief which determined Grover's action, to present the argument upon which his great intellect has exhausted itself, respecting the method of treating Postmasters in the Electoral College. He read in the Florida case a large part of his Oregon brief, which he had in print. He claimed, first, that Humphreys could not get out of the office till his resignation was accepted by the court in open session, and that Judge Woods' acceptance, sent from Ohio, was of no value. Having made the point that Humphreys was, in spite of all his efforts and the exercise of the office by another person, still Shipping Commissioner, Hoadley was prepared to go into the general discussion. The point of his whole speech was that, in the case of Humphreys there was a failure to elect, and, therefore, if the Hayes certificate were received, only three votes could be counted. The reply to all this was, that there was no need for Humphreys to have his resignation accepted by any body. There was no term to the office, and he could divest himself of it at any time by his own act, as the evidence showed he had done before the election. This position was fortified by authorities, and seems to be unassailable.

The counsel made arguments upon the case as presented by the three sets of certificates; but, as before stated, the points presented were not new. The speakers on the Democratic side were Judge Hoadley and Mr. Green, of New-Jersey, who did not add much to the case, and Mr. Merrick, who closed their side, but made much less impression than in his first speech. Mr. Shellabarger, of Ohio, opened for the Republicans in a very earnest speech, relating to the finality of the State action as legally certified. Mr. Evarts concluded on the same side, using only time enough to collect the fragments of the case, so to speak, and to cite authorities to refute the Democratic position.

It is said that some of the Supreme Court decisions cited by Mr. Merrick, were designedly selected so as to introduce several written by Judge Bradley, but it does not appear that any of them have such a relation to the case as to embarass his action.

In regard to the final result from the action of the Commission, not only with respect to the vote of Florida, but the votes of the other disputed States, the opinion is stronger to-day than last night that Hayes will receive the election. The Democratic leaders privately give up their case, in spite of the public demonstration which they continue. Judge Black, who always opposed the compromise bill and advocated the Clarkson N. Potter policy, is entirely dependent, and possibly will not appear again with the counsel. The vote of Florida will, without doubt, be counted for Hayes, whenever the two house again meet in joint assembly. As to Louisiana, it is well understood it will be quickly disposed of, according to the orders made in regard to Florida. There will be but one set of arguments, which will extend through two days, and some time may be taken in introducing evidence as to the two ineligible Electors in that State, Brewster and Levisse, who remained away from the meeting of the college and were appointed to fill the vacancies, their Federal offices having been previously resigned. The argument of Judge Hoadley will be applied in their cases by the Democrats, that there was a failure to elect which could not be remedied by the remaining members of the College. This, in the view of Republicans, will not be held by the Commission. Oregon will also be decided on a single set of arguments. The other contests will consume but a few hours' time. South Carolina will not be submitted to argument, so far as is now determined, though the double returns must go before the Commission. As to the reports of objections to other votes in other States, they are of no value, as it is certain that no objection can anywhere be raised that will be sustained by the concurrent action of both houses.

It is unfortunate and unfair to the Republicans that all cases of ineligible Electors do not go before the Commission. As it is, the disputed States alone can have their cases submitted; but the Republican position relative to the disposition of them will undoubtedly hold before the Commission. Judge Hoadley was introduced into the Florida case as a forlorn hope, precipitating the position that was to be taken when Oregon should be reached. This was an evidence of weakness, and was a sudden change of front, which denoted the expectation of disaster, unless something unusual and heroic could be accomplished.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

The Commission met at 11 A. M. The journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. The Presiding Justice announced that the Commission was ready to proceed with the case subject to the orders issued yesterday, and of which counsel had been advised.

Mr. Merrick, for the Democratic side, then called George P. Raney, who testified as follows: I reside in Tallahassee, Fla.; I am, by profession, a lawyer, and am at present the Attorney General of the State of Florida; an the 6th day of December, 1876, I was in the City of Tallahassee.

Mr. Merrick asked whether the witness had any knowledge as to the service of the writ of quo warranto on the Hayes Electors on that day.

To this question, Mr. Evarts, for the Republican side, objected on the ground that it did not come within the limits of the order of the Commission, which related only to the eligibility of Mr. Humphreys.

Mr. Green, for the Democrats, said his side proposed to prove by this witness the simple fact as to the precise time when the writ of quo warranto was served upon the Hayes Electors. It was not, he said, apprehended by himself and his associates that the order made by the Commission excluded in its spirit the consideration of the quo warranto proceedings, and by the present witness he merely desired to fix the exact time the quo warranto was served. The objection of Mr. Evarts was sustained, and the witness was withdrawn.

Mr. Green then called James E. Yonge, who testified that he was a practicing lawyer in Pensacola, Fla.; that he knew Frederick C. Humphreys, and had known him for about 10 years; Humphreys' present business is agent for an express company, but has been United States Shipping Commissioner.

Mr. Evarts interposed the objection that if an official position is to be proved as by authority communicated from the Government, the official appointment should, in the absence of some reason to the contrary —

Mr. Green stated that the testimony given was evidence of the use of the office.

Mr. Evarts—My objection is that use is not sufficient in a matter pending upon authority.

The Presiding Justice—Let the official appointment be produced to save objections.

Mr. Green then produced and read in evidence the order of the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Florida, December term, 1876, appointing Frederick C. Humphreys, of Pensacola, Shipping Commissioner for that port. To this order is attached Humphreys' acceptance of the office, and his official oath, and a certificate from the Clerk of the Court dated Jan. 24, 1877, setting forth that there is on file no resignation, or acceptance of resignation, of the said Humphreys as such Shipping Commissioner.

Witness continued: I know Frederick C. Humphreys, one of the persons voted for as Elector for President and Vice President of the United States; he is the same person of whom I have spoken as United States Commissioner; I have had transactions with Humphreys as such Commissioner, beginning in the early part of 1873 and extending up to some time in the latter part of August, 1876; as a lawyer I have frequently had occasion to communicate with him on the subject of the discharge of American seamen; his duties as Shipping Commissioner related to matters between American seamen and ship-masters.

Here Mr. Green announced the direct examination of this witness closed.

Mr. Stoughton stated that he had no cross-examination.

Mr. Green—That is all we propose to offer by way of affirmative evidence, unless there may be something which may be required to be offered by way of rebuttal to the testimony offered on the other side.

Mr. Evarts—Without commenting upon the state of the proof thus reached, and without saying anything as to rebuttal, principally upon the point that no evidence has been adduced that shows that Humphreys held the office of Shipping Commissioner at the date of the November election, we will introduce the proof on our part that he did not, and then leave the question for discussion.

TESTIMONY OF MR. HUMPHREYS.

Frederick C. Humphreys was then called, sworn, and examined as follows:

By Mr. Stoughton—Q.—Were you a candidate for Elector on the Republican ticket at the last election? A.—I was.

Q.—Had you, prior to being a candidate, held any office, and if so, what? A.—I was United States Shipping Commissioner for the port of Pensacola.

Q.—When did you cease to act as such? A.—On the 5th day of October, when the acceptance of my resignation was received from Judge Woods, from whom the appointment came.

Q.—Did you resign your position? A.—I did.

Q.—By resignation delivered to whom? A.—By resignation through the mail.

Q.—To whom? A.—To Judge Woods.

Q.—Have you in your possession the acceptance of that resignation? A.—I have.

The witness produced the paper and handed it to Mr. Stoughton, who, after perusal, turned it over to Mr. Merrick for examination.

Mr. Merrick objected to its introduction or acceptance as the acceptance of a resignation, as it is the act of an individual and not of the court.

By Mr. Stoughton—Q.—You received this paper from Judge Woods in reply to your resignation sent through the mail? A.—I did, Sir.

Mr. Stoughton read the letter accompanying the acceptance, as follows:

NEWARK, Ohio, Oct. 2, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I inclose the acceptance of your resignation as Shipping Commissioner. The vacancy can only be filled by the Circuit Court, and until I come to Pensacola to open court for that purpose the duties of the office will have to be discharged by the Collector. Respectfully yours, W. B. WOODS.

Major F. C. HUMPHREYS, Pensacola, Fla.

Mr. Stoughton then read the acceptance, as follows:

NEWARK, Ohio, Oct. 2, 1876.

F. C. Humphreys, Esq., Pensacola, Fla.:

Your letter of the 24th of September, 1876, resigning your office of United States Shipping Commissioner at the port of Pensacola, in the State of Florida, has been received by me, and your resignation of said office is hereby accepted. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. WOODS, United States Circuit Judge.

Q.—Did you receive the paper which I hold in my hand, dated Oct. 5, 1876, from Hiram Potter, Collector of Customs at Pensacola? A.—I did, Sir.

Q.—Is that his signature? A.—That is his signature.

Mr. Merrick—We object to that paper.

The Presiding Justice—It will be received subject to the decision of the Commission as to its effect.

The letter was then read. It is from Hiram Potter, Jr., Collector of Customs, dated "Collector's office, Pensacola, Oct. 5, 1876," and requests that Humphreys turn over to the writer such public books, papers, and records as might appertain to the business of Shipping Commissioner, the duties of which office, as he was informed, being devolved upon him [the writer] upon the resignation of Mr. Humphreys.

Q.—Did you cease to act in your office from the time of the receipt of the letter accepting your resignation? A.—I did.

Q.—Have you acted in that capacity since? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Has the Collector acted in your stead? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you turn over to the Collector whatever you had of public papers or property connected with the office, if you had any? A.—I had none; the blanks were my personal property, bought and paid for with my own money.

Cross-examined by Mr. Merrick—Have you a copy of your letter of resignation? A.—I have not a copy of my letter of resignation; I sent it by mail to Newark, in the State of Ohio, where the Judge was on a visit.

Q.—Has there been any session of the United States Circuit Court for that district since the date of that resignation? A.—There has not.

Q.—When did you receive Judge Woods' reply to your letter of resignation? A.—On the 5th of October.

Mr. Merrick announced that he had no further examination to make of this witness and nothing to offer in rebuttal.

The Presiding Justice—The testimony is therefore closed.

OPENING OF THE ARGUMENT.

The Presiding Justice then called the attention of counsel to the third rule of the Commission, which states that counsel, not exceeding two in number on each side, will be heard by the Commission on the merits of any case presented to it, not longer than two hours being allowed to each side, unless a longer time and additional counsel should be especially authorized by the Commission. He considered himself instructed to say that the whole case was now opened for argument under that rule. If there are two counsel on a side, he thought the order before observed should be continued, and that one of the counsel, representing the objectors to certificate No. 1, should open and one on the other side reply, and then the counsel having the affirmative should have the close.

Mr. Merrick requested that three counsel be heard for the objectors, and that a slight addition be permitted to the time which counsel should be allowed in which to present the case, the reason, as he stated, being that a new and important question had been raised upon the testimony this morning in reference to Mr. Humphreys, enlarging very considerably the sphere of argument, and counsel on his side desired to present that question very fully.

Mr. Justice Miller remarked that all the other questions involved had been thoroughly discussed on the first argument. The effect of the papers submitted by the President of the Senate was carefully argued by counsel on both sides, and it seemed to him the Commission must proceed diligently with the discharge of its duties, and that the arguments upon the question immediately before it should be closed to-day.

In reply to an inquiry from the Presiding Justice, Mr. Evarts announced that his side did not wish more than two hours, even if three were allowed on the other side, nor did he wish that any greater number than two counsel should be heard on his side.

JUDGE HOADLEY'S ARGUMENT FOR THE OBJECTORS.

Mr. Hoadley then opened the argument for the objectors on the Democratic side. He said that it had been established by proof that Mr. Humphreys held the office of Shipping Commissioner by appointment of the Circuit Court of the United States, in Florida, and that before the November election he attempted to divest himself of this office by forwarding a paper resignation, and getting from a Judge—not from the court—what purported to be an acceptance of that resignation. The powers of this officer (Shipping Commissioner) he stated to be laid down and derived from section 4,501 of the Revised Statutes, and the resignation cannot be made except to the same power as that making the appointment. The resignation of Mr. Humphreys, therefore, he argued, could not be made to the Judge, he was at the time in Ohio. He referred in support of this point, to the case of Badger et al. against the United States, ex relatione Bolt, and claimed that the same doctrine laid down in that case would be found in the second volume of the opinions of the Attorney General, page 713. Humphreys, he said, had been duly appointed to this office, and he considered that the Judge, acting in Ohio, was not the Circuit Court of Florida, and that as he could not relieve Humphreys from the duties with which he had been vested by another power, namely, the Circuit Court of Florida, the alleged resignation was of no effect. Palpably, therefore, Mr. Humphreys, in his opinion, held an office of profit or trust on the day of the election, and the vote cast by him could not be counted.

Mr. Commissioner Thurman inquired whether this was an office the resignation of which must be accepted in order to give the resignation validity, or whether the officer could resign of his own motion at any time.

Mr. Hoadley remarked that there was nothing in the statement with reference to the question of resignation. Humphreys, however, having accepted the office, could not, he submitted, divest himself of it by his own act alone, because public policy required that the offices should not be entirely at the will and pleasure of the office-holder. Especially was this the case with offices for the performance of the duties of which a bond was required. Mr. Hoadley regarded the provision of the Constitution disqualifying persons holding offices of profit or trust as mandatory, and as a limitation and diminution of the grant of power to the State, that grant not being to the people of the State, but to the State itself in its organized and corporate capacity. This provision, he maintained, is in substance imperative and admits of no evasion. He read from the Madison papers, page 343, to show that the framers of the Constitution intended that this disqualification should attach as an exception or proviso to the grant of power to the State to elect Electors, and that it should attach by disqualification of all ineligible persons. The State was disqualified from appointing a disqualified Elector. The disqualification was therefore two-fold; first, upon the appointing power, and, secondly, upon the candidate; and the effect of such disqualification, he submitted, was to render the action of the State in that regard null and void. It was the duty of the Federal Government, not of the States, to insist upon and carry into full force the provision. The question was not a new one. In 1837 there had been five Postmasters appointed, or attempted to be appointed as Presidential Electors. The question had then been submitted (on a resolution offered by Henry Clay) to a select committee of the two houses, and the report of that committee, made by Mr. Grundy, was to the effect that a single unauthorized vote could not vitiate the whole vote of the Electoral College, and that the constitutional prohibition ought to be carried in its whole spirit into rigid execution, in order to prevent officers of the general Government from bringing official power to influence the Presidential election; that the provision excluded and disqualified even Deputy Postmasters, and that the resignation of the office after the appointment of the Elector did not entitle him to vote as an Elector.

Senator Edmunds—What did the committee say ought to be done?

Mr. Hoadley—Only that the article ought to be carried in its whole spirit into rigid execution.

Senator Edmunds—Have you read the conclusion of the report?

Mr. Hoadley—Only in an excerpt.

Senator Edmunds—I had the impression that the committee had added something else.

Mr. Hoadley went on to say that two questions were presented here: First, Did Humphreys at the time he was elected hold an office of profit and trust? Second, What is the effect of such holding? He argued that there was a multitude of cases in England and America, citing some of them, all of which treated the appointment of one who was nonqualified and attempted to act as an absolutely null appointment; and in one Indiana case the next highest competing candidate was declared app tion is the nature of appointment which may be exercised by the States after the office has passed away? Such a proposition as that simply reduces this whole debate to the most intense and unmitigated absurdity. Therefore, as the act of the State in the way of exercising power must be appointment, and as appointment cannot, in the very nature of the case, follow the day when the last and the first and only act of the functionary by the Constitution and the law, be completely discharged, is it not plain therefore that it was the design of the Constitution, and is the express provision of the Constitution, that every act of a State when it can discharge or perform at all (being mere appointments) shall antedate the vote?"

Senator Thurman—Does it follow that there can be no inquiry afterward whether any appointment was made?

Mr. Shellabarger—I will come to that in a moment, and I thank the Senator for the suggestion whether acts subsequent to the date of appointment may not be looked to as throwing light on the question when the appointee really was. That is a fair question, and deserves a fair, frank, square answer, and I make it as well as I can. My answer is this: If an Elector is on the voting day endowed with all the insignia of right, with all the apparent title to office which can according to the State machinery be held on that day, he is, as against the States, the Elector both de facto and de jure, and thus rises out of the very nature of this sui generis thing with which we deal, having no likeness anywhere else in the Governments of the world or in the laws of the world. It is a case where two sovereignties combine in the process of inaugurating a Government and of creating the executive branch of a powerful people. When that process is completed on the part of the State, when all that it is permitted to transact in that regard has been discharged, then the thing is an accomplished fact, and the power of the State has passed away forever, and the thing becomes from that moment, of Federal care and solicitude. In other words, every part of the machinery must be placed in front, in point of times, of the exercise of the office of Elector. No part of it can be placed behind, because on that day the power of the State over the subject matter is completely and forever ended. If I, in my State of Ohio, being a partisan, find out how the other States have voted, and that it only requires 19 votes to be destroyed in order to destroy the Presidential election, could I not, if the principle contended for on the other side is to prevail, go to work in my local, partisan, nisi prius court, and get a judgment on quo warranto that will defeat the election in any State, and unseat the President of the United States? I know that such a working of our machinery is revolting to every man whom I now address, and yet I defy the ingenuity of counsel to devise an answer by which that mischief will not come if you suffer him. It is inevitable that, if you suffer men to start away down in the "speedily" courts of the country, on their private notions, with quo warrantos, with bills in the Legislature, or with any other act that shall unseat the President of the United States before the day of counting, you can unseat him after he is inaugurated. I challenge the gentlemen to show that rule of law which says: "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." If you can unseat Mr. Tilden, before being President, by the judgment of a Republican court in my Republican State, you can do it after he is in office. There is no limitation of the power; there is no principle which compels courts which have jurisdiction in cases of quo warranto to make their decision before the court in February or before the inauguration day. Establish that rule, and you at once put it in the power of the States to overthrow the Constitution and destroy the Government.

MR. EVARTS' CLOSING ADDRESS.

Mr. Evarts closed the argument on the Republican side. He said the wisdom of the method and order of this examination adopted by the Commission has fully approved itself in its execution. The intelligent and experienced minds of the members of the Commission saw at once that the decisive lines of the controversy were to be determined on limitations of its powers and the limitation of the subject matters. In the full discussion accorded to counsel, and in the deliberations of the Commission, the result is declared in this form and to this effect: That the Commission will receive no evidence, but will merely inspect the certificates which the Constitution and the laws of the United States have authorized for transmission, and which the President of the Senate has opened to the two houses. The Commission has decided that in one particular it will receive evidence touching the eligibility of one of the Florida Electors, Humphreys. I do not understand the Commission to have ever passed upon the question what the effect is as to the acceptance or rejection of a vote thus challenged for ineligibility, but to have decided that on that point it will receive the evidence which may be offered, first, as to whether the exception taken to Mr. Humphreys' vote is maintainable, and, secondly, whether if maintainable and maintained, the methods of the Constitution permit of any rejection from the certificated vote transmitted and opened on that ground.

Mr. Evarts went on to argue that the evidence in regard to Humphreys holding office fell short of showing that he was in office at the time of casting the Electoral vote, and that the burden of proving it rested on the side that made the objection; and that the counter proof showed that early in October he had resigned his office in writing to the Circuit Judge, and had received from him a letter of acceptance and instructions to turn over whatever of public means he had for the exercise of the office to the Collector of Customs, who would discharge the office; and that the Collector had at the same time been notified by the Judge that the office had devolved upon him. Was it, he asked, to be pretended that, under the law, there was any power to hold an occupant of a civil office to the performance of its duties a moment beyond his will? The authorities, he said, were clear as to the right of a citizen resigning an office without his resignation being accepted. All that was necessary was to make a public vacation of the office. He then went on to say:

This subject, then, being rejected from further consideration, I understand that there is no matter left, but for the execution by this Commission of the duty accorded to it by the act of Congress under which it is organized—to determine out of the material of these three certificated votes, what, how many, votes are to be counted for the State of Florida. The first is subject to no criticism. No fact can contravene this vote. It is to be counted, not because it is the best, but on account of the absolute fullness of its title in complying with all laws that have been imposed by Congress concerning the completeness, verification of a certificate. The fact certified is not gainsaid by proof, (for it is excluded.) There was no offer of proof between the fact of the canvass being closed and recorded, and the Governor's certificate. This certificate, then, includes, with every degree of certainty and assurance, the vote of the State of Florida. There are four votes here and there is room for no more. To make it, therefore, of any practical importance in further discussion, there must be apparent in the other two certificates, either such disparagement of the first, or such authenticity in themselves, as shall displace the one and substitute the other, or there must be such a production of rival and competing certificates as leave the Commission in doubt and uncertainty as to which votes ought to be counted. Now, as you will not allow evidence outside of the first certificate as bearing on its actual affirmative authenticity and sufficiency, you will not allow any such evidence collaterally on the mere presentation and support of any other certificate.

Mr. Evarts went on to argue against the second and third certificates, and said that the Attorney General who authenticated the second certificate had no more right to do it than the Militia commander had. As to the third certificate, signed by Gov. Drew, it was a posthumous certificate, a post-mortem action, not proceeding from any vital or living Governor of the State, but only from the agency of interested party purposes taking effect after the whole transaction was ended. If such a thing could be done, then all the care, and wisdom, and contrivances, that were to make this transaction of the States final at some point, certible at some point, in some manner, and by some officer were to go for nothing; and where there were new officers, new interests, new Legislatures, then all the powers of the State could be corrupted, subtracted, obscured, or defeated.

What, said he, are the prodigious claims here? That by a lawsuit in a State court, the State's complete vote is to be retrieved and restored, and that when a Judge of the State court has so decided, the Supreme Court of the United States must make a low obeisance to Mr. Judge White, and say, That is the end of the law; that is the fiat of the State. Well, suppose that we do succeed in counting a President in, and suppose that a quo warranto is started to prove that the President in his seat should be dislodged because some of the votes counted for him were not cast by de jure Electors; then it is proposed that the decision of the State Court is the "be-all" and the "end-all" of this inquiry. What sort of a Government is that? The Presidency; what sort of muniments and protection, of regularity and permanence of authority under the Constitution are provided by a scheme of perpetual four years' dependency on a quo warranto in the State of Nevada or of Florida? You must never lose sight of the matter that you are to advise what votes and how many shall be counted by the two houses, and when you have determined that extraneous evidence shall not invade the regularity of the finished transaction of a State, you have determined, as by a double decision, that it shall not be invaded, disparaged, or exposed to any question by a mere certificate which is its own agent and author—a volunteer in disturbance in the counting of the votes.

MR. MERRICK'S CLOSING ARGUMENT ON THE DEMOCRATIC SIDE.

Mr. Merrick closed the argument on the Democratic side. He said that when counsel of the other side called the attention of the Commission to the dangers of interfering by legal proceedings with the Electoral votes as transmitted to the President of the Senate, he had omitted to call attention to the counterpart of the picture—the condition of a Government with a person stepping into the Presidential chair along a path way strewn with frauds, perjuries, and crimes, into which the people were neither allowed to inquire through their representatives in the State Government, or through their representatives in the Federal Government. He apprehended that in considering the picture presented by the learned counsel, the Commission would find in looking at the counterpart a picture more offensive and revolting to the mind and heart of every patriotic citizen, and one from which we must all start back amazed and shocked. All that was asked on this side was that the truth should be (under the rules of evidence as prescribed by the Commission) ascertained, on which the Commission was to act, and that, when ascertained, it should become in its legal results a practical fact in the political history of the country. Mr. Merrick, coming down to the question of the alleged ineligibility of Humphreys, said that his commission had been put in evidence, and the fact that he acted under it down to a very recent date, and that therefore the burden of proof rested on the other side to show that at the time of casting the Electoral vote Humphreys did not hold the office. He argued that until the resignation was accepted by the power that conferred the office, and that fact appeared on record, he must be held to be still occupying the office.

Representative Hoar put the case of an office-holder being elected to the Senate, and asked whether, if his resignation of office were not accepted, he was thereby to be kept from his seat.

Mr. Merrick replied that the fact of his being admitted to his seat in the Senate would be a discharge from the office which he had held, provided he had, prior to that time, tendered his resignation.

Mr. Hoar inquired whether the same rule would not apply in the case of an Elector as well as in the case of a Senator.

Mr. Merrick replied that in the case of a Senator the disability would be only personal, while in that of an Elector it was impersonal; in other words, the State was positively forbidden to appoint an office-holder as an Elector. It was a limitation upon the power of the State, and not a personal disability of the man.

Representative Abbott—You also claim that, even if the acceptance of the resignation was not necessary, the resignation itself must be made to the court.

Mr. Merrick—Unquestionably. The resignation must be made to the power that gave the appointment. Suppose Humphreys had resigned to the Clerk of the court, addressing a private letter to the Clerk at Newark, Ohio; would that be sufficient?

The Presiding Justice—But if he sent it to the Judge, and the Judge directed it to be filed?

Mr. Merrick—That is done while the court is in session, then it is the act of the court.

Representative Garfield—Do you hold that in case of a long vacation, or in case of the court being abolished by law, or in case of the death of the Judge who gave the appointment, this officer never could have resigned?

Mr. Merrick—I should have referred that case to one of the Returning Boards in the South. I hardly know what reply to make.

Mr. Garfield—I understand your position to be that he could not resign except while the court was in session.

Mr. Merrick—I presume that death, and the extinction of an office, and the abolition of a Government, and the wiping out of a nation, make exceptions to all principles of law.

Justice Miller—You say that the distinction between the man who accepts the office of Senator and the man who accepts the office of Elector is that in the one case the objection goes to the power of the State, and in the other case it does not. What is the difference in the question of the power of the State?

Mr. Merrick—In the one case the prohibition is that no person shall be a Representative or a Senator who has not attained a certain age; in the other case it is that no person shall be appointed Elector who holds an office of trust or profit. Whenever there is a power given to do an act, the donee of the power can only exercise it according to the precise restrictions and limitations of the donation.

Mr. Merrick then passed on to the question of the rival certificates, and was arguing in favor of the legitimacy of the second and third certificates, (the Tilden certificates.)

Senator Thurman—Suppose the Tilden Electors had not voted at all, would it be competent to show by subsequent State proceedings that the Hayes Electors were did not vote had no titles? That is the real question.

Mr. Merrick—Most unquestionably. The State cannot have her voice simulated, whether her real voice is spoken or not. It appears that on this occasion the true voice of the State was spoken, but if it had not been there could have been no more power and vigor in the simulated tones of her voice to reach the councils of the Federal Government than there is when these simulated tones come ringing along with those of the true sentiment of her people. The State is not to be deceived, and cheated. She might, prior to the time that this Electoral vote was cast, have instituted her quo warranto, standing in her own tribunals, clothed with the majesty of her executive power, and appealing to her judicial authority, and asked these men "By what warrant do you exercise the power of this office?" and so standing she could have stripped from them the garment they had stolen; stripped from their shoulders her livery which they had stolen "to serve the devil in."

Mr. Merrick then quoted a number of authorities from the Supreme Court showing that the uniform rule was for that court to follow State decisions on the subject of the local laws of the State, and commented on some of Judge Bradley's opinions to that effect. He claimed in conclusion that the record of the quo warranto proceedings was before the Commission, if not as evidence, at least as showing the view of Florida, and that it informed the Commission that according to the law of Florida the Hayes Electors were not appointed, and that the Tilden Electors were. He offered an apology if he had in the heat of argument in replying to inquiries said anything of a partisan nature. He had designed to argue this case without a partisan sentiment in his heart, and without allowing a partisan expression to escape his lips, and if he had failed in this purpose he begged pardon of the traditions that clustered about these sacred walls.

This closed the argument on the question of the ineligibility of Humphreys as a Presidential Elector, and the Commission then, at 4:50, adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

THE SENATE SUB-COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—This committee, Senator Howe presiding, met at 10 o'clock. Judge Davis was recalled and cross-examined by Mr. McDonald. He explained that he furnished the data upon which the table of discrepancies between the Democratic and Republican returns was made. That data was furnished from the data in the Returning Board and from the published Democratic returns. He also furnished the statements at the right of the tables under the head of "explanations." These were compiled by the witness from data furnished by the returns of the Supervisors. The explanations are briefs of the papers filed and the remarks made by Supervisors and Commissioners under the proper heads on the face of the returns; had no particular evidence that the statements referred to were true; took it for granted they were. The table was submitted to the witness and he read from the statement regarding the discrepancies in the Parish of Calcasieu, and stated that the affidavits supporting the explanations were not attached to the returns; so in the statement concerning Concordia Parish the proofs were not with the papers, but were afterward found; had not looked for them up to the 19th of December last; regarding poll No. 5 in the latter parish, the testimony was supplied by going back to the ballot-box; witness saw the box in the clerks' room, and saw the clerks counting the ballots; thinks this was while the board was in session; no one examined the ballots but the clerks; nobody connected with

W. Peckham and Grenville Tremain for appellant, and Abraham Lansing for respondent.

The following is the Court of Appeals day calendar for Friday, Feb. 9: Nos. 12, 181, 155, 147, 134, 160, 174, and 175.

A RELIC OF THE REBELLION.

GEN. SICKLES SUED FOR MONEY ADVANCED IN 1861—HIS ANSWER IS THAT THE FUNDS WERE FOR THE SICKLES BRIGADE.

A reminder of the recent civil war is afforded in the suit of Clayton Belknap against Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, which was brought before Judge Robinson in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The suit is brought by the plaintiff as the Assignee of A. A. Belknap for $1,000 loaned by the latter to Gen. Sickles in 1861. The money was in three sums, and was "repayable immediately," according to the plaintiff. The latter, in explanation of why the suit was not brought sooner, says that between 1861 and 1869 Gen. Sickles was out of the State at intervals for different periods of time aggregating six years, and that since 1869, and until recently, Gen. Sickles was United States Minister to Madrid and was otherwise out of the jurisdiction. Gen. Sickles, in answer, admits that A. A. Belknap contributed and advanced the sums of money, but says the latter did not do so to him individually, for his personal benefit, nor upon his personal promise to repay the same, but that Belknap made the advances "as a personal patriotic contribution to the Government of the United States toward the organization, support, and equipment of a brigade of volunteers in the service of the Government of the United States for the suppression of the rebellion against its authority then existing, in the completion of which military organization of volunteers the said defendant was then constantly engaged, and in which a brother of the plaintiff in this action, and a son of the said A. A. Belknap, then held a commission as a Lieutenant, and had at that time a deep interest in its success." Gen. Sickles says he neither intended nor did he make himself in any way personally responsible for the repayment of the advances made by Belknap toward the equipment of the brigade. He says he is a native-born citizen and a resident of this City and State, and has never been absent from the State except for limited periods of time, and then only in the public service. As a second and separate defense, Gen. Sickles says that A. A. Belknap made the advances to promote the interests of his son, as an advance and a loan to the United States Government, from which Mr. Belknap expected repayment. Congress shortly afterward appropriated $20,000,000 for the payment of the expenses attending the enlistment and organization of the volunteer troops, including the Sickles Brigade. Gen. Sickles says that officers were duly appointed, who received and audited the claims of citizens who had made advances in aid of such organizations, and that such officers paid the claims presented to them. If Belknap failed to receive payment for his advances, Gen. Sickles says the failure is due to Belknap's own negligence in not presenting the claim. Gen. Sickles also sets up that at no time during the last six years has he made any promise to pay Belknap the amount of the loans, and he also pleads the statute of limitations. Judge Robinson, on motion, decided that that portion of the answer setting up the want of promise within six years to be stricken out.

A LUNATIC'S DIVORCE SUIT.

A MAN OF SEVENTY-FIVE MARRIED TO A YOUNG GIRL—FOUR WEEKS OF THE HONEYMOON FOLLOWED BY A SEPARATION.

A remarkable suit for divorce, brought by Joshua B. Gates against Anne L. Gates, was brought before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday on a motion for the payment to the defendant of $40 per week as alimony and of a counsel fee of $250. Mrs. Gates in her petition says that her husband has begun a suit for an absolute divorce on the ground of her alleged adultery. They were married in New-Jersey in 1875, and lived at Hillsboro, Somerset County. On Aug. 10, 1875, she says, the plaintiff by his intolerable cruelty and ill treatment caused her to leave his home. After her departure he caused a notice to be inserted in the county papers cautioning all persons against trusting her on his credit, she having left his bed and board without just cause or provocation. In October, 1875, she filed a bill in the New-Jersey Court of Chancery, and the court ordered her husband, as she believes, to pay her alimony. She says he only paid her about $100 in all and that there is now due to her $420. The case is now pending. Since the beginning of the suit, however, her husband has left the State of New-Jersey and has come to reside in this City. His charges against her, she says, are utterly false. She says he is worth about $100,000, while she is without means of support.

It appears that she is a very handsome woman of less than 20 years of age, while her husband is over 75 years of age, and in feeble health. He was formerly a very popular life insurance agent, but was recently judged a lunatic in the Court of Common Pleas. In opposition to the motion for alimony yesterday, several affidavits were presented to the court. Among them was that of Cornelius D. Thomas, a son-in-law of Mr. Gates. He says the latter has been of unsound mind for some time past, and that after he was adjudged a lunatic a committee of his person and property was appointed. Mr. Gates' first wife died in 1873. He was then living in Mr. Thomas' family, and was of unsound mind. Mr. Thomas says he never saw the defendant until after Gates married her. She lived in Somerville, N. J., says Mr. Thomas, and bore a bad reputation. Gates met her on July 4, 1875, at a fair, and they were married within two weeks afterward. Their marriage took place at Plainfield, he says, because no minister at Somerville was willing to perform the ceremony. None of Mr. Gates' family knew of the marriage until he brought her back and introduced her as his wife. He took her to live with him as his wife on a farm adjoining that of Mr. Thomas. Gates and his wife lived together exactly four weeks. During that period he accused her of criminal intimacy with a man named Fassett, then in his employment. Fassett was discharged, and Mrs. Gates left Gates shortly afterward and has not lived with him since. Mr. Gates returned to the house of Mr. Thomas, and lived there until last February, when he came to this City. Mr. Thomas says that Mr. Gates was formerly a man of wealth, but that he squandered his money in all directions before he was adjudged a lunatic, and that it is doubtful whether his estate can be made to pay sufficient income for his support.

Jonathan Mairhead, the proprietor of the Broadway Hotel, in this City, made affidavit that Mr. Gates was at the hotel in July, 1876, and that Mrs. Gates came there and claimed to be his wife. Mr. Gates, however, refused to occupy the same room with her, but intimated to the proprietor of the hotel that he would pay for another room for her. Mr. Muirhead, a chamber-maid named Kate Kennedy, and one Joseph Lindo make affidavits charging Mrs. Gates with unwifely conduct. Judge Barrett took the papers, reserving his decision on the motion for alimony.

A NEGRO BURGLAR SENTENCED.

On the night of the 2d inst., as Detective Murphy, of the Eighth Precinct, was scouring his district, he noticed a notorious negro criminal named John Williams acting in a suspicious manner, and took him into custody. On searching him at the station-house the detective found on his person a set of billiard balls, a cigar-holder, and some other articles, which it was subsequently ascertained had been stolen from the lager-beer saloon of Xavier Harstell, No. 96 Prince street. Williams admitted the burglary, and was sent to the Court of General Sessions. When the case was called yesterday by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, the prisoner pleaded guilty, and Judge Sutherland sentenced him to two years in the State Prison. Williams, who goes by the distinguished names of "Yallow" and "Granny," is a notorious criminal. He has served several terms in prison for burglary and larceny, and was a terror to the localities in which he carried on his operations.

AN ELECTION-DAY RUFFIAN PUNISHED.

At the opening of Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Judge Sutherland charged the jury in the case of James Boylan, of No. 221 East Thirty-eighth street, the desperado who, on last election day, shot Edward Rooney, of No. 225 East Forty-first street, inflicting two dangerous wounds. The jury retired, and after four hours' deliberation returned a verdict of guilty of assault, with intent to do bodily harm. Assistant District Attorney Lyon, who prosecuted the case, moved for judgment. Judge Sutherland said that the law presumed every man to have intended the results of his willful acts, and sentenced Boylan to five years in the State Prison at hard labor. The shooting of Rooney was an unwarrantable piece of rowdyism on the part of Boylan, who with a number of other desperados took this means of "getting square" with the complainant for having dared to vote against the candidate of their choice.

ON THE BEACH AT LONG BRANCH.

A suit, entitled Joseph P. Howland against George W. Curtis and Jeremiah W. Curtis, was argued before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. The plaintiff owns property at Long Branch. At some distance from his land there is an estuary known as Green Pond, the water from which entered the ocean at a point about 600 feet distant from Howland's property. The defendants altered the course of the stream so as to give it a more direct course to the ocean, but the alteration brought the stream alongside of Howland's land. The result was, he says, that an embankment on his land was washed away and his property was otherwise seriously encroached upon. In the present suit Howland says that the washing in of the ocean and other effects resulting from the close proximity of the new channel caused the latter to fill up. He brings the suit to restrain the defendants from opening the channel on the ground that it will be a continuing injury to him. The case was brought before Judge Barrett yesterday on a motion to continue an injunction against the defendants. The latter claimed that the existence of the channel is not injurious to the plaintiff; that it is merely a reopening of an old channel, and that there is a covenant running with the land whereby they are authorized to restore the old channel. The defendants also objected to the jurisdiction of the court since the land, or rather water, in controversy lies in the State of New-Jersey. In regard to this latter point the plaintiff urged that the gist of the action is not in relation to the land, but the prevention of injurious action by the defendants, who are residents of this State, and as such can be restrained by a court of equity from doing acts injurious to their neighbors. Judge Barrett took the papers, reserving his decision.

COURT NOTES.

George Jackson was sentenced to 10 months imprisonment, in the Court of Special Sessions yesterday, for an assault on Officer Frank Fuchs, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, on New Year's morning.

Hugh McClellan, formerly a book-keeper in the employ of William H. Webb, the ship-builder, was yesterday held by Justice Duffy, at the Tombs Police Court, in $1,000 bail, to await the action of the Grand Jury, on the charge of embezzlement.

William McGrath obtained leave from the Supreme Court, yesterday, to sue the Receiver of the Erie Railway Company for a default in the payment of the January interest coupons on the mortgages bonds of the Erie and Genesee Valley Railroad Company.

Richard Reed, of No. 207 Hudson street, who, on the 4th inst., stole $3 24 from a roommate named Patrick Lynch, pleaded guilty yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Recorder Hackett sentenced the thief to two years and six months in the State Prison.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, granted a motion for a bill of particulars, made by the defendants in the suit of John B. Greene against the Mayor, &c. The plaintiff sues to recover $50,000 damages for the non-payment of a claim for laying 36-inch pipe in Madison avenue.

One year in the Penitentiary was the sentence imposed by Recorder Hackett yesterday on John Johnson, of No. 71 Forsyth street, who, with a confederate named Raymond, stole a gold chain from the store of Martin Greisbammer, No. 59 Avenue C. Raymond has already been sent to prison.

George Wilson, of No. 8 Spring street, was arraigned at the Tombs Police Court, before Justice Duffy, yesterday afternoon, on a charge of continually hanging around the Nassau street entrance to the upper floors of THE TIMES Building. He was severely reprimanded, and discharged with a caution not to repeat the offense.

Patrick F. Corcoran, a boy 10 years of age, brought suit, by guardian, in the Court of Common Pleas, against the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company. He claimed $10,000 damages for personal injuries received by his being run over by a train on Eleventh avenue. The jury, before Judge Van Hoesen, in Part I. of the Supreme Court, yesterday, gave the boy a verdict for $2,000.

In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday Assistant District Attorney Bell took pleas of guilty from John McNulty, a lad of 18, who committed a burglary at No. 92 Cherry street, and William Parker, of No. 23 Hester street, who attempted to commit a similar offense at No. 2 Eighth street. Recorder Hackett sentenced McNulty to five years and Parker to one year in the Penitentiary.

A man who gave his name as James W. Austin, aged 32, was yesterday arraigned at the Washington Place Police Court, on the charge of stealing $47 from the coal office, No. 43 Ninth avenue. Austin had entered the office by a rear door, and while the clerk, Samuel J. Freeman, was engaged in conversation with a woman, evidently a confederate, at the front door, the money-drawer was robbed of the above amount. Justice Otterbourg held the prisoner for trial in default of $1,000 bail.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Rollins accepted pleas of guilty from James Thompson, of No. 9 Washington street, who attempted to steal $7 from the pocket of Charles T. Scott, No. 359 Broadway, and William White, of No. 222 West Twenty-second street, who stole two watches, valued at $110, from the store of Israel W. Rauth, No. 691 Eighth avenue. Judge Sutherland sentenced White to two years', and Thompson to one year's imprisonment.

On Jan. 29, Peter Quinn, an old man of 60, living at No. 87 Mulberry street, met little Johnny Kane, of No. 86 Centre street, coming from the Elm street school, and took him to a hallway near Washington Market, where he robbed him of his overcoat. In General Sessions, yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Bell convicted the old thief of larceny from the person. The prisoner said that he was drunk, and did not know what he was doing; but Recorder Hackett said drunkenness was no excuse for crime, and sentenced Quinn to three years and six months in the State Prison.

In the case of John W. Phoenix against Charles Dupuy, an order was made in the Court of Common Pleas recently for the examination of the defendant as a witness before trial. The suit is for an alleged libel, consisting of certain letters said to have been written by the defendant, and it was sought by the examination to show that the letters were received by the persons to whom they were sent. Mr. Dupuy failed to appear on the day fixed for examination, and explained the matter to Judge Robinson; in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday in affidavits averring that the order for examination had not been properly served on him.

On Jan. 25, Josephine Taylor and a confederate named Seymour Smith hired the front basement of the premises No. 169 Hudson street. They left unexpectedly, and after their departure it was discovered that they had broken open the door leading to the back basement, occupied by Charles H. Bartell, and stolen therefrom clothing and other property valued at $80. The woman, Taylor, was subsequently arrested, but Smith managed to elude the vigilance of the Police. When the case was called by Assistant District Attorney Bell yesterday, in the Court of General Sessions, the female virgin pleaded guilty, and Recorder Hackett sentenced her to 18 months in the State Prison.

The suit of Sarah Strauss against Abraham Wolff, in which $25,000 are claimed as damages for breach of promise of marriage, accompanied by seduction, will probably be brought to trial before Judge Donohue and a jury in Part I. of the Supreme Court to-day. The action has been provocative of some comment, the defendant being wealthy and moving in good society. He is a member of a well-known banking firm in this City. The alleged wrong is said to have been accomplished in November, 1873, while the plaintiff was employed as a servant in the house of the defendant's sister-in-law. He was a bachelor at the time, but has since been married. He denies the charges in the most emphatic manner.

The case of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank of Buffalo against Erastus S. Brown and Thomas Atkinson was brought to trial before Judge Freedman yesterday. The defendants are produce dealers. The bank charges Brown with selling to Atkinson, without authority, about 60,000 worth of wheat on which it had made advances. Both defendants are charged with wrongful conversion. Atkinson sets up in answer that he purchased the wheat for its full value and in good faith in open market, and Brown explains the transaction with the bank by showing that he accepted a draft for the amount of the bank's advances, thus discharging its lien on the grain. Fithian & Clark appear for the plaintiff; Tracy, Olmstead & Tracy, for Atkinson, and W. Howard Wait for Brown.

SEEKING A LIMITED DIVORCE.

Zoe Aurelia M. F. Smith has brought a suit in the Supreme Court for a limited divorce from her husband, Henry A. Smith, and the case was brought before Judge Barrett yesterday on a motion by the plaintiff for alimony during the pendancy of the action. Mrs. Smith says she was married to her husband in April, 1865, and that he has ill treated her almost ever since their wedding day. In June, 1865, she says he beat her on the head and face with his fists, and became so riotous and violent that she was obliged to call in a policeman, who arrested Mr. Smith. The latter was brought before the Essex Market Police Court, but on his earnest entreaties and promises of reform, Mrs. Smith says she withdrew the complaint against him. She alleges that he continued his cruel treatment of her after this, and applied abusive and slanderous epithets to her. On July 7, 1876, she says he abandoned her. She says he is a real estate broker, and is worth $200,000. Judge Barrett reserved his decision on the motion for alimony.

LAND ON WHICH A SCHOOL-HOUSE STANDS

Francus Leckey and his brother brought a suit in the Supreme Court against the City and the Board of Education to recover a small piece of real estate in East Thirty-seventh street, near Second avenue, now covered by a portion of the building occupied by the ward school. The land was purchased from the Leckey Trustees of the estate in 1859. R. J. Dillon was Corporation Counsel at the time, and he gave an opinion saying that the title to the land was not good. The School Trustees, however, resolved to take their chances, and bought the land. The suit was brought up for trial yesterday, before Judge Donohue and a jury, in Part I. of the Supreme Court, and judgment was directed in favor of the plaintiffs for the possession of the land. Under the authority, however, of Maximilian vs. The Mayor, &c., and of other cases, Judge Donohue held that there could be no recovery for mesne profits, or profits for the use of the land, &c., against either the City or the Board of Education. Mr. Sanxay appeared for the plaintiffs, and Assistant Corporation Counsel Francis Lynde Stetson for the defendants.

AN ATTORNEY SNUBBED.

HE TRIES TO SUPPRESS THE PUBLICATION OF A CASE IN THE TIMES BUT IS BEATEN—A RULING BY JUDGE ROBINSON.

E. P. Wilder, an attorney of this City, had the pleasure and privilege of adding to his stock of legal information yesterday in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, where Judge Robinson presided. Wilder came into the court-room just as the law reporter of THE TIMES was examining the papers in cases heard during the day. The reporter had just taken up the papers in the case of Rosenstein against Rosenstein, and was beginning to read them, when Wilder asked to see them. He said he would return them to the reporter in a few minutes. Instead of doing this, however, he said there was no use of publishing the case, as it was a scandalous divorce suit. He was informed that THE TIMES never published anything scandalous, and that the reporter desired to look through the papers in order to ascertain what there was in them, and to give a fair report. Wilder said he was one of the attorneys for Mrs. Rosenstein. His name did not, however, appear on the papers. He talked at a great rate, and endeavored to instruct the reporter as to his business in the matter. He then took away the papers, under the pretense that he wished to see the court concerning a motion in the case. He was told by the reporter that if he wanted to make any motion as to suppressing a report of the case, he should give the usual three days' notice. Mr. Wilder said the reporter had no right to publish the case, but he affirmed most positively two or three times that he would not apply to the court to suppress a report of the case. Wilder left the court-room, and returned a few minutes later, saying he had handed the papers to Mr. Jarvis, the Clerk of the court, and that the latter had agreed that they were not to be made public. Wilder said that he had not seen Judge Robinson. It appeared, however, that he had seen Judge Robinson in his private room, and had asked the Judge for an order to suppress the proceedings: at any rate, Judge Robinson soon came into court, and Wilder handed up a copy of the rules of court to the Judge. Wilder then again attempted to have a report of the case suppressed.

The reporter, who is also an attorney, then addressed the court, saying that the proceeding in question did not come under the rules of court for bidding its publication, and that the proceeding was merely one for the removal of one Goldsmith as attorney for Mrs. Rosenstein and the substitution of Wilder in his stead. The reporter also called attention to the fact that the papers which Wilder sought to have withheld from publication contained merely a defense made by Mr. Goldsmith to charges made against the latter, on the strength of which charges Wilder was to be substituted in Goldsmith's stead. The reporter urged that there was no reason why a gentleman's defense to charges should be suppressed.

Wilder made frequent appeals to the court, each one more persistent, but Judge Robinson simply read the papers. Wilder's rule of court to which the latter had referred without apparently being able to comprehend its meaning. Judge Robinson said he would not interfere with the publication of the matter.

According to the statements in the case, it appears that an attempt is being made to oust Mr. Goldsmith from his place as Mrs. Rosenstein's counsel in a divorce suit brought by her husband against her, in which he charges her with having married another man since the divorce suit was begun. Mrs. Rosenstein denies the charges, and alleges on the motion for substitution of her attorney that Goldsmith did not attend to the case properly. Goldsmith put in his defense yesterday, and this was what Wilder sought to have suppressed. Wilder gave no reasons for his extraordinary conduct, excepting that of his extreme desire to see the rules of the court obeyed.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Barrett.

Rowe vs. Barnes.—Cause restored.

Aldrich vs. Bisbet.—The order cannot be granted until proof of service.

Stays Granted.—Griffin vs. Chase and Storey vs. Charles.

Waller vs. Gorman.—Motion granted for the 23d inst. Darrack vs. Van Valkenburgh.—Granted for third Friday.

Matter of Paton.—Motion granted and Referee appointed.

The Homeopathic Mutual Life Insurance Company vs. Hayes.—Report confirmed and order granted.

The German Savings Bank vs. McGown—Nos. 1 and 2.—The motions are granted as the rule only applies to a reference to sell.

Striebeck vs. Striebeck.—Report confirmed and judgment of divorce granted.

Goodman vs. Ackerman.—The proof of service is defective, but as it seems to be consented to, the plaintiff may take an order.

Motions Granted.—Mellen vs. Greeman; Greene vs. The Mayor, &c.; The Tenth National Bank vs. The Bank of the New-York National Banking Association; Mickel vs. Scherey.

Elliott vs. The Westchester Fire Insurance Company.—After a conference with Mr. Justice Donohue, I think the stay should be vacated, but without prejudice to an application at the trial for a postponement until the decision of the General Term.

Foley vs. Rathbone.—Motion to set aside summons granted, with $10 costs, but without prejudice on payment of such costs to an application to the court on proper papers, and for good cause shown, for leave to re-examine the witness.

Thompson vs. Benson.—The issue is one of payment, and it seems to me that after such lapse of time, and considering the doubt as to whether the money has been received in such a manner as to warrant proceedings of the nature, the question of fraud should be passed upon by a jury. The petitioner should, I think, be compelled to resort to an action under all the circumstances, and the present motion denied without costs.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Barrett.

Duryea vs. Ackerman.—Findings signed.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Sedgwick.

Cuer et al. vs. Shaler et al.—Order that lis pendens be cancelled against certain defendants.

Borland vs. The Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company.—Interrogatories settled.

By Judge Speir.

Schreyer vs. Dettinger et al.—Order settled.

By Chief Judge Curtis.

Spader vs. New-York Elevated Railway Company.—Complaint dismissed.

Fearn vs. King.—Case settled.

COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge J. F. Daly.

Belknap vs. Sickles.—Motion granted as to fourth subdivision of answer, and denied as to the residue. No costs.

By Judge Robinson.

Augur vs. Conklin.—Order granted as amended.

Matter of Garvey.—Order appointing commission.

Matter of Treat.—Order granted.

MARINE COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Justice Meddam.

Opinions Filed.—Engler vs. Bayer; Hyatt vs. King; Schwarz vs. Oppold; Franchi vs. Zausi; Brooks vs. Conner.

O'Grady vs. Fierick.—Proceedings dismissed.

In re Bakkerack.—Stay granted conditionally.

Motions Granted.—Underwood vs. Buller; Cutler vs. Fisher; Gordon vs. Fraser.

McReynolds vs. Hoyt.—Judgment for plaintiff on demurrer.

Coffee vs. The Mayor, &c.; Newman vs. Dallier.—Discontinuances allowed; no costs.

Brown vs. Chase.—Judgment for plaintiff.

Harris vs. Harris.—Order settled.

Gorson vs. Katzenstein.—A. Tansig appointed Receiver.

Stay Granted Conditionally.—South vs. Thompson; Collins vs. Anthony.

Stay Granted Unconditionally.—Meyer vs. The Mayor, &c.; Newman vs. Dayton.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART I.

Held by Alker, J.

Nos.	Short Causes.
7521	Richardson vs. Leehr.
6983	Canadian Bank of Com. vs. Blakelee et al.
8644	Bird, &c., vs. Pappe et al.
7339	Dittenhoefer vs. Macgregor.
7315	Dissay vs. McDivitt.
9069	McCauley vs. Morgan et al.
9009	Sanford et al. vs. Wulstein.
8694	Allites vs. Connor.
7926	Miller vs. The U. S. Dairy Co.
6985	Pignolet vs. Haverty.
7578	Brown vs. Caldwell et al.
8612	Parsons et al. vs. Campbell et al.
8963	Basch et al. vs. Sheridan, &c.
8369	Brown vs. Scheel.
9086	White vs. Thomas.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

Held by Goepp, J.

Nos.
8552	Mitchell vs. Stuart, Jr., &c.
9082	Crabb vs. Elastic Truss Co.
9083	McFadden vs. Elastic Truss Co.
6014	Gursky vs. Goldberg
8904	Cincinnati Rug. Co. vs. Stevens.
8725	Redlick et al. vs. Barth.
7668	Weil vs. Maher.
8552	Graf vs. Calkins.
8600	McDonald vs. Kavanagh et al.
8937	Fadden vs. Buckman.
9085	Josephs vs. Witowski
9108	Schutz vs. Pelham Manor & H. Ass'n.
8376	Newell et al. vs. Meehan.
7751	Easton vs. Smith.
9071	Stokes vs. Doran.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART III.

Held by Sinnott, J.

Nos.	Short Causes.
9001	Smith vs. Van Valkenburgh.
8872	Lawton et al. vs. Meyer.
8883	Same vs. Same.
7453	Franklin vs. Maclaughlan.
9084	Muldoon et al. vs. McGlaverty.
8814	Withers vs. Collins.
8395	McCabe et al. vs. Dougherty.
9169	Gould, &c., vs. Bebeneli.
9114	Nat. S. S. Co. vs. McCool et al.
8863	Herbison vs. Morris.
8340	Fay et al. vs. Lespinasse.
8340	Hutchins vs. Butler.
8368	Brown vs. Young.
8992	Raynor et al. vs. Worl.
9904	Kay vs. Whiting.
9107	Hilton, &c., vs. Ludlow.
9122	Hopkins vs. Wemple et al.
9123	Neander vs. Harrison.
7497	Porter et al. vs. Lima.
9131	Gautert vs. Hoover et al.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS—PART I.

Held by Hackett, Recorder.

George W. Beekman, following assault and battery.
Patrick Fogarty, felonious assault and battery.
James Driscoll, burglary.
Thomas Roesh, grand larceny.
Francis Neal, Michael Sullivan, and Kerin Dollard, grand larceny.
Ernest Lohmeis, grand larceny.
George Thompson, bigamy.
Kate Smith and Ellen Cook, receiving stolen goods.
John H. Nicklen, receiving stolen goods.
Annie Rehbock, receiving stolen goods.
John Smith, concealed weapons.
Laura Stricker, petit larceny.
Alfred Miller, violation of lottery law.
George Smith, violation of lottery law.
Frederick Rick, violation of lottery law.

COURT CALENDARS—THIS DAY.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Held by Van Vorst, J.

Nos.
47	Reilly vs. Dillon et al.
100	Fowler vs. Mehrbaon et al.
106	Dunne vs. Grattan et al.
50	De Zavala vs. Hart et al.
121	Nat. Park Bank vs. Knight.
122	Bucking vs. Hauselt et al.
128	Griselier et al. vs. Powers, &c.
130	Jones vs. Jones.
133	Busteed vs. Busteed.
135	Jacobs vs. Miller.
141	Steinbrecher vs. Beyer et al.
142	Guidet vs. Brown et al
143	Lynes vs. Brander, Jr.
148	Reich vs. Atlantic & Pacific Tel. Co.
281	Nicoll vs. Scrymser.
114	Kinney vs. Cohen.
115	Same vs. Same.
283	Duncan vs. Duncan et al.
67	Herriot vs. Herriot.
26	Bard vs. U. S. Life Ins. Co.
76	Burtis vs. Timpson et al.
38	The Law, Gran. Mow. Co. vs. The O. S. Cutting Co.
53	Taylor, &c. vs. Roche.
74	Andrews et al. vs. Bran.
87	Allen vs. Dissay.
93	Mulock vs. Mulock.
94	The R. E. Trust Co. vs. Scranton.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART I.

Held by Donohue, J.

Nos.	Short Causes.
3765	Focke vs. Goddefray et al.
3853	Pacific Bank vs. Paton.
3869	Schwartzkopf vs. Drisler, Jr., et al.
2865	McGee vs. Sickels.
4261	Laflin & Rand Powder Co. vs. Pilgrost.
4263	Wesman vs. Benedict.
4455	Davies et al. vs. Bell, &c.
4107	Welch vs. Voorhies, Jr., et al.
4161	Davidson et al. vs. Smith.
3989	Fullerton vs. Smith.
4403	Scoville vs. Glines.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART II.

Held by Lawrence, J.

Nos.	Short Causes.
1756	Adgar vs. Bancroft.
3953	Griswold vs. Demarest.
2584	Mills vs. Lupton et al.
4167	Lynch vs. Knapp et al.
1190	The Union Trust Co. of N. H., Conn., vs. Phipps.
3998	Eitel vs. Fellrouth.
3988	Rockmagle vs. Harway, &c.
4040	Phillipps vs. Burke.
4138	Kaufberger, &c., vs. Gehl.
4192	George et al. vs. Baughan.
4154	Ascukory Mat. Bank vs. Ramsdey, &c.
3508	Dreager vs. Odell.
4180	Schaffenberg versus Lemonte, et al.
3642	Hasard, Jr., versus Marks et al.
4236	O'Hare, &c., versus Baldwin et al.
4280	Frank et al. versus Laney.
4408	Bellamy vs. Wills, &c.
4470	Bear et al. versus Bucles et al.
4288	Devlin vs. Brown, &c.
4202	Wollenbaum versus Keim et al.
4438	Townsend et al vs. Keeler et al.
4478	Frank et al. versus Lonergan.
4489	Dezaza vs. Lyons

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

SALES AT THE STOCK EXCHANGE—FEB. 8.

SALES BEFORE THE CALL—10 A. M.

$1,000	N. W. C. C. G.	92¼
5,000	do	30	92¼
100	Del. & Hudson		57½
200	do		57⅝
400	do		57¾
60	do	30	58⅛
1200	West. Un		72½
2425	do		72⅝
200	Pacific Mail		24¾
200	do		25
100	do		24⅞
20	N. Y. C. & H		102½
48	Erie Railway		9¼
200	North-w. Pf		54½
100	do		54⅝
300	do		54½
400	do		54¾
200	do		54⅝
500	Mich. Cen		41
200	do		44⅞
200	do		44¾
200	do		45
300	do		45⅛
200	do		45¼
100	do		45⅜
100	do		45½
200	do		45⅝
500	Mich. Cen		45¾
100	do		45⅞
800	Lake Shore		53⅝
2500	do	30	53⅝
3000	do		53¾
400	do	30	53⅞
300	do		53¾
800	do		54
1500	do		54⅛
1800	do		54¼
800	do	30	54⅜
900	do		54½
300	do		54⅝
100	do		54¾
100	do		54⅞
100	do		55
100	Harlem		140¼
10	Un. Pac.		103⅛
100	C. & N. W		84
200	do		84⅛
100	do		84¼
100	do		84⅜
1100	Ill. Cen		96⅛
100	do		96¼
100	do		96⅜
100	do		96½
100	do		96⅝
100	do		96¾
100	do		96⅞
100	do		97
100	do		97⅛
100	do		97¼
100	do		97⅜
100	do		97½
100	do		97⅝
100	do		97¾
100	do		97⅞
100	do		98
100	do		98⅛
100	do		98¼
100	do		98⅜
100	do		98½
100	do		98⅝
100	do		98¾
100	do		98⅞
100	do		99
100	do		99⅛
100	do		99¼
100	do		99⅜
100	do		99½
100	do		99⅝
100	do		99¾
100	do		99⅞
100	do		100
100	do		100⅛
100	do		100¼
100	do		100⅜
100	do		100½
100	do		100⅝
100	do		100¾
100	do		100⅞
100	do		101
100	do		101⅛
100	do		101¼
100	do		101⅜
100	do		101½
100	do		101⅝
100	do		101¾
100	do		101⅞
100	do		102
100	do		102⅛
100	do		102¼
100	do		102⅜
100	do		102½
100	do		102⅝
100	do		102¾
100	do		102⅞
100	do		103
100	do		103⅛
100	do		103¼
100	do		103⅜
100	do		103½
100	do		103⅝
100	do		103¾
100	do		103⅞
100	do		104
100	do		104⅛
100	do		104¼
100	do		104⅜
100	do		104½
100	do		104⅝
100	do		104¾
100	do		104⅞
100	do		105
100	do		105⅛
100	do		105¼
100	do		105⅜
100	do		105½
100	do		105⅝
100	do		105¾
100	do		105⅞
100	do		106
100	do		106⅛
100	do		106¼
100	do		106⅜
100	do		106½
100	do		106⅝
100	do		106¾
100	do		106⅞
100	do		107
100	do		107⅛
100	do		107¼
100	do		107⅜
100	do		107½
100	do		107⅝
100	do		107¾
100	do		107⅞
100	do		108
100	do		108⅛
100	do		108¼
100	do		108⅜
100	do		108½
100	do		108⅝
100	do		108¾
100	do		108⅞
100	do		109
100	do		109⅛
100	do		109¼
100	do		109⅜
100	do		109½
100	do		109⅝
100	do		109¾
100	do		109⅞
100	do		110
100	do		110⅛
100	do		110¼
100	do		110⅜
100	do		110½
100	do		110⅝
100	do		110¾
100	do		110⅞
100	do		111
100	do		111⅛
100	do		111¼
100	do		111⅜
100	do		111½
100	do		111⅝
100	do		111¾
100	do		111⅞
100	do		112
100

The New York Times.

NEW-YORK, FRIDAY, FEB. 9, 1877.

AMUSEMENTS THIS EVENING.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—MIGNON. (English Opera)—Miss Clara L. Kellogg, Mrs. Rosewald, Mrs. Seguin, Mr. Miles, Mr. Peakes. At 2:30—PHILHARMONIC REHEARSAL.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—THE DANICHEFFS—Mr. C. R. Thorne, Mr. W. R. Floyd, Miss Katherine Rogers, Miss Fanny Morant.

PARK THEATRE.—OUR BOARDING HOUSE—Mr. Stuart Robson, Mr. W. H. Crane, Mrs. A. F. Baker.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—LEMONS: OR, WEDLOCK FOR SEVEN—Mr. C. F. Coghlan, Miss F. Davenport

BOOTH'S THEATRE.—FIFTH AVENUE—Mr. George Rignold, Miss Maud Granger.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—ALL FOR HER—Mr. Lester Wallack, Mr. S. Mackaye, Miss Ada Dyas.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—MARTON LE JOLIE BOQUETIERE.

HELLER'S WONDER THEATRE.—PRESTIDIGITATION, MUSIC, AND HUMOR—Mr. Robert Heller, Miss Heller.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS (Spectacular)—Kiralfy Brothers.

EAGLE THEATRE.—LA PETITE MARIEE (Opera Bouffe) Mlle. Marie Aimee.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—THE BIG BONANZA.

NEW-YORK AQUARIUM.—RARE AND CURIOUS FISH AND MAMMALIA, STATUARY, &c.—Day and evening.

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART.—EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT STATUARY, PAINTINGS, &c. Day only.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.—MINSTRELSY, FARCES and NEGRO COMICALITIES.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN.—EXHIBITION OF WATER COLORS. Day and evening.

CHICKERING HALL.—GRAND CONCERT—Miss Emma Abbott, Mr. E. Siefert, Mr. Brignoli, Mr. Case, Mr. Pratt.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES is the best family paper published; it contains the latest news and correspondence. It is free from all objectionable advertisements and reports, and may be safely admitted to every domestic circle. The disgraceful announcements of quacks and medical pretenders, which pollute so many newspapers of the day, are not admitted into the columns of THE TIMES on any terms.

Terms, cash in advance.

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS.

Postage will be prepaid by the Publishers on all Editions of THE TIMES sent to Subscribers in the United States.

The DAILY TIMES, per annum, including the Sunday Edition.....$12 00
The DAILY TIMES, per annum, exclusive of the Sunday Edition..... 10 00
The Sunday Edition, per annum..... 2 00
The SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES, per annum..... 3 00
The WEEKLY TIMES, per annum..... 1 20

These prices are invariable. We have no traveling agents. Remit in drafts on New-York or Post Office Money Orders, if possible, and where neither of these can be procured send the money in a registered letter.

Address THE NEW-YORK TIMES,
New-York City

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

The further proceedings of the House Committees of Investigation interest the Democrats no more. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD has retired in disgust from his bootless labor of bullying witnesses, garbling testimony, and inventing bogus telegrams, and the work of the Louisiana Committee languishes. Florida has been already abandoned as a field of investigation, and Mr. CARR, of Indiana, has bluntly suggested that since the Electoral Commission refuses to go behind State returns, there can be no further occasion to detain the members of the Louisiana Returning Board in the custody of the House. It is, no doubt, a little hard on the Democrats to have so many sackfuls of evidence, figuratively speaking, thrown out of the window. It was bad enough that they should be compelled to trample on the principles of JEFFERSON for the sake of clutching a partisan advantage, but to have stultified themselves for nothing is too severe a trial to the temper to render it at all surprising that it should be impossible to conceal the evidences of their chagrin.

The Democratic press is about equally unsuccessful in keeping its temper. The Sun attempts to conceal its sentiments by a very expressive dumb show, and the World relieves its mind in two columns of ponderous argument, which sounds very ridiculous when read in the light of yesterday's proceedings of the Commission. The World was quite as sure as Mr. GREEN, of New-Jersey, that the quo warranto proceedings before the Florida court must be considered by the Commission, and is quite as much disgusted as the New-Jersey luminary that these were very promptly excluded. The misleading Tilden organ will now be more certain than ever that the "small pettifogging of small lawyers was called on to exclude truth and to give the victory to fraud." The World could abuse the Commission with better grace, if it had been somewhat less prompt to accept in advance the decision of that body, and the Sun would obtain a more sympathetic hearing for the ebullition of wrath which it has in store, had it made up its mind sooner that the entire device was unconstitutional and inexpedient. It is now extremely probable that the partisan trickery which prompted the Democrats to support the Commission will simply result in giving new strength to their adversaries, and they need hardly be disappointed if the common sense of the country refuses to see any but the ludicrous side of their disappointment.

Reform legislation for the City makes but slow progress at Albany, yet still it moves. The Assembly has ordered to a third reading Mr. LANGBEIN'S bill for a revision and consolidation of the laws relating to the District Courts, and the Committee on Cities have so far wakened up to a recognition of the existence of the two principal City bills in their hands, that they have fixed Tuesday next for a public hearing upon them. But perhaps the most significant proof of the influence upon the Legislature of the public demand for retrenchment is to be found in the intention of the Tammany delegation to introduce a "reform" measure of their own. Its main features are to be a consolidation of departments and a reduction of Commissioners, with a cautious avoidance of everything which aims at retrenching the force or the salaries of the great army of Municipal understrappers, to whom Tammany Hall is mainly indebted for its yearly quota of campaign funds. No better service can be done by Republicans in the Legislature, to their party or to the public, than by applying radical remedies to the evils on whose perpetuation the very existence of Tammany Hall depends, and we trust they are beginning to perceive the folly of trifling, year after year, with so great an opportunity.

The Queen's speech at the opening of the British Parliament is chiefly remarkable for its omissions. Two-thirds of the very meagre address is a bald outline of the course of British policy in regard to the Eastern question, with the very significant omission of all reference to the demands of Russia or to the probable consequences of Turkey's defiance of that Power. An allusion to the tawdry ceremonial at Delhi is closely followed by the announcement that "a famine no less serious than that of 1873 has overspread a large portion of the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay," and congratulations over the unchecked prosperity and progress of the Colonial Empire are tempered by apprehensions of another Kaffir war. The allusions to domestic politics are unusually meagre, and the beggarly array of new measures promised by the Government shows that Earl Beaconsfield and his colleagues adhere to their opinion that the country needs a period of repose from legislative change. There are some indications that the majority of the people no longer share that opinion.

There ought to be no difficulty whatever in disposing of the little payment which has been made on the Mexican indemnity. The amount due the United States is about $4,000,000, and this is to be paid in annual installments of $300,000. One installment has been paid, and the private claimants ask that the whole amount due shall be assured by the United States. This would be most unjust, as the Government cannot lawfully pay an indemnity which has not been met by the Power from which it is due. In this particular case, the Diaz Government paid the first installment, with the intention of committing our Government to a recognition by a formal acceptance of the money.

New-Jersey law proves too much for the scheming officials of the New-Jersey Mutual and the National Capitol Life Insurance companies, and the pleasant process of amalgamation is summarily ended. The Receiver appointed by Chancellor RUNYON will take possession of the assets of the insolvent concern, and will then proceed to examine in detail its condition, and so acquire data for determining what course shall finally be pursued for the benefit of the policy-holders. The stockholders have had the good taste not to appear as claimants of authority in affairs over which their appointees have had sole control, and the whole talk in the Chancellor's court turned upon the rights and interests of the policy-holders. An actuary, who had not the figures he was expected to supply, volunteered the opinion that the company is not beyond redemption; but he must have more than ordinary credulity who accepts the statement as anything more than an attempt to break the force of public indignation. Separate proceedings have been commenced for a distribution of the assets, but probably nothing further will be done until the Receiver makes his report.

THE CLOSE OF THE FLORIDA CASE.

The Electoral Commission yesterday heard final argument on the Florida case, having first admitted a small amount of testimony with reference to the eligibility of HUMPHREYS, one of the Hayes Electors. On the latter point the Democratic case was very weak. It was proved that HUMPHREYS sent to the Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States by whom he was appointed a letter of resignation as early as the 24th of September, and the Judge's formal acceptance of the resignation was produced before the Commission, dated the 2d of October. This left the Democrats no substantial ground to stand on, and drove them to the very weak pretension that the resignation of HUMPHREYS was of no effect because it had not been addressed to and accepted by the Circuit Court in formal session. This beautiful specimen of technical pleading was rather contemptuously treated by the Republican counsel, and makes one wonder why the Humphreys matter was introduced at all. Apparently, it has served no purpose except to allow one HOADLEY, of Ohio, to bore the Commission with a very tedious argument.

The argument on the merits of the case was substantially a summing up and representation of the arguments made on the question of receiving the evidence. On the part of the Democrats, there was an air of depression and indecision, an effect, undoubtedly, of their interpretation of the first decision of the Commission. Neither Mr. O'CONOR nor Mr. BLACK took any part in the argument, which was left, so far as general principles were concerned, to Mr. MERRICK. That gentleman made no effort to show that the certificate of the Hayes Electors lacked any of the evidences of genuineness required by State or Federal law. He confined himself to maintaining the power of a State to review the action of those Electors, to ascertain by judicial investigation whether they were its really appointed Electors, and to provide by legislation for certifying the facts thus ascertained to the Federal authorities. Previous to this argument, a curious indication was given of the hopelessness of the Democrats with reference to their case on its merits, as contained in the papers submitted to the Commission by the two houses. The recently-elected Attorney General of Florida was called to the stand and asked at what hour the writ of quo warranto was served on the Hayes Electors. Mr. GREEN, the New-Jersey lawyer who has won a slight fame in this case by a voluminous brief which has been complimented by all the lawyers, remarked to the Commission that:

"It was not apprehended by himself and his associates that the order made by the Commission excluded in its spirit the consideration of the quo warranto proceedings, and by the present witness he merely desired to fix the exact time the quo warranto was served."

Mr. GREEN, in frankness, should have said that by the witness he meant to get the decision of Wednesday suspended, and to surprise the Commission into going behind and outside of the certificates. It is hardly necessary to say that he failed. Mr. GREEN has not yet seen the day when he could catch Mr. EVARTS napping, and that gentleman, promptly objecting, sent the latest Democratic trick to the limbo of exploded devices.

The replies of Mr. EVARTS and Mr. SHELLABARGER to the general arguments of Mr. MERRICK were very able, and that of Mr. EVARTS was a brilliant piece of cogent reasoning and searching, compact statement. Both gentlemen gave great prominence to the element of time in the process of election. The Constitution of the United States gives to each State a power of appointment of Electors for a specific duty, to be performed on a fixed day, in order to accomplish the election of President and Vice President, which must, in its turn, be completed by a determined period. The exercise of the power of the State must antedate the time when the duty of the Electors is to be performed. In case of an accidental failure to appoint, that failure may be remedied, but it must be before the time fixed for casting the votes. After that day the Electoral vote passes into the custody of the nation, into "the urn of the United States," as Mr. EVARTS puts it. If the State were allowed to review it, or delay it, not the State alone, but the whole nation must suffer. If the title of the Electors can be questioned by proceedings which cannot be concluded before the day appointed to cast the vote, then any nisi prius court in any State can interfere to break up, defer, change, and defeat the election of a President. Again, if, after the vote has been cast, it can be called back from the national capital and reviewed, and possibly annulled, then the election is still in the hands of local courts. Nor is it to be admitted that the State, acting by its Legislature, can change the machinery by which the vote of the Electors is to be verified and reported, as was attempted by the Legislature of Florida. The only safe rule was yesterday laid down. Whoever is found, on the day when the Federal law, made in pursuance of the Constitution, requires the vote to be cast, with all the insignia provided by the State as fixing the title to the office of Elector, must perform that office. Having performed it, there must be no further or other proceeding in the matter. The State has spoken.

In the case of Florida, this rule establishes absolute justice. The vote of the Hayes Electors was not only the legal vote of the State, but it agreed with the popular vote. It was the actual voice of the State. To refuse to the Democrats the right to question and reverse that vote is not to refuse them the right to correct an error or defeat a wrong. It is to refuse them the power to commit a wrong. Happily, the requirements of law are here those of the clearest and most perfect justice. The Republican counsel have confined themselves to arguing the law, because the Commission is made to ascertain and adjudge the law. But if it had been necessary to go into the "truth and very right," as Mr. O'CONOR terms it, their arguments would not have been less conclusive or the Republican position less strong.

AMERICAN CREDIT ABROAD.

There is some danger of confounding the result of an exceptional condition of financial affairs with the more permanent evidence of improved credit in foreign markets. The success which attends the funding operations proceeds from both of these causes. It comes in a very large degree from a more accurate knowledge of the resources and a more accurate estimate of the future of the United States. But it also comes in part from the superabundance of unemployed capital, the cessation of the demand arising from business, and the distrust with which corporate management is everywhere regarded. So far as the change arises from the legitimate appreciation of our national credit, it may be expected to continue. The ordeal through which this country has passed, and the unexampled sacrifices it has made for the reduction of its indebtedness, are not likely to be underrated. Nothing but extreme folly at Washington can deprive us of the hold which these considerations have established upon foreign peoples. The fault will be our own, if the borrowing facilities of the United States in the centres of European finance be not hereafter equal to those of any other first-class power.

On the other hand, allowance must be made for the gradual abatement of the temporary causes of the demand that prevails for Government bonds. There will always be a large class of conservative investors who care more for the security of their capital than for the income it yields. English consols satisfy them because these are believed to be pre-eminently safe. On the same ground, an American four per cent will commend itself to this class of investors. But the great bulk of unemployed capital belongs to wholly different persons. They accept a low rate of interest only until opportunities for making more present themselves; and meanwhile they put their money into securities which are readily convertible. What proportion of the four and a half per cents. now being floated in Europe has been taken by buyers thus situated, we have no means of determining. But that the depression and distrust which tell disastrously upon other interests have contributed to the absorption of the second portion of the funded loan, there can be no doubt. With the reappearance of better times we must look for a cessation of the demand from this source. Holders will sell, to make more profitable use of their money. The education of more stable investors is all the while going on. Their confidence in American national credit grows under the influence of experience. And the consequence will be that the exhaustion of the transient causes of demand will not necessarily be followed to any appreciable extent, by a falling off in the sale of our low-interest-bearing securities.

What may be termed the educational effect of the funded loan will in due season extend to other classes of American securities. Every one familiar with the various phases of growth in the foreign demand for American bonds is aware that the beginning has always been made with "governments." The faith they have inspired gradually takes in other securities. On the supposition, then, that the funded loan widens the area within which Government bonds are sought and held, it is fair to assume that, if no unfavorable influence were at work, other American loans would find corresponding favor. The assumption is not at present realized, for reasons which need not be enumerated. There is a constant call for bonds based upon the nation's credit, while for bonds based upon corporate enterprises there is no call whatever. The exceptions to the latter remark occur so seldom, and under circumstances so peculiar, that they only serve to confirm the rule. This condition of things will not last forever. All the world over, the distrust which follows misplaced confidence sooner or later ends. The temptation of higher interest recurs with a renewal of prosperity, and money is obtained for enterprises which in times like these beg hopelessly for help. No immediate likelihood of this perilous eagerness for profit exists. The events of the last few months have been almost as destructive to confidence as those which preceded the crash in 1873. Railroads which stood high in the London market as dividend-paying properties, have either become deeply embarrassed or have encountered reverses which must cloud their future; and in every instance facts reflect discredit upon the management. There will, therefore, be no sudden revival of credit in its application to corporate undertakings. But come it will, ultimately, and then the improved status of Government bonds will be a source of strength to other financial negotiations.

All of us have a common interest in preventing the abuse of credit which made the multiplication of weak and worthless enterprises possible—precisely as all of us must suffer from a prolongation of discredit whenever a renewal of industrial activity shall create a demand for foreign capital. Since September, 1873, nearly all American projects have ranked in the same category in the estimation of the European investor. The good have suffered with the bad. This indiscriminate condemnation is as hurtful as it is unjust, and some means should be devised for correcting and, as far as possible, preventing it. How best to do this is a question worthy of the consideration of our wealthiest and most reputable citizens. It may not be their business to put the people of London, Amsterdam, or Frankfort on their guard against schemes carried thither from this side by adventurers; but it should not be difficult for them to organize some advisory board, to whom distant investors might apply for information with the conviction that it would be in all respects trustworthy. As matters now are, any man may go abroad with schemes which no prudent American will touch, and by downright fraud he obtains money. An advisory body—formed somewhat after the model of the Council of Foreign Bondholders in London, though with totally different functions—would be a court of appeal to which foreign investors would confidently turn, and its influence would be wide and wholesome.

OUR MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT.

It can hardly have been forgotten by readers of THE TIMES that some two years ago there was an announcement made of an impending bequest for the establishment in New-York of what was to be called a Musical College, which was to be "dedicated to the daughters of America." They will also probably remember that although the announcement took the somewhat formidable shape of a pamphlet, and the sum mentioned as forthcoming for the college was a trifle of three millions of dollars, a very considerable part of which was to be expended for an enormous building, "with the statue of the founder over the entrance," we were not very profoundly impressed by the project, and indeed, to use a common phrase, did not take much stock in it. And thus far we believe the Faculty of the college has not been nominated; Herr RICHARD WAGNER has not assumed the Presidency; the first stone of the building has not been laid; nor has the statue of the founder been modeled. The daughters of America being thus bereft of their college, they turned, doubtless with eager expectation, to Mr. STRAKOSCH, and looked for consolation in his to-be-magnificent opera-house. Alas for the fate of America's daughters! Blessed are they that expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed. The opera-house and the musical college are alike misty, nebulous, inchoate, not even advanced to the dignity of chaos. The daughters must wait, and perhaps their daughters, or their daughters' daughters, may see with glad eyes the statue of the founder of a three-million musical college to them dedicated.

We have no conservatory of music in New-York, we have no such operatic establishment as may be found in most of the great cities of Europe, nor does it seem at all likely that we shall have either for many years. But it would be very wrong to infer from the fact of our lack of two such institutions the absence of a widely-diffused taste for the best music. The reasons of our deficiency in these respects are social and political, not natural or educational. We, or a very large proportion of us, love music instinctively, and of our natural music-lovers a very large proportion have sufficient culture not only to enjoy but to appreciate performances of the works of the best masters in all the forms of music, from opera to symphony. Whoever doubts this, doubts in ignorance or in prejudice, or in both. If we do not support opera—and undoubtedly we do not—and if we do not demand a school of music corresponding to the European conservatories, it is because the distribution of wealth and the constitution of society here are so different from what they are in Europe. We have wealth and wealthy people, but no wealthy class; and for the support of great musical institutions such a class seems absolutely required. The manager of an opera-house in Europe is able to count upon the support of a large number of patrons of established wealth and position, who will pay largely through a whole season and almost every season. To them an opera-box is a part of the appanage of their rank. And even chance opera-goers there willingly pay a price which here cannot be extorted except for the inferior performances of amateurs, the sound of whose voices is supposed not to be heard outside a certain gilded circle of wealth, if not of fashion. Five dollars and seven dollars and a half are common prices for stall tickets to the opera in Europe. Here such prices exclude all except the very richest people, and even of those there are not many who would be likely to take four seats on those terms through a whole season. Moreover, the most cultivated people are not generally to be found with us among the wealthy. They are found there, of course, but generally they are persons of moderate means, to whom the expenditure of twenty dollars for the amusement of two or three people (which would be required for carriage, &c.,) is a matter not to be thought of, except on rare and special occasions. The newly-rich spend their money in other ways. As to Government aid or aristocratic patronage, that with us is impossible.

But the conclusions which some musical foreigners who come among us draw from these facts, even when they remain for years—that we are not a music-loving or a music-understanding people—are not only unwarranted, but often laughably absurd. A certain Mr. BONAWITZ, who formerly dwelt in Philadelphia, but who has shaken the dust of brotherly love from his feet and lives in Vienna, has lately made himself particularly ridiculous on this subject in the Theatre Journal of that city. He finds that Boston is the chief city for music in America, and he also finds that, owing to the Puritanism of that place, musical performances there are chiefly of a religious character. Amazing Mr. BONAWITZ! For yet, in this Puritanic, religiously-musical town, he is obliged to confess that STRAUSS and his waltzes were the most favorably received. He tells a story—that even in Boston, thirty years ago, one SCHMITT made the experiment of playing the Fifth Symphony, and at rehearsal took the first movement in andantino time, which was received by the performers with favor; but that, at the performance, venturing to quicken the time to allegretto, he found that neither the musicians nor the audience could endure it, and he was "unceremoniously dismissed"—from what? It is possible that Mr. BONAWITZ may find believers of such a story in Europe, for there are people there who would have believed him if he had added that the audience rose in their war-paint, scalped the luckless SCHMITT, roasted him at the chandelier, and devoured his flesh amid howlings, largo sostenuto; and that from that time to this no conductor in America has ever dared to play an allegro movement any faster than andantino. Mr. BONAWITZ should have known that the Philharmonic Society of New-York is nearly thirty years old; and that before the formation of that society there were others here, some of them formed of amateurs, in which symphonies were performed, not in a very finished style probably, but with the allegro movements in just time, and with a keen enjoyment of their beauties both by the performers and the audience. There is an infinite deal of nonsense talked upon this subject by others than the Bonawitzes. The fact is that the numbers of our lovers of the higher music have increased, partly from the natural growth of population, partly from advanced culture, and partly from the immigration of foreigners, chiefly Germans; and that the precision, the mechanical finish of our orchestral performances, has notably improved. But as to real, intelligent enjoyment and understanding of the best instrumental, operatic, or oratorio performances, it may be doubted whether that was not greater twenty or twenty-five years ago than it is now.

MARCY SETTLES IT.

Mr. DANIEL MARCY, of Portsmouth, N. H., has been nominated by the Democrats for Governor of that State. The nomination was made about the middle of last January. The acceptance of the candidate has just been made public. Viewed from an impartial and disinterested standpoint, the correspondence bearing upon this subject is touching and noble. It is such a good example of proceedings of this sort that no student of politics can afford to let it pass without at least a comment. In the first place, a committee notify Mr. MARCY of his nomination. They inform him of a fact which was long since notorious. Then they go on to say that "the new dangers that imperil the Union cause every patriotic heart to throb with anxiety." Next they express the hope that "our good old State," meaning New-Hampshire, "will speak for the right and against the wrong in tones that cannot be misunderstood." This is entirely regular, and we may add that these sentiments reflect great credit on the hearts and heads of their originators. They may be a trifle threadbare, but otherwise they are unexceptionable.

If DANIEL MARCY were a common kind of man, he would simply say that he accepted the nomination with thanks and give a bank check for a liberal amount. But MARCY is not a common man; therefore, he proceeds to give his views on the situation, considered from moral, political, and economic points of view. In his opinion, the voice of 38,000 Democratic voters in New-Hampshire was to him a source of infinite anxiety. He has heard that voice and is satisfied. The resolutions of the convention embody the voice of the aforesaid 38,000, and they meet with his unqualified approval. But, fixing his eye upon the field of national politics, MARCY feels that TILDEN and HENDRICKS are elected. The fact that many distinguished citizens of Louisiana think that there was a fair and free vote in that State is conclusive evidence on that point, to his mind. If anything were needed to fix him in this opinion, it is the fact that two of the aforesaid distinguished citizens formerly lived in Portsmouth, N. H. Manifestly, a man born in Portsmouth, N. H., and subsequently domiciled in Louisiana, gains thereby a certain infallibility of judgment which Mr. DANIEL MARCY cannot afford to ignore. If two of these distinguished citizens were to return from a balloon voyage, and assure the ingenuous MARCY that the moon is made of green cheese, he would surrender any astronomical theories, which he had previously imbibed at the district school, in favor of the doctrine inculcated by these much-traveled natives of Portsmouth.

This is very handsome in MARCY. He is ready to give up his private judgment at a moment's notice. But this second-hand belief, happily, is reinforced by a personal opinion founded on what he calls "a personal acquaintance with the State of Louisiana," and this makes him "certain that a decisive majority of the citizens in that State have given their votes for TILDEN and HENDRICKS." Nothing can be plainer. MARCY, in his little back office in Portsmouth, has grasped the situation with a gigantic grip, so to speak, and there is really no longer any need for debate. He says he is sure—cock-sure, he might add—that Louisiana went for TILDEN with a rush; or, to put it more exactly, by a decisive majority. Mr. D. D. FIELD might as well disband his committee, throw open his dungeons, and proclaim liberty to the captive WELLS. MARCY knows all about it. Therefore he rises to remark that any attempt of the Republican Party to lay a hand on the Electoral vote of Louisiana, save in the way of kindness is "contrary to the first principles of popular government." And Mr. DANIEL MARCY does not propose to sit idly by and see the first principles of popular government kicked about as though they were only second-hand principles. He is ready to raise his voice, in New-Hampshire, at least, and to say just what he thinks about it. There is a column and a half of these noble sentiments.

The unprejudiced reader will admire the patriotism of a man who, nominated for Governor of New-Hampshire, rises above the petty considerations of State policy, and frees his mind of voluminous opinions on the Presidential question. MARCY is the thoughtful patriot who "views with alarm" a great many things, of which the most alarming is the probable defeat of the Democratic Party. If MARCY were not a representative Democratic politician, he would not have embodied these distinguished views in a letter accepting a nomination. The fact is that MARCY is a venerable copperhead, who was defeated by the Republican candidate when he ran for Governor, last year. There was a bolt threatened when he was nominated again in January last. Symptoms of insubordination and discontent were so alarming, that the party managers were obliged to labor with the nominee, in hopes of persuading him to get off the ticket. But MARCY knew his strength. He has money; he is willing to spend it for his canvass, but not for any other man's. So he calmly buttoned up his pockets and said: "If I don't run for Governor, you shall not have the first red cent from me." And when MARCY makes up his mind it stays there. The committee were in despair. They could not elect him with his money; they could not elect anybody else without it. But MARCY was in possession of the nomination, and he clung to that, as they say in New-Hampshire, "like a puppy to a root." At last accounts he was hanging on, and with one hand oratorically waving over the first principles of popular government, he announces that his heart throbs in unison with "nearly 39,000 citizens, constituting the Democratic Party of the State," and that he is ready to do or die. Not a word here about the attempt to suppress him as an old fogy and a played-out politician. MARCY is too magnanimous for that. He goes in for the first principles of popular government, the palladium of our liberties, and certain thunder tones which he expects to be evolved from the New-Hampshire election. MARCY has settled it.

OBITUARY.

REAR ADMIRAL WILKES.

Rear Admiral Charles Wilkes, one of the oldest officers in the United States Navy, died at Washington, yesterday, in the 77th year of his age. Admiral Wilkes was born in this City in the year 1801, and after a few years' study in the common schools received an appointment as Midshipman on Jan. 1, 1812. He served on the Mediterranean Station in the years 1819-20, and in the Pacific from 1821 to 1823. He received a commission as Lieutenant on April 28, 1826, and during the year 1829 accompanied an exploring expedition. He was appointed to the Department of Charts and Instruments in 1830, and was the first naval officer in the United States to make observations with fixed astronomical instruments. He accompanied an exploring expedition in 1833, and from 1834 to 1837 performed special duty for the Government. On Aug. 13, 1838, he sailed from Norfolk, Va., in command of a squadron of five vessels and a store-ship, on an exploring expedition to the southern seas. He visited Madeira, the Cape Verde Islands Rio de Janeiro, Tierra del Fuego, Valparaiso, Callao, the Panmoton group, Tahiti, the Samoan Islands, Wallis Island, and Sydney, New South Wales, in the Australian Colony. He made a thorough survey and exploration of the Samoan Islands during his sojourn in that locality. He left Sydney in December, 1839, and went through the Antarctic regions, where he made many important discoveries. During the year 1840 he thoroughly explored the Fiji group of islands, and visited the Hawaiian Islands, where he made calculations on the summit of Mauna Loa. In the early part of the year 1841, Lieut. Wilkes proceeded to the north-west coast of America, and traversed both the Columbia and Sacramento Rivers. On the 1st of November in the same year, he sailed from San Francisco across the Pacific, and visited in turn Manila, Sooloo, Borneo, Singapore, the Cape of Good Hope, and St. Helena, and returning to this country, dropped anchor in this port on June 10, 1842. Some of his officers preferred charges against him about this time, and he was placed under arrest, and tried by court-martial. The court acquitted him of all charges excepting one of illegally punishing some of his crew, and for this offense he received a reprimand. He received his commission as Commander on July 13, 1843, and from 1845 to 1850 he was assigned to special duty. He was commissioned Captain on Sept. 14, 1855, and placed in command of the sloop-of-war San Jacinto. In 1861 he was ordered to proceed to the West Indies on a cruise after the Confederate steamer Sumter. While on this expedition he overhauled the British mail steamer Trent, in the Bahama Channel, and forcibly captured Mason and Slidell, the rebel Commissioners to England and France, Capt. Wilkes conveyed his distinguished prisoners in safety to Boston, and for this bold and patriotic exploit he received a vote of thanks from Congress. The President subsequently disapproved of his action, as to have approved it might have involved the North in a foreign war, which would have embarrassed its action in the contest with the South; and the Confederate Commissioners were surrendered to England. Capt. Wilkes was commissioned Commodore, and placed first on the list, on July 16, 1862. He assumed command of the flotilla on the James River, and while acting in this capacity shelled and destroyed City Point, Va., on Aug. 28, of that year. In 1863 he was placed in command of a special squadron in the West Indies, and both distinguished himself and rendered effective service to his country by capturing a large number of blockade-runners which were laden with arms and munitions intended for the rebel service.

Admiral Wilkes was an observant and intelligent man, and has added many valuable works to the literature of his generation. His narratives of The United States Exploring Expedition in 1838-42 filled six quarto and five octavo volumes. They were published in Philadelphia in the year 1845, and a second edition was issued in this City in 1851. He gave a great deal of attention to astronomy, and also to meteorology, and was the author of a volume on the latter subject which was included in the library of the aforementioned expedition. He published a valuable history entitled Western America, including California and Oregon, at Philadelphia, in 1849, and a valuable treatise on the Theory of the Winds, in 1836. He was commissioned Rear Admiral on July 25, 1866, and placed on the retired list.

INTEREST ON THE TENNESSEE DEBT.

NASHVILLE, Feb. 8.—The State Senate to-day concurred in the House resolution directing the Controller and Treasurer to suspend the payment of interest on the State bonded debt.

ALBANY.

BUSINESS IN BOTH HOUSES.

MR. LANGBEIN'S DISTRICT COURT BILL AND THE PUBLIC WORKS BILL ORDERED TO A THIRD READING—A NEW BATCH OF CITY BILLS IN THE SENATE—MR. WOODIN'S QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Thursday, Feb. 8, 1877.

The Assembly this morning did three things—it read a third time and passed a bill authorizing the purchase by some northern village of a steam fire engine; it ordered to a third reading Mr. Langbein's bill providing for a revision and consolidation of the laws relating to the district courts, and providing for other needed improvements in them; and it ordered to a third reading the much-debated Public Works bill, with an amendment to it offered by Mr. Fish as a substitute for that presented by Dr. Hayes yesterday. The amendment was accepted by Mr. Baker, but the Democrats opposed it, though unsuccessfully. The amendment reads as follows:

"In case any officer or employe in the service of the State, under the provisions of this bill, shall use his power, position, or patronage for the promotion or defeat of partisan or party purposes, it shall be deemed good and sufficient cause for removal, and in case any superior officer having authority shall refuse or neglect to take cognizance thereof and to remove therefor, the question of such violation may be tried and determined by any Justice of the Supreme Court having jurisdiction in the county wherein such violation occurred, upon the written charges made under oath by five substantial freeholders of the neighborhood, and in case the said Justice shall sustain such charges, he shall certify that fact to the Superintendent of Public Works, or in case of the hearing of charges against the latter, to the Governor, who upon the receipt of such certificate shall remove such incupated officer or employe. And no increase of the force upon the canals shall be made at any time within 60 days preceding any annual election for State officers, except when the Superintendent of Public Works shall certify that the needs of the public service make such increase necessary at that time, which certificate shall be immediately published, when made, in the official State journal."

This completes the record of the day's work in the Assembly, save that two vetoes of small local bills were received from the Governor and read a few minutes before the House adjourned. Mr. Alvord, speaking on the Public Works bill, made every effort in the House to carry the amendments voted down in Committee of the Whole, and carried one, making the salary of the Superintendent $6,000, instead of $7,500 as the bill provided. The bill will probably be read a third time to-morrow.

The Committee on Cities will have a hearing next Tuesday afternoon, on two bills affecting New-York, being the Salary bill introduced by Mr. Langbein, and the bill introduced by Mr. Fish, which, when in the Legislature last session, was generally known as the Woodin Charter bill. All persons interested in these matters are invited to attend.

There are fears expressed by some of the friends of the bill in relation to the office of Superintendent of State Prisons that an attempt will be made to damage it. It appears that there are a number of politicians scheming to get the office of Superintendent. Mr. Pillsbury has repeatedly declared that he would not accept the office if he were required to sever his connection with the Albany Penitentiary; his intention being to appoint a deputy there who should receive the salary, and discharge the duties of Superintendent, while Mr Pillsbury retained the general oversight as before. The politicians alluded to, well aware of this, are intriguing to get an amendment tacked on to the bill, prohibiting the person who shall be appointed Superintendent, from holding any other State, county, or national office. They have an idea that if Mr. Pillsbury can only be got out of the way, there will be a general scramble for the place, in which some one of them may get hold of it.

The Senate discussed at great length the bill reported from the Insurance Committee authorizing any insurance company to change the number of its Directors to any number not less than 13, and to change the time for the annual meeting of Trustees and Directors by resolution approved by a majority of the Directors. The bill was progressed after being amended so as to make it apply only to fire and marine insurance companies, and also requiring a vote of a majority in interest of the stockholders for the change in the number of Directors, as well as the approval of the Superintendent of Insurance.

Senator Bixby introduced another of his "series" of insurance bills to-day, which prohibits any company incorporated under the laws of this State from investing money on bond and mortgage outside of the State. At present they are allowed to invest in the States "adjacent to" the State of New-York.

Senator Woodin introduced six additional bills for reducing the expenses of the Government of New-York, which, together with the four introduced by him last week, will, if they pass, effect an annual saving to the City of $617,324. The bills introduced to-day are for a reduction of the salaries of Judges of all the courts of record in New-York City, as well as the Police and Justices' courts, and a reduction in the number and salaries of clerks and attendants of these courts. So far as the Judges are concerned, the reduction cannot, of course, take effect during the terms of the present incumbents. All these bills of Mr. Woodin have been carefully prepared by persons familiar with the workings of all departments of the City Government; and if the efforts now being made for reform and economy in the City Government were concentrated to secure their passage, the prospect would be better than it now is for getting the legislation so much needed by the City during the present session. But the old method of defeating all reform legislation by introducing a multitude of bills professing to have this object in view, has been resorted to this session as in years past. The lower house has been flooded with conflicting schemes of professed reformers, calculated, and, for the most part, doubtless intended to counteract each other and prevent any legislation at all in the direction of reform. I understand that the leaders of the Democracy are now concocting a scheme in New-York by which they hope to throw further obstacles in the way of any reform legislation for that City this Winter, or, in case they cannot do that, then to secure to Tammany Hall the credit of whatever reform is carried through. They are framing a bill which is to be sent here as the "Tammany bill," and is expected to receive the united support of the Democrats in the Legislature to the exclusion of all other projects of reform. An attempt will be made to stigmatize all the other bills introduced by Republicans as "partisan," the same as was done with Ogden's bill for reducing expenses in Brooklyn last Winter, and, in case they cannot prevent their passage, then to appeal to the Governor to veto them on the ground of their being partisan legislation, as they possessed that right in regard to this country dropped anchor in this port on June 10, 1842. Some of his officers preferred charges against him about this time, and he was placed under arrest, and tried by court-martial. The court acquitted him of all charges excepting one of illegally punishing some of his crew, and for this offense he received a reprimand. He received his commission as Commander on July 13, 1843, and from 1845 to 1850 he was assigned to special duty. He was commissioned Captain on Sept. 14, 1855, and placed in command of the sloop-of-war San Jacinto. In 1861 he was ordered to proceed to the West Indies on a cruise after the Confederate steamer Sumter. While on this expedition he overhauled the British mail steamer Trent, in the Bahama Channel, and forcibly captured Mason and Slidell, the rebel Commissioners to England and France, Capt. Wilkes conveyed his distinguished prisoners in safety to Boston, and for this bold and patriotic exploit he received a vote of thanks from Congress. The President subsequently disapproved of his action, as to have approved it might have involved the North in a foreign war, which would have embarrassed its action in the contest with the South; and the Confederate Commissioners were surrendered to England. Capt. Wilkes was commissioned Commodore, and placed first on the list, on July 16, 1862. He assumed command of the flotilla on the James River, and while acting in this capacity shelled and destroyed City Point, Va., on Aug. 28, of that year. In 1863 he was placed in command of a special squadron in the West Indies, and both distinguished himself and rendered effective service to his country by capturing a large number of blockade-runners which were laden with arms and munitions intended for the rebel service.

Admiral Wilkes was an observant and intelligent man, and has added many valuable works to the literature of his generation. His narratives of The United States Exploring Expedition in 1838-42 filled six quarto and five octavo volumes. They

ENGLAND AND THE EAST.

WHAT THE BLUE BOOK REVEALS.

PRINCIPAL POINTS IN IMPORTANT CORRESPONDENCE—TURKEY INCAPABLE OF REALIZING REFORMS—HOW AUSTRIA HOPED FOR ENGLAND'S AID—LORD SALISBURY'S CONDUCT APPROVED OF BY THE QUEEN.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The principal points of the correspondence on the Eastern question in the Blue Book issued to-day are already known. Strong suspicion of Russia is apparent throughout Sir Henry G. Elliott's reports to Lord Derby. Thus, on Sept. 14 Sir Henry writes that Gen. Ignatieff has frequently declared that the proposal for the autonomy of Bosnia is impracticable. If the Russian Government now support that proposal, we may ask whether they do not do so with the knowledge that it may be productive of future trouble. In another dispatch, dated Oct. 24, he says there may be, perhaps, grounds for believing Russia has no fixed plan for going to war with Turkey; but there can at least be no doubt of her determination not to lose the present opportunity of fatally weakening her. On the other hand, Sir Henry, telegraphing on Oct. 4, answers Lord Derby that nothing could be more distinct than the terms in which he has warned the Porte to expect no assistance from England in the event of Russian attack. The correspondence contains several strong expressions of Count Andrassy against the conferment of excessive liberties on the Turkish provinces. Lord Derby, writing on Nov. 7 to Sir Andrew Buchanan, British Ambassador at Vienna, recapitulates a conversation with Count Von Beust, the Austrian Ambassador at London, in which the latter stated the Austrian Government were determined, if England took up the same position with them, not to go further in regard to the question of autonomy than England's original propositions, but if England was inclined to go further, and not oppose the same resistance to the process of slow poisoning or chemical disintegration which she would to one of dismemberment, Austria must look to her own interests in the way best calculated to protect them. Lord Derby says he replied that England would not depart at the conference from her proposal respecting autonomy.

Other passages in the correspondence show that in instructions to the Marquis of Salisbury previous to the conference, Lord Derby states that Turkey is incapable of realizing the reforms, and guarantees are necessary; England, however, is opposed to foreign military occupation. The Emperor William informed Lord Salisbury when the latter was in Berlin on his way to Constantinople, that the Czar's policy was made necessary by circumstances and the oppression of co-religionists. The Emperor of Austria told Salisbury at Vienna that the interests of England and Austria in the Eastern question were identical.

Lord Loftus, British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, announces that the Czar was ignorant of the Earl of Beaconsfield's speech at Guildhall when his Majesty made the speech at Moscow.

The correspondence confirms the statement that Lord Salisbury ordered the departure of the British fleet from Besika Bay to disabuse the Turks of any expectation of aid from England.

Lord Salisbury, recounting the proceedings of the Grand Council of the Turks, states that the Sultan was disposed to accept the conditions of the powers, but Midhat Pasha placed the matter before the council in such a manner that rejection was certain. Lord Salisbury also says he hopes for nothing from the Constitution, as the Sultan can banish or unseat Senators or Deputies. Lord Derby, before Lord Salisbury left Constantinople, informed him of the Queen's complete approval of all his acts.

An afternoon paper in a leading article says: "We have yet to learn whether the Liberal Party is right in their anticipation that the Marquis of Salisbury will avow that he pursued a policy at Constantinople opposed to that of the administration to which he belongs, and explains that if he did not succeed in forcing the Turks to yield to foreign interference it was only because he was thwarted by the coldness and obstructiveness of his colleagues at home. We hardly expect they will be gratified. At the same time it is certain that the protocols of the conference reveal matter almost as surprising as any such avowal could be; and when we look at the way the conference began and the way it ended, it does appear as if Lord Salisbury must have an explanation of some kind to make."

The instructions for Salisbury's guidance at the conference insist most emphatically upon the necessity for guarantees. The following are extracts: "It is vain for the Porte to expect the powers will be satisfied with mere general assurances which have already been so often given and so imperfectly executed. The whole history of the Empire since the Treaty of Paris proves that the Porte is unable to secure the execution of reform. Its officials accept them with reluctance and neglect them with impunity."

The instructions contain a sketch of the reforms recommended by England, which include the appointment of Governors of provinces and Judges, subject to the approval of the European Ambassadors, provincial elective assemblies, a reformed militia, &c.

On the other hand, the instructions state that the English Government cannot countenance the introduction into the conference of proposals, however plausible or well intentioned, which would bring foreign armies into Turkey in violation of the engagements by which the guaranteeing powers are solemnly bound. Great Britain is resolved not to sanction misgovernment; but if the Porte, through obstinacy or apathy, opposes the efforts which are now making to place the Ottoman Empire on a more secure basis, the consequences will rest solely with the Sultan and his advisers.

Lord Derby's dispatch after the failure of the conference is couched in terms of the warmest approval of Lord Salisbury's conduct. It expresses the high sense of the Queen's Government of his ability, energy, zeal, and patriotic motives.

FORMAL DISCUSSIONS OF THE COURSE OF THE CABINET IN BOTH HOUSES—THE POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT COMMON AND NOT SEPARATE ACTIONS BY THE POWERS.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—In the House of Lords to-night, during the debate on the address to the Queen, Earl Granville said he would defer criticism on the Eastern question until he had read the official correspondence. He added, however, that he did not think the Treaty of Paris ought to be abandoned, and that treaty imposed on the powers the duty of protecting the Christians in Turkey.

The Earl of Derby declared the policy of the Government was not changed. It was only modified because the situation was modified. He recapitulated the negotiations and defended the Government's conduct with regard to the Andrassy note and the Berlin memorandum. He said: "It is too soon to say the conference is a fiasco. We must speak with reserve of the probability of the maintenance of peace, which depends on the decision of a single man, but hope peace will be maintained. The conference has served to gain time. Russia and Servia have become reciprocally disenchanted with each other. The Czar is now well able to say it is not incumbent upon him to undertake alone the realization of the decisions of the six powers. I believe the Porte appreciates the gravity of the situation and wishes to satisfy Europe. It is not England's duty to protect the Porte in every eventuality." Lord Derby recognized a moral obligation to intervene in favor of the Christians, but such duty was not imposed by treaty.

Lord Derby further declared that England's policy from the first had been to press the recommendations of the conference upon the Porte but not use or sanction the use of force and at the same time not undertake to protect Turkey from force used by the Powers. He explained that he did not mean our duty should be inaction under all possible circumstances, as, for instance, if Constantinople should be threatened. That was a question on which it was quite unnecessary and wholly unwise to pledge ourselves now. With regard to the Czar's assurances, he said, though he believed in the Czar's sincerity, still even the Czar might be compelled to act against his personal wishes, and he declined to accept any declarations as a guarantee against war.

The Duke of Argyll made a violent attack on the Government, and declared his belief that their policy of never forcing Turkey to comply with their wishes would end in disastrous war.

The Earl of Beaconsfield said the Eastern Question was not alone a question of the amelioration of the condition of Christians, but a question of the existence of empires. We must treat it as statesmen.

The Marquis of Salisbury protested against the doctrine that we ought to use coercion against Turkey. By overthrowing the Ottoman Empire we would create anarchy and confusion. He forcibly proclaimed the sympathy of the English Government for the Christians in Turkey.

In the House of Commons the Marquis of Hartington, without wishing to provoke formal discussion, pointed out how the Government had abandoned the original policy of non-intervention. It was therefore incumbent on them to show they were not responsible for the effusion of blood in Servia during the Summer before that policy was changed. He spoke in terms of eulogy of Lord Salisbury, who had re-established a friendly understanding between Russia and England; and he asked what were the Government's intentions for the future. He protested against the adoption of a policy which would leave Russia and Turkey confronting each other as they now stood.

Sir Stafford H. Northcote replied that no member of the Government had ever said anything implying that England would make war in favor of Turkey. In regard to the future, he said the Government had from the first maintained two principles, namely: they were not prepared to use coercion, and desired common, not separate, action. Separate action, particularly by two such powers as Russia and Austria, would be suspected. He had no confidence in the Turkish Constitution, and ridiculed the supposition that the simple proclamation of that Constitution, without guarantees, could produce any result. The Government believed all interests demanded the maintenance of peace.

Mr. Gladstone spoke in defense of his conduct during the Autumn.

Both houses adopted the address unanimously.

TURKEY AND THE GREAT POWERS.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH SERVIA AND MONTENEGRO—MIDHAT PASHA—GERMANY TO ATTEMPT TO ARRANGE A COMMON COURSE BETWEEN AUSTRIA AND RUSSIA—PROLONGATION OF NEGOTIATIONS EXPECTED.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—A dispatch from Vienna says: "The new Grand Vizier has sent express instructions to the Turkish Ambassador here to continue the preliminary negotiations with Servia."

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 8.—The Prince of Montenegro has replied to a telegram from the Grand Vizier that he is willing to negotiate for peace on the basis of the status quo ante bellum, with a rectification of the frontiers, but considers it useless to send a delegate to Constantinople, and asks that the negotiations be conducted with the Ottoman Ambassador at Vienna. The Imperial yacht Izzedin, with Midhat Pasha on board, left Syria to-day for Brindisi.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—Reuter's telegram from Constantinople says the story that Midhat Pasha was implicated in a conspiracy is now universally discredited. The Turquie, a semi-official journal, announces that he was dismissed because his conduct tended to curtail the power of the Sultan. He was exiled merely as a precaution against popular excitement.

The Standard's dispatch from Vienna announces that Gen. Ignatieff has left that city for St. Petersburg.

The Paris correspondent of the Standard says it is stated that the French Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople has applied for two men-of-war for the protection of the foreign residents.

The Times dispatch from Berlin reports that it is expected that Austria, in reply to the Russian note, will decline to adopt warlike measures against Turkey. Germany is likely to offer her good offices to arrange a common course between Russia and Austria.

The Russian Telegraphic Agency expects that negotiations will be prolonged.

The Paris Temps says it has received special information that Lord Derby informed Count Schouvaloff that England would do her utmost to maintain an understanding between the powers in the new phase of the Eastern question. Austria has declared she will continue to act with the other powers.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says the attitude of Roumania excites considerable speculation. The mass of the people are averse to war. The minority is divided into two sections, one of which, headed by the Ministry, favors permitting a passage for belligerents through the neutral zone, and the other, led by Prince Charles, advocates co-operation with Russia, and the proclamation of the Hospodar as King of Roumania. Austrian surveillance of the frontier of Bosna is so relaxed that the insurgents easily obtain supplies. The Austrian authorities have formed large depots of forage and stores along the frontier. The concentration of Austrian troops there exceeds anything within the memory of the inhabitants. Telegrams relating to this movement of troops are suppressed at the local telegraph stations. It is believed by many in Vienna that Austria has agreed with Russia to occupy Northern Turkey.

A Belgrade special to the Times announces that all the Turkish people have left Bosnia, and the Government intends to arm the native Mussulmans to guard against attack by Servia.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

FIRE IN WEST HOUSTON STREET—LOSS ESTIMATED AT $48,000.

A 11:30 o'clock last night, a patrolman of the Eighth Precinct Police, while passing through West Houston street, discovered smoke issuing from the upper windows of the five-story building Nos. 188 and 190. He hastened to the nearest box and sent out an alarm, which was promptly responded to by the Fire Department. The doors of the building were forced open, and it was found that the fourth and fifth floors were on fire. These floors are occupied by Leggo Bros. & Co., lithographers, and owing to the inflammable nature of the contents of that portion of the building, the flames burned with great intensity and threatened the entire edifice with destruction. Chief Bates, on arriving at the scene, found the force on the ground too small to cope with the fast increasing flames, and ordered a second alarm to be sounded, which brought to his aid Assistant Chief Shay, and a large reinforcement of firemen and engines. Lines of hose were carried over the roofs of the adjoining buildings, and powerful streams of water were thrown into the burning building. After an hour's work the firemen had succeeded in gaining control of the flames, and by 1 o'clock this morning they were completely subdued. The fourth and fifth floors of the building were burned out, and their contents will prove a total loss. A portion of the roof was also destroyed. The lower floors were deluged with water. The loss of Leggo Bros. & Co. on stock and machinery is estimated at $25,000, and is but partially insured. The third floor is occupied by the Magic Ruffle Company, and their loss on stock and machinery, chiefly by water, will be about $10,000; insured. Webster Bros. & Co., proprietors of the Manhattan Laundry, occupy the second floor; loss, $5,000. The first floor is unoccupied. The building is a substantial brick structure, 75 feet in width, and the same in depth, and is owned by John H. Bussell, of No. 47 West Fiftieth street, and is damaged to the extent of $3,000. The cause of the fire could not be ascertained. The employes of Messrs. Leggo Bros. & Co., were at work later than usual last night, and the fire broke out soon after they left.

OTHER FIRES.

The sash and blind warehouse of Crawford & Banford, and the Masonic Hall at Stafford Springs, Conn., were entirely destroyed by fire yesterday morning. Loss, $20,000. Insured for $15,000 in the Phœnix, Ætna, and Hartford companies of Hartford, the Continental and Westchester, of New-York, and the North British.

Sweet & Barlow's store at Wappinger's Falls, N. Y., was partially destroyed by fire on Wednesday night. The loss is fully covered by insurances.

The premises at Napanee, Canada, occupied by the Express newspaper were burned yesterday morning. Loss $10,000.

AN OHIO RIVER STEAMER SUNK.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 8.—The steamer Bostona struck a tow-boat early this morning at Sciotoville, Ohio, and sunk to her upper deck. No lives were lost. She was the largest up-river steamer running.

CONDITION OF MR. STEPHENS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Hon. Alexander H. Stephens is not so well this evening as he was during the day. He is kept free from excitement of all kinds. Visitors are not admitted to his room, and newspapers and letters are not read to him.

A UNIQUE GERMAN FROLIC

THE LIEDERKRANZ FESTIVAL.

ENTIRE SUCCESS OF THE GREAT GERMAN CARNIVAL—A SCENE OF DAZZLING BRILLIANCE IN THE ACADEMY—GROTESQUE COSTUMES—THE INAUGURAL PROCESSION AND BURLESQUE PERFORMANCES—WHO OCCUPIED THE BOXES—UNIQUE FLORAL DECORATIONS.

A true German gives himself up to his festivities with as much abandon as if he were born to be nothing but a feast-maker all his days. All Summer long he dots the season with his regular and irregular holidays, and in their enjoyment he compels all who witness his pleasure to acknowledge that he is master of the problem of how to make life not only long but full, and full of something else besides the drudgery and care of money-getting and money-keeping. In his thoroughness at fun-making he has, in all his strength, devoted himself to the pleasurable task of making entirely successful the annual ball of the Liederkranz Society, which was held last night in the Academy of Music. The preparations for this festival began weeks ago, and were duly announced, in an unusually happy way, by the Liederkranz Carnival Gazette, a handsomely-printed and illustrated publication. Besides a good outside view of the Academy of Music, with a hurrying crowd of masqueraders making their way to the doors, it contained a humorous cartoon in which the leading spirits of the carnival were exhibited in an arena decked out in the emblems of their business. This cartoon and another in the same paper were the work of Mr. J. Keppler, who also made the designs for the tickets, which illustrated Wagner playing at once upon a lyre and a huge brass horn, while an explosion caused by his wondrous blast has created general terror among familiar political characters, musicians, and the members of the Whisky Ring, and they are all seen plunging desperately into the ocean of despair. The committees appointed for the purpose carried out all the preliminary arrangements so well that last night's result in every way rewarded them for their painstaking.

At 8 o'clock a calcium light on Fourteenth street blazed out over a gay scene in front of the Academy of Music. At the side entrance to the building a canopy was stretched from the door to the curb, for the protection of lady members in passing from their carriages. A large force of policemen under Inspector Thorne restrained the crowds, whose eagerness to obtain a close view of the strange characters made them forget themselves occasionally, and led to an uncomfortable pressure upon the lines. Carriages from the north set down their passengers at the main entrance, and then drove out through Fourteenth street to Fourth avenue, while members' carriages approached from Third avenue, stopped at the box entrance on Fourteenth street, and then also passed out to Fourth avenue. The company began to arrive early, and before 8:30 o'clock many of the seats in the parquet were occupied by those who came apparently merely to look on, as they were dressed in sober suits of black or in ordinary evening costumes. The Door Committee were first upon the scene, and were visible here, there, and everywhere, at the same moment, in their very picturesque Piccolomini costumes of brown and blue plush, puffed sleeves, buff top-boots and gauntlets, crossbelts and swords, and broad-brimmed hats with plumes of white. As the company became more numerous, the lobby was filled with all sorts of incongruous characters. The dressing-rooms became overflowed with occupants, and throngs waited their turn to put the last finishing touches upon their costumes. Up and down the hall masked ladies and gentlemen promenaded and admired the floral decorations, which were really worth more than a passing examination. Over the central door in the lobby, in a shield of smilax wreaths, were the letters "L. K.," and just inside the lobby were graceful festoons of smilax. At each side of the entrances to the auditorium were large stands of plants and cut flowers, callas, hyacinths, heliotropes, tuberoses, camellias, Marshal Neil roses, and carnations, blended with feathery ferns and other masses of green. About the dancing platform were vases containing choice cut flowers. The full depth of the stage was thrown open for dancing purposes, except a small portion reserved for the exhibition of some of the set pieces. In front of this platform, which was tastefully backed with scenery, were sofas for the convenience of guests. The scene, as the evening wore on toward the opening of the dance, was very brilliant. Ladies in rich and ingeniously designed garments, many of them cut with a freedom that was startling, began to pour into the house, and gentlemen with absurd noses, trunk hose, and slashed doublets, with prematurely gray locks or no locks at all; others with fierce French costumes of a day almost forgotten; others still, with dress suits and only a pretty comical cap to show that they gave their allegiance to the merry prince, made their appearance. The success of the maskers in securing variety of costumes was wonderful. The dress of the Lobby Committee was a natty page's costume of the time of Charles XII., with garments of crimson velvet and gold lace, jaunty caps trimmed in corresponding style, and white hose and crimson slippers. The platform was guarded, before the dancing began, by terrible halberdiers in suits of armor, with velvet tunics beneath, and these guards bore in their hands flashing spears to frighten off intruders. A very happy and fleshy "Lohengrin" wandered up and down, waiting for the dance, and an old man in a long gray beard and a black domino promenaded lovingly with a charming young creature not far out of her teens. The ladies, as they entered, were presented each with an order of dancing that was a very elegant piece of work. In form, it was a golden lyre, the bars of which on the obverse and reverse sides formed the daily bulletins as to who embraced each other with arms thrust through the narrow openings, and their lips met in an ardent kiss. The frame of the lyre was in gold, and the figures were executed very handsomely in color. The leaves of the order of dancing were clasped together with a pencil run through a golden loop.

At 10 o'clock the seats in the auditorium were nearly all filled, and the crowd in the lobbies was sufficient to promise that the ball would be an entire success in point of numbers. The committee exercised great care in the sale of tickets, so that the company was entirely free from objectionable people. With the financial success of the ball the Liederkranz club was entirely gratified. The attendance was larger than at the ball of last year, the number of masks was also greater, and the returns of the Treasurer will show a handsome surplus. The promenade hand discoursed delightful music for half an hour before the signal was given for the entrance of the opening procession, and in the meantime the boxes filled up until the body of the house was occupied, and making a kaleidoscopic picture from floor to dome of the Academy. The bustling about the stage indicated, at 10, that the moment for the beginning of the feast had come, and soon after the festivities commenced.

"Dames aloft, in circling tiers Wreathed 'round their blooming ring."

THE BOXES.

The boxes, as usual at the Liederkranz, were in brisk demand, and sold at prices ranging from $15 to $150, according to location. During the evening they presented a lively and highly picturesque appearance, peopled, as they were, with mimic kings and peasants, princes and shopkeepers, courtiers and jolly millers, priests and clowns, empresses and ballet girls, grand duchesses and nuns, Topsies and Normandy maidens, in number and variety large enough to dazzle the beholder. The following is a list of the principal box-holders:

PROSCENIUM BOXES.

D—D. Kingsland,	O—A. W. Danford,
K—L. F. Georger.	S—Guests of the club,
R—G. B. Scranton.	Q—DeWitt C. Wheeler,
J—Col. Thompson,	H—H. M. Brooks,
N—William Steinway,	S—P. Facheri.

FIRST TIER.

1—J. Keppler.	19—F. B. Osborn.
3—A. C. Woodhull.	21—M. F. McConnell.
7—A. H. Hummel.	22—J. Hoffman.
8—W. Vigelius.	23—T. J. Histon.
9—Carl Voigt.	24—J. F. Wenman.
10—J. T. Hanemann.	26—A. E. Gilmore.
12—J. C. Spencer.	28—J. Hollgarten.
14—H. Falke.	27—Augustin Daly.
14—H. C. Ravemeyer.	29—Schuyler Brothers.
15—C. W. Dickel.	29—William Leytin.
16—Gustavus Alsas.	30—C. F. Coghlan.
17—Charles Gnidet.	31—J. S. Dickerson.
18—Charles Wall.

SECOND TIER.

49—John Fondir.	54—Z. E. Simmons.
50—Frank Leslie.	59—T. M. Schulz.
52—N. W. Gill.	60—James M. Mottey.
53—F. L. Arnold.	61—J. Hoye.

ARTISTS' ROW.

Parepa—F. Payson.	Mosart—F. Krotina.
Nilsson—Mr. Munzaza.	Rosalni—A. Brannigan.
Kellogg—S. H. Barry.	Meyerbeer—C. G. Gunther.
Patti—James S. Boyd.	Belini—C. B. Waite.
Piccolomini—H. Mohr.	Donizetti—Col. Porter.
Lagrange—G. H. Thorpe.	Verdi—D. E. Hitt.
Grisi—A. Fulsch mana.	Gounod—Mr. Harris

MEZZONINE ROW.

Nos.	Nos.
102—H. Jang.	109—O. S. Borert.
103—Mr. Robertson.	110—Mr. Jackson.
104—George Aery.	112—M. A. Welckers.
105—W. Langdon.	113—R. L. Johnson.
106—James J. Faye.	116—L. S. Stockwell.
107—F. Ronsone.	117—J. H. Bradford.
108—Mr. Cutting.	118—M. A. Welckers.

"ON WITH THE DANCE."

At 10 o'clock, at a signal from one of the floor managers, the musicians struck up the Grand March. In the meantime the seats around the platform had been gradually filling up, a few fancy costumes here and there relieving the mass of dominos, false noses, evening dresses, and street costumes. In a few minutes the Floor Committee marched upon the stage, two and two, by the main entrance. They were gorgeously costumed in royal purple velvet sleeveless jackets, elaborately embroidered around the edges in gold, and edged heavily with gold fringe. Gold embroidered belts encircled their waists, and purple velvet gold embroidered anklets set off their purple velvet tights to advantage. A series of chains of huge brilliants, rubies, and emeralds covered their shoulders and terminated in an immense glittering star on their breasts. Their arms were inclosed in silver chain armor, and they wore hats similar in shape to those of the door committee, except that they were more richly embroidered and that the plumes were long white ostrich feathers. The members seemed to have been selected for their shapeliness, their youth, and the elegance of their moustaches. They were followed closely by two of the lobby committee, whose page costume is described above. A long string of private masks of every variety of design formed in behind, until, when the procession had circled the platform several times and the floor committee suddenly spread out and pressed back the gayly dressed rabble, a complete ring, several couples in depth and tightly packed, was formed around the floor. Then a car appeared from the cavern on the left of the stage, and all the people occupying the parquet seats sprang to their feet and stood on tiptoe. Two great swans appeared to be the propelling power. The car itself was covered with a huge jester's cap of many colors, and a crowd of attendant columbines, pantaloons, harlequins and clowns, marched on either side of it. Behind toddled two great bottles. The carnivalistic procession moved in an eccentric course for some minutes, so as to afford all an opportunity of witnessing it, and then halting in the centre, a long string that depended from the flies was attached to the cap. Then there was a moment of doubt and uncertainty. The string did not work. The clowns lifted the cap with their hands and disclosed Prince Carnival, seated on a red velvet throne and attired in a rich costume of particolored stuff, a fool's wand in his hand and a cap and bells upon his head. He arose and bowed gracefully to the assembled multitude, descended from his seat, and mingled a while with his loyal subjects. Then, ascending again, the car moved off, paraded around a few times, and retired into the cavern. The band struck up the "Verdicte" waltz, and the floor was covered with active dancers.

THE COSTUMES.

The costumes were without exception very rich and elegant, and an exceptionally large number had the unusual merit of meaning something. There was a young lady representing Spring in a novel costume of green moss dotted with wild flowers. A venerable appearing gentleman in black gown and cap travestied Diogenes. He wore enormous spectacles and carried a dark lantern and a roll of parchment inscribed with mysterious characters. There was a fierce-looking pirate in the traditional red and white striped sailor shirt, blue and black trunks, white stockings, red cap, black beard, red nose, and Oriental cloak. There were several demure looking nuns in black robes and white winged caps disporting themselves in anything but a nun-like manner. A good costume was that of Gambrinus, a long, gray surcoat and hat trimmed with black Astrachan fur. One short woman became for the nonce Italianized in a dress of green and gold. "General Boum," with his ludicrous military costume, hat, and epaulettes, found several representatives. A very pretty young lady personated the Statue of Liberty, and her costume, red dress and light blue silk sash, the whole dotted with stars composed of brilliants. Upon her shapely head was a tiara of brilliants, also set in the form of stars. There was both a Sultan and a Sultana in gorgeous attire, and white satin literally covered with imitation pearls. Robin Hood appeared in the form of a stout son of Germania in slashed doublet of brown and carrying a cross-bow over his shoulder. Numerous fat boys amused the spectators with their eccentricities. A stage Dutchman, with his apparatus upon his back, went about crying "Scissors to mend." There was a Cossack, too, in white, edged with gray fur, and a red cloak with ear his shoulders. A typical hunter clad in skins threaded the trackless crowd. Mephistopheles was there, of course. A lady with a paste and scissors costume, composed entirely of many-colored tissue paper, which concealed form and shape and features, and ended in a tall spiral roll above her head. One would think that the Court of Louis XIV. had been resurrected from the number of bepowdered perruqued grandees in white and silver, damask and gold, and clocks. There were Red Riding Hoods, Cinderellas, and Dolly Vardens past counting. Two or three very pretty revolutionary costumes gave one an exalted notion of the beauty of our maternal ancestors. Flower girls with blooming staffs, Hungarians, Poles, Swiss, shoebiterinas, and persons of similar character all took part. A tall lady literally swathed in the American standard did credit to her namesake, the Goddess of Liberty. His Holiness might have found a ready-made occupant for at least one of the vacant seats in the College of Cardinals had he been present. The famous butcher boy in immaculate apron and cap, with hat was there too. A Soothsayer, with long white locks and crescents, stars, and hieroglyphics sprinkled over his black robe. Puck was a pretty curly-headed girl in white tights, a swallow-tail coat, and a high hat. These comprised about all the costumes that call for special mention. There were besides, knights and ladies, kings, queens, peasants, and the thousand and one other persons one meets at gatherings of the kind. The evening costumes were equal in beauty and richness to those usually seen.

THE TABLEAUX.

At 11 o'clock the second extraordinary event of the evening's entertainment took place. Herrmann's "Wapperfest" quadrille struck up and eight clowns suddenly appeared in the centre of the floor. Each held in his hand a pole, toe top of which was graced with a movable manikin, each about two feet in height. They represented alternately men and women, and were attired in costumes of ridiculous cut. Strings attached to the limbs of the manikins enabled the clowns to manipulate them so as to mimic their own movements on the floor below, and as the troupe went through the intricacies of the dance, the effect of the figures in mid air was irresistibly comic. The other tableaux followed at intervals of two or three dances. The third was known as the "Conspirators' Tableau." A number of persons, masked, in dominos, marched out of the cavern to the air of the conspirators' chorus from "La Fille de Madame Angot." When they had encircled the floor and arrived at the raised platform in the rear of the stage they threw off their dominoes and appeared as representatives of the great composers, Beethoven, Wagner, Meyerbeer, Handel, Mendelssohn, and Offenbach. The imitations were very good, and elicited hearty applause. No. 5 was a gipsy troupe, with wagon, fortune-tellers, musicians, dancers, &c. They pitched their tent in the centre of the floor, and after marching around several times retired. The last tableau represented "Strakosch's New Grand Opera-house." The opera-house was a Punch and Judy show. An incident of this tableau was a caricature of the Bonnett-May duel, which drew forth peals of laughter.

At 1 o'clock the tableaux were over, and the floor was given up to dancing. The ball was now at its height; not only was the floor packed, but even the lobbies were crammed, yet a more orderly, respectable, and at the same time jolly assemblage, never before gathered together in the Academy. Among the guests were nearly every notability of New-York, New-Jersey, and Brooklyn. The gathering did not break up until an early hour this morning.

AMUSEMENTS.

ENGLISH OPERA.

This evening's representation of "Mignon" will be for the benefit of Miss Kellogg, who, we learn, will surely appear in Thomas' tuneful and popular work. "Mignon" has not been heard for many months, and the announcement of its performance will doubtless be received with pleasure. The steady attractiveness of the opera, and the fact, too, that its reproduction offers an excellent opportunity to pay a special tribute to the talent and industry of Miss Kellogg, will probably bring together an uncommonly large audience.

MISS ABBOTT'S CONCERT.

At this evening's concert at Chickering Hall Miss Abbott will sing a ballad from "Il Guarany"—a work quite new to America—the romance from "Mignon," and, with Signor Brignoli, the duet "Una Notte a Venezia." A violinist who has not yet been heard in this City, Mr. Seifert, will also take part in the performance.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9—1 A. M.—Indications for the Middle and Eastern States, north-east to north-west winds, cooler, clear weather, stationary followed by falling barometer.

DISCOVERY OF A PLOT TO BREAK JAIL.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Feb. 8.—A convicted burglar revealed last night a plot which had been concocted by car robbers and others to break jail in this city. The jailer was to have been peppered, gagged, and bound, and a general jail delivery to follow. The exposé completely baffled these plans, and all engaged in the conspiracy were sent to the Albany Penitentiary to-day.

THE UNION LEAGUE CLUB.

AN ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN JAY.

HE TAKES THE CHAIR FOR THE FIRST TIME SINCE HIS ELECTION—HIS VIEWS ON NATIONAL AND MUNICIPAL QUESTIONS—DISCUSSION AS TO WHETHER THE CLUB SHALL HAVE A BUILDING OF ITS OWN—THE MATTER REFERRED WITH POWER TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The regular monthly meeting of the Union League Club was held last evening, Hon. John Jay, the President, occupying the chair for the first time since his election. There was a large attendance, fully 300 members being present. After the meeting was called to order, Mr. Jay said:

GENTLEMEN: I pray you to accept my sincere thanks for the honor of my re-election, after an interval of eight years, to the Presidency of the club. It is a post associated with names that the country recalls with reverence—the names of Minturn, Sturgis, and Marshall. It has been filled since my departure for Vienna by that able, earnest, and energetic reformer, Mr. Schultz; by our accomplished Secretary of Legation in London, Mr. Hoppin, and by my learned and eloquent predecessor, to whom fame has come so early, Mr. Joseph H. Choate. It is a post of responsibility, in view of what the club has done in the past and of what the times demand in the present and the future. I accept it with the less hesitation from my confidence in the disposition shown by the club, aided by its able Executive and other standing committees (especially that on Political Reform) to accomplish its duties and its aims, but I may at the same time frankly express my view of the gravity of your political and municipal position and of the problems of the task before us.

We are entering upon our second century with a keen appreciation of dangers and perplexities that have but recently been developed in their full force, and which many attribute in large measure to the removal of the restrictions which the founders of the Republic had placed upon the exercise of the suffrage. That change came to us in New-York at about 1820, and in that year Mr. Webster said, "Universal suffrage could not long exist in a community where there was great inequality of property. The holders of estates would be obliged in such case in some way to restrain the right of suffrage, or else such right of suffrage would before long divide the property." Alluding further to the fact that those who have not property cannot be favorable to laws made for the protection of property, he said: "When the class grows numerous it becomes clamorous. It looks on property as its prey, and plunder is usually ready at all times for violence and revolution." Some of our countrymen, who begin, or think they have begun, to despair of the Republic, declare that no depotism of the Old World would deem it safe to heap upon the thrift and industry of its subjects the gigantic burdens imposed upon us by the people themselves. They point to our civil war as disclosing what had not before been believed, that a large proportion of our citizens at the South and at the North were ready to dissolve the Republic if they could no longer rule it, and that in their efforts for its overthrow they were restrained by no historic reverence for its Constitution, by no devotion to the union of the States, by no regard for the great principle of our Government—the sovereignty of the people. They point to our State election in 1868, when the popular will was defeated by the schemes deliberately planned and executed in this City, for filling the ballot-boxes with the largest number of fraudulent votes. They point again to the extraordinary abridgement, or indeed disappearance, of the colored vote in parts of Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and other Southern States which were restored to their ancient and forfeited rights with the provision accepted by them in the fourteenth article of equal suffrage in the form of the freedmen. They cite with dismay the estimate by Gen. Sheridan, more than a year ago, that the number of blacks killed in Louisiana exceeded 3,000; and Mr. Blaine's declaration, based on data which he believed to be reliable, that "there have been more men murdered in the South since the war for being Republicans than fell on the Union side in the three bloodiest battles of the war;" and that in what they called the last peaceful election in Mississippi there were four times as many men murdered as in all the elections in all the States from the time of Washington to that of Grant. While the Electoral Commission cannot look into the methods of the Electoral canvass, the Senatorial committee appointed by Judge Edmunds' resolution and the fourteenth amendment would bring us the truth on this sad subject, which so nearly involves the national faith. But, gentlemen, black as may be the recent past, where the influence of slavery still lingers, painful as may be the thought of blunders and mismanagement for which our Government may have been responsible, gloomy as may be some of the features in our national review of the situation, the members of the club have faced in days gone by a gloomier outlook, and have seen it vanish before the sunlight of intelligence and freedom. They defeated the design, openly avowed in 1861, to place New-York at the side of the rebellion, and they made it the living centre of the national loyalty, despite the efforts of those who, in their scheme for the destruction of the Republic, were backed by the aristocratic and commercial sympathies of England, the unfriendly impartiality of France, and the world-wide, all-pervading and fatal influence of the Church of Rome, whose sovereign Pontiff alone of the sovereigns of Europe recognized the Southern Confederacy and received with honors the envoys of Mr. Davis. With such historic memories we need not doubt the ability of the club to concentrate now as then the great moral power, the true conservative sentiment of the nation, and to rally its hosts on the side of truth and justice and the national Constitution; to maintain in its integrity and to restore to its original purity the Republic founded by Washington and his associates. With the announcement of Presidential action will commence for us new duties. We have been assured from the South that with the election of the Democratic candidate the lost cause would be regained; and in that case we should have to consider our methods of constitutional opposition. But other and pleasanter duties await us, if, as we hope, the Commission shall declare what we all believe, that Gov. Hayes is the President elect, even without those Southern States to whose votes he was fairly entitled. Under President Hayes, it would be for the club to give him the firmest support and the kindest and fiscal counsel in carrying out the political and civil service reform, the lack of which had almost wrecked the Republican Party with its matchless and heroic record. In our Municipal affairs there are some cheering signs. The report of Col. Hawkins and the able speech of Mr. Cowdin have advised the community of the gigantic wrongs already perpetrated upon our taxpayers and of the dangers that impend. Our best citizens of all parties are combining for mutual protection, and the Mayor and Controller are loyally lending their aid to correct the existing abuses. Both houses of the Legislature are said to be ready to respond to our demand for just legislation, and we look with confidence to Gov. Robinson for the Executive approval. Looking to the concerns of the club, let me congratulate you on the success of the Museum of Art. It was one of my last acts as President, when I before held the office, to refer to the Committee on Art a memorial from Americans in Europe on this subject, and to-day the New-York Museum, already the successful rival of the British Museum in bidding for rare collections of the antique, is a monument of the public spirit and admirable management with which the interests of our people in the advancement of art have been cared for in this body.

At the close of Mr. Jay's speech, which was received with much applause, the regular business of the evening was taken up. A number of new members were elected, and the club then proceeded to discuss the report of a committee consisting of Jackson S. Schultz, Le G. B. Cannon, John A. Weeks, Richard Butler, John H. Hall, appointed to devise a financial scheme for raising the necessary funds for the purpose of constructing a building for the occupation of the club. This committee reported that the plan for the construction of a club-house of the dimensions and with the appointments demanded by the present membership would require an outlay for building and furniture of about $400,000. The fund now in possession of the Trustees of the building fund about $200,000 would be adequate for the purchase of a site. In view of the peculiar construction and the large cost of the building in proportion to its subsequent value as an investment for any other purpose than that of a club-house, the committee did not consider it practicable to procure the necessary funds upon mortgage from outside parties, and recommended that the building should be practically owned by the members of the club. They therefore suggested that a mortgage be authorized by the club upon all its property, securing 1,000 registered bonds of $400 each, payable in 25 years, bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum, with the provision that the holders of such bonds being resident members of the club should be the exclusive electors of all officers and standing committees. The number of the bonds would enable every resident member to become a bondholder, and if any bonds should remain untaken at the expiration of six months, they might be distributed at par among the resident members. Each bondholder to be entitled to one vote for each bond registered in his name.

After considerable discussion, the report was laid on the table, and the whole matter of the renewal of the lease of the building now occupied by the club, or the propriety of erecting a building of their own, was referred to the Executive Committee with power to act as they might deem best for the interests of the club. As

COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Feb. 8, 1877.

The receipts of the principal kinds of Produce since our last have been as follows:

Ashes, bbls.	29	Glass, No.	219
Bullion, bars	1,435	Hides, bales	1,065
Beans, bbls.	1,652	Leather, sides	6,480
Cotton, bales	1,543	Molasses, (N.O.), hhds	45
C. S. Cake, bags	3600	Oil-cake, pks.	1,189
C. S. Oil, bbls.	100	Pork, pks.	910
Copper, bbls.	15	Beef, pks.	322
Dried Fruit, pks.	241	Cut-meats, pks.	5,679
Eggs, bbls.	389	Grease, pks.	261
Flour, bbls.	14,382	Lard, pks.	1,129
Wheat, bushels	3,200	Lard, kegs	276
Corn, bushels	59,693	Stearine, pks.	25
Oats, bushels	14,756	Butter, pks.	2,472
Rye, bushels	1,275	Cheese, pks.	1,612
Malt, bushels	3,530	Tallow, pks.	380
Peas, bushels	1,702	Dressed Hogs, No.	1,111
Grass-seed, bags	1,269	Starch, bxs.	4,032
Flax-seed, bags	40	Skins, bales	18
Corn-meal, bbls.	1,000	Tea, half chests	30
Buckw't Flour, pks.	326	Tobacco, hhds.	44
R.W. Flour, bushels	400	Tobacco, bxs. & cs.	246
Oat-meal, bbls.	100	Whisky, bbls.	1,215
Hops, bales	539	Wool, bales	62

COFFEE—A very moderate call has been noted for supplies, with prices quoted weak within yesterday's range. Sales were reported of 4,000 bags Rio by the Flying Scud, and 1,500 bags do. by the Ed. Johnson, on private terms.

COTTON—Has been inactive for early delivery at former rates.....Ordinary quoted to-day at 11 1-16c.@ 11 3-16c.; Low Middling, 11 14c.@12 5-16c.; Middling, 12 3-16c.@12 7-16c.....Sales were officially reported, for prompt delivery, of 780 bales, (of which 280 bales were on last evening,) all to spinners.....And for forward delivery business has been on a moderate scale at former prices.....Sales have been reported since our last of 24,500 bales, of which 3,200 bales were on last evening and 19,800 bales to-day, with 1,500 bales on the calls, on the basis of Middling, with February options closing at 12 11-16c.; March, 12 23-32c.; April, 12 15-16c.; April, 13 1-32c.; May, 13 9-32c.@ 13 5-16c.; June, 13 13-32c.; July, 13 9-16c.@ 13 11-32c.; August, 13 3-4c.; September, 13 9-32c.@13 11-32c.; October, 12 15-16c.@13c.; November, 12 13-16c.; December, 12 3-4c.@12 13-16c., p. m., showing an advance of 1-16c.@3-32c.; p. m., closing firm.....The receipts at this port to-day were 1,543 bales, and at the shipping ports, 19,220 bales, against 23,197 bales same day last week, and thus far this week 116,576 bales, against 119,861 bales same time last week.....The receipts at the shipping ports since Sept. 1, 1876, have been 3,257,318 bales, against 3,161,379 bales for the corresponding time in the preceding Cotton year.....Consolidated exports (five days) for Great Britain, from all the shipping ports, 60,659 bales; to the Continent, 27,028 bales.....Stock in New-York to-day, 269,483 bales; consolidated stock at the ports, 890,847 bales.

Closing Prices of Cotton in New-York.

	Uplands.	Alabama.	N. O.	Texas.
Ordinary	11 1-16	11 1-16	11 1-16	11 1-16
Strict Ordinary	11 7-16	11 7-16	11 9-16	11 5-16
Good Ordinary	11 13-16	11 13-16	11 15-16	11 15-16
Strict Good Ord	12 1-16	12 1-16	12 3-16	12 3-16
Low Middling	12 1/4	12 1/4	12 5/16	12 5/16
Strict Low Mid	12 7/16	12 7/16	12 9/16	12 9/16
Middling	12 3/4	12 3/4	12 7/8	12 7/8
Good Middling	13	13	13 1/8	13 1/8
Strict Good Mid	13 1/4	13 1/4	13 3/8	13 3/8
Middling Fair	13 5/8	13 5/8	13 3/4	13 3/4
Fair	14 3/8	14 3/8	14 1/2	14 1/2

Stained.

Good Ordinary	10 11-16	Low Middling	11 5/8
Strict Good Ord	11 5-16	Middling	12 1/4

FLOUR AND MEAL—A moderate demand was reported to-day for State and Western Flour, mainly from home trade sources, and the market was easier yesterday, for Minnesota Extras and desirable Winter Wheat trade and Family Extras, prices of which were generally quoted firm. Some call noted for low grade Minnesota Extras, for shipment, but only a thousand sound Flour attracted considerable attention at unchanged quotations. City Mill Extras and regular shipping Extras were lightly dealt in, the export inquiry having been very limited. Rye flour was never more generally active, while, however, a restricted movement, mostly in a jobbing way, for home trade purposes.....Sales of the week were reported as follows in lots, at $5 60@$6 00 for poor to strictly choice Superfine; $6 25@$7 50 for poor to very choice shipping Extras; $7 50@$9 50 for fair to fancy trade and family, the dealings being mostly in the range from $8 50@$8.....Rye Flour was quiet and depressed in price.....We quote at from $4 40@$5 10 for about fair Western to very choice State Superfine, and $3@$4 for poor to choice line.....Sales reported of 230 bbls. in lots, chiefly at $4 75@$5 for fair to very good Superfine State; $5 10 for choice do.; $4 70@$5 for Pennsylvania, the latter for choice, and $4 40@$5 for fair to very choice Western.....Corn-meal has been in moderate request and quoted rather cheaper.....We quote at $2 90@$3 10 for fair to choice Yellow Western; $2 90@$3 15 for Yellow Brandywine; $3 50 for Yellow Jersey, and $3 50@$3 55 for Brandywine, with small lots of the latter at $3 60, from store.....Sales have been reported of 575 bbls., including 200 bbls. Yellow Western, in lots, chiefly at $3 35, Brandywine at $3 50@$3 55.....Corn-meal, in bags, has been selling to a fair extent within the range of $1@$1 45 for poor to very choice # 100 lb. Most of the sales have been of coarse lots at $1 10 for city mills; at $1 08@ $1 10 for Western, and $1 for Baltimore, from dock, of which latter 300 bags at the quoted rate of $1.).....Oat-meal has been very quiet, within the range of $5@$7 for city and State, and $6@$6 50 for very choice to Fancy held higher; Canada, $7@$7 50.....Buckwheat Flour has been in rather more demand, and quoted to-day steady for strictly good to choice lots. We quote the range $3 60@$4 for poor to choice State, Jersey, and Pennsylvania. Most of the lots sold were at $3 75@$4 10 for fair to choice # 100 lb, (or which were 2½ tons choice State at $4.) Favorite brands of Pennsylvania and Jersey are wanted; held 10c.@15c. # 100 lb. above our quotations.

GRAIN—Wheat was moderately inquired for by shippers and millers, who were disposed to operate at previous figures, but the principal holders claimed 2c.@ 3c. a bushel over the views of purchasers, and were reserved in their offerings of really desirable samples. The actual dealings, as reported, were consequently light, the aggregate having been 20,000 bushels, including good Red Western, in store, 1,100 bushels, for export, at $1 51; choice No. 2 Chicago Spring, in store, 2,400 bushels, at $1 43; choice Spring, (quoted generally at $1 41@$1 43;) No. 2 Milwaukee Spring, in store, 9,000 bushels, to a local miller, at $1 37; New-York No. 2 Spring, a car load, at $1 35; (with choice No. 3 Chicago Spring, to arrive, quoted at $1 34 bid;) and ungraded Spring, (representing the views of buyers;) and ungraded Spring, in odd lots, within the range of $1 30@$1 37. California Wheat was rumored as offered here on English account, but no reliable particulars were made public.....Corn has been moderately active, mainly for home trade account, but as a matter of speculation, at prices 1@2c. below our crop, under free offerings, receivers showing considerable eagerness to place supplies promptly. Old crop varied little, but attracted less attention.....Sales have been reported since our last of 300,000 bushels, including New-York No. 2 old crop, 1,900 bushels at 59c.; New-York steamer mixed at 58c.@58½c., closing heavy at 58c. for new, (1,200 bushels old sold at 58¼c.) New-York, no grade, at 57¾c.@58c., mainly at 58c.; New-York, unmerchantable, at 56c.@57c.; new crop Mixed Western, car lots, at 55c.@59c., chiefly at 56c. @57c.; Yellow Western at 59c.@60½c.; ungraded sailing vessel Mixed Western, old crop, (nominal,) at 59c.@60c.; Chinese No. 2 Yellow, in store, and afloat, offered at 60c.@62c.; (but dull to-day.).....Sales were reported for Philadelphia delivery of 50,000 bushels Mixed Western, last half of February option, delivered to vessel, at 56¾c., with freight room by steamer for Liverpool, reported for a similar amount at 57c. # bushel.....Rye has been less sought after, and again quoted rather easier in price, state offering at 92c., afloat, with only 90c. bid; a few car loads sold at 88c.@87c. Sales reported of car lots of No. 2 Western at 84c., and of no grade at 80c.....Of Barley sales were reported of 10,000 bushels Canada West, in bond, at $1, and, rumored, of 3,100 bushels ungraded Canada on private terms; market quoted heavy throughout; No. 1 Canada generally quoted at $1 10@$1 12.....Canada Peas, in bond, quiet to-day, quoted at 91c. @92c. # bushel.....Of Buckwheat, a car load of prime State at $1 # bushel.....Barley-malt has been moderately sought after within the previous range, with fair to choice Canada West, old and new crop, quoted at $1@$1 25, cash; strictly prime to choice, new crop, do., on time, at $1 25@$1 30; sixrowed State, about fair to very choice, nominally at 90c. @$1 05; two-rowed do., 67½c.@85c., and six-rowed rumored to a fair aggregate through private channels within the quoted range.....Oats have been offered less freely and again quoted stronger, with a very good demand noted, mainly for local jobbing purposes.....Sales reported of 38,000 bushels, including White Western at 40c.@49c for very inferior to choice; White State, ordinary to choice, within the range of 51c.@55c., from store, and afloat with very poor reported as low as 48c.@50c.; Mixed Western at 39c.@47c., as to quality; No. 2, Chicago, average quality, in store, again quoted in request for shipment on the basis of 43c.; New-York No. 1 White at 53½c.; New-York No. 2 White, 4,500 bushels, at 46½c.; New-York No. 3 White, 6,750 bushels at 45c.; New-York Extra, 3,000 bushels, 54½c.; New-York No. 1, and at 50½c.; New-York No. 2, 6,750 bushels, 45c.; New-York No. 3, 6,750 bushels, 41c.@42c.' selling at the close, 2,250 bushels, at 42c.; New-York Rejected at 39c., and Mixed State at 48c.@54c. for poor to choice, from store and afloat, # bushel.....Of New-York No. 1 White State, reported sold, in lots, at 16½c.; do. Western at 15½c.; market heavy. Of Rough Flax, a small lot of prime State reported sold, in lots, at 16½c.; do. Western at 15½c.; market heavy. Of Rough Flax, a small lot of prime State reported sold, in lots, at $1 70; Bay and Straw as last quoted.....Timothy-seed in good request at from a part of the sales were 1,800 bags, 40 lb., mostly at $1@$1 10; 1,000 bags, 50 lb., at $1 50, at mill; 700 bags, 60 lb., at $2 # ton.

GUNNY CLOTH—Of domestic, 500 rolls sold at 12½c. Market firm.

HEMP—Of Jute Butts, further sales were reported of 1,000 bales, to arrive, January and February shipments, 3½c., currency, 90 days' credit; market essentially unchanged.

HIDES—Quick but at-ady; 650 Central American sold on private terms.

MILK—Milk is in excessive supply, and prices on the depot platforms are very irregular. Sales are made at $1 25@$1 75 # 40-quart can. The contract prices paid to dairymen for a supply for February are 2c. @2½c. # quart.

MOLASSES—New-Orleans has been in good request, in a jobbing way, at from 45c.@58c. for good to very choice; many lots quoted at higher figures. Sales reported of 400 bbls. Other kinds in quite moderate demand, within the range of Sales reported as noted in the range of from 45c.@58c. for old and new crops: Demerara, 36c.@46c.....Syrups have been more sought after, with Sugar-house quoted at 36c.@46c.; Molasses, 35c.@40c. Sugar-house Molasses quiet; quoted firm at 24c.@26c. # gallon, on light offerings.

NAVAL STORES—Resin has been quiet but firm. We quote at $2 20 for Strained; $2 25 for good Strained; $2 30@$2 60 for No. 2; $2 75@$3 62½ for No. 1; $4@$6 50 for Pale to extra Pale and Window Glass. # 280 lb.....Tar has been inactive, within the range of from $2 50@$2 75 # bbl.....Otty-tar at $2 50 # bbl.....Spirits of Turpentine has been quite dull, with merchantable, for prompt delivery, quoted at the close down to 43c.@43½c. # gallon.

PETROLEUM—Crude has been very quiet, and quoted down to 11¾c., in bulk, and 10c. in shipping order..... Refined in limited request; quoted by refiners at 26½c., and from second hands at 22c., in small lots, for early delivery.....Refined, in cases, quoted at 30c.@31c.; City Naphtha quoted 13½c.....At Philadelphia and Baltimore refined Petroleum, for early delivery, quoted by refiners at 26¼c., and in small lots from second hands at 30c.@32c.

PROVISIONS—Western Mess Pork has been moderately inquired for, at about former rates, for early delivery.....Sales reported of 250 bbls. of uninspected, for shipment, on private terms, quoted at $17 # bbl.....Other kinds in rather more request; Extra Prime, inspected, quoted at $13 50@$13 75; Western Prime Mess at $15 75@16, sales 100 bbls. inspected Prime Mess at $15 75; and 100 bbls. inspected Extra Prime at $13 50.....And for forward delivery here, Western Mess dull; quoted for February at the close nominal; March, $16 75@$17; April, $16 90@ $17 20.....Dressed Hogs have been offered less freely and quoted firmer, with Western quoted at 7¾c.@7¾c. City at 8c.@8¼c., but in less request at these figures..... Cut-meats have been moderately sought after at about former quotations.....Sales include 5,000 lb. Pickled Bellies, in bulk, 10 lb. at 9½c., and sundry small lots of other City bulk within our range. ...We quote: City Pickled Shoulders in bulk, at 7¼c.; Pickled Hams at 12½c.@13c.; Smoked Shoulders at 8¼c.; Smoked Hams at 12c.@12¾c.; Western Dry-salted Short-cut Hams, 20 to 15 lb., 10¼c.@11c.; Western Pickled Hams, in tierces, at 10¾c.@11¼c.

Lard has been in fair demand and quoted firmer for early delivery, but closing tamely. Of Western Steam, for early delivery here, sales have been reported of 400 tcs. prime at $11 35, closing at $11 37½, and 100 tcs. off grade at $10.....And for forward delivery here, Western Steam has been moderately active, with values opening stronger, but closing lower and heavy..... Western Steam, for February, quoted at the close at $11 35; March, $11 37½; April, $11 45@$11 47½; May, $11 60.....Sales were reported of Western Steam to the extent of 1,750 tcs., for February, at $11 32½ @$11 40, and 500 tcs. of March, at $11 37½@$11 42½, 5,750 tcs., April, at $11 47½@$11 55, and 500 tcs. May at $11 60@$11 62½.....City Steam and Kettle inactive to-day; quoted at the close $11 20@$11 25, sales, 75 tcs. at $11 20@$11 25..... And No. 1 quoted at $10 50@$11 62½..... Refined Lard continues in moderate request; quoted for the Continent, for early delivery, at $11 50, and for the West Indies at $9 87½.....Sales reported of 200 tcs. for the west indies, and 40 tcs. for South America on private terms.....And of Western Steam Lard, further considerable sales rumored as made at Chicago in the settlement but without reliable particulars.....Beef has been inactive at former quotations.....We quote Barrel Beef at $12@$13 50 for Extra Mess; $9@$11 for Mess, and $8@$8 50 for Plain Mess, and $13 50@$14 for Packet. # bbl.....Tierce Beef quoted thus: Prime Mess, new, at $19@$20; India Mess, new, $20 @$21; City Extra India Mess, $25.....Beef Hams continue in limited demand, with choice Western reported at $24@$24 50 # bbl.....Butter and Cheese about as last quoted.....Fresh Eggs in rather more demand and quoted at 25c.@30c. for good to very choice.....Yellow has been in fair request at unchanged rates.....Sales, 70,000 lb. good to strictly choice at 8c.@8¼c., and 50 bbls. at 8c.@8¼c.....Stearine has been quiet; choice City in bbls. quoted at $11 25; prime Western, in tcs., $11 12½@$11 25; sales, 15 tcs. prime Western at $11.

RICE—Has been quoted firmer, but inactive; sales, 38 hhds. Centrifugal at 10¾c., and 150 hhds. mixed stock at 8¾c.@9¼c.....We quote fair refining Cuba at 9¾c.; good do., 9¾c.; prime do., 9¾c.; centrifugal, 96 deg. Polarization, 9¾c.@10c.; do., 10 Clayed at 9⅞c.; Centrifugal stock at 9⅞c.@10⅝c.; Manilla bags, 8¼c.@8⅞c.; Molasses Sugar, 7¾c.@8c.; Melado, 5c.@7c.....Refined Sugars have been quite active at full prices, with Granulated quoted at 11¾c.@ 11⅞c.; Powdered, 11⅞c.; Crushed at 11⅞c.; Cut Loaf at 12c.; Soft White at 10¼c.@11¾c.; Soft Yellow at 9¼c.@10¼c.

TEA—Has been, with sales of 2,500 half-chests Oolong on private terms.

WHISKY—Sales to the extent of 50 bbls. at $1 08, and 100 bbls. at $1 07½, closing with $1 07½ bid and $1 08 asked.

FREIGHTS—Rather more inquiry was reported today in the chartering line, mostly for tonnage for Grain and Petroleum, at somewhat steadier rates. Berth freights were comparatively quiet, but quoted essentially as before.....For Liverpool, the engagements reported, since our last, have been, by steam, 3,000 bushels Wheat, in bags, at 5d. # bushel; 50 hhds. Tallow at 25s.; 50 tons Oil Cake at 16s. 6d.; 350 boxes Bacon at 30s.; 1,050 boxes Cheese, reported at 35s. # ton; 800 bbls. Apples, part at 3s. # bbl.; 4,000 staves, reported on private terms. And by steam from Philadelphia (reported as for forward shipment), 50,000 bushels Corn at 6-9d. # bushel. And by steam from Milwaukee, on through freight account, 750 boxes Bacon, via Portland, reported at 50c. (with room for Provisions from Chicago, via Boston, reported as having been offered to-day at 50c.) # 100 lb. Also, two ships, with cotton, from New-Orleans, reported (as chartered there) at 15-32d. # lb.....For London, by sail, 2,000 Oars at ¾d. # foot, limiting measurement; and, by steam, 250 bales Hops at ½d. # lb.; 100 tcs. Beef at 5s. # tierce; and 150 bbls. Pork at 4s. # bbl.....For Glasgow, by steam, 500 bxs. Provisions at 30s. # ton; and, rumored, 700 to 800 bbls. Flour on private terms.....For Bristol, by steam, 60 hhds. Tallow, rumored at 30s. per ton; and small lots of Provisions reported on the basis of 7s. 6d.@8s. # tc.....For the United Kingdom, further inquiry for wheat freights, and charge for Timber, southern port loading, within the range of 122s. 6d@130s.....For Cork and orders, a British bark, 949 tons, with about 4,000 qrs. Corn, from Norfolk, at 5s. 6d., (with Grain charter-party, there being a 55s. 3os. fee per cargo; and a Norwegian bark, 464 tons, (at Hampton Roads,), with about 2,800 bbls. Refined Petroleum, from Portland, reported at 5s. 6d. # bbl.....For Lisbon, a Norwegian bark, 303 tons, hence, with about 2,000 bbls. Refined Petroleum, reported at 5s. 6d. # bbl.....For Bremen, by sail, 20 hhds. Tobacco, at 32s. 6s.; and, by steam, sundry lots of Merchandise, at 80 reichmarks.....For Hamburg, a Swedish bark, 471 tons, with about 3,000 quarters Grain, from Philadelphia, at 5s. 9d. # quarter. The Hamburg steamer of this week cleared with 4,400 bags Coffee, 13,000 bushels Corn, 2,000 bushels Rye, 1,350 bags Seed, 333 pks. Butter, 2,000 bxs. Extract, and sundry lots of miscellaneous cargo, engaged some time since, at rates not reported.....For Antin, a German bark, hence, with general cargo, including Bacon and Lard, (of which about two-thirds of cargo engaged,) on the basis of 40s. # ton.....For a Russian Baltic port, a ship, with Cotton, hence, at 7-16d. (chartered there,) at 9-16d. # lb.....For Gibraltar and orders, an Austrian bark, 394 tons, hence, with about 12,000 cases Refined Petroleum at 25c. to the Mediterranean for orders, at 32c. for Malaga, a Swedish bark, 296 tons, hence, with equal to about 9,000 cases Petroleum, in bbls. and cases, at 5s. # bbl. and 25c. # case.....For Bombay, an American ship, 1,119 tons, hence, with about 17,000 cases Petroleum, reported at 47½c. # case, and Coal (a complete cargo) on private terms.....For Java, a Norwegian ship, 743 tons, hence, with about 24,000 cases Petroleum at 52c. # case.....For Australia, a Dutch brig, 206 tons, hence, with general cargo, reported on private terms.....West India and coastwise trade dull to-day; rates quoted irregular.

LIVE STOCK MARKETS.

BUFFALO, Feb. 8.—Cattle—Receipts to-day, 510 head; total for the week thus far, 5,882 head, against 6,205 head for the same time last week. No market to-day, the fresh arrivals being all through consignments; 21 car-loads held for shipment tomorrow, which will leave the yards bare of stock. Sheep and Lambs—Receipts today, 800 head; total for the week thus far, 10,800, against 13,400 for the same time last week; market dull and nominally 10c. lower than last week, averaging 86 lb., at $4 70; 2 cars unsold. Hogs—Receipts to-day, 1,200 head; total for the week thus far, 7,650 head, against 6,600 head for the same time last week; market more active, but at low prices; supply in excess of demand; sales of 3 cars fair to good yorkers, $6 20@$6 15; 4 cars fair to choice heavy, $6 15@ $6 75, mainly at $6 50; 8 cars of light and 5 of heavy grades unsold.

EAST LIBERTY, Penn., Feb. 8.—Cattle—Receipts to-day, 595 head or 25 cars through, and 16 cars of yard stock; total for three days, 1,785 head, or 45 cars through, and 60 cars yard stock, all sold at good yesterday's prices; good to choice and in demand; common grades off.....best, $5 25@$5 75; medium to good, $4 25@4 75; common to fair, $3 25@3 75. Hogs—Receipts to-day, 1,760 head; total for three days, 3,740 head; Yorkers, $6 20@$6 30; mixed, $6 30@$6 40; pigs, $6 50 —Receipts to-day, 1,200 head; total for three days, 6,200 head; selling at $4 50@$6 25.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Cattle—Receipts, 5,600 head; shipments, 3,000 head; market active, steady, and firm; prices, $3 20@$3 50; common to good stock Steers, $2 25@$3 80; feeders $3 95@4 10; choice to extra prime shipping, $6 20@$6 80. Hogs—Receipts, 12,000 head; shipments, 2,400 head; market weak, and 5c. @10c. lower except for heavies; light, $5 95 @$6 10; rough to good heavy, $5 20@6 40; good to choice heavy shipping, $6 50@$6 75; extra assorted, $6 90. Sheep—steady; receipts, 1,000 head; sales at $4 25@4 80.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Cattle—Receipts, 5,600 head; shipments, 3,000 head; market active, steady, and firm; prices, $3 20@$3 50; common to good stock Steers, $2 25@$3 80; feeders $3 95@4 10; choice to extra prime shipping, $6 20@$6 80. Hogs—Receipts, 12,000 head; shipments, 2,400 head; market weak, and 5c.@10c. lower except for heavies; light, $5 95 @$6 10; rough to good heavy, $5 20@6 40; good to choice heavy shipping, $6 50@$6 75; extra assorted, $6 90. Sheep—steady; receipts, 1,000 head; sales at $4 25@4 80.

THE STATE OF TRADE.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Flour firmer, but not quotably higher. Wheat active, firm, and higher, but unsettled; No. 2 Chicago Spring, $1 30¾ cash; sales at $1 30¼@$1 34¾, March; closed at $1 31¾, March; $1 32½, April: No. 2, do., $1 18@$1 20; Rejected, $1 02. Corn quiet, active, firm to shade lower; 42½c. asked, cash or March; 46c., May; Rejected, 39½c. Oats quiet, but firm; 36c., cash; 38¼c., March; 36¾c., April. Rye firm at 70c.@ 70½c. Barley firmer at 61c.@62½c. Pork steady, with a good demand; $16 25, cash; $16 27½@$16 30, March; $16 47½@$16 50, April; Lard unsettled but generally lower; $11 07½, cash; $11 10@$11 12½, March; $11 22½@$11 25, April. Bulk-meats firmer; Shoulders, 6¾c.; short Ribs, 8¼c.; Short Clear Sides, 8½c. Dressed Hogs unsettled but generally lower; choice, $7 25; medium, $7 15@ $7 20. Whisky irregular; sales at $1 05@$1 06; closed at $1 05½. Receipts—Flour, 5,000 bbls.; Wheat, 7,000 bushels; Corn, 34,000 bushels; Oats, 10,000 bushels; Rye, 880 bushels; Barley, 9,000 bushels. Shipments—Flour, 7,000 bbls.; Wheat, 12,000 bushels, Corn, 36,000 bushels; Oats, 11,000 bushels; Barley, 15,000 bushels. At the afternoon call of the board Wheat firmer; $1 31¾, March; $1 33¼, April. Corn easier; 42c.@42½c., March. Oats nominal. Lard easier; $11 27½, March. Lard easier; $11 05, March.

TOLEDO, Feb. 8.—Flour firm. Wheat steady; No. 1 White Michigan, $1 48; Extra do., $1 55; Amber Michigan, $1 49; March, $1 51; No. 2 do., $1 36; No. 2 Red Winter, spot and February, $1 47; March, $1 49¼; No. 3 Red, $1 35; rejected, $1 11¾. Corn quiet; High Mixed, 45c.; No. 2, spot, 44¾c.; Feornary, 44¾c.; May, 45½c.; rejected, 44¼c. Oats quiet; No. 2, 35¾c.; White, 41¾c.; rejected, 30¾c. Receipts—4,000 bushels Wheat, 12,000 bushels Corn, 700 bushels Oats. Shipments—500 bbls. Flour, 5,000 bushels Wheat, 18,000 bushels Corn, 6,000 bushels Oats.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 8.—Flour firm and unchanged. Wheat scarce and firm; Red, $1 40@$1 50. Corn in good demand at 41c.@44c. Oats steady and higher at 36c.@41c. Rye quiet at 79c.@80c. Barley inactive; good to prime Fall, 60c.@85c. Pork buoyant at $16 80, seller February. Lard opened strong and higher; closed at inside prices; Steam-rendered, $10 75@ $11, spot; $11 30, seller May; Kettle, $11 50 @$11 75. Bulk-meats firm; shoulders dull at 6¼c.@6½c. Short Ribs in good demand at $8 70@ $8 75, spot; $8 87½, buyer, February; $9 15 seller April; $9 35@$9 37½ seller, May; $9 45 buyer, May; Short Clear Sides, 8c. Bacon quiet; Shoulders, 7½c.; Clear Ribs, 9¼c.@9½c.; Clear Sides, 9¾c.@10c. Whisky dull and drooping at $1 05. Butter nominally unchanged. Hogs in good demand; common, $5 25 @$5 75; fair to good light, $5 55@$5 65; packing, $6 20@$6 45; heavy butchers', $6 50@$6 70; receipts, 1,600 head; shipments, 285 head.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 8.—Flour active and firm. Wheat excited and higher; No. 2 Red Fall, $1 54, cash; $1 55@$1 57½, March; No. 3 do., $1 48¾ bid, cash; $1 50@$1 57½, March. Corn dull; 36¾c., cash; 40¼c., March. Oats quiet at 33¼c. Rye firm at 68c. Whisky steady at $1 06. Pork lower at $16 50 @$16 75, the latter price for job lots; $16 65 bid, March. Lard held higher; 11c. asked; 10¾c. bid. Bulk-meats in active demand for car lots: Shoulders, 6c.@6¼c.; Clear Rib, 8½c.@8¾c.; Short Ribs and Short Clear Sides, March, 8½c.@8¾c. Bacon firm; shoulders, 7¼c.; Clear Ribs, 9¾c.; Clear Sides, 9¾c. Hogs better; packing, $5 70 @$6 10; extra heavy, $6 15@$6 25. Cattle strong and active; choice to fancy Steers, $5 25 @$5 50; good to prime, $4 60@$5 12½. Receipts—Flour, 3,400 bbls.; Wheat, 11,000 bushels; Corn, 23,000 bushels; Oats, 2,000 bushels; Barley, 3,000 bushels; Hogs, 2,100 head; Cattle, 1,200 head.

BUFFALO Feb. 8.—Receipts—Flour, 3,400 bbls.; Wheat, 8,400 bushels; Corn, 6,000 bushels; Oats, 7,700 bushels; Rye, 1,700 bushels. Shipments—Flour, 2,710 bbls.; Wheat, 33,800 bushels; Corn, 13,600 bushels; Oats, 7,700 bushels; Rye, 1,200 bushels. Markets slow, only a fair demand at a shade decline in prices. Freights—Lake, 80c. bids, no transactions. Wheat—Sales, 5,000 bushels sample Minnesota special line at $1 52; 400 bushels No. 2 Chicago Spring, $1 40; 1 car White Michigan, $1 52; 2 cars do., to arrive, $1 53. Corn—Sales, 16 cars new No. 2 Mixed on track, at 52c.@52½c.; 10 cars do., 53c.; 400 bushels No. 2 Mixed Western, 55c. Oats—Sales, 4 cars Western, on track, to arrive, at 42c. Barley—Sales, 1,600 bushels choice two-rowed State. Other articles unchanged. Rail Freights unchanged.

DETROIT, Feb. 8.—Flour very quiet and steady. Wheat held higher; Extra White Michigan, $1 57½; No. 1 White Michigan, $1 50¾; Milling, $1 46. Corn in good demand and steady; high Mixed, 49½c. asked; No. 1 Mixed, 48c. bid. Oats quiet and unchanged; White, 45c.; Mixed, 42c. bid. Receipts—Flour, 885 bbls.; Wheat, 5,855 bushels; Corn, 29,323 bushels; Oats, 5,918 bushels. Shipments—Flour, 450 bbls.; Wheat, 2,200 bushels; Corn, 3,857 bushels; Oats, 3,333 bushels.

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 8.—Flour quiet; unchanged. Wheat firm; No. 1 Milwaukee, $1 42½; No. 2 do., $1 24; March, $1 34¾. April, $1 35¾; No. 3 do., $1 25. Corn firmer; No. 2, 45c. Oats firmer; No. 2, 34c. Rye firm at 69c. Barley steadier; moderate demand.; No. 2 Spring, February, 76¾c.; No. 3 do., 86½c. Provisions quiet. Mess Pork, $16. Lard—Prime Steam, $11. Dressed Hogs steady at $7 75. Receipts—4,400 bbls. Flour, 12,000 bushels Wheat. Shipments—3,400 bbls. Flour, 3,400 bushels Wheat.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 8.—Flour dull and unchanged. Wheat steady and firm; Red, $1 45; Amber, $1 50; White, $1 50. Corn firm; White, 43c.; Mixed, 42c. Rye firm at 80c. Oats in good demand; White, 43c.; Mixed, 40c. Pork quiet, but firm at $17@$17 50. Bulk-meats quiet and unchanged. Bacon scarce and firm; Shoulders, 7¾c.; Clear Sides, 10c. Sugar-cured Hams, 12c.@13½c. Lard active, but not quotably higher. Whisky firmer at $1 05. Bagging quiet at 11½c.

OSWEGO, Feb. 8.—Flour unchanged; sales, 1,300 bbls. Wheat firm; Spring grades held higher; No. 1 Milwaukee Club, $1 50; No. 2 Red Fall, $1 54; No. 2 Wabash, $1 55; No. 1 White Michigan, $1 62; Extra do. do., $1 68. Corn steady; sales of Western Mixed at 60c. For Barley sold: No. 1 Canada held at $1 02; No. 2 do., 92c.; sales, 2,000 bushels on private terms. Corn-meal unchanged. Mill Feed unchanged. Rail-road Shipments—Flour, 1,400 bbls.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 8.—Hay in good demand at full prices; prime, $17; choice, $13. Lard in good demand; Tierce, 11c.@11¼c.; Keg, 11¾c.@12c. Sugar firm and unchanged. Molasses dull and unchanged. Other articles unchanged. Gold, 105¼@105⅝. Exchange—New-York Sight, ⅛ premium; Sterling bankers' bills, $4 83.

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 8.—Printing Cloths market strong at 5¼c., cash, for best 64x64 goods, with few goods offered.

FOREIGN MARKETS.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—12:30 P. M.—Consols, 93 13-16 for both money and the account. United States bonds, 1865s, 105⅝; 10-40s, 110⅛. The rate of discount for three months' bills in the open market is 1½@ 1⅝ # cent., which is ⅛@¼ # cent below the Bank of England rate.

1:15 P. M.—New-York Central 98.

3 P. M.—The bullion in the Bank of England has decreased £90,000 during the past week.

3:30 P. M.—The proportion of the Bank of England reserve to liability which last week was 48⅝ # cent., is now 46 # cent. The amount of bullion will drawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day is £150,000.

4:30 P. M.—Consols, 95 11-16 for both money and the account. United States bonds, 1867s, 109¾; 10-40s, 110¾. Paris advices quote 5 # cent. Rentes at 108f. 72c. for account.

PARIS, Feb. 8.—Exchange on London, 25f. 14c. for short sight. The specie in the Bank of France has increased 26,292,000 francs during the past week.

PORTSMOUTH, Feb. 8.—United states bonds, new 5s, 103¾.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 8—12 M.—Cotton—The receipts today were 7,000 bales, including 1,100 bales American; futures opened at last night's prices. Uplands, Low Middling clause, March and April delivery, 6 11-16d.; also sales of the same at 6 21-32d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, April and May delivery, 6 30-32d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, June and July delivery, 6 29-32d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, shipped January and February, sail, 6 21-32d.

2:30 P. M.—Cotton—Uplands, Low Middling clause, March and April delivery, 6⅝d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, July and August delivery, 6 15-16d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, shipped February and March, sail, 6 13-32d.

3:30 P. M.—Cotton—Of the sales to-day 6,100 bales were American.

4:30 P. M.—Cotton—Uplands, Low Middling clause, March and April delivery, 6 29-32d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, May and June delivery, 6 27-32d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, June and July delivery, 6 29-32d.

5 P. M.—Provisions—Lard, 55s. 3d. # cwt. for American. Produce—Refined Petroleum, 13d. 17d. # gallon. Spirits of Petroleum, 10½d # gallon. Spirits of turpentine, 32s. # cwt. Cotton—Futures closed steady. Uplands, Low Middling clause, July and August delivery, 6 31-32d.

LONDON, Feb. 8—3 P. M.—Produce—Spirits of Petroleum, 11¼d. # gallon.

5 P. M.—Produce—Spirits of Turpentine, 29s. 6d. # cwt. Linseed Oil 29s. 3d. # cwt. Petroleum for No. 2 Dutch Standard, on the spot and 30s. 3d., afloat.

Evening—Linseed Oil 29s. 6d. # cwt.

HULL, Saturday, Feb. 7.—Coffee market quiet; prices maintained; no change. Rio good firsts, 6,600@6,750 reis # 10 kilos. Exchange on London, 24⅞. Average daily receipts during the week, 9,100 bags. Shipments to the Continent, for the week, 4,400 bags; to the rest of Europe, 4,000 bags; to the United States, 43,000 bags; to the Mediterranean, none. Sales of the week: For the channel and North of Europe, 16,000 bags; for the United States, 7,000 bags; for the Mediterranean, none. Stock, 68,000 bags. Freight—Per sailing vessel for the Channel, 56s.

SANTOS, Feb. 7.—Coffee market quiet; prices maintained; no change. Superior Santos, 4,400 to 5,600 reis # 10 kilos. Average daily receipts during the week, 1,800 bags. Shipments of the week: To all countries, none. Sales of the week: For Europe, 11,000 bags; for the United States, 6,000 bags. Stock, 50,000 bags.

THE COTTON MARKETS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 8.—Cotton—Fair demand; Middling, 12c.; Low Middling, 11¼c.; Good Ordinary, 11⅜c.; net receipts, 6,402 bales; gross, 7,261 bales; exports to Great Britain, 1,819 bales; to the Continent, 2,470 bales; coastwise, 2,148 bales; sales, 4,000 bales; stock, 288,355 b

SHIPPING.

WHITE STAR LINE.
FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL. CARRYING UNITED STATES MAIL.

The steamers of this line take the Lake Routes, recommended by Lieut. Maury, U. S. N., going south of the Banks on the passage to Queenstown at the year round.

ADRIATIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 10, at 3 P. M.
BRITANNIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
CELTIC.....SATURDAY, March 10, at 2 P. M.
GERMANIC.....SATURDAY, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

From White Star Dock, Pier No. 52 North River.

These steamers are uniform in size and unsurpassed in appointments. The saloon, staterooms, smoking and bath rooms are amidships, where the noise and motion are least felt, affording a degree of comfort hitherto unattainable at sea.

Rates—Saloon $80 and $100, gold; return tickets on favorable terms; steerage, $30.

For inspection of plans and other information apply at the Company's offices, No. 37 Broadway, New-York.

R. J. CORTIS, Agent.

CUNARD LINE B. & N. A. R. M. S. P. CO.
NOTICE.

With the view of diminishing the chances of collision the steamers of this line take a specified course for all seasons of the year.

On the outward passage from Queenstown to New-York or Boston, crossing meridian of 50 at 43 latitude, or nothing to the north of 43.

On the homeward passage, crossing the meridian of 41 at 42, or nothing to the north of 42.

FROM NEW-YORK FOR LIVERPOOL AND QUEENSTOWN.
PARTHIA....WED., Feb. 14 | BATAVIA....WED., Feb. 28
CHINA.....WED., Feb. 21 | ABYSSINIA..WED., March 7

Steamers marked "do not carry steerage passengers.

Cabin passage, $80, $100, and $130, gold, according to accommodation. Return tickets on favorable terms.

Steerage tickets to and from all parts of Europe at very low rates. Freight and passage office, No. 4 Bowling Green.

CHAS. G. FRANCKLYN, Agent.

LIVERPOOL AND GREAT WESTERN STEAM COMPANY. (LIMITED)
LIVERPOOL (Via Queenstown),
CARRYING THE UNITED STATES MAIL.
TUESDAY.

Leaving Pier No. 46 North River as follows:

DAKOTA.....Feb. 13, at 3 P. M.
NEVADA.....Feb. 20, at 10 A. M.
IDAHO.....Feb. 27, at 3 P. M.
MONTANA.....March 6, at 10 A. M.
WISCONSIN.....March 13, at 3 P. M.
WYOMING.....March 20, at 9 A. M.

RATES OF PASSENGERS REDUCED.

Steerage, $26; intermediate, $40; cabin, $55 to $80, according to state-room. Offices, No. 29 Broadway.

WILLIAMS & GUION.

ATLAS MAIL LINE.

BI-MONTHLY SERVICE TO JAMAICA, HAYTI, COLOMBIA, and ASPINWALL, and to PANAMA and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall). First-class full-powered iron screw steamers, from Pier No. 51 North River.

For KINGSTON (Jam.) and AUX CAYES.
ATLAS.....Feb. 8
For HAYTI, COLOMBIA, ISTHMUS OF PANAMA, and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall).
ANDES.....Feb. 14
ALPS.....Feb. 28

Superior first-class passenger accommodation.
PIM, FORWOOD & CO., Agents.
No. 56 Wall st.

GREAT SOUTHERN
FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE.
SAILING FROM PIER, foot of Canal st., as follows:
WEDNESDAYS and SATURDAYS at 3 P. M.,
FOR CHARLESTON, S. C., FLORIDA, THE SOUTH, AND SOUTH-WEST.
CITY OF ATLANTA.....SATURDAY.....Feb. 10
GEO. W. CLYDE.....WEDNESDAY.....Feb. 14

SUPERIOR PASSENGER ACCOMMODATIONS.

Insurance to destination one-half of one per cent.

Goods forwarded free of commission. Passenger tickets and bills of lading issued and signed at the office of
JAMES W. QUINTARD & CO., Agents,
No. 177 West st., corner Warren.
Or W. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 13 Bowling Green.
Or BENTLEY D. HASELL, General Agent
Great Southern Freight Line, 317 Broadway.

STATE LINE.

NEW-YORK TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, DUBLIN, BELFAST, AND LONDONDERRY.

These first-class full-powered steamers will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Canal st.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.....Thursday, Feb. 8
STATE OF VIRGINIA.....Thursday, Feb. 22
STATE OF NEBRASKA.....Thursday, March 1

First cabin, $60, $65, and $70, according to accommodations; return tickets, $110, $125. Second cabin, $45; return tickets, $80. Steerage at lowest rates. Apply to

AUSTIN BALDWIN & CO., Agents,
No. 72 Broadway, New-York.

STEERAGE tickets at 52 Broadway, and at the company's pier, foot of Canal st., North River.

ANCHOR LINE U. S. MAIL STEAMERS.
NEW-YORK AND GLASGOW

Faltvia....Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | Anchoria...Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
Alsatia....Feb. 17, 8 A. M. | California, March 3, 8 A. M.

TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, OR DERRY.

Cabin $65 to $85, according to accommodations; Intermediate, $35; Steerage $28.

NEW-YORK AND LONDON.

Italia.....Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | Utopia, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
Cashin, $55 to $70; Steerage, $28. Cabin excursion tickets at reduced rates. Drafts issued for any amount at current rates. Company's Pier Nos. 20 and 21, North River, N. Y.

HENDERSON BROTHERS,
Agents, No. 7 Bowling Green.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD.
STEAM-SHIP LINE BETWEEN NEW-YORK, SOUTHAMPTON, AND BREMEN.
Company's Pier, foot of 2d st., Hoboken.
RHEIN.....Sat. Feb. 10 | HERMANN....Sat., Feb. 24
ODER.....Sat., Feb. 17 | EIDER.....Sat., March 3

RATES OF PASSAGE FROM NEW-YORK TO SOUTHAMPTON, HAVRE, OR BREMEN.
First cabin.....$100 gold
Second cabin.....60 gold
Steerage.....30 currency

Return tickets at reduced rates. Prepaid steerage certificates, $32 currency. For freight or passage apply to OELRICHS & CO., No. 2 Bowling Green.

INMAN LINE.—MAIL STEAMERS.
FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.
CITY OF CHESTER, Saturday, Feb. 17, at 7:30 A. M.
CITY OF RICHMOND, Saturday, March 3, at 8 A.M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS, Saturday, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

From Pier 45 North River.

CABIN, $80 and $100, Gold. Return tickets on favorable terms. STEERAGE, $24, Currency. Drafts as low as issued.

Saloons, State-rooms, Smoking, and Bath-rooms amidships. JOHN G. DALE, Agent,
Nos. 15 and 33 Broadway, N. Y.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO FRANCE.
THE GENERAL TRANSATLANTIC COMPANY'S MAIL STEAMERS BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND HAVRE,
Calling at PLYMOUTH (G. B.) for the landing of Passengers.

Will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Morton st., every alternate Saturday, beginning with:
LABRE DOUR, Saturday.....Saturday, Feb. 10, 3 P. M.

For particulars address
LOUIS DE BEBIAN, Agent, No. 55 Broadway.

FOR SAVANNAH GA.,
THE FLORIDA PORTS,
AND THE SOUTH AND SOUTH-WEST.
GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE,
CENTRAL RAILROAD OF GEORGIA, AND ATLANTIC AND GULF RAILROAD.

WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY.

SAN JACINTO, Capt. HAZARD, SATURDAY, Feb. 10, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

H. LIVINGSTON, Capt. MALLORY, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14, Pier No. 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agent, No. 409 Broadway.

SAN SALVADOR, Capt. NICKERSON, SATURDAY, Feb. 17, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

GENERAL BARNES, Capt. CHESMAN, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 21, Pier 16 East River, 3 P. M. MURRAY, FERRIS & CO., Agts., 62 South st.

Insurance ONE-HALF PER CENT. Superior accommodations for passengers. Through rates and bills of lading in connection with Central R. R. of Georgia, Atlantic and Gulf Railroad, and Florida steamers City Point and Dictator also, with the steamer J. B. SCUYLER, which has been placed on the inside route from Savannah to Florida, and offers unsurpassed accommodations.

C. H. OWENS, Agent A. & G. R. R.
GEORGE YONGE, Agent C. R. R. of Ga.,
No. 315 Broadway. No. 409 Broadway.

FLORIDA.

Caution to travellers! Great reduction in fare via the inland route from Savannah to all Florida ports. Only $2 to Jacksonville. Meals and state-rooms extra. The elegant steamer J. B. SCHUYLER makes close connection with all Savannah steamers, thus forming the quickest and most agreeable route as well as the lowest in fare. Accommodations for passengers unsurpassed. Travelers are cautioned against purchasing through tickets via any other route.

PACIFIC MAIL AND PANAMA TRANSIT
STEAM-SHIP LINES.

FOR CALIFORNIA, JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, NEW-ZEALAND, BRITISH COLUMBIA, OREGON, &c.
Sailing from Pier No. 42 North River.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.
Steam-ship COLON.....Thursday, Feb. 15
connecting at Central America and South Pacific ports.

From SAN FRANCISCO to JAPAN and CHINA.
Steam-ship CITY OF TOKIO.....Thursday, March 1
From San Francisco to Sandwich Islands, Australia, and New-Zealand.
Steam-ship CITY OF SYDNEY.....Wednesday, Feb. 28

For freight or passage apply to
WM. H. CLYDE & CO., or H. J. BULLAY, Superintendent, No. 6 Bowling Green. Pier No. 42 N. R., foot Canal st.

NEW-YORK, HAVANA, AND MEXICAN MAIL S. S. LINE.
Steamers leave Pier No. 3 North River at 3 P. M.

FOR HAVANA DIRECT.

CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17
CITY OF VERA CRUZ.....Wednesday, Feb. 21
CITY OF NEW-YORK.....Saturday, Feb. 28

FOR VERA CRUZ AND NEW-ORLEANS.
Via Havana. Progreso, Campeachy, Tuxpan, and Tampico.
CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17

Steamers will leave New-Orleans for Vera Cruz, Feb. 23 and March 10 (or vice versa), touching at the above ports.

For freight or passage apply to
LAMMEYER & SONS, Nos. 51 and 53 Broadway.

NEW-YORK AND HAVANA
DIRECT MAIL LINE.

These first-class steamships sail regularly at 3 P. M., from Pier No. 13 North River as follows:

COLUMBUS.....WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14
CLYDE.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24

Accommodations unsurpassed. For freight or passage apply to WM. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 6 Bowling Green. MORELLER, LULING & CO., Agents in Havana.

NATIONAL LINE.—Piers 44 and 51 North River.
FOR LONDON.
CANADA.....Saturday, Feb. 10, at 2 P. M.
FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.
Helvetia...Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | England, Feb. 17, 7:30 A. M.

Cabin and steerage passage and drafts from £1 upward, issued at very low rates. Company's offices No. 69 Broadway. W. J. HURST, Manager.

SHIPPING.

HAMBURG American Packet Company's line, for PLYMOUTH, CHERBOURG and HAMBURG.
GELLERT.....Feb. 15 | NUBIA.....March 1
POMMERANIA....Feb. 22 | LESSING.....March 8

Rates of passage to Plymouth, London, Cherbourg, Hamburg, and all points in England. First Cabin, $100 gold; Second Cabin, $60 gold; Steerage, $30, currency.

KUNHARDT & CO., C. B. RICHARD & BROS.,
General Agents, General Passenger Agents.
61 Broadst., N. Y. 61 Broadway, N. Y.

RAILROADS.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.
GREAT TRUNK LINE
AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

Trains leave New-York, via Desbrosses and Cortlandt Streets Ferries, as follows:

Express for Harrisburg, Pittsburg, the West and South, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, 8:30 A. M., 6 and 8:30 P. M. daily.

For Williamsport, Lock Haven, Corry, and Erie, at 8:30 P. M., connecting at Corry for Titusville, Petroleum Centre, and the Oil Regions. For Williamsport and Lock Haven, 8:30 A. M.

For Baltimore, Washington, and the South, "Limited Washington Express" of Pullman Parlor Cars daily, except Sunday, 9:30 A. M.; arrive Washington, 4:10 P. M. Regular at 8:40 A. M., 1, 6, and 9 P. M. Sunday, 6 and 9 P. M.

Express for Philadelphia, 7:30, 8:30, 9:40, (9:30 Limited,) 10:30 A. M., 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30, 9 P. M., and 12 night. Sunday, 8:30 A. M., 5, 6, 7, 8:30, and 9 P. M. Emigrant and second-class, 7 P. M.

Accommodation for Trenton, 7 A. M., 2 and 4:10 P. M.

For trains to Newark, Elizabeth, Rahway, Princeton, Trenton, Perth Amboy, Flemington, Belvidere, and other points, see local schedules at all Ticket Offices.

Trains arrive from Pittsburg, 6:20 and 10:30 A. M., and 10:20 P. M. daily; 10:10 A. M. and 6:50 P. M. daily, except Monday. From Washington and Baltimore, 6:30, 9:50 A. M., 4:10, 5:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday, 6:30 A. M. From Philadelphia, 5:05, 6:20, 6:30, 9:50, 10:10, 11:50 A. M., 2:10, 4:10, 5:10, 6:50, 9:40, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday 5:05, 6:20, 6:30, 9:50, 11:50, A. M., 6:50, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M.

Ticket Offices, Nos. 526 and 944 Broadway, No. 1 Astor House, and foot of Desbrosses and Cortlandt streets; No. 4 Court street, Brooklyn; Nos. 114, 116, and 118 Hudson st., Hoboken; Depot, Jersey City. Emigrant Ticket Office, No. 8 Battery place.

FRANK THOMSON, D. M. BOYD, JR.,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.

TO PHILADELPHIA
via
PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

THE OLD-ESTABLISHED ROUTE AND SHORT LINE between
NEW-YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.

14 Through Trains each way daily; 3 Depots in Philadelphia, 2 in New-York.

4 Tracks, the most improved Equipment, and the Fastest Time consistent with absolute safety.

Express Trains leave New-York, via Desbrosses and Cortlandt Streets Ferries, as follows:

7:30, 8:30, 9:40, (9:30 Limited,) 10:30 A. M., 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30, 9 P. M., and 12 Midnight. Sunday, 8:30 A. M., 5, 6, 7, 8:30, and 9 P. M.

Returning, trains leave Philadelphia 3:20, 3:30, 7, 7:30, 8:30, and 11 A. M., (Limited Express, 1:35 P. M.) 1:40, 4, 5:30, 7, and 7:35 P. M., and 12 Midnight. On Sunday, 3:20, 3:30, 7, 8:30 A. M., 4, 7, 7:35 P. M., and 12 Midnight.

Ticket Offices, Nos. 526 and 944 Broadway, No. 1 Astor House, and foot of Desbrosses and Cortlandt sts., No. 4 Court st., Brooklyn; Nos. 114, 116, and 118 Hudson st., Hoboken; Depot, Jersey City. Emigrant Ticket Office, No. 8 Battery place.

FRANK THOMSON, D. M. BOYD, JR.,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.

NEW-YORK CENTRAL AND HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—Commencing Dec. 26, 1876, through trains will leave Grand Central Depot:

7:15 A. M., Western and Northern Express, with drawing-room cars to Canandaigua.

8:30 A. M., special Chicago and St. Louis Express, with drawing-room cars to Rochester and Buffalo. Also, through car to St. Louis.

11:00 A. M., Northern and Western Express.

3:30 P. M., special Albany, Troy and Western Express arrives at Buffalo 7:10 A. M.

5:00 P. M., Express, with sleeping cars, for Watertown and Canandaigua. Also for Montreal via Plattsburg.

8:30 P. M., Pacific Express, daily, with sleeping cars, for Rochester, Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Cleveland, Indianapolis, and St. Louis. Also for Chicago, via both L. S. and M. C. Railroads, and to Montreal via St. Albans.

11:00 P. M., Express, with sleeping cars, for Albany and Troy. Way trains as per local Time Tables.

Tickets for sale at Nos. 252, 261, and 413 Broadway, and at Westcott Express Company's offices, Nos. 7 Park Place, 785 and 1,491 Broadway, New-York, and 333 Washington st., Brooklyn.

C. B. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

ERIE RAILWAY.

Winter Arrangement of through trains. From Chambers Street Depot. (For 23d st. see note below.)

9:00 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Cincinnati and Chicago Day Express. Drawing-room coaches to Buffalo, Dunkirk, and Chicago. Connects at Suspension Bridge with Great Western Railway for Detroit, Toronto, and Hamilton.

10:45 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Express Mail for Buffalo and the West. Sleeping coach to Buffalo.

7:00 P. M., daily, Pacific Express to the West. Sleeping coaches through to Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Cincinnati, and Chicago, without change. Hotel dining-coaches to Chicago.

7:00 P. M., except Sundays, Western Emigrant train. Above trains leave Twenty-third Street Ferry at 8:45 and 10:15 A. M., and 6:45 P. M.

For local trains see time-tables and cards in hotels and depots.

JNO. N. ABBOTT, General Passenger Agent.

NEW-YORK, NEW-HAVEN, AND HARTFORD RAILROAD.

After Dec. 10, 1876, trains leave Grand Central Depot (42d st.) for New-Canaan Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1:40 P. M.; Danbury and Norwalk Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1, and 4:40 P. M.; Naugatuck Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3 P. M.; Housatonic Railroad at 8:05 A. M. and 3 P. M.; New-Haven and Northampton Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3P. M.; for Newport at 8:05 A. M. and 1 P. M.; Boston and Albany Railroad at 8:05 and 11 A. M., 3 and 9 P. M. (9 P. M. on Sunday.) Boston, (via Shore Line,) at 1 and 10 P. M., (10 P. M. on Sundays.) Boston and New-York Air Line, 8 A. M., 1 and 11:35 P. M.

Way trains as per local time-tables.

LEHIGH VALLEY RAILROAD.
ARRANGEMENT. PASSENGER TRAINS. JAN. 1, 1877.

Leave depots foot of Cortlandt and Debrosses sts., at 6:30 P. M.—Night Express, daily, for Easton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Wilkesbarre, Pittston, Sayre, Elmira, Ithaca, Auburn, Rochester, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and the West. Pullman's sleeping coaches attached.

General Eastern office corner Church and Cortlandt sts., CHARLES H. CUMMINGS, Agent.
ROBERT H. SAYRE, Superintendent and Engineer.

WICKFORD RAILROAD ROUTE TO NEW-PORT.—Passengers for this line take 8:05 A. M. and 1 P. M. express trains from Grand Central Depot, arriving at 4:18 and 8 P. M. at Newport.

THEODORE WARREN, Superintendent.

STEAMBOATS.

STONINGTON LINE
FOR BOSTON AND ALL POINTS EAST.
REDUCED FARE.

Elegant steamers leave Pier No. 33 North River, foot of Jay st., at 4:30 P. M.

Tickets for sale at all principal ticket offices. State-rooms secured at offices of Westcott Express Company and at No. 363 Broadway.

PROVIDENCE LINE.

Freight only, steamers leave Pier No. 27 North River, foot of Park place, at 4 P. M. Freights via either line taken at lowest rates.

D. S. BABCOCK, Pres. G. W. PELKINS, G. P. Agent.

FALL RIVER LINE
FOR
BOSTON AND THE EAST.
FARES REDUCED.

Leave New-York daily, (Sunday excepted,) from Pier No. 28 North River, foot of Murray st., 4:30 P. M.

BORDEN & LOVELL, Agents.
GEO. L. CONNOR, General Passenger Agent.

FOR NEW-HAVEN, HARTFORD, &c.—Pier 41; steamers leave Peck slip for New-Haven at 3 and 11 P. M., connecting with road.

FOR BRIDGEPORT AND ALL POINTS ON Housatonic and Naugatuck Railroad.—Pier 21 Steamers leave Catharine slip at 11:30 A. M.

DIVIDENDS.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.

The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at
No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts.
Open daily. Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

Fiftieth Dividend.
CLINTON
FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,
No. 156 BROADWAY.
NEW-YORK, Jan. 4, 1877.

The usual semi-annual DIVIDEND of TEN PER CENT. is payable on demand. G. T. PATTERSON, Jr.,
Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE NEW-YORK, PROVIDENCE AND BOSTON RAILROAD COMPANY. (STONINGTON RAILROAD.)
NEW-YORK, Jan. 25, 1877.

A QUARTERLY DIVIDEND OF TWO AND ONE-HALF PER CENT., out of the earnings of the past three months, will be paid at the office of Messrs. M. Morgan's Sons, No. 39 William st., New-York, on the 10th day of February.

The transfer-books will be closed from the 1st to the 10th, both inclusive. F. B. NOYES, Secretary.

CLEVELAND AND PITTSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.—Office of Secretary and Treasurer, Cleveland, Ohio. The usual dividend of One Per Cent., being the regular guaranteed quarterly dividend of this company, at the rate of Seven per Cent. per annum on the new guaranteed stocks, will be paid on and after the 1st March proximo, at the office of the Farmer's Loan and Trust Company, No. 26 Exchange place, New-York.

The transfer-books will close on the 10th inst. and reopen on the 2d March.

G. A. INGERSOLL, Secretary.

THE ST NICHOLAS NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK,
NEW-YORK, Jan. 30, 1877.

DIVIDEND.—A SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND OF Four per Cent. has been declared by the Directors of this bank, payable on and after the 12th day of February next. The transfer books will be closed from the 1st to 13th proximo.

A. PARKHURST, Cashier.

COAL AND WOOD.

SCRANTON COAL.—DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA and Western Railroad Company's superior Scranton Coal for sale by GEORGE H. PARRYMAN. Prices in yards—Grate, $3 25; egg, $3 25; chestnut, $3 65; stove, $4 per ton; cost of cart-age added for delivery. Yards, Nos. 204 and 206 East 32d st., and Nos. 135, 137 and 139 East 41st st.

FINANCIAL.

ELIZABETH CITY
7s,
MATURING 1878 TO 1896.
FOR SALE BY
VERMILYE & CO.,
Nos. 16 and 18 Nassau St.

CHASE & ATKINS,
BANKERS AND BROKERS,
NO. 18 BROAD STREET, NEW-YORK.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS SUBJECT TO DRAFT AT SIGHT.

GOLD, GOVERNMENT, STATE, MUNICIPAL, AND RAILROAD SECURITIES BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION FOR CASH OR UPON MARGIN.

Choice and Safe Investments.
7, 8, AND 10 PER CENT.
CITY AND COUNTY MUNICIPAL BONDS.
FIRST MORTGAGE RAILROAD BONDS.
CITY RAILROAD STOCKS AND BONDS.
INSURANCE AND BANK STOCKS.
GAS-LIGHT STOCKS AND BONDS.
STRICTLY FIRST-CLASS SECURITIES.
PAYING 10 TO 15 PER CENT.
INTEREST ALWAYS PROMPTLY PAID.
For sale at desirable prices by
Albert H. Nicolay & Co.,
NO. 43 PINE ST., NEW-YORK.

N. B.—INVESTMENT SECURITIES OUR SPECIALTY 26 YEARS.

J. & W. SELIGMAN & CO.,
BANKERS,
No. 21 Broad st., New-York.
Issue Letters of Credit for Travelers,
PAYABLE IN ANY PART OF EUROPE, ASIA, AFRICA, AUSTRALIA, AND AMERICA.

DRAW BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND MAKE TELEGRAPHIC TRANSFERS OF MONEY ON EUROPE AND CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE OF THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY, No. 26 Exchange place, corner William st., New-York, Jan. 8, 1877.

THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY of the City of New-York, Trustees of the sinking fund of the construction and equipment bonds of the Dunkirk, Warren and Pittsburg Railroad Company, hereby give notice that in accordance with the provisions of the said sinking fund, they have drawn by lot the following numbers of sixteen of said bonds, viz: Nos. 56, 449, 454, 709, 739, 867, 883, 888, 925, 945, 959, 960, 1,100, 1,342, and that on presentation and delivery to them of said sixteen bonds, or any part of the same, they will be redeemed at par value thereof, and that interest on all of the said sixteen bonds not presented for redemption on or before the 1st day of July next will cease from and after that date.

R. G. ROLSTON, President.

THE NEW-YORK MINING STOCK EXCHANGE,
No. 19 Broad st. Organized in 1864.

This association has been reorganized for the purpose of facilitating dealings in the stocks of the prominent mining companies, and thus meeting the demands of business arising from the increased developments and growing importance of the mining interests of this country; 135 of its members are also members of the NEW-YORK STOCK EXCHANGE; 50 of its members are also members of the NEW-YORK GOLD EXCHANGE.

Parties desiring information relative to the business of the Exchange or membership therein, may apply to the Secretary, J. WYMAN MORRIS, at its temporary rooms, No. 19 BROAD st.

JOHN STANTON, JR., President.

THE GOLD MORTGAGE BONDHOLDERS' Committee are now prepared to purchase all or any portion of the outstanding thirty-two Gold Mortgage Bonds of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railway Company, for the sum of $584 50 per bond, which is the amount of the dividend in cash arising from the sale under the foreclosure proceedings. Or if the holders of any of these bonds wish to join the other bondholders and to have the same made to the new parties, they may do so, provided they notify us by the 15th of February. Apply to W. A. V. POST, Secretary of the Foreclosure Committee, at the office of Perkins, Livingston, Post & Co., No. 23 Nassau st.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 27, 1877.

CINCINNATI 7 3/10 PER CENT
MUNICIPAL BONDS, DUE 1906. A LIMITED AMOUNT FOR SALE BY
KUHN, LOEB & CO., NO. 31 NASSAU ST.

OCEAN NATIONAL BANK.
ASSETS AT AUCTION,
MARCH 27, 1877.

For catalogue apply to ADRIAN H. MULLER & CO., No. 7 Pine st., or to the Receiver, No. 21 Nassau st.

THEODORE M. DAVIS, Receiver.

UNITED STATES EXPRESS COMPANY,
TREASURER'S OFFICE, 59 BROADWAY,
NEW-YORK, Jan. 27, 1877.

THE TRANSFER-BOOKS OF THIS COMPANY will be closed Feb. 3, at 2 P. M., and reopened Feb. 16.

A HAND-BOOK OF COMMERCE, FINANCE, AND INVESTMENTS.—The FINANCIAL REVIEW, (Annual,) price $1 25, is now ready. Address for book or circular, Box 4,032, P. O. New-York. Commercial and Financial Chronicle, No. 79 William st.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO.,
NO. 59 WALL ST.,
ISSUE COMMERCIAL AND TRAVELERS' CREDITS AVAILABLE IN all PARTS of the WORLD.

$150,000 TO LOAN ON BOND AND mortgage on New-York City improved property. Apply to GRANT BROTHERS, No. 2 Exchange court.

ESTATE FUNDS TO LOAN ON BOND AND mortgage for five years at six per cent; good applications wanted. E. H. LUDLOW & CO., No. 3 Pine st.

FIRE INSURANCE STOCKS
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
E. S. BAILEY, No. 65 Wall st.

WABASH RAILWAY COMPANY.—CERTIficates for funded coupons bought and sold by W. H. DICKINSON, No. 14 Wall st.

ELECTIONS.

OFFICE OF THE CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY OF MARYLAND, No. 71 BROADWAY,
NEW-YORK, Feb. 2, 1877.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STOCKholders of this company for the election of President and Directors, and such business as may then and there be transacted, will be held at the office of the company, No. 71 Broadway, New-York, on TUESDAY, the 13th day of February, 1877, between the hours of 12 M. and 2 P. M.

H. STANLEY CLARK, Secretary.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR THIRTEEN Directors of the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company will be held at the Depot, 6th av., corner of 43d st., on TUESDAY, Feb. 13, 1877, from 12 to 1 o'clock.

H. S. MOORE, Secretary.

COPARTNERSHIP NOTICES.

WE HEREBY GIVE NOTICE THAT THE partnership heretofore existing between us, under the firm name of O. W. VATET & CO., in this day dissolved by mutual consent. O. W. VATET,
E. GUGENHEIM.

Dated NEW-YORK, Feb. 8, 1877.

PROPOSALS.

TO QUARRYMEN AND GRANITE DEALERS.
PROPOSALS FOR CUT STONE.
OFFICE OF LIGHT-HOUSE ENGINEER, THIRD DISTRICT,
TOMPKINSVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 13, 1877.

Proposals are solicited, and will be received until noon of Feb. 26, 1877, for furnishing the cut stone for the dwelling and tower for Stratford Shoals Light-house, Long Island Sound, New-York.

The stone (granite) is to be cut according to plans and specifications, which, with any other information desired concerning the work, will be furnished to bidders upon application to the undersigned.

The proposals will state the lump sum for which the stone required will be delivered at the harbor of Bridgeport, Conn. The stones are all to be delivered, cut and dressed, ready for setting. The labor of erecting the structure will be done by the United States, and should not be included in the proposals.

The stones are to be delivered in parcels, according to sizes, and the order in which they will be required for use, commencing the delivery not later than the first of May, 1877, and the entire lot to be delivered within one month thereafter.

Proposals will be in duplicate, with two sureties in an amount equal to the bid attached to each, indorsed by some officer of the Government known to the Treasury Department.

They will be sealed and indorsed "Proposals for cut stone for the Stratford Shoals Light-house," and addressed to the undersigned, who reserves the right to reject any bid for proper cause.

I. C. WOODRUFF,
Colonel of Engineers, United States Army,
Engineer Third Light-house District.

Post Office Box No. 4,032, New-York City.

PROPOSALS FOR DREDGING AND DIKE.
UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
CORPS OF PENNSYLVANIA AV., 19TH ST.,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 3, 1877.

Sealed proposals for Dredging and the construction of a Dike in Rappahannock River, Va., will be received at this office until noon of WEDNESDAY, March 7, 1877 and opened immediately thereafter.

Specifications and blank forms for proposals can be obtained on application to this office.

A. T. ABBERT, U. S. Civil Engineer.

PROPOSALS.

PROPOSALS FOR ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS.
POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Jan. 25, 1877.

Sealed proposals are invited from steel-plate engravers and plate printers, and will be received at this department until 12 o'clock M. on Wednesday, the 28th day of February, 1877, for furnishing all the postage stamps which this department may require for public and official use during a period of four years, commencing on the 1st day of May, 1877, viz:

1. Stamps for the use of the public.
2. Official stamps for the use of the executive departments.
3. Newspaper and periodical stamps.

QUALITY OF STAMPS.

The stamps must be furnished, subject to the approval of the department, from steel plates, engraved in the highest style of the art of steel engraving, and printed in such colors as may from time to time be selected by the department, in the best and most approved manner, upon paper of the best quality, suitable for the purpose and satisfactory to the department, thoroughly gummed with the best quality of adhesive gum, perforated in such manner that each separate stamp can be readily detached and used, the sheets to be well pressed, and packed so as to prevent them from adhering to each other; the same to be furnished with all reasonable dispatch in such quantities as may in each case be ordered by the department daily to fill requisitions from Postmasters and from the executive departments. The stamps must be printed on hand-roller presses.

DIES, ROLLS, AND PLATES.

The dies, rolls, and plates from which postage stamps are now printed, being the property of the United States, will be placed in the keeping and custody of the contractor on or before the first day of May, 1877, the same to be held subject to the order and control of the department, as hereinafter provided; and the contractor will be required, from said dies, rolls, and plates, and from such rolls and plates as may be necessary to be reproduced from the original dies, to have on hand, ready for issue on the day the contract term commences, a sufficient stock of stamps of the several denominations and kinds required, to fill the current daily requisitions from the department, without disadvantage or delay.

The contractor will be further required to keep in repair all dies, rolls, and plates from which stamps may be printed, and to renew the same whenever required; and should new designs be required at any time to take the place of the present series of stamps for the use of the public, or of any of them, or for denominations of stamps not now in use, the same shall be furnished and engraved, subject to the approval of the Postmaster General, upon his request, within a reasonable time; all which shall be done and executed in the best style of steel engraving by the contractor, and at his own expense. No change will be made in the present designs of official postage stamps, or of newspaper and periodical stamps; but the contractor will be required to keep in repair, and renew when required, the dies, rolls, and plates for these stamps, the same as for the stamps for the use of the public. All dies, rolls, and plates made or used at any time in filling the contract shall immediately become the absolute property of the United States, and shall be delivered, in good working order, to the Postmaster General or his authorized agent whenever demanded.

BUILDING, PLACE OF MANUFACTURE, &c.

The stamps will be required to be manufactured in a fire-proof building, and in separate apartments, distinct from those in which any other work is done by the contractor—the whole to be subject to the approval of the department—and when finished must be placed in a fire and burglar-proof safe or vault, to be specially provided for that purpose, as well as the rooms used for the manufacture and storage of stamps, and of the stamps in course of manufacture or in stock.

STOCK ON HAND.

The contractor shall at all times keep on hand a stock of the several denominations and kinds of stamps, subject to the control of the Post Office Department, its regularly authorized agent, or such other agents as may be specially authorized by the Postmaster General, in case of manufacture sufficient to meet all orders of the department, and to provide against any and all contingencies that may be likely to occur during the existence of the contract, so that each and every order of the department may be promptly filled, and the department shall have the right to require the contractor at any time during the existence of the contract to increase the quantity of stamps not exceeding a supply for three months.

PACKING.

Stamps to be transmitted by sea routes must be securely packed in hermetically sealed tin cases, wrapped in strong manilla paper; all others must either be packed in strong binders'-board boxes, bound on the edges and corners with muslin, and enveloped in two thicknesses of strong manilla paper, or inclosed in strong manilla envelopes, and the quantity to be transmitted may require; all packages to be so inclosed as to enable the agent of the department to officially seal them.

DELIVERY.

The stamps may be required to be delivered by the contractor in separate packages, as above provided for, at the Post Office in the place where the same are manufactured, or at such other place in the immediate vicinity of the place of manufacture as the Postmaster General may direct; or in such quantities at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C. (each denomination and kind being kept separate,) as the Postmaster General may direct.

BLANKS.

In addition, the contractor will be required to furnish labels, and direct the same, for each package, in accordance with the forms to be furnished by the agent of the department, together with all other blanks required to be inclosed with the stamps; also, all blanks for daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly returns relating to the number and denominations of stamps furnished.

REPORTS.

The contractor will be required to report weekly, under oath, the number, denomination, and kind of stamps manufactured, (finished, unfinished, and spoiled,) the number issued during the week, and the number available for issue; all spoiled stamps to be destroyed by the agent of the department in the presence of the contractor or his representative, or otherwise disposed of, as the Postmaster General may direct.

AWARD.

The contract will be awarded on the basis of the number of the several kinds of stamps issued during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, as follows:

1. Number of stamps for use of the public.....698,799,090
2. Number of official stamps for use of the executive departments.....17,682,665
3. Number of newspaper and periodical stamps.....1,290,347
Total.....717,772,102

Bids must be made for each kind of stamps separately, the bidders stating in their proposals the price

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

COMMON COUNCIL DELIBERATIONS.

HOW TO FIND WORK FOR THE UNEMPLOYED WORKING MEN—THE CHARGES AGAINST COMMISSIONER PORTER, OF THE THIRD DISTRICT COURT-HOUSE—MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.

The question of finding employment for 5,000 men was introduced in the Board of Aldermen yesterday by Mr. Bryan Reilly. The gallery of the chamber was crowded with mechanics and laborers, who were attracted by a report that the subject would come up for discussion. They did not appear to be aware of the fact that, notwithstanding all the speeches made before the board, from time to time, avowing sympathy with "the poor unemployed working men," and the various measures passed in their behalf, the Common Council, according to the private statements of its members, can do nothing for them so long as the law exists providing that public works shall be let out by contract to the lowest bidder. Soon after the roll was called, Alderman Reilly offered a resolution declaring that many of the streets down town were in a dilapidated condition, and that some of them are almost impassable, and also requesting the Legislature to pass a law authorizing an appropriation of $1,000,000 to repair them. He said that the work would give employment to a large number of men. Mr. Reilly then presented a petition which was adopted at a meeting of working men a few days ago, and which asked the Common Council, in behalf of "55,000 men" to take such action as would result in putting them to work. The petition was signed by P. Higgins, John Ford, Patrick Maloney, and others. It stated that the 55,000 laborers now idle and their families numbered about 220,000 persons, who were reduced to great destitution; that if relief is not furnished to them many of them will famish; that if the Common Council, through partisan feeling, should neglect to alleviate their condition for two or three weeks, "then it will be near time to look out for a proper place to bury the dead bodies of this great Metropolis," and that a sufficient amount should be appropriated to carry on public improvements and thus give work to poor men. The petitioners then asked, what were the poor "laborers" to do? "Are they," say the petitioners, "to starve, while petted office-holders grow fat on the City Treasury, or are they to go and rob and slay in order to be fed on prison fare? Will our City authorities or our law-makers answer these questions?" The petition closes with an appeal for work. It was ordered on motion Mr. Reilly's resolution was put a few remarks were made by some of the members. One of them—Mr. Pinckney—said they could not get at some of the streets to repair them on account of the snow and ice in them. The resolution was then adopted.

Alderman Toomey called attention to the resolution adopted at a previous meeting empowering the Committee on Public Works to investigate the charges that Commissioner Campbell not only held the office of Chief of the Department of Public Works, but also the position of President of the Consolidated Coal Company, and that as he had given a portion of his time to the discharge of the duties of the latter office, he was therefore necessarily unable to give the former the attention it demands. Mr. Toomey said that the resolution did not specifically authorize the committee to make the investigation, and he therefore moved that this authority be given them, and that they report the result of their examination as soon as possible. He then remarked that the committee would probably ask some members of the Consolidated Coal Company to be present at their meetings. The motion was adopted.

The resolution submitted by Alderman Morris at the last meeting, authorizing Police Commissioner Smith to confer with Gen. Newton, Dock Commissioner Wales, the President of the Harbor Commissioners, the President of the Board of Health and others, in relation to filling up the marshy lands on the East River front, including Little Hell Gate, with ashes and other material, excepting garbage, was unanimously adopted.

The majority and minority reports on the Third District Court-house investigation were called up. The former recites the facts and evidence received as the investigation of the charges made against Commissioner Porter and the architects of the building, Messrs. Withers & Vaux, and recommending that the Commissioners of Public Works be directed to superintend the completion of the Court-house. The minority report exonerated Mr. Porter and the architects from the charges, and was in favor of having them authorized to finish the building.

Alderman Parrov defended the majority report. He said that it was on record that Commissioner Porter went to the contractors and told them that he was in difficulty, and that he wanted loans of money from them, and he got the money. That was proved by Commissioner Porter himself. He saw Mr. Porter in Albany trying to have the Commission, of which he was President, appointed to complete the building. He did not believe that the commission should be authorized to finish the work, because it might subject contractors to black-mail. In his opinion, the question of asking contractors for loans was a sort of blackmail. As to directing the Commissioner of Public Works to have the building completed, it would save expense to the City.

Alderman Howard defended Commissioner Porter, and also the architects. He considered the charges against them as nothing but a piece of black-mail. They were made by persons who were disappointed because the architects refused to certify to their bills for extra work. Then they came forward with charges which were not proved. In regard to the loans obtained by Mr. Porter, he said them all back, and Mr. Horgan, the gentleman from whom he obtained them, testified that he had no complaint whatever to make against the Commissioner.

Alderman Cowing said he agreed with the majority report. He remarked that according to it Commissioner Porter went to contractors whom he did not know except in his official capacity and asked loans of money from them. He thought it was improper for a person to ask loans of men on whose work they had to pass.

The minority report was then lost and the majority report was adopted by a vote of 14 to 4.

Alderman Sedlin offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the Dock Commissioners to furnish a report of the names and residences of all persons employed in their department, the amount of revenue of the department from all sources, and its expenditures for all works under its control, the report to include the operations of the department from the year 1873 to the present date.

The Committee on Law presented a report in favor of the resolution offered a few weeks ago by Alderman Phillips, requesting the Legislature to pass a law authorizing the Mayor to appoint a fifth memner of the Board of Apportionment, who shall represent the tax-payers. The report was approved.

A resolution offered by Alderman Morris to erect lamps around the Lincoln Monument, in Union square, was laid over.

The Board then adjourned.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE IN A HOTEL.

George Cantrell called at the Police Central Office yesterday morning, and informed Capt. Copeland that his father, Samuel Cantrell, aged 59, a shoe-dealer at Nos. 239 and 241 Fourth avenue, was missing. Young Cantrell said that his father left the store at 4 o'clock on Wednesday, and said that he should not return. He did not come home during the night, a most unusual circumstance, and as for some time past his mind had been unsettled, his absence had alarmed the family. At about 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, a dispatch was received from the Eighteenth Precinct stating that Cantrell had been found at the Putnam House, corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-sixth street, where he had attempted to commit suicide by shooting himself in the head with a pistol, and had been taken to Bellevue Hospital. At about 10 o'clock on Wednesday night, Mr. Cantrell called at the Putnam House and hired a room, registering as "J. Cantrell, Northport, Long Island." At noon yesterday one of the hall-boys and a chamber-maid employed in the hotel, while passing the door of the room, heard a noise as though somebody had staggered or fallen against the washstand. After waiting a few minutes for a repetition of the sound, the hall-boy procured a ladder, and, looking through the fanlight, saw Mr. Cantrell lying on the floor, his head in a pool of blood. The door was at once opened and several persons entered. As they approached Cantrell he muttered: "Lift me up," and he was picked up and laid on the bed. The clerk asked him why he had attempted to destroy himself, but received no reply. From the indications in the room it is believed that Mr. Cantrell shot himself early yesterday morning, and had been groping and rolling about the room until he was discovered by the hall-boy. A new single-barrelled pistol was found lying near a closet, and his clothing was also saturated with blood. The bed and carpet were also blood-stained. Near the pistol was found a vial which is supposed to have contained some opiate which Cantrell took before shooting himself. No cause is known for the attempted suicide. Cantrell is believed to be fatally wounded.

THE CARNIVAL IN NEW-YORK.

The movement to have a Mardi Gras celebration in this City is assuming definite form, and as a great many merchants and other prominent business men have enlisted their services in the cause, there is but little doubt that the carnival will be a success. A meeting was held last evening at the Union Square Hotel, and the proposition of Col. St. Martin to introduce the carnival was warmly indorsed. The celebration will include a procession through the principal streets of the City on Wednesday, April 4, and a procession through Broadway or illuminated characters and scenes, drawn on floats, at night. King Carnival will arrive at the Battery at midday, and will be mounted on a donkey, which will be placed on a float and drawn by four elephants, furnished by Barnum, to the City Hall. At the Broadway entrance to the park, opposite Murray street, where a battlement representing an old castle, will have been erected, the keys of the City will be delivered to the King by Mayor Ely, and after other formalities the march will be resumed. The industrial procession is intended to be one of the finest ever seen in this country. The present head-quarters of the movement are at the Union Square Hotel, but on Monday next they will be moved to the St. James.

OFFICIAL CORRUPTION EXPOSED.

REPORT ON THE ABUSES OF THE CORONERS' OFFICE MADE TO THE MUNICIPAL SOCIETY—CHARGE OF BRIBERY AND MISFEASANCE—FORTUNES SAID TO HAVE BEEN MADE BY CORONERS—THE ABOLITION OF THE OFFICE RECOMMENDED.

At a regular meeting of the Municipal Society last evening, at which Mr. Dorman B. Eaton, the President of the Society, occupied the chair, Dr. Stephen Smith, formerly President of the Board of Health, and Mr. Jackson S. Schultz, from a special committee in relation to "The Duties and Abuses of the Coroners' Office," made a report, which was read by Dr. Smith. The report began as follows:

The office of Coroner is traced back in English jurisprudence several centuries, the functions of the office being accurately defined in the statutes of Edward I., and it was then an office of considerable dignity, the Coroner being elected for life. The Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench was the principal Coroner of the Kingdom. The office, however, soon fell into disrepute, owing to its unpleasant duties, and a century ago it was said it was full of abuses. It was transplanted from English to American soil with all its imperfections, and, while other things have improved, this cumbersome office remains as at present constituted. The language of the old English statute was retained in the State of New-York until 1871, when a law was passed relating to this office. The Coroner's duties are, first, a medical inquiry as to the cause of death, and second, a judicial inquiry as to the perpetrator of the crime. These duties are widely different in this nation. The manner in which these duties are performed being considered, we find that the certificates of deaths by Coroners are largely in excess of the actual number of deaths by violence. In 1873 there were 2,546 of these certificates, and but 1,161 deaths from violence, and the other 1,385 needed only a proper medical examination to determine their nature, and most of them were not reasonably suspicious in their nature. Another method of increasing inquests, is, where a number are killed by a common casualty to hold inquests on each body.

Mr. Smith then read extracts from articles published some time ago on the modes obtaining in the practice in the Coroner's office in this City, and, in continuation, said that social science required that everything practicable should be done to improve the practice in the Coroner's office. Nothing could be done properly without scientific knowledge accurately obtained by persons properly qualified. This duty should be performed by the Health authorities. It had been demonstrated that scientific investigation would detect the cause of obscure murders, and a systematic mode of ascertaining the cause of doubtful cases of death should be established. The present defective and corrupt system should be swept away, and a better one substituted. The Board of Health should ascertain, in the first instance, the cause of death, and the Police Justices should be given power to supplement this action when necessary in suspected criminal cases. In doubtful cases an attorney should accompany and aid the medical officer, and the body be removed to Bellevue for a thorough examination. The Coroner's jury should be abolished. A provision of the State Constitution creating the office of Coroner existed, and a proper amendment should be made.

Mr. Schultz, in speaking in favor of the adoption of the report, said that the private abuses of the Coroner's office were of a fearful character. The office of Coroner had been more lucrative than that of the Presidency of the United States. There were instances in which a Coroner made as much as $50,000 a year, and it was now not infrequently the case that a Coroner made from $15,000 to $20,000 a year. He knew of one case in which a man died in his bath-room and it cost thousands of dollars to have the result of the Coroner's investigation of a character to suit the relatives of the deceased. The attempts of families to conceal suicides had cost thousands of dollars. Men of low character and instincts such as those selected by Tammany Hall to hold the office of Coroner had almost unlimited power and facilities to accept bribes or extort blackmail from wealthy relatives and friends of persons who die suddenly under peculiar circumstances.

Ex-Coroner Adolph Kessler, who was present, said that he knew from experience the abuses to which the office of Coroner was liable. In the case of the sudden death of a relative or friend of Mr. Alexander, of the Equitable Life Assurance Company, at the Windsor Hotel, he had been offered a roll of bills by a friend of Mr. Alexander to make that request so as to suit the views of the relatives of the deceased, but he had spurned the offer. He had been astounded by the persistent efforts made by persons moving in the highest circles of society to influence him in the discharge of his duty by offering him bribes. He had been offered sums as high as from $500 to $5,000, and even as high as $10,000 to acquiesce in the wishes of relatives and friends of deceased persons, and so persistent had been these attempts in some instances that he had, in addition to refusing the bribes, threatened to report the offenders to the District Attorney before they desisted in their efforts.

After remarks by Mr. Eaton, who said that radical measures were necessary, and that any attempt to get legislative aid, in view of the magnitude of the evil and its constitutional protection, would be merely like pouching a cancer, he said he hoped the whole matter would be referred to the Judiciary Committee, and that 500 copies of the report be printed.

A motion made by Mr. Sinclair Tousey to this effect was unanimously adopted, and the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee take the necessary steps to secure the passage through the Legislature of an amendment to the Constitution abolishing the office of Coroner in cities of upward of 10,000 inhabitants.

WHICH WAS IT?

The agents of the Cromwell Line of steamers do not agree with Mr. William Aplin, whose letter was published in yesterday's TIMES, that the vessel wrecked on the Newfoundland coast was the George Cromwell, instead of the George Washington, as reported. The only point, they said, that would give probability to this theory was the statement about the stewardess. The agent said that he had learned for the first time yesterday that the regular stewardess of the George Washington did not sail with her on her fatal voyage, but it was a common occurrence for an employe to be absent during a trip. In such a case the person would furnish a substitute, or the Captain would supply his or her place, and there would be no occasion to report the fact at the company's office. Mr. Seaman thought it extremely improbable that Capt. Whitehead had sailed without a stewardess. The "heavy gold ring" incident is looked upon as trivial in its bearings. Besides, the report stated that "a body, supposed to be that of the chief engineer, was found, wearing a heavy gold ring," and the chief engineer of the George Washington did wear such a ring, while, according to the recollection of Mr. Seaman and all the clerks in the office, Capt. Martin, of the George Cromwell, wore no rings at all. Mr. Seaman thinks it out of the question that there should have been any such "wholesale transfers of clothing, bedding, life-preservers," &c., as Mr. Aplin claims. Nothing of the sort was the practice, and the recovery of a life-buoy, mentioned in the dispatches, marked with the name of the Cromwell, sets the matter at rest. Such a thing could not by any possibility be transferred from one vessel to the other. It will take some days yet to receive particulars from the wreck, the mails being very infrequent.

A BUSY CORNER OBSTRUCTED BY CARS.

Pedestrians who have had occasion to pass Broadway, at the junction of Park row and Ann street, must have had frequent opportunity of experiencing the annoyance caused in the encroachments at that point, of the tracks of the Dry Dock and East Broadway Railroad. The line in question, instead of stopping at the same point all the other lines do, takes a broad sweep and runs by Ann street to the door of the Herald office. This route, beside encroaching on the street, obstructs trafic at one of the busiest points of the City, and materially interferes with the usefulness of the crossing from Hudnut's to the Post Office. The public have frequently complained of the cars of this line, but nothing has, so far, been done toward abating the nuisance. The present Grand Jury, however, which has been appealed to, has determined to take action in the matter, and is now investigating the alleged encroachment, with the view of presenting it as a nuisance.

THE COTTON TRADE.

The Board of Managers of the Cotton Exchange have adopted the following substitute for the amendment to Rule No. 2, of Jan. 15, 1877: "All offers to buy or sell for future delivery shall be in cents or decimal fractions of a cent, and no transactions in contracts shall be permitted wherein the difference in price shall consist of a smaller fraction than one one-hundredth of one cent per pound for each pound of cotton represented by such contract or contracts; nor shall any additional moneyed consideration whatever be allowed."

ANNUAL DINNER OF PALETTE CLUB.

The annual dinner of the Palette Club took place last evening at the rooms of the club. The dinner was informal and as a consequence was enjoyable. Among the invited guests were Mayor Ely, Judges Davis and Barrett, Hon. George Jones, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Mr. A. P. Buckbank, and representatives from all the City clubs.

INSURANCE LITIGATION.

RECEIVER FOR NEW-JERSEY MUTUAL

EX-GOV. JOEL PARKER APPOINTED—THE ASSETS TO BE RETURNED BY THE NATIONAL CAPITOL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—INFORMATION LODGED BY A POLICY-HOLDER UNDER THE INSOLVENT LAW.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Thursday, Feb. 8, 1877.

When Chancellor Runyon, on Tuesday last, postponed the hearing in the case of the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Newark, in which application had been made for the appointment of a Receiver, it was upon the express understanding that the company, or the men who assume to appear in its behalf to resist the application—were to file an answer to-day showing that the company is entirely and perfectly solvent. At 10 o'clock this morning, the time appointed for the hearing, not even the company's counsel was in court with the promised answer; and Mr. Smith, a consulting actuary, who was expected to supply the defense with the figures on which to base their answer, was the only representative of the company present. He retained a Trenton counselor named Kingman, who immediately after the Chancellor had called the case, explained that Mr. McCarter, the company's counsel, was not able, on account of pressing engagements elsewhere, to attend the Court of Chancery. The answer, he said, had not been made, but in its place he volunteered the statement that the consulting actuary was strongly impressed with the idea that the company is solvent. The assets of the company, which had been turned over to the President of the National Capitol Life, were all intact; they have never been opened, and the holders are ready to deliver them to such person as may be authorized to receive them. Mr. Kingman suggested, at the instance of Mr. Smith, that if a Receiver is to be appointed, he be an ad interim officer, and that time and permission be given to the company to file an answer.

Attorney General Vanatta replied that every Receiver is, in one sense, an ad interim officer. He can be removed at the pleasure of the court, when the interest of the State and those in interest require his removal. He had no design of asking at this time for an adjudication of insolvency; all he was in pursuit of at present was to have the court take such preliminary action as was required to conserve the assets of the concern and to ascertain what these assets are. There was no doubt, he thought, that the interests of the policy-holders and of the State required the appointment of a Receiver. The company was confessedly liable for 10,000 policies; it was in court confessedly without one dollar of assets to meet their liabilities; they had nothing to show for their property except the executive promise of a corporation without local habitation, and interdicted by the laws of New-Jersey from doing business in this State. "As the company stands in court to-day," exclaimed the venerable State officer, "it is not only hopelessly insolvent, but in a condition of absolute and complete destitution. They have no assets but what do show us what the assets of the National Capitol Life Insurance Company are, because they all belong to that company."

Mr. Kingman replied that that might be technically so. But it might be said that the act which deprived the company of its assets also made provision for its policy-holders. "The parties I appear for," continued the counsel, "want that thing investigated. The transfer was probably made in ignorance of New-Jersey law. The view of the policy-holders is, that the transfer is illegal, and the President of the company, to whom the transfer was made, expected to have it set aside and a Receiver appointed."

Chancellor Runyon said there seemed to be no difficulty in the case. He should appoint a Receiver, but it was understood that the Receiver was merely to preserve the assets of the company, to take whatever property of the New-Jersey Mutual he could find, and keep it, pending the court's investigation into the solvency of the concern. The appointment of a Receiver was a mere suspension of the functions of the company, and not an adjudication of insolvency. Mr. Kingman, at Mr. Smith's suggestion, mentioned Mr. William M. Force, of Newark, as a suitable person for Receiver. Secretary of State Kelsey, through his counsel, nominated Henry W. Duryea, of Newark. The name of ex-Gov. Joel Parker was also suggested. The Chancellor finally concluded to appoint ex-Gov. Parker, and at once telegraphed to him asking if he would accept. A favorable answer was received this afternoon, but the Chancellor will not make formal announcement of the appointment till to-morrow. His name has not yet been inserted in the order. The amount of bonds to be furnished by the Receiver was fixed at $200,000.

Some discussion was had as to the advisability of the policy-holders continuing the payment to the Receiver of their accrued and accruing premiums. The order of the Chancellor directs the Receiver to receive the premiums, but to keep them apart and for the benefit of whomsoever it may concern. The Chancellor gave notice that nothing in the order shall be construed into a requirement that policy-holders shall pay their premiums during the time of the suspension. They may do as they see fit about that. The Receiver is to take charge of such premiums which are voluntarily placed in his hands. Some difference of opinion was manifested among the counselors present upon the point whether a policy would lapse by failure to pay the premium during the suspension. The Attorney General said he should advise his client, with a view to the ultimate rehabilitation of the company, who desired to protect his policy to pay the premium. The Chancellor, on the other hand, intimated that the protection of the court would be extended to such as failed to keep their premiums up, if the company should happen to get on its feet again.

The order, the main points of which are given above, empowers the Receiver to "demand, sue for, collect, and receive and take into his possession all the goods and chattels, rights and credits, moneys and effects, lands and tenements, books, papers, choses in action, bills, notes, and property of any and every description belonging to the said New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company on the 19th day of January, 1877, including all property and rights of every kind alleged to have been assigned, transferred, set over, and delivered by the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company to the National Capitol Life Insurance Company of the City of Washington, and the said defendants are hereby ordered to deliver to the said Receiver said property, and every part of it."

The proceedings so far taken have been at the instance of the State, through the Secretary of State, under the General Insurance law. A new proceeding was instituted to-day against the company, under the General Insolvent law, in the name of the creditors of the company. The suit is moved by Stephen English, editor of the Insurance Times, who is a holder of a $1,000 policy. His bill prays that the company may be declared insolvent; the transfer to the National Capitol Life fraudulent, and asks that the assets be distributed. Chancellor Runyon directed his counsel to file the information.

AFFAIRS OF THE CONTINENTAL LIFE.

CONTINUATION OF THE REFEREE'S INQUIRY—THE EX-RECEIVER EXAMINED REGARDING FALSE ENTRIES IN THE BOOKS—LOST BOOKS FOUND—THE SUNDAY VISIT TO THE OFFICE—A SCHEME FOR RESUSCITATING THE SINKING COMPANY.

The hearing in the case of the Continental Life Insurance Company before the Referee, Mr. William Allen Butler, was resumed yesterday at No. 20 Nassau street, when the Referee announced, before the taking of testimony was commenced that, for the purpose of facilitating the investigation, he would be in daily attendance, Saturdays and Sundays excepted, and that ample opportunity would be given to any officer or Director of the company to offer such testimony as was pertinent to the inquiry.

Mr. John J. Anderson, the former Receiver, was then recalled and questioned by the Referee as to whether or not he had delivered over to Mr. Grace, his successor, all the property of the company. He replied in the affirmative, and promised to furnish lists of the suits now pending for and against the company. The witness was then examined by Mr. Van Pelt, and testified that he knew nothing about any books having been removed from or concealed in the office during his administration. The books referred to were the ledger, journal, and cash-book, and Mr. Van Pelt asked the witness where they were kept, to which he replied: In the vault; he did not make or authorize the making of any changes in these books, nor did he know that any had been made; the books used by the company were in his immediate custody, and were kept in the vaults at night; Mr. Daniel J. Noyes, he believed, had the combination of the safe locks, though he was not employed in the office; he (the witness) never knew the combination until a few days ago. The books were then produced and a reference to page 100 of the cash-book disclosed the following entry: "Sept. 30, 1876—Commuted annuities, $155,146 08." The witness said he did not know anything about this entry; it had apparently been written in and the balance at the foot changed; the handwriting was different from that in other portions of the book, and he could not say by whom it had been written. The journal was next produced, and in it were found several other false entries which the witness said were put there without his knowledge. There was also another entry of like character in the cash-book, written over an erasure, about which the witness knew nothing. Mr. Van Pelt stated that he had asked these questions of Mr. Anderson in order that that gentleman should not be held responsible for the manipulation of the books. The examination was continued, and Mr. Anderson said he knew nothing about several entries made in the ledger to correspond with those in the journal. The witness was shown a paper, found among his vouchers, which counsel stated was a letter from the office of Messrs. Sewell and Pierce, attorneys, asking him (the Receiver) to send them a check for $1,000 for Mr. Daniel Magone, which he said he made out and sent them; he did not retain Mr. Magone himself; he authorized Mr. Sewell to retain him to attend to the affairs of the company at Albany; he did not know, of his own knowledge, that Mr. Magone was a counselor at law, but had been informed that such was the case, and thought he would be able to do some good at Albany on the argument of the case before the Special Term of the Supreme Court. The witness, on further examination, testified that he understood Mr. Magone had some influence at Albany, but had never been informed that he was not a lawyer; he did not know that Mr. Magone was a politician; he had, he said, commenced an action against the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company for the recovery of the assets transferred to it by the Continental, and did not know why the entire amount of the transfer was not included in the claim; he merely handed the papers over to his attorney, Mr. Fullerton, and told him to bring the suit; he believed there were $78,000 in Government bonds among the assets transferred, but did not know why they had not been included in the claim; he had informed counsel that the total amount transferred was $314,000; he did not authorize the acceptance of $192,000 of mortgages as a full settlement of the claim.

The witness was examined at length by Mr. Moses, who asked him if he had any information to the effect that the suits brought by the Attorney General for the purpose of having him removed was done with a view to covering up the shortcomings of Superintendent Smyth. This was objected to by the Receiver's counsel, who urged that it had nothing to do with the passing of Mr. Anderson's accounts by the Referee. Mr. Moses said that the allegation was made in the petition of the Receiver for an order to pay out money to counsel. The question was then repeated, and the witness replied that he had no such information, and did not believe that such was the case. Mr. Moses then stated to the court that the petition upon which the order was granted was signed "J. J. Anderson, by Sewell and Pierce, attorneys," and that it was therein set forth that certain proceedings had been commenced by the Attorney General for the purpose of superseding the petitioner as Receiver, and for the appointment of another Receiver to cover up the shortcomings of Superintendent Smyth. Upon being confronted with this fact, Mr. Anderson stated that he had repeatedly said to his attorney that the company had not been examined in 10 years, and it looked very strange that Superintendent Smyth should express a wish to examine it immediately after his [the witness'] appointment. The witness was next asked if the Continental Company did not virtually own the New-Jersey Mutual Life, and he replied that it was his opinion that they furnished a good deal of the money wherewith the stock in the latter concern was bought. The Empire Mutual Life Insurance Company had a certain corporate existence as yet, but the witness said he could not say whether or not its books were kept in the office of the Continental.

The next witness was Mr. George W. Crofut, the former Superintendent of the company, who was examined by Mr. Moses in relation to the visit of the Messrs. Frost to the vaults of the company on a certain Sunday, as heretofore published in THE TIMES. Mr. Crofut testified that the occurrence was on Jan. 7, and that it was the result of a meeting between Luther W. Frost, Rufus C. Frost, and himself, held on the night previous, for the purpose of closing a contract between the two first named gentlemen, Mr. John J. McKinnon, Mr. H. D. McKay, and a Mr. Carroll, who had a scheme for the reinsurance of the company's risks, as testified to at the first hearing before the Referee. Witness thought he had had one conversation with Mr. Anderson in reference to the scheme in question; the arrangement made at the meeting mentioned was that Messrs. Luther W. Frost and Rufus C. Frost should meet at the office of the company on the day following, with the Cashier, Mr. Styles, and make a list of the mortgages, which he [the witness] could present to his partners in the scheme—Messrs. McKay, McKinnon, & Carroll—on Monday morning. "What not," said Mr. Moses, "the object of your coming here to change the combination on the safe?" to which the witness replied that it was; he understood that persons who did not belong there had the combination, and he wanted to prevent them entering the safe; when he arrived at the office Rufus C. Frost and Daniel J. Noyes were in the safe, and the others were in the President's room; the Cashier had just came out of the vault, and witness supposed he had been copying the list of mortgages; he asked Noyes what right he had to open the vault on Sunday, and that gentleman replied that he had a perfect right to do so, because he was the Receiver's counsel. To this witness objected, and some hot words ensued between them, during which witness told him he had no right in the place whatever; when the witness arrived they were lying about in confusion papers, which appeared to be letters, &c.; there were two packages, and these were left in the office until last Saturday evening, when they were removed by Mr. Richard B. Waydell, formerly a book-keeper in the office.

Mr. Waydell was the next witness, but his examination elicited nothing important. He stated that he was requested to get the packages of a Mr. Mitchell, into whose custody he delivered them.

Mr. George W. Thomas, the book-keeper, was then called, and testified that the false entries in the journal, above mentioned, were in the handwriting of Mr. Rogers, the Secretary of the company; the three books, witness stated, disappeared on Oct. 24 and were missing until Jan. 24; he did not know where the books went, but was told they were in the Cashier's vault. A long examination regarding the different entries in the books followed, during which the witness stated that according to the books a greater portion of the hundred accounts—$291,000—were given to William Scribner, one of the Directors, and Luther W. Frost; all of the false entries were made by Mr. Rogers.

At the conclusion of Mr. Thomas' examination the hearing was adjourned.

The history of the scheme for resuscitating the sinking company, which was testified to at the first hearing before the Referee, and which is mentioned in the testimony given above, was made known last evening to a reporter of THE TIMES. It was learned that the matter had advanced so far that the contract had been drawn up and signed by Luther W. Frost and J. H. Stedwell, the Presidents of the Continental and New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Companies respectively. It appeared that Messrs. McKinnon and McKay were the representatives of Western capitalists who desired to build up the company, and they entered into negotiations with Mr. Frost looking to that end. The latter gentleman made statements to them concerning the company's assets which forced them to the conclusion that its capital of $100,000 only would be impaired, and they hoped by putting sufficient money into it to make up the deficiency to build it up again and put it once more upon a firm footing. Several meetings took place between the parties interested, and an agreement was made that the affairs of the company should be examined by Mr. Smyth, the Acting Superintendent of the Insurance Department of this State, and upon the result of this was to depend the action of the Western capitalists. The latter called upon Mr. Frost to furnish them with a complete and minute list of all the assets of the concern, and stated, it is said, that they would have nothing to do with the company until every one of these had been examined. Mr. Frost asked time, and meanwhile the contract for reinsurance in the New-Jersey Mutual had been entered into. On behalf of the latter company, Mr. Stedwell is stated to have entered into an agreement to transfer back to the old company every policy that had been taken by them, as well as the assets which had been the consideration for reinsurance. The statements made by Mr. Frost in relation to the Continental's condition, Mr. H. D. McKay last night stated were greatly exaggerated, according to the report of the Receiver, and had they known the exact status of the concern, it would have precluded the possibility of their having anything to do with it. It must be remembered, however, that all their calculations were based upon the theory that many policies were lapsed after Oct. 25 (the date of Mr. Anderson's appointment) by reason of failure on the part of the holders to pay premiums. As a matter of course, Mr. McKay said the validity of the Receiver's appointment would be questioned.

A CINCINNATI REPEATER SENT HOME.

"Eph" Holland, the notorious Democratic politician and gambler of Cincinnati, who was arrested on Wednesday in this City, was brought yesterday morning before Judge Blatchford, in the United States District Court. The complaint on which he was held charged him with having at the late election "procured one Charles Young to vote more than once for a candidate for the office of Representative in Congress, and that said Young did then and there so vote more than once, to wit: In the Second Precinct of the Eighth Ward of the City of Cincinnatti, the First Precinct of the Fourth Ward of said city, the Second Precinct of the Seventh Ward, and the Second Precinct of the Eighteenth Ward." Holland's arrest was made on a certified copy of the indictment found against him in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio, dated Nov. 3, 1876. Pending Judge Blatchford's decision, an effort was made by the prisoner's friends to procure bail, which had been previously fixed at $15,000. As soon as the news of Holland's arrest got abroad he was visited by a large delegation of sporting friends, including "Andy" Sheehan, J. W. Collier, Harry Hill, Jim Barclay, "Red" Leary, B. A. McDonald, and others. An attempt was made to have the bail reduced to $10,000, and counsel was sent for to make a motion to that effect. Before counsel could arrive, however, the court decided to send Holland back to the custody of the United States authorities in Cincinnati, which was accordingly ordered. Assistant District Attorney Foster appeared for the Government. Holland, from his occupation is known as "the John Morrissey of Cincinnati." He was sent home in charge of Deputy Marshals Turney and Johnson.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The Grain Trade considered their consideration of the proposed new rules yesterday, and the rules as amended go into effect to-day.

Mary Hicks, aged 9 years, was fatally burned at her parents' residence, No. 53 Oak street yesterday, by her clothes igniting from a stove.

Prof. Adrian J. Ebell will deliver a free lecture to schools at the Aquarium on Saturday, from 10 to 12 M. Subject: "The Animals and Fishes in the Aquarium."

The Directors of the New-Jersey Central Railway Company claim that they received additional subscriptions to the new loan of $3,000,000 yesterday, to the amount "in round numbers" of $200,000.

While engaged in removing clothes from a line on the roof of the two-story extension of No. 62 South Washington square yesterday, Charlotte Witte, aged 40, fell to the ground and was instantly killed.

The sixth annual meeting of the American Fish Culturists' Association will take place at the New-York Aquarium, Thirty-fifth street and Broadway, on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 14 and 15.

The Postmaster General has refused to change his ruling in relation to the sending of back numbers of publication at pound rates, and says such matter must be confined to the current volume.

A grand concert will be given at Steinway Hall to-morrow evening, in aid of the relief fund of the Epiphany Guild. Miss Emma C. Thursby, Mr. Charles Warner, and other artists have volunteered their services.

A laborer named Michael Moore, aged 40, of No. 443 West Twenty-eighth street, while at work yesterday on an elevated railway in the yard of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, foot of Twenty-ninth street, North River, fell under a coal car and was instantly killed.

A stereoptiocon exhibition, consisting of views of the Centennial, was given at the Working Men's Free Reading-room, No. 135 Greenwich street, last evening. The entertainment was an interesting one, and attracted a large audience, composed of working men and their families.

August Quack, of the firm of Quack & Burger, cotton brokers, doing business at No. 56 Stone street, was posted on the Cotton Exchange bulletin yesterday as having failed to meet his engagements. Mr. Quack was formerly a Lieutenant in Wilde & Quack, and did a large business, but his present failure is not regarded as of great importance.

At a meeting of the New-York Port Society, held on Wednesday, the Treasurer's report showed the receipts for the past year to have been $12,766 97 and the expenditures $13,960 53, being (as compared with 1875) an increase in receipts of $1,245 81, and a decrease in expenses of $2,207 40. Henry R. Jones and Jacob D. Vermilye were elected Directors to fill vacancies.

Mary Ward, of No. 183 Avenue C, who was arrested on Wednesday on a charge of cruelly neglecting her children, was again arraigned before Justice Murray, at the Essex Market Police Court yesterday, and was sentenced to the Island for six months as an habitual drunkard. Her children are being temporarily cared for by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, at whose request the unnatural mother was arrested.

Deputy Sheriff Higgins yesterday arrested Mr. J. V. Capek on an order granted by Judge Barrett, of the Supreme Court, at the instance of Rev. A. Vendl Vacula, who has brought a suit to recover $5,000 damages for an alleged libel published in the Novo-Yorske Centennalnim Listu, a newspaper of this City, of which the defendant is proprietor. Mr. Vacula states that he has been minister of the Sts. Cyrillus Methodius Church, and that he has suffered great wrong on account of the article. The defendant gave bail, after which he left the Sheriff's office.

BROOKLYN.

There were 189 deaths during the past week.

The ice on the Prospect Park lakes still remains in excellent condition for skating.

Capt. William Cooper, of the brig Torrid Zone, lying at the Atlantic Docks, was robbed of his gold watch, while on a Fulton Ferryboat, last night.

The strike of the longshoremen is about ended. A large number of the strikers went to work yesterday at the reduced rate of 20 cents an hour.

William Hudleston broke three of Margaret Robinson's ribs with a frying-pan, last night, at their residence, No. 94 Union street. The injured woman was taken to the hospital and William was locked up.

Fire Marshal Keady reports that during the past year there were 511 fires in Brooklyn, which occasioned a loss of property amounting to $738,445, covered by an insurance of $1,455,345. The deaths from fire during the year, including those occasioned by the burning of the Brooklyn Theatre, numbered 325.

Samuel S. Free, Jr., who has been in Raymond Street Jail for some weeks because of a refusal to pay alimony to his wife, who brought a suit for divorce against him, was yesterday for the third time brought up on a writ of habeas corpus. Judge Neilson refused to liberate the prisoner, and remanded him to jail.

The funeral of Rev. James MacElroy took place yesterday from the Roman Catholic Church of Our Lady of Mercy, of which the deceased was Pastor at the time of his death. The requiem mass was attended by Bishop Loughlin, over 100 Priests, and a congregation that numbered 5,000 persons. The remains were interred in the Cemetery of the Holy Cross.

NEW-JERSEY.

The new Congregational Church at Bound Brook will be dedicated next Tuesday afternoon.

Thomas Ryan, an employe in Theodore Smith's blacksmith shop in Essex street, Jersey City, yesterday received an accidental blow on the head from a hammer in the hands of a fellow workman, which rendered him unconscious. He was removed to his home.

An unknown man, supposed to be a tramp, was killed on the Pennsylvania Railroad yesterday morning, near Menlo Park. The man was walking on the track, and stepped aside to avoid a train, when he was struck by another going in the opposite direction. The body was taken to Rahway and given in charge of the Coroner.

THE PRODUCE EXCHANGE BUILDING.

The question of a new building adequate to the needs of the business of the Produce Exchange has been agitated for several years past. Yesterday the matter took shape for the first time at a meeting of the Board of Managers, when the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

Whereas, The building occupied by the New-York Produce Exchange has become inadequate to the wants of its increased membership, furnishing as it does, insufficient accommodation for the varied business transacted on its floors, and affording little opportunity for enlargement on its present site; and,

Whereas, The present structure allows of no appropriate place for holding general meetings of the Exchange, and rooms for the sessions of the Managers, and of the several standing and special committees have to be provided in a separate building on another block, whereby the official business of the Exchange is obstructed and prejudiced; and

Whereas, Proper provision has never been made for terminating any portion of the building in which members now congregate in large numbers for the transaction of their daily business, for want of which provision their personal health and comfort are being seriously affected; and

Whereas, On the one hand the present time is an exceptionally favorable one for the erection of a new Exchange building, material and labor being procurable at about one-

The New-York Times.

VOL. XXVI.....NO. 7929. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1877.---WITH SUPPLEMENT. PRICE FOUR CENTS

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

FLORIDA'S FOUR VOTES FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

DECISION OF THE CASE BY A VOTE OF EIGHT TO SEVEN AFTER TEN HOURS IN SECRET SESSION—NO SEPARATE VOTE ON THE ELIGIBILITY OF MR. HUMPHREYS—THE REASONS GIVEN FOR THE DECISION—CHARACTER AND INCIDENTS OF THE DEBATE—EFFECT OF A DEMOCRATIC ATTEMPT TO TALK AT JUDGE BRADLEY—THE FLORIDA CASE BELIEVED TO CARRY LOUISIANA—A JOINT MEETING OF CONGRESS TO-DAY TO CONTINUE THE COUNT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The Electoral Commission was in session nearly 10 hours to-day, and finally signed and sealed its decision in the Florida case and transmitted it to the President of the Senate, and also sent a letter to the Speaker of the House, informing him of the action that had been taken. The decision is such as was expected, "that the certificate No. 1 is legal, and that the votes of the four Electors named in it be counted." Thus Hayes gets the full vote of Florida. There was no separate vote on the eligibility of Humphreys, though that question was very fully discussed. The direct vote on counting the certificate No. 1 was taken about 6 o'clock this evening, and the resolution which was offered by Gen. Garfield was passed by a vote of 8 to 7. This decision having been reached a recess of an hour was taken, and a committee, consisting of Senator Edmunds and Justices Bradley and Miller, occupied the time in framing the statement of reasons required by the law to accompany the decision of the Commission.

The reasons assigned by the Commission for its judgment are, in general terms, that acting with the power of the two houses they could not consider any facts beyond the action of the State in choosing its Electors, as provided by law and the Constitution, and could not take cognizance of any proceedings after Dec. 6, the day fixed for casting the Electoral vote. They find that no evidence can be taken to set aside the certificate of the Governor when it accords with the canvass of votes made by the proper State authority. In the case of return No. 1, the Governor certifies the names of the Electors appointed, as shown by the lawful canvass of the State, and the votes of the persons named are therefore to be counted. The statement is brief, covering only three or four pages of manuscript.

The long time occupied by the Commission in reaching a determination of the question is explained by the fact that debate is unlimited and not guided by any rules, and every member talks as often and speaks as long as he pleases. One of the speeches to-day is said to have occupied an hour and a half, and several others were very long, and many of them are said to have been very able. The eligibility of Humphreys was discussed at very considerable length, and it was made clear that nearly all the Commission were agreed that the evidence made no case against his eligibility as an Elector. The claim that he was ineligible was treated rather contemptuously, the discussion on the subject being rather abstract, and covering the whole subject of eligibility. The effect of the quo warranto proceedings was also a topic of extended discussion, and, though nothing came of it in the way of action, it consumed a great deal of time.

The discussion is said to have been, on the whole, calm and in good temper, though earnest, and the personal expressions of opinion were firm and unmistakable. There is a report, not confirmed, but worth mentioning, to the effect that some members of the Commission opened a talk at Justice Bradley as the man of power who had the destiny of the nation in his hands, and that he became somewhat angry and gave stronger expressions to his opinions and his readiness to maintain them and bear the consequences, than have been heretofore heard from him. This story may be exaggerated, but it is certain that the course of the Democratic counsel and Commissioners, from the beginning, has been calculated to consolidate the Republican sentiment on the Commission, and now the body is denounced bitterly by the Tildenites as partisan, because some of the Republicans do not vote with the Democrats.

The decision of the Commission in the case of Florida undoubtedly covers the State of Louisiana, which will be next presented for determination. The strong point of the Democrats in the case of Florida was the fact that the State itself had changed the returns, or, as the Democrats call it, had corrected the returns. In Louisiana nothing of the kind has been attempted. If any change in the returns, as lawfully made, is attempted, it must be on the motion of the Federal Government. The Democrats lose their strongest point in the case already decided, and gain nothing, though they will take a new position. They will attack the legality of the Returning Board because the vacancy was not filled, and only four members constituted the board where there should have been five. They will also bring up again the point of eligibility, which will be urged with something more of effect in the cases of Levisse and Brewster than in the case of Humphreys. Both of them held Federal offices when they were voted for on the 7th of November, and were undoubtedly ineligible at that time for appointment as Electors. They resigned their offices, and were completely divested of them before the 6th of December, and were then chosen by the other members of the Electoral College to fill the two vacancies caused by their absence. The proceeding was precisely the same as in the case of the ineligible Elector in Vermont. Now the technical point made by Hoadley is that there was no power in the Electoral College to fill the places of two Electors who, he contends, were never elected. The Democrats have been claiming, and many of them were misled into supposing, that Levisse never resigned his office, but was a Federal office-holder when he voted as an Elector. This is not true, as the record of the court, which is at hand, shows that his office was vacated several days before the meeting of the Electoral College, and he has not been reappointed. The objection to counting the votes of Levissee and Brewster is in the last degree strained and technical, and will not probably be sustained, and the full vote will be counted for Hayes.

The action of the Commission to-day was awaited with great interest, and all the latter part of the day the corridors in the vicinity of the court-room were crowded with people. All sorts of curious and unfounded reports were in circulation. It was stated that a vote had been taken on the eligibility of Humphreys, and that he had been declared eligible by a vote of 10 to 15, or, as another account had it, unanimously. Then about 3:30 it was reported, and came to be generally believed, that the Commission had decided to count the Florida vote for Hayes, and were then engaged in preparing the statement of their reasons for their decision. The expectation of a joint meeting was raised, and some preparations were actually made in the House to receive the Senate. People waited till 4:30 P. M., when the adjournment of the Senate made it certain there would be no further joint meeting to-day, and the crowd dispersed. At that hour the Commission was still engaged in debate, and had taken no vote. Inside the Commission there was no suggestion of a joint meeting to-day. Thus a thousand stories were in circulation that had no reason for existence. Among them was one that Justice Bradley had expressed such opinions as to make it certain he would vote against the Hayes Electors in Louisiana. This, of course, was the very reverse of the truth. The hour of the joint meeting to-morrow is not determined, but it will probably be at 1 o'clock, and the count will proceed till the returns from Louisiana are reached and referred to the Commission. The decision of the Commission will be opened and read when the two houses meet, and the four votes will be counted for Hayes without delay, unless the Democrats should, under the law, object to the decision and compel a vote upon it in the two houses. The written objection of five Senators and five Representatives will force such action, and under the law there may be two hours' debate in each house. Of course the decision of the Commission will stand, as the two houses will not concur to sustain an objection. The only reason for making the objection will be to secure the opportunity for debate. Some of the Democrats desire to attack the Commission for what they term partisanship, and the two hours devoted to debate would no doubt be highly entertaining. The wiser Democrats see that they have already displayed too much of the spirit which calls for retaliation from every manly Republican on the Commission, and advise that that feeling be suppressed. It cannot be long restrained, and if it does not break out to-morrow, will very shortly, in spite of all efforts and advice. The Democrats have given up the result for the most part, and Jere Black is reported as saying that no contest will be made over Oregon. There has been some talk of Democratic objections to a vote from the State of Illinois, on the ground of ineligibility. It is not certain that any evidence has been received which can be made a basis for objections. The final end of all the disputed questions by the Commission may be expected by the 20th inst. But there is much fear that the Democrats will now attempt to delay, and force the issue to go over the 4th of March without any President being declared elected.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The Electoral Commission were in secret session from 10 A. M. until 8:30 this evening continuously, with the exception of two short recesses. Almost the entire time until near the close of the session was occupied with debate, in which every one of the 15 members of the Commission by turn participated. Two or three of the Justices and several of the Senatorial members read elaborately-prepared opinions upon the main points at issue, and the discussion is understood to have been from its commencement to its close of extraordinary power and ability. The question of the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys was not made the subject of much discussion, nor was any vote taken concerning it. At one stage of the proceedings, however, Senator Thurman offered a resolution declaring that there was no sufficient evidence offered to show that Humphreys was not a Shipping Commissioner on the 7th day of November. This resolution was criticized by several Republican members on the ground that it might carry an implication that if Humphreys had been such Commissioner on the 7th of November his vote would have been invalid, and the resolution was not urged, there seeming to be practically a unanimity of opinion that Humphrey's resignation was legally effectual, being tendered and accepted before the election.

About 6 o'clock P. M., the debate being ended, Senator Edmunds submitted a resolution declaring, in substance, that the four Republican Electoral votes of Florida should be counted, and embodying also various reasons for such declaration.

Representative Hunton offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That the Electors named in certificate No. 2 to-wit: Wilkinson Call, J. E. Yonge, Robert Bullock, and Robert B. Hilton, are the four persons who were duly appointed Electors by the State of Florida on the 7th day of November, and that their votes as certified by such certificate, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States.

The substitute was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Bradley, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, and Strong—8.

Mr. Edmunds then withdrew his resolution, and Mr. Garfield offered the following, which was adopted by the foregoing vote reversed:

Resolved, That the four persons, to wit.: Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles W. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, were duly appointed Electors of President and Vice President for the State of Florida, and that the votes cast by the aforesaid four persons are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States.

The vote in detail on the adoption of this resolution was as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bradley, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton and Strong—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne and Thurman—7.

On motion of Mr. Garfield, Messrs. Edmunds, Bradley, and Miller were appointed a committee to draft a report of the decision of the Commission, with a brief statement of the reasons therefor, to be signed by the members agreeing therein, and to be transmitted to the joint session of the two houses, as required by the Electoral act.

The argumentative resolution previously offered and withdrawn by Mr. Edmunds was adopted by the Committee of Three with a few verbal changes as their report, and about 8 o'clock P. M. it was signed by the eight members of the Commission who had voted for the adoption of Mr. Garfield's resolution.

The formal decision or report to Congress is very brief, but its complete phraseology is withheld from publicity to-night from considerations of etiquette, as it is to be transmitted to-morrow morning to the President of the Senate under seal, to be by him laid before the joint session of the two houses. Its points, however, can be accurately stated as follows:

First—The Commission, exercising the powers of both houses under the law, and having examined all the certificates and papers referred to them, find that they have no authority to hear evidence aliunde, or, in other words, to hear evidence outside of the certificate of the Governor of the State of Florida, founded upon the determination of the Canvassing Board of the State as to its vote.

Second—The Commission could not consider as evidence any act of the Legislature or courts in determining whom the State had appointed as Electors after the day the said Electors gave their votes.

Third—In regard to the said ineligibility of F. C. Humphreys, there was not sufficient proof that he held office on the 7th of November.

The Secretary of the Commission will to-morrow morning deliver to the President pro tem. of the Senate the formal decision above described, together with all the certificates and accompanying papers on the Florida case which were referred to the Commission, and the Secretary will also deliver to the Speaker of the House a formal notification signed by the President of the Commission that their decision has been communicated to the President pro tem. of the Senate. Thereupon, in compliance with the Electoral act, the two Houses will again meet, and the decision will be read and entered on the journal of each House, and the vote of Florida will immediately be counted for Hayes and Wheeler, "unless, upon objection being made in writing by at least five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, the two houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise." It being known that the two houses will not concur, it is not thought likely that any objection will be made to the immediate counting of the Florida Republican votes, as this would be an unnecessary waste of time.

VIEWS OF THE NEW-YORK JUDGES OF APPEALS.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHURCH'S OPINIONS ON THE QUESTION OF THE DAY—THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION ITSELF UNCONSTITUTIONAL—THE ACTION OF THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY SUSTAINED BY MR. CHURCH—THE STATE'S RIGHT TO APPOINT ELECTORS IN ITS OWN WAY ABSOLUTE — OTHER MEMBERS OF THE COURT, WITH ONE EXCEPTION, OF THE SAME OPINION—EX-GOV. SEYMOUR REGARDS THE DEMOCRATIC ACTION AS A "GREAT MISTAKE."

From Our Special Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Feb. 9, 1877.

The votes cast in the Florida case by the Judges of the Supreme Court belonging to the Electoral Commission have given rise to a good deal of discussion and comment among members of the legal profession, here as elsewhere. It was generally expected that the Congressmen attached to the Commission would vote according to their party predilections and prejudices but the hope was entertained that Judges of the highest court in the nation would not be found divided on party lines when called upon to render a decision upon a purely legal and constitutional proposition. This hope has been disappointed, and the interesting and rather important query now arises whether the action of the United States Supreme Court Judges is a fair indication of the general character of our American Judiciary—whether, in fact, there is any such thing as constitutional law, fixed and well defined, or whether it is subject to change and variation according to the party affiliations of those who, for the time being, may happen to be its expounders. The importance of this question to the people of the United States cannot be overrated, and it must therefore be some satisfaction to the readers of THE TIMES to learn that there is one judicial tribunal in this country whose members are able to look at the questions now pending before the Electoral Commission in their legal and constitutional aspects, and not with sole reference to their political bearings. The present Court of Appeals of the State of New-York is universally admitted by the Bar of the State—Charles O'Conor and Samuel J. Tilden alone excepted—to be the ablest and best appellate court the Commonwealth ever had. It would not suffer by comparison with the United States Supreme Court either in the legal lore or the personal character of its members. As at present constituted five of its seven Judges are Democrats, and were nominated and elected as such by a popular vote. I am informed, on good authority, that there is no difference of opinion among these seven Judges on the constitutional right of Congress, or of the "Commission" that has usurped its powers, to go behind the Electoral vote of a State properly authenticated and forwarded to the President of the Senate. They all hold that neither Congress nor the Commission can have any such right. In expressing their individual opinions, they all sustain the decision of the majority of the Commission in the Florida case, and take substantially the same ground maintained by the Republican counsel who argued that case. Happening to be present the other evening when Chief Justice Church was drawn into a discussion of the subject with two Democratic Senators, it has occurred to me that a brief statement of the views of the highest judicial functionary of this State, himself a life-long Democrat, might be interesting to the public at this time.

In the first place, Chief Justice Church regards the whole scheme of a "Commission" to decide the Presidency as unconstitutional, and, to use his own words, "the greatest farce of modern times." The Constitution, he thinks, gives in the clearest terms, either to Congress or to the President of the Senate, (he did not express an opinion which,) the right to count the Electoral votes and declare the result; but it does not give Congress the right to delegate this power to any outside party or parties whatever, and any attempt to do so is, in his opinion, a direct violation of the Constitution, or an unauthorized evasion of a duty expressly imposed by it. As to the power of Congress, or of the Commission created by it, to go behind the properly authenticated Electoral vote of a State, he is equally positive and emphatic in his opinion that it has no such power. In alluding to the case of Louisiana, he took this position: The Constitution gives to every State exclusive control over the manner of electing or appointing Presidential Electors. If Louisiana has seen fit to create a Returning Board invested with authority to declare who is elected to office in that State, and such Returning Board has acted in pursuance of law, there is no power in Congress or in any other body outside Louisiana to go behind its action. "It makes no difference whether in your opinion or mine," said he, "the board has done right or wrong. Congress cannot go behind it without annulling a right expressly guaranteed to the State by the Constitution, and practically putting an end to all elections." In illustrating this to his Democratic listeners, the Chief Justice said: "Suppose that in the Presidential election of 1868 Gov. Seymour had got enough Electoral votes, in addition to those of his own State, to make him President. The Republican Party of this State charged the grossest frauds against the Democrats in that election; they even claimed, and still claim, that the frauds were of sufficient magnitude to turn the scale in favor of the Democrats in this State. Their party controlled both houses of Congress, and with New-York for Seymour he would be elected; without it Gen. Grant would be. Now suppose under these circumstances the Republicans had prevailed upon Congress to go behind the Electoral vote, as certified and transmitted from this State, and to investigate the alleged frauds in the election here. Suppose that in this investigation they became convinced that Grant actually carried the State by a majority of legal votes, and, acting on this conviction, had given the Electoral vote to Grant instead of Seymour. What would the Democratic Party have done? Why, it would have been an end of Presidential elections in the State of New-York."

The Chief Justice expressed great surprise that Democrats, for the sake of gaining a temporary advantage, should be found willing to renounce the old-time Democratic doctrine of the rights of the States as guaranteed by the Constitution. "We had better," said he, "stick to the Constitution and laws. If, in so doing, we go down as a nation, there may be a possibility of resurrection; but if we go down, violating all Constitutions and laws, there can never be a resurrection."

The discussion turning upon the Oregon case, Judge Church gave his views substantially as follows: He said that, as he understood the case, the Governor of Oregon had given certificates to two Republican Electors and one Democratic Elector. With reference to the Democratic Elector, Cronin, he had no right, according to the decisions of the courts of this State to a certificate at all, because of his having received the next highest number of votes. But waiving that, and granting the Governor's right to give him a certificate, after the certificates were given the functions and duties of the Governor of Oregon ended. It now remains for the Commission to inquire what those three persons having the certificates actually did. It appears that the two Republicans met to cast their Electoral votes, and, Cronin being absent, they proceeded to fill a vacancy. Cronin, on the other hand, met by himself, and, the Republicans being absent, he proceeded to fill two vacancies. "Now," said the Chief Justice, "there cannot be any question as to which of these two Electoral Colleges will have its votes recognized, or which ought to be recognized. Had Cronin remained with his two Republican colleagues, and insisted upon casting his vote for Tilden, the case might have been more complicated; but he didn't remain, and there is where he slipped."

The Chief Justice did not assume to express anybody's views but his own on any of the questions that arose in the discussion, but those who profess to know, say that, with the possible exception of Judge Earle, every member of the Court of Appeals holds substantially the same views on the legal and constitutional questions involved.

It may be stated in this connection that ex-Gov. Seymour has expressed the opinion that the Democrats in Congress "made a great mistake" in urging the Electoral Commission. His reasons for this opinion are not, like Judge Church's, based on constitutional grounds, but are rather those of a politician. He says that the Democratic Party, by consenting to the Commission and advocating it, have closed their mouths in case the decision goes against them, and will have no "grievance" with which to go to the country four years hence.

EXPRESSIONS OF SATISFACTION.

REJOICING AMONG REPUBLICANS IN OHIO—THE DEMOCRATS LOSING CONFIDENCE IN THE OREGON AND LOUISIANA CASES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Feb. 9.—The news of the verdict giving Florida to Hayes and Wheeler reached here this evening, and caused great rejoicing among Republicans. Ex-Gov. Noyes, who has just returned from Washington, expresses the opinion that this substantially settles the whole question, as he believes the weakest point in the Republican case has now been passed. The Democrats are thoroughly discouraged, and freely express the opinion that Tilden's chances are gone. The entire drift of their talk is strongly presumptive that they have no faith that Oregon or Louisiana can now help them through. Gov. Hayes will go to Cincinnati to-morrow on official business, to be absent three or four days.

ELECTION FRAUDS IN CINCINNATI.

CONVICTION OF AN EX-DETECTIVE FOR PROCURING ILLEGAL VOTERS—HOW JUDGE STANLEY MATHEWS WAS DEFEATED FOR CONGRESS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 9.—The conviction of ex-Detective Jim White to-day on the charge of procuring illegal voters at the October election marks another stage in the work of uncovering the conspiracy which elected Mr. Banning to Congress over Judge Stanley Mathews. It was shown in the course of the trial that the prisoner and Eph Holland procured gangs of repeaters, who went from one voting place to another, casting hundreds of illegal votes. Banning's majority, it will be remembered, was 65. The interesting problem now is, who stood behind Holland and White, and furnished them the money which they dispensed so freely? It is believed that before the bottom of the conspiracy is reached some persons of prominence in Democratic circles will be exposed. Several of the Democratic county officers who went in on small majorities are watching the proceedings with great anxiety.

THE CRUELTY TO THE WITNESSES.

INDIGNATION FELT AND EXPRESSED IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE COUNTRY—RESOLUTIONS IN THE ILLINOIS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

COLUMBUS, Feb. 9.—Great indignation is expressed here at the treatment of ex-Gov. Wells by the Democratic officers of the House, and much sympathy is felt for him in the persecution he endures.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 9.—In the House to-day, Mr. Morrison, of Morgan County, submitted a resolution denunciatory of the alleged action of Congress in treating Messrs. Wells and Anderson in a barbarous manner, and calling on the Illinois Representatives to protest in the name of the State. A motion to table the resolution was lost and it was referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

THE BELLE OF THE GRAND DUKE'S BALL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NORFOLK, Feb. 9.—The ball given in this city last night in honor of Grand Duke Alexis and the officers of the Russian fleet, now anchored in this port, was the grandest affair of the kind given here since Lafayette's reception many years ago. For the first quadrille the royal set was made up as follows: Grand Duke Alexis, and the wife of Commodore T. H. Stevens; Vice Admiral Boutakoff, and the wife of Capt. J. H. Russell; Admiral Stephen D. Trenchard, and the wife of Capt. W. W. Queen; Commodore Stevens, and the wife of Dr. Kennedy. Among the many handsome ladies present Miss Minnie G. Hayes, of Gramercy Park, New-York, was perhaps the most conspicuous. She was a worthy representative of American beauty and intelligence.

A BANK DEFAULTER INSANE.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 9.—At Franklin, Ind., this morning, E. T. Taylor, the defaulting cashier of the First National Bank of that place, was found in the back room of Dr. Payne's office in an unconscious and apparently dying condition. He has been removed to his own residence. The doctors declare that he is insane. His condition is at least very critical, as he is subject to heart disease. He has no money with him, but says his traveling bag, which was supposed to contain money taken from the bank, was left in a caboose car. It is thought that he arrived during last night on a freight train. He says he has been absent six years. At 1 o'clock this afternoon Taylor again became unconscious. The belief in Franklin is that the loss to the bank will reach $175,000. The general ledger and other books of the concern are still missing.

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

THE PORTE ON THE CONFERENCE.

A CIRCULAR JUSTIFYING THE REJECTION OF THE PROPOSALS OF THE POWERS.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 9.—The circular of the Porte on the failure of the conference, dated Jan. 25, after recapitulating the arguments justifying the rejection of the proposals of the powers, comments in a very contemptuous tone on the assertion made by Gen. Ignatieff at the final sitting of the conference that the Porte by its action had virtually abrogated the Treaty of Paris. The Porte declares nothing would have been easier for the Turkish delegates, if they had considered such course expedient, than to show that Gen. Ignatieff's assertion was defective, both in form and substance. The delegates, however, remained silent, as Gen. Ignatieff's remarks were irrelevant to the object of the conference. The European delegates, by their silence, gave an unequivocal sign of astonishment at the language in which Gen. Ignatieff pretended to express the views of the whole conference.

GREAT BRITAIN AND TURKEY.

ATTITUDE OF THE POLITICAL PARTIES IN PARLIAMENT AS SHOWN IN THE RECENT DEBATE—THE LIBERALS IN FAVOR OF CO-OPERATION WITH THE POWERS TO COERCE TURKEY.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—Detailed reports of the speeches made yesterday by Earl Granville in the House of Lords and the Marquis of Hartington in the House of Commons, show that the Liberal Party intended to uphold the view that England should co-operate with the other powers for the coercion of Turkey, and even co-operate with Russia alone it the other powers declined to act.

Earl Granville said: "If the Government influence were used in persuading Europe in one body to come forward and insist, as they have a moral and just right to do, that Turkey shall perform the promises she has so long delayed, the result could not be doubtful. It may be said you are not able to persuade the European powers, but I am not sure that the impression does not prevail that England is the only obstacle. At all events, you would not be much worse off after making the attempt. Will anybody tell me that if once the Turks got it into their heads—if they really believed that not only England, but the whole of Europe, is absolutely and seriously in earnest in this matter—that Turkey, which, up to this moment, has been influenced by one power, could resist the united powers of Europe? I believe it would be utterly unnecessary to resort to coercion. I believe if the Government will follow that course they will meet with great success, and they will receive the congratulations and approval of all parties and all classes of this country."

The Marquis of Hartington said: "There are some among us—I trust that the Government do not belong to the number—who look with calmness, if not satisfaction, at the prospect of leaving Turkey and Russia face to face, and the prospect of war between them. I ask whether the danger of that position as regards English interests has diminished? Whether it has not rather increased since the time when Canning, rather than encounter the perils of such a situation—rather than allow Russia to take upon herself singly the task of enforcing the proposals which had been agreed upon between England and Russia as to the affairs of Greece—was willing even to go the length of proposing to co-operate with Russia for the purpose of attaining the end in view. I am unwilling to believe that the resources of diplomacy are exhausted by the failure of the conference. Of this, at all events, I am sure, that the Government will take a heavy responsibility upon themselves if they do not strive to do everything in their power to preserve concerted action among the powers for the accomplishment of those beneficent ends for which the conference labored, but unfortunately labored vainly to attain."

The Pall Mall Gazette, this afternoon, in a leading article, says: "Sir Stafford Northcote's speech in the House of Commons last evening can signify nothing but this, that he cannot admit the great powers have done with the proposals of the conference because they have been rejected by the Porte, nor allow that the new Turkish Constitution is to be taken as an answer to the wish and appeal of the powers." The Pall Mall Gazette thinks that the Government in the Lords and Commons have spoken with different voices. It adds: "Perhaps Midhat Pasha's fall and Edhem Pasha's accession may have suggested to certain members of the Administration that Lord Salisbury's threatening language at the close of the conference may be repeated with advantage now."

GENERAL PHASES OF THE QUESTION.

SERVIA AND THE JEWISH AND ARMENIAN POPULATION—PRESS CENSORSHIP IN RUSSIA IN THE INTEREST OF PEACE.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—The Times dispatch from Belgrade says the Servians declare it impossible to discuss a stipulation for granting privileges to Jews and Armenians equal to those enjoyed by other Servian subjects. The opposition is actuated by trade jealousy, and comes from a combination of Belgrade merchants who influence the clique which furnishes Ministers for both political parties. Servia does not seriously object to any other of the Turkish conditions. M. Kartsoff, the Russian Consul General, is still openly opposing peace. He is recognized as identified with the plans of the Sclavonic societies. It is believed in the highest circles that official Russia earnestly desires peace between Servia and Turkey, as it would remove a cause of constant irritation with Austria and leave Russia at liberty to deal with Bulgaria. The Russian Sclavonic societies desire war, believing that Turkish occupation would follow and force the Russian Government to take active steps immediately. They also desire to provoke the Hungarians, believing that the Sclavonians in Austria must triumph if aroused by any overt act of the Hungarian minority. The question of peace or war hangs upon the relative strength of the influence exercised in Belgrade by official and unofficial Russia. Four thousand men left Belgrade on Thursday for Gladova. The Servians are concentrating all their forces in that quarter.

The Vienna correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says it is reported that Russia is about to mobilize three more army corps to operate on the Upper Danube in the event of war.

A dispatch from Vienna to the Standard reports that the Chief of the St. Petersburg Press Bureau has been dismissed, by order of the Czar, for permitting journals to use language detrimental to peace and concord with friendly Governments.

The Roumanian Government has sent home the reserves recently called out.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

THE HUNGARIAN CABINET CRISIS—A DECREE DISSOLVING THE SPANISH SENATE AND ORDERING NEW ELECTIONS.

VIENNA, Feb. 9.—Baron Sennyey, leader of the Hungarian Conservatives, and Herr Von Szekhely, President of the Court of Cassation, arrived here to-day to open negotiations respecting the formation of a new Hungarian Cabinet.

MADRID, Feb. 9.—The Tiempo announces that the King has signed a decree dissolving the Senate and ordering fresh elections.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—A dispatch to the Daily News announces that M. Malou, of the Belgian Ministry, has resigned on account of the opposition to the Electoral bill. There have been several disturbances lately, caused by the unpopularity of the bill.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES HILTON, A NEW-YORK CENTRAL CIVIL ENGINEER—THE BRIDGE NOT ONE HE WOULD RECOMMEND FOR RAILROAD TRAFFIC.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 9.—The Leader's Ashtabula special says at the inquest to-day Charles Hilton testified as follows: Am a civil engineer in the employ of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company; made a thorough examination of the broken bridge; think the lower lateral braces were not attached at the best points, but it did not materially injure the bridge, because of the stiffness of the lower chords; in my examination of the bridge I found nothing to indicate that the braces had moved from their original position in the bridge before it fell; do not consider the displacement, cutting away of the main braces, and the displacement at the lower lateral bracing as all right, but would not consider that these defects would constitute a fatal element of weakness in the bridge, considering the bridge to be in perfect repair; it was one, however, which he would not recommend for railway traffic.

Mr. Hilton is the last of the expert witnesses to be examined by this court. Two or three other witnesses will probably be heard within the next few days, after which the jury will adjourn for a week to allow the Coroner opportunity to attend to outside matters pertaining to the verdict. The jury will then reconvene and render a verdict. The three unidentified bodies, which were left in the vault for identification, have been ordered buried.

TROUBLESOME INDIANS.

AN ATTACK ON A RANCH ON HORSE CREEK AND ON OTHER PLACES—WHITE MEN WOUNDED—THE INDIANS REPULSED.

CHEYENNE, Feb. 9.—A party of Indians, supposed to be Cheyennes, made an attack on Chase's ranch, on Horse Creek, 30 miles north of this place, yesterday evening. A force of 15 citizens mustered, gave the Indians battle and drove them off, capturing four of their ponies. No whites were injured. A detachment of the Fifth Cavalry left Fort Russell this morning to endeavor to intercept the Indians.

DEADWOOD, Feb. 9.—On Tuesday last Messrs. Dean and Young departed from Spear Fish in a wagon, for a hunt. When four miles from town they were fired upon by a band of 20 Indians. At the first volley Dean, who was driving, received two wounds, but managed to keep his seat and control the horses, giving his companion opportunity to use his rifle. By their coolness and courage the men made their escape. Dean's wounds are severe, though not fatal. Last night Indians made a dash on the ranches a short distance from Crook City, killing Thomas Waldron, of Montana, and wounding another man severely, and succeeded in carrying away about 50 horses. The man who was wounded succeeded in killing one Indian.

TELEGRAPHIC MATTERS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 9.—Relative to the rumors of the consolidation of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company with the National Telegraph Company, of San Francisco, the report is generally considered here as a stock-jobbing dodge. Inquiry at the Bank of California fails to elicit whether the latter company has any funds to its credit there. The records of the County Clerk's office show that that company was incorporated with $25,000,000 capital, of which $7,500,000 were subscribed, and 10 per cent. of the subscribed capital was alleged to have been paid in. Where that amount is, or what has become of it cannot be ascertained here.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 9.—Judge Drummond, in his decision in the United States Court yesterday, continuing the injunction heretofore granted in the matter of the Western Union Telegraph Company against the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, restraining the latter company from erecting a line of telegraph along the Ohio and Mississippi Railway, also said, if the Atlantic and Pacific Company could make a case of necessity, he would hear an application for leave to proceed, in the State Court, after notice to the Western Union Company, but in the earlier part of his opinion he had strongly intimated that there could hardly be such a necessity.

MARINE DISASTERS.

GLOUCESTER, Feb. 9.—It is reported here that the schooner General Grant, of this port, while on a herring trip, struck on a rock off Long Harbor, Newfoundland, and became a total wreck. The crew were saved.

SAVANNAH, Feb. 9.—The Norwegian bark Ueland, laden with guano, from Liverpool for this port, went ashore at Simon's Beach yesterday. The Captain and crew were saved, but the vessel and cargo will probably be a total loss.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—The Italian bark Bozzo, Capt. Poggi, from London Jan 22, in ballast, for Baltimore, collided with a French fishing vessel off Beachyhead on Wednesday. Both vessels sunk, and four sailors of the French one were drowned. The others have landed at New-Haven. The British ship Ellen Goudy, Capt. Perry, which sailed from San Francisco Aug. 28, for Antwerp, was lost off the Society Islands Oct. 4, 1876. The crew have arrived here.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire broke out in Swanton, Vt., Thursday night. Seven buildings were destroyed, including Hogle's block, the largest building in the town. The following are the principal losses: C. C. Long, $4,000; Mrs. Barney, $3,000; H. W. Farrar, $1,000; M. J. Hogle, $10,000; W. H. Blake, hardware, $18,000; O. D. Mason, harness, $2,000; D. E. Brundage, crockery, $2,000; B. B. Blake, dry goods, $11,000; S. A. Adams, books, $2,500; R. D. Marvin, dry goods, $5,000. The losses by other parties amount to $4,000 more. There is insurance covering about two-thirds of the loss.

The window-curtains on the third floor of the residence of Mrs. Mary J. Disbrow, No. 235 Fifth avenue, were ignited by a gas-jet last evening, and the fire, spreading throughout the apartment, damaged the furniture to the extent of $1,000.

The Mount Mineral Springs House, a Summer hotel in Shutesburg, Mass., owned by Charles A. Perry, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday. The loss is $12,000; insurance, $7,000.

The boiler-house and dye-house connected with D. & H. Stearns' flannel mills, at Pittsfield, Mass., were destroyed by fire Thursday night. The loss is $2,000; insured for $1,000.

The cider mill of Thomas Mitchell, at Ashland, Mass., has been destroyed by fire. The loss is $3,500; partially insured.

A block at Turner's Falls, Mass., owned by Mrs. M. Bane, was burned Thursday. The loss is $3,000; well insured.

THE ICE IN THE SUSQUEHANNA.

PORT DEPOSIT, Feb. 9.—The ice-gorge continues to settle, and a large channel is working its way through along the Harford shore. The field extending from Mount Ararat to Havre de Grace remains unbroken. Below Havre de Grace the ice is all gone on the western side of the Bay, and on the eastern side there are large channels through it. The river is falling, and the water is quite clear. Nothing can make trouble but the breaking away of the gorges above, or a sudden rise in the river brought on by heavy rains. Things have resumed their usual aspect, and comparatively little attention is now paid to the ice-gorge. The river is unchanged at McCalls and Columbia.

A SALT LAKE WHISKEY CASE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 9.—The jury in the Rhemke case to-day gave a verdict of $22,000 against Clinton, ex-Police Judge, for the destruction of liquors by his order in 1870. This was a continuation of the celebrated Englebrecht case, whose liquor store was declared a nuisance, and liquors destroyed. Verdicts in favor of the plaintiff were formerly given in the Territorial, District, and Supreme Courts, but the decisions were reversed by the United States Supreme Court on account of irregularity in drawing the juries; hence the new trial.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD INDEBTEDNESS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 9—The trial of the case of the United States against the Central Pacific Railroad Company, to recover 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the road from July 16, 1869, to Oct. 31, 1874, commenced in the United States Circuit Court to-day. The amount involved is $1,836,635 10. The testimony for the Government will not be very voluminous, as a stipulation has been made between counsel that all allegations in the complaint shall be considered valid and the complaint be considered proved, except that the road was completed at the time alleged, and that the net earnings of the road amount to the sum named, $35,730.79.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

THE HOUSE AND THE LOUISIANA CASE.

AMUSEMENTS OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATESMEN SENT TO WATCH THE COUNT—EX-SENATOR TRUMBULL AND GOV. PALMER DANCING AT A QUADROON BALL—A COMIC SCENE BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON POWERS AND PRIVILEGES—NO IMPORTANT TESTIMONY ELICITED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—Mr. David Dudley Field's Committee on the Powers and Privileges of the House, having failed to elicit any testimony damaging to the Republican Party, or the cause of President-elect Hayes, has begun to amuse itself by inquiring into the private life and recreation of the gentlemen who, at the request of the President of the United States, went to Louisiana to witness the count of the Returning Board. For a short time this morning the Democratic members of the committee made an attempt to prove that the Louisiana Electors, Brewster and Levissee, were not eligible. Not being successful in this, they allowed the Republican members of the committee to call some of their witnesses, when it was proved beyond all question that Mr. Field's friend, Maddox, was an adventurer and a man of no character. Mr. Ditty, of Baltimore, was one of the gentlemen who swore to these facts, and, hoping to break down his testimony, Mr. Field and his associates went into a vigorous examination of his private life. It will be remembered that Mr. Ditty was one of the gentlemen who went to New-Orleans at the request of the President, and on behalf of the Republican Party, to witness the proceedings of the Returning Board. This fact was brought out in the evidence, when Mr. Sparks, who was acting as Chairman of the ceipt from Nov. 18 to Nov. 25; the affidavits were all sworn to before Wolfley, Clerk of the court in New-Orleans.

The committee at 1 o'clock took a recess until 1:45 P. M.

CAPT. DITTY'S TESTIMONY.

After the recess, Capt. C. Irving Ditty, of Baltimore, was examined by Mr. Lawrence with reference to the character of J. H. Maddox, and stated that the latter's reputation as to truth and veracity among the citizens of Baltimore was not good, and witness would not believe him under oath; Maddox's reputation for honesty is not very good either. Mr. Lawrence offered to prove that Maddox offered to furnish a Confederate regiment with clothing from the North; that he solicited contributions of money and tobacco, but never furnished the clothing; and also that Maddox furnished the Confederate Government with supplies.

Q.—What do you know about Maddox's connection with the Confederate service? The witness stated that he had no personal knowledge of the facts above enumerated, and that the only persons who could give proper testimony upon these points were Gen. Bradley T. Johnson and his Adjutant General, Booth; the general rumor was that Maddox did not furnish the clothing he had agreed to furnish; witness saw Maddox in New-Orleans last November, at the St. Charles Hotel; Maddox told witness that he was in New-Orleans ostensibly as a revenue agent, but that in reality he was a confidential agent of the President of the United States; that he had a report nearly written which he would show witness next day; that he was acquainted with the people in New-Orleans; he supposed Wells was a Democrat; that he had received very valuable information which would be of great service to the committee of which witness was a member, and requested an introduction to Mr. Garfield or Senator Sherman; witness mentioned the matter to Senator Sherman, who said that Maddox was probably not trustworthy; witness went to New-Orleans at the request of the President of the United States to witness the count of the vote by the Returning Board.

In answer to Mr. Field witness said he has not circulated injurious reports about Maddox; has stated facts, and can't help it if these facts are injurious to Maddox; has written an article in the Baltimore American of a column in length, concerning Maddox; has been a Democrat all his life, but voted for Hayes and Wheeler at the last election; witness was in the Confederate Army. The witness related his action at the time the Federal troops passed through Baltimore on April 19; witness was sitting in his office, when a citizen came in and told him that the troops were firing upon the citizens; witness took up a gun and rushed into the street, but too late; never made any remarks relative to the safety of President Lincoln's life; uttered no threats against Mr. Lincoln prior to the latter's inauguration; was to be arrested once to capture President Lincoln, but the order was never carried out; Gen. Bradley L. Johnson told witness shortly before the battle of Trevillian's Depot that an important move was to be made, and found from the book which Gen. Johnson afterward published that the Mr. Lincoln's capture was contemplated, but that the battle at Trevillian's Depot interfered with the execution of the scheme; it was not in aid of any scheme of J. Wilkes Booth; witness denied ever having remarked that he would assassinate President Lincoln on his passage through Baltimore; no such proposition was ever made in witnesses' presence; never proposed to raise the black flag, and never heard this mentioned; there was a proclamation in general orders by President Jefferson Davis, in obedience to which any Confederate soldier would have shot on sight any of the persons named therein; Gen. Benjamin F. Butler was one of the persons named; could not recollect the names of the others.

In answer to Mr. Sparks, witness said that while he was in New-Orleans he attended a quadroon ball, and danced there; he told his wife about it, and a number of other ladies and gentlemen; Hon. Lyman Trumbull was there also, and danced with the girls; Mr. Sherman and Mr. Garfield were not there, but a number of gentlemen of both visiting committees were there.

Quite an altercation arose at this point between the members of the committee and the witness, Mr. Sparks having said that he believed that Judge Trumbull would designate the witness' story as "stuff," and Capt. Ditty replying, with some show of anger, that if the Chairman meant to insinuate that his [the witness'] statement was untrue, he [the Chairman] assumed something which he had no right to assume. He stated that all parties went to the ball as a matter of curiosity, and mentioned, as one of the features of the ball, a woman with pink eyes. The latter portion of the witness' testimony caused considerable hilarity.

ATTEMPT TO BRIBE AN ELECTOR.

HOW TILDEN'S AGENTS IN LOUISIANA WORKED TO SECURE HIS ELECTION—ACTIVE DEMOCRATS ANXIOUS TO BUY AN ELECTOR—THE MONEY SAID TO BE READY TO THE AMOUNT OF $200,000.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Feb. 9, 1877.

The Senate Sub-committee on Louisiana met at 10 o'clock this morning. A. B. Levisse, of Louisiana, an alleged ineligible Hayes Elector, was sworn and examined by Mr. Saulsbury. Witness resides at Shreveport, but spends one-half of his time in New-Orleans; has been Circuit Judge four and a half years, and has held the office of United States Commissioner; was elected a Hayes Elector at the last election; was also Attorney for his District of Shreveport; was appointed United States Commissioner September, 1874; was appointed by Judge Woods, of the Circuit Court; the appointment of Commissioner, witness thinks, may be made by the Judge, whether assisted by the court, or or whether the court be in session or not; he held the office of Commissioner until about the 20th of November, 1876; took affidavits in relation to the election; was holding that office on Nov. 7 last, and continued to discharge its duties afterward; took affidavits concerning the election at Shreveport; the latter place is about 700 miles from New-Orleans by the river, or by rail through Texas; acted as an Elector on the 6th day of December; met in the College of Electors; not at the first meeting they held, but did finally during the day, and cast his vote for Hayes and Wheeler for President and Vice President; did not act at first with the Electoral College, but did so finally. [Mr. Wadleigh submitted copies from the Circuit Court of Louisiana of the appointment, resignation, and acceptance of the resignation of the witness as a United States Commissioner, which the witness admitted to be true copies, and were, by common consent, admitted as evidence.] Witness was notified of the acceptance of his resignation on the date when it was made; can't say what court was in session at the time; witness was not present in the court when the order was made; can't say whether the Circuit Court or the District Court was in session.

Mr. Saulsbury—The transcript shows that only Judge Billings, of the District Court, was present. Witness—That is probably true; the resignation was entered to have the effect of vacating the office, and not simply to evade the disqualification of witness as an Elector; it was made in entire good faith, and not as a dodge or evasion; witness has never, since that date, said to any one that his resignation was not necessary, but has said that he had great doubts whether his office of Commissioner was a disqualification under the Constitution; cannot say that he ever argued such a proposition with Judge Hagan; George L. Smith took witness' resignation to the court, and in an hour afterward it was accepted; received no information from Judge Woods of the acceptance of the resignation; the reason he explains Smith's words in the matter; witness sent his resignation to Judge Woods, inclosed in a letter to Smith, from Shreveport, requesting Smith to have it attended to; Smith neglected to see to it until after witness went to New-Orleans, then witness called his attention to it and he did so; has no idea that Woods ever received the resignation in person, other than the records of the court.

Mr. Saulsbury read from the Sherman report an affidavit with no affiant's signature attached to it, taken before Levisse on the 19th of November, 1876, which the witness thought must be a mistake.

TILDEN'S ATTEMPT AT BRIBERY.

In answer to Mr. Wadleigh, witness said a proposition was made to him for a consideration to cast his Electoral vote for Samuel J. Tilden; on the 4th of December last witness was in New-Orleans, at the residence of Mrs. Barlow, in Constantinople street; on that day witness found out and returned home about 9 o'clock in the evening; as soon as he went to the parlor, Mrs. Barlow and her daughter being present, one of them gave the witness a note asking witness to meet C. N. Johnston at Cassiday's Hotel at 9 A. M., on important business; Johnston wrote the note at Mrs. Barlow's house; witness read the note, and the ladies asked witness what it meant; witness replied that he had no idea; the ladies told witness they thought that Johnston wanted to get witness to vote for Tilden; Johnston was an active Democrat; Johnston called next morning before breakfast, and witness went down to see him; he asked witness if he got a note; witness replied yes; he then asked witness to meet S. M. Ashur, of Shreveport, at Cassiday's early that day, witness made an engagement to meet them at 10 o'clock; witness had known Ashur as a banker at Shreveport six or eight years; he had recently failed as a banker, and was in New-Orleans; witness became strongly impressed with the idea that the ladies were right in their conjecture, and after reflection went to disclose to Marshal Pitkin his suspicions; witness suggested to the latter that he would not propose to bluff the thing off but to temporize, to ascertain who the backers were, and as many names as possible in connection with it; also for the purpose of combating other attempts of the same kind; met Ashur at 1 o'clock; we walked to a retired part of the town; he said he had important business to propose; witness encouraged him to go ahead; he made apologetic explanations and remarks, and said he would make a fair proposition as a broker; he then presented his offer, whether witness would be willing to receive a certain sum of money, say $30,000 or $40,000, and refuse to receive his certificate as an Elector; witness gave no direct answer, and asked several questions, and finally said the price was too small, and that he might as well receive $200,000 as $40,000; that it was a big chance to make a big thing; that it only happened once in a hundred years that one man had an opportunity to make a President, and finally, that Johnston might say to his friends that Levisse was not unwilling to listen to a proposition, but that they had not got up to his price yet; left him after appointing another place of meeting that night at 7 o'clock; it was at the St. Charles Hotel; met that night again, and, as the rotunda was full, went out and walked; Ashur then changed his proposition, and said that witness would be required to cast his vote for Tilden; witness replied that this was a new question, and put him off and stuck to his price of $200,000; finally, after close inquiry, witness wanted to know who his backers were; then he went off to see his friend or promoter, and was back in an hour; witness asked him whom he had been to see, and he gave the name of Walter Pugh; witness don't know Walter Pugh or whether Pugh knows witness; Ashur said $100,000 was the utmost that could be raised by Pugh or the bankers, and asked witness to go with him the next morning to a certain place on the Common, and there they would meet two men; as they approached the two men were to come and meet them; Pugh would be one of them, and the other would be the moneyed man; witness and Ashur went to the place appointed and met two men as described; the man said to be the moneyed man witness recognized as Mr. Hernandez, a prominent New-Orleans broker; Hernandez spoke to witness and witness introduced Ashur to him; Hernandez wished to talk, and witness declined, saying Hernandez could talk with Ashur, as he was the party to talk to; witness then went home, after making an appointment for the next morning at the hotel; met Ashur next day at 11 o'clock, and made another appointment for 12 o'clock; met Ashur at 12 o'clock, when he said to witness that $100,000 was all that could be raised; witness stuck to his $200,000, and said it was not worth while to talk about it any more; Ashur is a Jew, a fine business man, and a good neighbor; witness regretted to have to expose his name; witness reported all the proceedings to Pitkin as they transpired, and Pitkin was well satisfied with what witness had done; has never seen Johnston since.

UNDER CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Cross-examined by Mr. Saulsbury, witness said: The first suggestion about buying witness' vote came from Mrs. Barlow, who so expressed her suspicions; this was on the night of the 4th of December, and two days before the promulgation of the returns; Mrs. Barlow is a widow of Judge Barlow, of Rapides Parish; is about 33 or 35 years of age, and very good-looking, and as shrewd and sharp as any woman witness ever saw; have known her personally a little over two years; she does not keep a boarding-house, and witness is the only one who boards in the house; pays her $50 per month; that is her principal means of support; only pays board to her in New-Orleans, which is about half the time; her house rents for $50 per month; she is a lady of high respectability and much esteemed in her church and by her neighbors; she owns the house she lives in; when Johnston came to Mrs. Barlow's, he remarked that he would like to be in witness' shoes, as he could make $200,000 in two days; don't think Mrs. Barlow originated the remark about $200,000; she stated to witness that Johnston said it; don't know what Johnston's occupation is; his wife is a woman of some wealth; Johnston's interview with witness at Mrs. Barlow's house on his second visit there did not last over two minutes; went to the hotel to see Ashur per appointment, and took a walk with him on a back street; witness listened to Ashur's proposition to draw him out, and get down to who his responsible backers were; witness put him off till that night to get the names; had no original intention to accept the proposition not to vote, and for such non-action to receive $30,000 or $40,000; witness named $200,000 as a more proper consideration for a big thing; left Ashur to infer that for that sum witness would be persuaded to do what was desired; never did, on that or any other occasion, say that for a money consideration witness would vote as these men desired; never suggested that he would accede to their proposition and make a speech to the Returning Board, placing his action for not voting for Hayes on high moral grounds; such a suggestion, however, was made to witness by Ashur, but witness didn't agree to it; witness' manner at all the interviews with Ashur was to cause him to infer that the proposition not to vote for Hayes or to vote for Tilden—as circumstances might dictate—that witness was open to a negotiation; still, witness never intended to negotiate; though witness thinks his suggestion for $200,000 looked like positive encouragement to Ashur that he and his backers might negotiate with witness; all the interviews, from first to last, were within 24 hours; it was at the second interview with Ashur that he made the proposition that witness would be required not to refuse to receive his certificate of election, but to receive it and vote affirmatively for Tilden; at the third interview the name of Pugh was named to witness as the party behind Ashur, (witness never spoke to Pugh nor saw him;) then witness and Ashur went to the corner of Common and Carondelet streets, to meet two men who were to talk about money; as witness and Ashur approached, one of the two men standing there withdrew and the other remained, and that party was Joe Hernandez; witness introduced Ashur to Hernandez, who invited him and witness to go into his office with him; witness declined as before stated.

THE MONEY READY.

At the very latest interview the next morning Ashur stated that the $100,000 was waiting for him; witness had never mentioned any sum less than $200,000, and then informed Ashur that it was useless to continue the negotiation.

A protracted cross-examination by Mr. McDonald elicited little new testimony from witness, except that on the conclusion of the interviews witness went to the State-house, arriving about 3 o'clock in the afternoon; went to the Governor's room, and proceeded to the Senate Chamber at near 4 o'clock P. M. where the vote for President was cast, and at that meeting witness announced to the Electors that he had been offered $100,000 to cast his vote for Tilden; never had any conversation about the sale of his vote except with Ashur; O. H. Brewster was present at the State-house on the day the Electoral vote was cast; witness don't remember what he did with himself during the three hours that elapsed between the last interview with Ashur and the time of his arrival at the State-house, except that he was in and out of the Marshal's office, and went to see a fire; witness had some conversation about being a qualified Elector, and delayed going to the college for the reason stated, that if there was any doubt of it he would decline to act, and the board, under the State law, could then elect some one in his place; did not go near the place until near 4 o'clock; was notified that he was wanted in the Senate Chamber; went there and read his credentials to the college, whereupon that body had declared a vacancy in consequence of witness' absence, and had elected him (witness) to fill the vacancy; witness then cast his vote; there had been a question of doubt as to witness' eligibility and witness decided to abandon his idea of acting; friends of Mr. Hayes said if there was any doubt the other side would take advantage of it, so witness determined not to serve; these doubts were existing, and perhaps dissolved by witness' determination to allow a vacancy to occur while the negotiations were going on with Ashur; it was only after such vacancy was created by witness' absence and his election to fill that vacancy took place that witness appeared in the college and voted.

The committee here adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

THE NEW MONADNOCK.

The San Francisco Post of Jan. 29th says: "Work has been resumed within the last few weeks at Vallejo on the new iron hull for the United States monitor Monadnock. The Monadnock was built during the war as a double-turret monitor. The hull was of wood, and rotted away so completely that two years ago it was determined to have a new iron hull built for her. The contract was given to Phineas Burgess & Co., who constructed a slip nearly opposite Mare Island, brought on the most powerful machinery, punches, drills, &c., from the East, and commenced the work over a year ago. Her iron frames are only two feet apart, and every fifth one forms a water-tight bulkhead. The ram is of the most powerful form, while massive breast-hooks give all the necessary strength to her bows. Should the ram be injured or her bows stove in, a water-tight collision bulkhead, formed of half-inch iron plates, will enable her to keep afloat. There is a similar bulkhead aft. The centour of the bottom resembles somewhat the longitudinal section of an egg. This form gives great buoyancy, and will enable the ship to carry her immense turrets, armor, and stores with ease. The plates until within four feet and a half of the water line are one-quarter inch thick. For four and a half feet below the water line she is armored with seven-inch plates, and the upper deck is formed of two courses of one and a quarter inch plates, which overlap and are riveted through and through. But very little caulking had been done, and the closeness with which the edges of the plates have been brought together shows that no pains have been spared to make her a credit to California builders. The turrets of the old Monadnock, two in number, now lying at Mare Island, will be used in the new vessel. They will carry two heavy guns in each, and are protected by 10-inch plating. She will be driven by twin screws. This will enable her to be handled easily, as with one going ahead and the other astern, she will be able to turn, figuratively speaking, on a dollar. Her dimensions are: length, 270 feet; beam, 57 feet, and depth of hold, 14 feet. Her displacement, with stores and all ready for a cruise, will be about 5,600 tons, equal to a little over 5,700 tons burden. She will have 13 inches free-board. It is expected that the new Monadnock will be ready for sea in six months. She will be used for the defense of the harbor of San Francisco. Her cost, when ready, will be, in round numbers, $1,000,000. The work is being executed by Edwin Walsh, under the supervision of Naval Constructor Munds, United States Navy, Mare Island."

SILVER COIN IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The San Francisco Call of the 1st inst. says: "Consider the fearful discount in this city on silver coin! Brokers have purchased in some instances this week as low as 77½—nearly 8 per cent. discount. This condition of things has been brought about by the shipment of silver coin to this State when it was worth several cents on a dollar less than it is at the present time in the Atlantic States. Greenbacks have advanced here as well as in the East; but owing to an over-supply of half-dollars in California, silver coin has not advanced, but rather declined in value. The injury to trade is considerable from the depreciation in silver coin; but business men have been in hopes a change for the better would occur; from legislation by Congress or the appreciation of silver bullion abroad.

DEATH BY THE HANGMAN.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN NEW-JERSEY.

GOV. BEDLE'S VETO OF THE BILL ORDERING THE COURT TO GRANT A WRIT OF ERROR IN THE CASE OF THE NEWARK MURDERERS—THE GOVERNOR'S VIEWS ON THE ATTEMPT TO REPEAL A LAW SANCTIONED BY OVER EIGHTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Friday, Feb. 9, 1877.

The fair fame of Jersey justice has drawn from Gov. Bedle a veto of the bill passed by both houses last week commanding the court to grant to Osohwald and Ryan, the Newark murderers, and all other murderers as a matter of right, a writ of error and stay of execution. The Senate convened in special session this morning to receive the veto message. It was read, and on motion of Senator Magie was ordered printed. The Constitution forbids the consideration of a veto on the day on which it is received. A day has to intervene between the time of its reception and the time of acting upon it. Nor can it be sent to the House of Assembly in the event of its passage in the Senate over the veto until 24 hours shall have passed from the time of action in the Senate. Its passage by both houses cannot have been accomplished until Wednesday of next week, one day before the expiration of the reprieve recently granted by Gov. Bedle. A strong effort will be made to pass it over the Governor's veto, but it is doubtful if it will succeed.

The document is very voluminous and leaves nothing to be said on the Governor's side of the case. Beginning with a reference to the hasty manner in which the bill was rushed through the houses, the Governor calls attention to the fact that the law which it seeks to repeal, having been passed in 1795, has been sanctioned by 82 years of usage. The special application to the case of the Newark murderers he declares to be of but secondary importance as compared with the radical changes contemplated in the administration of criminal law. The purpose of requiring trials for murder to take place in the Court of Oyer and Terminer is that a Supreme Court Judge who is learned in the law may preside over it, and a writ of error can lead to the reviewal of the case in the higher courts only on questions of law, and not of fact. The law making a writ of error in murder cases only a writ of grace having been in existence in the State since New-Jersey became a State, the prisoners had all the opportunities for defense, respite and mercy which had ever been accorded to any criminal in the State. The proposition made by the bill is to accord a writ of error as a matter of right, and to compel the court to stay execution, whether there be any reason for it or not. The law requiring that the writ shall issue in the judgment of the Chancellor is based on the fact that his habits of thought and good conscience fit him to judge on the reasonableness of the grounds on which it is asked, and naturally incline him to extend any favor to the accused that the law will permit. If the bill becomes a law its effect will be to enable the accused, after indictment, trial, and sentence, after the reprieving and pardoning power had been invoked, and when the execution is pending, to take out, of his own will, a writ of error and stay of execution. Then follows an appeal to the Supreme Court and the Court of Errors and Appeals, with the delays incident thereto. That would be all right, if the prisoner had any reason for it; but the bill gives him the right to do it whether there is reason for it or not. It will be in the power of the prisoner to stay any execution just on the eve of its accomplishment, and secure months of delay without excuse. Delays are often pernicious to public peace and justice. The guilty thereby frequently escape, while in fact the innocent are not better protected. They are encouragements to crime and dangerous to life. True enough, writs of error are matters of right in lesser crimes than murder; but in none does it stay the sentence; and if the prisoner desires it after sentence, it can do no one any harm to grant it. The Governor reviews briefly the history of criminal jurisprudence in the State, and says that under the law of 1855 the Oyer and Terminer, on any question of doubt or difficulty, would, for its own guidance, seek the opinion of the Supreme Court. That practice still exists. Bills of exception are of modern date. They are obtained in the course of the trial whenever the prisoner sees fit to except—and there ought, in plain justice to the public, when a murder has been committed, be some power which, without delay, can examine and ascertain whether the exceptions are frivolous or not before the writ is granted. The Chancellor, who is the Presiding Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals, is the most appropriate officer for that purpose. This machinery of the law should not be used at the mere will of the prisoner to accomplish delay in this highest of crimes. We have seen the ill effects of too liberal a use of the privileges of the courts in other States, and if the change proposed is made in our law the day of capital punishment in this State has gone. In New-York the appeal and stay of execution are not of right, but the ability to apply to any one of the various Supreme Court Judges has created delays and damaged the administration of justice in that State. Of 25 States the statutes of which the Governor has investigated, in only one (Pennsylvania) can he find that a stay of execution follows as a matter of course, as proposed by this bill, upon the writ of error, and the Supreme Court of that State have set the seal of their condemnation upon that form of procedure. In conclusion the Governor says, "I earnestly submit for the good of the State, and on behalf of its peace and criminal jurisprudence, that this bill should not become a law. The responsibility is, however, with those who have power to again pass it, and my duty is done in stating these objections and declining to sign it."

TWO NEGRO MEN EXECUTED IN MARYLAND.

THE CRIME OF WHICH THEY WERE CONVICTED—HOW THEY WERE ARRESTED—THEIR CONFESSION—THE EXECUTION WITNESSED BY A LARGE NUMBER OF PERSONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PORT TOBACCO, Feb. 9.—Charles Henry Simpson and Martin Henry, convicted of the murder of John W. Everett, on the 9th of July last, were hanged at noon to-day at this place. From early dawn to the time of execution hundreds of people were arriving from the surrounding country. By 9 o'clock the thoroughfares were blocked up with thousands, all anxious to witness the execution of the two men. During the night both Henry and Simpson rested well, and from early morning until about 11 o'clock they received religious consolation from Fathers McAtee and Wigate. Shortly after 11 o'clock the procession left the jail, headed by a posse of armed citizens. The short distance to the scaffold was soon accomplished, the prisoners showing no signs of fear whatever. They stepped upon the platform, and prayed while the shrouds and hoods were being adjusted. The ropes were placed about their necks, the lever of the drop touched, and at 11:32 o'clock the unfortunate men were swung into eternity. Eleven minutes after the drop the bodies were lowered, both with life extinct. Both men died of strangulation. At 1 o'clock their bodies had been buried, and the crowds were dispersing to their homes.

The murder of which these two men were convicted was one of the most cruel character on record, and the popularity of the murdered man, and the subsequent insanity of Miss Irvine, an accomplished and handsome young lady of Charles, invested the crime with more than the usual interest, and created a deep and widespread excitement through Southern Maryland. Mr. Everett was a clerk in the store of Mr. Warren, at Giymont. On the night of the 9th of July last he closed the store as usual, and retired to rest in a room adjoining the store, being very warm he laid a pallet upon the floor, a low open window being on either side. The next morning Mr. Beverly Barkley went to Warren's store, and Everett not rising as usual he ascended the stairs through the store door, which was open, and found Everett lying on the pallet dead, with his head battered in with a heavy wagon-spoke, which was found covered with blood. Every effort was made to arrest the suspected murderers, but they were all unsuccessful. Several arrests were made, but the parties were all discharged from custody. At last Col. L. W. B. Hutchins, of Charlotte Hall, St. Mary's County, undertook the task of ferreting out the men and bringing them to justice. He ascertained that Simpson had been living with a colored woman named Jane Butler, at Oakville, St. Mary's County. He watched the letters coming to her, and saw that all her letters were mailed at Sandy Springs, Montgomery County, and were signed James Butler. He threw a decoy letter in for Butler, the answer to which exposed his real name and whereabouts. Securing this Col. Hutchins had himself appointed Deputy Sheriff, and, armed with the proper papers, he went to Sandy Springs, and found Simpson there under the name of James Butler, and Martin Henry passing under the alias of Charles Wilson. He arrested them on Sept. 27, two months and 17 days after the murder. The prisoners were conveyed to Leonardtown, and subsequently to the Port Tobacco Jail.

On Dec. 4 Simpson and Henry were found guilty of murder in the first degree, after a trial of three days, in the Circuit Court of Charles County. The evidence was circumstantial, but conclusive. They were traced step by step to the store of Warren on the night of the murder, and step by step away from it before dawn the next morning. Among the effects of the prisoners before leaving Montgomery County was found a cost-mark which Mr. Warren identified as his handwriting. A valise stolen from the store was also traced to their possession. The accused called no witnesses, and could give no account of themselves. On Dec. 7, Chief Judge Brent sentenced the two men to be hanged, and Gov. Carroll fixed Friday, Feb. 9, as the date for their execution. Since their conviction they were carefully guarded in Port Tobacco Jail, and most of their time was spent in preparing for their inevitable doom. Both men made confessions, in which they acknowledge their guilt, but each threw the chief blame upon the other. They found but $39, and left for the Pope's Creek Railroad after helping themselves to several pairs of shoes and a valise. Simpson was a short, medium-built black man, about 35 years of age, with shaggy beard. He was known among the negroes as "the bad nigger," or "blood-in-the-eye nigger," from his red or blood-shot eyes. He was generally feared. He had lived about Southern Maryland for some years. He formerly belonged to Mr. James Ferguson, and lived at Upperville, Fauquier County, Va. Henry was about 35 years of age, and not so sharp looking as his companion. He was a heavy-built yellow man, hailing from Louisiana, but for several years had lived in South Washington. The execution was the first that has taken place in Charles for 52 years.

MAN AND WIFE ON TRIAL FOR MURDER.

THE CASE OF JOHN KIERE AND HIS WIFE ELANORA, CHARGED WITH MURDER, SUBMITTED TO THE JURY—A WOMAN'S TESTIMONY—ARGUMENTS OF THE COUNSEL IN THE CASE—INSTRUCTIONS FROM THE COURT—THE JURY LOCKED UP FOR THE NIGHT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HUDSON, Feb. 9.—The interest in the trial of John V. Kiere and Elanora his wife, jointly indicted for the murder of Charles H. Hermance, in this city, on Dec. 23, has increased daily. Hundreds of persons from the country towns have been in attendance, many who were unable to gain admission to the Court-house standing for hours gaping at the building and speculating as to the probable result. At one time this afternoon the crowd outside was so boisterous as to disturb the proceedings inside, and under Judge Osborne's orders one of the offenders was arrested and confined in jail. This quieted the crowd, and no further annoyance was experienced. Fully 200 ladies have been in attendance to-day, and the trial is the sole topic of discussion. The testimony was all in at 10 o'clock this morning, when Mr. J. Rider Cady, the junior counsel for the prisoners, in the absence of Hon. Charles L. Beale, his associate, who is quite ill, summed up the case in behalf of his clients. The address was a justification of the shooting, upon the ground that Kiere and his wife were defending their own residence against invasion. Mrs. Kiere, in her testimony, admitted that she fired the fatal shot, and swore that her husband had no participation in the affair. Kiere did not take the stand, his counsel stating that he was unwilling to testify against his wife. Mr. Cady occupied two hours in his argument, and at its close was congratulated upon the able manner in which he presented the theory of the defense. Mr. Cady is less than 25 years of age, and this is said to be the first time in the history of State jurisprudence that it has devolved upon one lawyer to defend persons jointly indicted for murder in the first degree. District Attorney Bulkley followed in an address of an hour, leaving to his associate, Mr. J. B. Longley, the principal part of the task of presenting the case of the people. The theory of the prosecution is that Kiere fired the shot, and knowing that his previously bad record would be used against him induced his wife to take the crime upon her shoulders. Mr. Longley made some telling comments upon the evidence, closing with a plea for justice to the memory of the victim of the tragedy.

Judge Osborne thereupon charged the jury, defining the crimes of murder and manslaughter in their several grades. The charge occupied nearly an hour in its delivery, and upon its conclusion, at 4:15 P. M., the jury retired to deliberate upon their verdict. At 8 o'clock the Judge came into court and the jury were called in. The foreman stated that they were unable to agree upon a verdict, and the Judge thereupon ordered them to be locked up for the night.

TERRIBLE DOUBLE MURDER.

A FEARFUL CRIME IN PENNSYLVANIA—A FARMER SHOT DEAD BY A WEAK-MINDED YOUNG MAN—THE ASSASSIN THEN TAKES HIS OWN LIFE.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

ATHENS, Penn., Friday, Feb. 9, 1877.

A terrible double tragedy was enacted on Tuesday last on a farm belonging to Mrs. Turner, at Sorrel Hill, Crawford County. A farmer by the name of Milton Anderson lived on the place as tenant. His daughter Maria, aged 16, became, recently, a subject of no little attention at the hands of Harrison Turner, a weak-minded son of Mrs. Turner. He expressed a determination to make the girl his wife, in spite of her openly expressed dislike of his attentions and the refusal of her father to permit him to intrude his presence at the house. It became necessary within the past few weeks several times to eject the young man by force from the premises. On Tuesday morning Mr. Anderson and a hired man were walking across a field on the farm toward a piece of woods, when they were met by Harrison Turner, who was armed with an army musket. When the men were within a few paces of him he aimed toward them with his gun, and ordered them to halt. Anderson and his companion stopped, but had no idea that Turner intended them any harm. When they halted, Turner said: "Milk you are cut out for a ——, and I'm going to send you to where you belong." With these words he fired at Anderson, sending a whole charge of buckshot through him, killing him instantly. The hired man ran away in alarm fearful that Turner would kill him. He carried the news of the murder to the farm-house, and all of Anderson's family hurried to the scene. The farmer lay on the ground where he had fallen. Nearby lay the dead body of the murderer. He had reloaded the musket, placed the muzzle under his chin and fired, blowing his head and face entirely away.

THE M. CREGAN ASSOCIATION BALL.

SEVENTH ANNUAL RECEPTION AT IRVING HALL—A LARGE ATTENDANCE AND AN ENJOYABLE AFFAIR.

The seventh annual reception and ball of the M. Cregan Association, which was given at Irving Hall last evening, proved a most gratifying success. The attendance was both large and fashionable. Among the guests present were Commodore Dixonson, Postmaster James and son, Assistant Postmaster Pierson, Commissioner Salem H. Wales, Tax Commissioner Hayward, Collector Arthur, Mr. James L. Benedict, Col. Frank E. Howe, Col. George E. Bliss, ex-Commissioner William H. Stiner, Col. Molneaux Bell, Gen. Sickles, Gen. Pinckney, Col. Willard Bullard, and United States Surveyor George H. Sharpe. The decorations of the hall were very handsome and varied. Eight silk streamers were hung from the centre of the ceiling, and looped up gracefully at different parts of the balcony, which was itself tastefully dressed with silk flags and Union shields. The alcove of the balcony occupied by the bands was entirely draped with silk banners, above which the word "Welcome" glittered in flaming gas-jets. Fifty bird cages containing canaries were suspended from the balcony at regular intervals, and a large gilt cage containing several birds was also suspended from the centre of the ceiling directly over the heads of the dancers. A brilliant circle of gas jets placed at the top of the hall, and bearing the legend, "M. Cregan Association, 1877," completed the decorations. Many of the costumes of the ladies were very rich, and produced quite a pretty effect as the dancers whirled through the hall. A very fine supper was served so the guests about midnight, the dancing being resumed immediately at its conclusion, and prolonged into the small hours of the morning. The success of the ball was due in no small degree to the management of Mr. Ralph Arohbold, Col. Frank E. Howe, Elias E. Disney, William Tobin, and Theodore P. Kelly, under whose immediate supervision it was conducted.

HIS CHARACTER.

A man, writing from the Chickasaw nation to the Star-Vindicator (Indian Territory) in defense of his character, which had been assailed by certain of his countrymen, says: "I know my character better than they do, and will give it. Either of the above-named gentlemen can get on 49 drunks to my one. And the records of the United States and Chickasaw Courts for the last 20 years will show that I have never been hung for murder, whipped for stealing, fined for slander, or sent to the penitentiary for dealing in intoxicating liquors."

CITY SAVINGS BANKS.

REPORT AS TO THEIR PRESENT CONDITION.

BANKS WHICH HAVE CEASED TO DO BUSINESS DURING THE YEAR—A REDUCTION IN EXPENSES—INCREASE OF AGGREGATE RESOURCES—THE RATE OF INTEREST PAID DEPOSITORS—A PLEASING STATEMENT.

We give below the reports of the remaining seven City savings banks. The banks which have ceased doing business within the year are the Abingdon Square, Mechanics' and Traders', the Security, Bond Street, and New Amsterdam. The three first named were closed by the Attorney General upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Bank Department. The Security failed. The remaining two went into voluntary liquidation. Over these institutions the Bank Department has no further control. A comparative table would show that but 12 of the banks give an increase in deposits over withdrawals, they are the Bank for Savings, Bowery, Broadway, Clairmont, Emigrant Industrial, Greenwich, Institution for the Savings of Merchants' Clerks, Irving, Morrisania, New-York, Seamen's, and St. John's. The increase shown by these banks is $6,956,380 57. In the remaining banks the withdrawals have exceeded the deposits $6,241,753 69. The entire 34 taken together show a net excess of deposits over withdrawals of $14,625 88. The number of open accounts have increased in the aggregate 5,293. There has been a reduction in the expenses of conducting the business of the banks of $57,061. There is also a slight reduction in the average of each account. As to investments, the banks show a decline of $4,579,009 in amount loaned on bonds and mortgages, while their investments in stocks and bonds have increased $8,175,296. The loans on stocks, as authorised by laws of 1875, have declined $1,128,304. The considerable difference at which the cost of banking-houses is reported in 1876 and 1877 is due to the fact of the Union Dime having reported their building in 1876 at $125,560, and this year, as completed, at $545,969.

The item "real estate other than banking houses" shows an increase of $475,410. The increase under this head is due largely to the necessity of the banks bidding in for their own protection property sold by them under foreclosure. The amount of cash on deposit in banks or trust companies has fallen off during the year $1,189,825. Cash on hand has also fallen off $936,741. There is a very considerable reduction in the head "other assets," amounting to $1,279,363. Included in this head is the excess of market value of stock investments over cost. Taking into consideration the heavy decline in Government bonds during the year, the falling off in this item is even less than might have been anticipated. The aggregate resources of the banks have increased $589,410. The amount due depositors is $23,347 in excess of the amount reported by the same banks Jan. 1, 1876. There is an increase in other liabilities of $66,540. The sum of $497,505 has been added to the surplus of the banks during 1876. The rate of interest paid depositors has been quite generally reduced during the year, though more particularly by the larger and stronger banks.

GERMAN SAVINGS BANK.

Phillip Bissinger, President; John B. Keller, Cashier. No. 157 Fourth avenue. Incorporated 1859.

Resources.

Bonds and mortgages		$4,718,300 00
Stock investments, viz:
United States	$3,435,035 32
New-York State	100,000 00
Stocks of Rhode Island, Connecticut, Indiana, and Missouri	679,000 00
Cities in this State	888,272 50
Counties in this State	584,500 00—	$5,684,807 82
Amount loaned on stocks as authorised by laws of 1875		246,000 00
Banking-house and lot, and adjoining house and lot at cost		550,000 00
Other real estate at cost		90,603 00
Cash on deposit in banks or trust companies		1,024,486 22
Cash on hand		681,852 81
Excess of market value of stock investments over cost		137,454 05
Interest due and accrued		105,893 51
Accrued rent		1,916 67
United States tax to be refunded		10,838 52
Total resources		$13,385,152 60

Liabilities.

Due depositors	$12,397,343 31
Other liabilities	30,000 00
Excess of assets over liabilities	957,809 29
Total liabilities	$13,385,152 60

Supplementary.—Number of open accounts Jan. 1, 1877, 25,632; amount deposited during 1876, including interest credited, $4,839,696 62; amount withdrawn during 1876, $6,694,287 03; expenses for 1876, including salaries, $65,590 43; largest amount due any one depositor, exclusive of interest, $5,000; average amount of each account Jan. 1, 1877, $368 37; rate of interest paid depositors during 1876, 5 per cent.

This bank reported Jan. 1, 1876: Due depositors, $13,251,933 72; surplus, $925,070 99; number of open accounts, 25,472.

CLINTON SAVINGS BANK.

John Mildberger, President; Orlando P. Smith, Secretary. No. 244 Eighth avenue. Incorporated 1868.

Resources.

Bonds and mortgages		$49,500 00
Stock investments, viz:
Cities in this State	$13,965
Towns in this State	500
Twenty-third Street Railroad bonds	5,000
National Trust Company stock	4,500—	23,965 00
Amount loaned on stocks as authorised by law of 1875		8,500 00
Cash on deposit in banks or trust companies		673 45
Cash on hand		551 60
Amount loaned on collaterals		14,600 00
Excess of market value of stock investments over cost		2,017 50
Interest due and accrued

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE "CROWNED" FRENCH NOVEL.

SIDONIE. From the French of ALPHONSE DAUDET. 16mo, pp. 262. Boston: ROBERTS & LAURIAT.

This novel may be regarded as the great French literary success of the day. It has received the approbation of the critics and the applause of the public. It has been "crowned" by the French Academy, and its sale has reached a number of thousands very uncommon in Paris in the case of a book not by an author of long-established reputation. It also presents the somewhat unusual combination of being thoroughly French and thoroughly natural, thus reconciling the two kinds of nature—French nature and human nature—which have been distinguished by cynical critics of other nations, particularly those of English blood. It has also the distinction, notwithstanding its thorough Frenchness, of being entirely unexceptionable on the score of morals and of decency, according to the standards of the day. Sidonie is the name of the heroine, and it has been taken as the title of the book, wisely, according to the taste of our public, although with some sacrifice of the significance of its French title, Fromont jeune et Risler âiné, (Fromont the younger and Risler the elder,) in which the epithets younger and elder have a meaning in their contrast which the story happily illustrates.

Sidonie is a Parisian shop-girl. Her parents live with two other families of the same class on the top floor of a tall house in an obscure street. One of these families consists of the Dolabelles, father, mother and daughter; the first being a conceited and selfish actor who can get no theatrical engagement, and who, being too egoistic to seek other employment, lives upon the earnings of his wife and his crippled daughter, who dress and set up tropical birds and beetles for milliners' use. The other consists of the brothers Risler, Swiss, between whose ages there is a difference of 15 years, and the elder of whom is a designer of patterns for wall-paper, and is in the employ of the great manufacturing house of Fromont, whose factory, and the fine house and garden of whose principal partner, are in full view of a window on the landing of the staircase at the top of the tall house where Sidonie lives. At this window she sits often, gazing with longing eyes at the magnificence of the Fromont establishment, so much below her physically, so much above and beyond her socially. Sidonie is pretty, bright, clever, ambitious, cold-hearted, and intriguing. Above all she is ambitious with that ambition which is the curse of so many of her sex, the ambition for social success and for a luxurious and elegant, or rather fashionable, life. Of course, she has her bread to earn, and she is apprenticed to a manufacturer of imitation pearls. She loathes her humble employment and her humble life, and is determined to get out of both by hook or by crook. She does so; and her way of doing it is both hooked and crooked. Her craving for admiration is insatiable; and she is pretty enough, and socially artful enough to get it. The younger Risler falls in love with her; but an acquaintance being established with the Fromonts, where there are young people of her own age, Claire, a niece, and George, the son of the head of the house, she so insinuates herself into the good graces of the family, that she is asked to their house, and even to their country seat. She strikes up a friendship with Claire, and George Fromont falls in love with her, and an engagement of marriage follows between the young people without the knowledge of their elders; and of course young Risler is whistled down the wind. She does not love George Fromont—she is incapable of loving any man with a true, womanly love—but he is to be the head of the house of Fromont, and that is enough. The elder Risler, a shy, awkward, middle-aged man, is taken into partnership in the Fromont house, which becomes Fromont & Risler. The elder Fromont falls ill with a fatal disease, and on his death-bed commands his son to marry his cousin Claire, which George does, notwithstanding his engagement to Sidonie. French paternal control is strong and the young man is weak. He obtains, however, in this way a noble girl as a wife, who loves him fondly. Baffled thus in her ambitious scheme, Sidonie mopes and seems heart-broken; but she is maturing another plan. At last she confesses to her mother that she loves the elder Risler. The marriage is proposed to him, and the simple-hearted man is taken in, and gladly accepts the pretty, clever wife thus offered to him, in a way much more common in France than in England or America. The marriage takes place, and Sidonie, if she does not marry the head of the house, finds herself the wife of one of the partners. The book opens with this wedding, showing poor, simple Risler at the summit of happiness; the story of Sidonie's or "little Chebe's," previous life being brought up in subsequent chapters.

With the marriage trouble begins. George Fromont, whom she has not seen before since she left the Fromont country seat his betrothed bride, is present at her wedding, and there in her bride's dress she reproaches him with his unfaithfulness, and begins to cast out her lures for him. The result of all this is that Sidonie becomes George Fromont's mistress. She uses her power over him purely for the gratification of her own vanity and ambition. She becomes insatiable in her demands upon him. She gets not only a luxurious daily life, but diamonds, cashmere shawls, costly lace, a coupé, and finally a pretty country house. All this is managed in such a way that, although others suspect it, and a few are certain of it, poor Claire and honest Risler remain in ignorance. The wife of George Fromont mourns the absence of her husband from his home at evening, and is sad because she believes he is gambling at his club. The dishonored husband is so absorbed in an invention which is to revolutionize the manufacture of wall-papers that, in the simplicity of his nature, he does not give much thought to what goes on before his eyes. But, of course, such a condition of things cannot last long. The firm of Fromont & Risler becomes embarrassed, owing to George's neglect of business, and his constant and extravagant expenditures. At last, obligations are becoming due which there is no money to meet, and Sigismund Planus, the old and long-trusted cashier of the house, goes out to do what is a confession of embarrassment—collect the current debts of the house. He finds that George Fromont has been before him, and has silently obtained every franc due to the firm, and poured it into Sidonie's lap. He is not only dejected and almost heart-broken, but enraged, and with Risler even more than with Fromont; for the inevitable bankruptcy seems to him to be due to Risler's base consent to his own dishonor. His indignation brings about an explanation between him and his old friend, to whom the explanation is also a revelation. Then Risler âiné rises into dignity, and almost into grandeur. It is in the evening of the day before which the notes are to be presented for payment. Sidonie has a grand entertainment, which is in full tide. After the fashion of mercantile and manufacturing Paris some years ago, her apartments, as well as those of the Fromonts, are in the same building with the counting-house. Risler recovers from a swoon into which he falls just as Claire, (Madame Fromont,) who is summoned, arrives. After a few explanatory words between them, Risler goes out hastily, and soon returns, driving Sidonie before him in ball-dress and jewels, and laden himself with papers, jewel-cases, and a writing-desk. He flings them all before the cashier, saying: "Here, Planus, you can raise the necessary sum with this trash;" and well he might, for the writing-desk, besides its own worth and the trinkets it contained, held also the deed of the country seat. Then, however, he turns to his wife, and says: "Those jewels, Madame, and hurry, if you please." She begins to take them off leisurely, but he in his impatient wrath clutches at them, breaks the chains, and flings them all down in a glittering heap. Then he seizes Sidonie, drags her before Claire, compels her upon her knees, and begins to dictate an abject confession and entreaty of pardon. Of this Sidonie utters only the first few words, and then, exclaiming, "No, I will not!" rises and rushes out of the door; and that is the last that we see of her, except a glimpse of her as the mistress of a tenor singer, and her self singing in a concert-saloon.

But we hear enough of her; for to her vanity and ambition she adds the even meaner passion, revenge. Immediately after her flight she sends to her husband a small packet and a letter, which he, not wishing to be further disturbed by her in his efforts to re-establish the house (in which he has taken the position of a clerk) again, deposits with Planus. After some time has passed and his exertions have been crowned with success, he goes to Planus' house and there finds her letter in the drawer of a bureau in his room. It contains a letter from his brother Frits to Sidonie, written after her marriage. Frtis, who went abroad after her jilting of him, and who was called back by Planus to protect his brother's honor, submits himself to the blandishments of Sidonie and again becomes enamored of her, and writes a letter to his brother's wife, beginning, "I love you, I love you more than ever, and forever. Why struggle longer. Our passion is stronger than ourselves." In the refinement of cruelty Sidonie sends this to her husband. Risler, sustained by the excitement of his great exertions and his self-sacrifice, was able to bear up under the treachery of his wife, but that of his loved and trusted brother coming to his knowledge after all the rest is too much for him and he commits suicide.

Sidonie is remarkable chiefly for two great merits—its fine construction of character and anatomy of motive, and the naturalness of its incidents. Only one of them will seem improbable to the readers of an English translation—the blindness of Risler to his wife's and his partner's conduct. But Risler, although he could hardly be found among men of English blood, is quite possible in France. This is true; but true or not, it must be assumed as the condition on which we have the story. Fiction is full of such postulates. But this excepted, and excepted also the French tone of the book, which is very marked, the story is one which might be truly told of some girl in New-York to-day. Sidonie is not exactly a new character in fiction; but she is a new variety, admirably painted, of the heartless, frivolous, vulgar-souled, mercenary woman, who looks upon her beauty and her feminine charms merely as the means of feeding her vanity, and attaining social success. She is only somewhat baser, and somewhat more open in her acknowledgment to herself of her own motives than most such women are. But she is only the central figure of a group of people, which, it must be confessed, are fine creations. The poor lame girl, daughter of Dolabelle, who loves Frits in vain, who sacrifices herself to her father's vanity, and dies just as she sees through his shallow soul, in which before was reflected to her only the depths of her own tenderness; Dolabelle himself, so vain that he is hardly conscious of his own vanity, to whom selfishness is so natural that it seems to him to be nature, a creation of Turveydrop's kind, but drawn with a finer, truer, less caricaturing pen. Risler himself, whose traits we have already shown; George Fromont, not bad at heart or in motive, but unstable as water, a man made to be the prey of such a creature as Sidonie; and Claire, his wife, a noble, pure, serene soul—all these are portrayed in a masterly style. Sidonie deserves the great success it has so quickly attained.

We have a word to add in regard to the translation, which is anonymous. This we regret; for whoever has done such a piece of work ought to have the credit of it. We have never read a better translation from any language. It is as it it had been written in English, and very excellent English too. There is not a trace in it of Gallicism; and yet the French spirit of the story, the French tone of mind in the characters, the French atmosphere which they all inspire and expire are perfectly preserved. The way in which this is done, with an equally perfect preservation of pure English idiom, indicates the best taste and a high degree of literary skill. The colloquial passages in particular are given with remarkable freedom and ease. If we object to the use of "dollars" and "cents" and "pennies" for "francs" and "sous," it is a very trivial matter of detail, in which the error is on the right side.

MICHAEL STROGOFF, THE COURIER OF THE CZAR. By JULES VERNE. Translated by W. H. G. KINGSTON. New-York: SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & Co. 1877.

Jules Verne bounds into the arena with all his accustomed liveliness and more than usual lightness in the first chapters of Michael Strogoff. He has a charmed pen, which glides so clearly and swiftly over paper that one is infected with a sense of movement. This trait agrees especially well with the plot here unfolded, for Michael Strogoff is a courier who bears important State messages for thousands of miles through all sorts of difficulties and dangers, and the style of writing accommodates itself wonderfully to what may be called the atmosphere of the book. The chapter in which Michael's errand is explained—"A Fête at the New Palace"—contains two rapid sketches of newspaper correspondents, who represent the ever-present vigilance of the press. They belong to the story through the importance to Europe of Michael's errand as a mere matter of news:

"Of these two men, the one was English, the other French; both were tall and thin, but the latter was sallow, as was the Southern Provençals, while the former was ruddy, like a Lancashire gentleman. The Anglo-Norman, formal, cold, grave, parsimonious of gestures and words, appearing only to speak or gesticulate under the influence of a spring, operating at regular intervals. The Gaul, on the contrary, lively and petulant, expressed himself with lips, eyes, hands, all at once, having twenty different ways of expressing his thoughts, whereas his interlocutor seemed to have only one, immutably stereotyped on his brain.

The strong contrast they presented would at once have struck the most superficial observer; but a physiognomist, regarding them more closely, would have defined their particular characteristics by saying that of the Frenchman was 'all eyes,' the Englishman was 'all ears.'"

These two correspondents travel on the same route with the courier. A political refugee, who is about to join a rebellion against the Czar in his Asiatic provinces, is supposed to be escaping from Russia in some disguise or other at the same time. Hence there is a race between him and the courier, while the correspondents are equally interested in getting forward to the scene of war. Nadia, also, is of the party. She is a young Livonian damsel who is going to join her exiled father in Siberia. A storm in the Ural Mountains, which brings four of these five actors together, is given with the audacity natural to Jules Verne. Rocks and pine trunks hurtle through the air, the rain descends in torrents, lightning strikes a clump of trees and sets them on fire, while, to crown all, Nadia is attacked by a ginantic bear. She shoots him with the nerve of an accomplished bear-hunter, but it is needless to say that Michael rejoins her in time to give him his death blow and save once more the life of the pretty Livonian. A mysterious traveler in a berlin is overtaken beyond Ekaterenburg, and arrives at the next relay station in time to dispute with Michael the only fresh horses in the place. There is a good scene here, where Michael has to allow himself to be insulted by the stranger and refuse to fight. He loses time, but pursues his journey, preceded by the military stranger, in the company of Nadia.

"'Is it so?' he said, in a rough voice. 'You will not give up your horses to me?'

'No,' answered Michael.

'Very well; then, they shall belong to whichever of us is able to start. Defend yourself, for I shall not spare you.'

So saying, the traveler drew his sabre from its sheath, and Nadia threw herself before Michael.

Blount and Alcide Jolivet advanced toward him.

'I shall not fight,' said Michael, quietly, folding his arms across his chest.

'You will not fight?'

'No.'

'Not even for this?' exclaimed the traveler. And before any one could prevent him, he struck Michael's shoulder with the handle of the whip. At this insult Michael turned deadly pale. His hands moved convulsively as if he would have knocked the brute down. But by a tremendous effort he mastered himself. A duel! it was more than a delay; it was perhaps the failure of his mission.

* * * * * * *

Nadia did not doubt that powerful reasons alone could have allowed him to suffer so great a humiliation from such a man. Then going up to him, as he had come to her in the Police station at Nijni-Novgorod: 'Your hand, brother,' said she."

This traveler is no other than Col. Ivan Ogareff, traitor to the Czar, who has succeeded in escaping from Russia under the disguise of a gypsy, and with the aid of a gypsy band, on the same steam-boat that carries Michael disguised as a merchant. He joins the Khan of Tartary in hopes of cutting off the Grand Duke in Siberia. At Omsk he appears in command of the Tartar hordes that have captured that city and narrowly misses taking Michael, of whose presence in Omsk he has become aware. Michael's race for Irkutsch now becomes more and more dangerous, for he is in the enemy's country, and Ivan is tracking him. After various adventures he is taken, but in the end arrives at his destination just in time to baffle the traitor, slay him, and save the town, together with the Grand Duke, who has taken refuge therein.

As if there were not adventure and tragedy enough in this wild tale of Tartar barbarity and Russian hardship, another story of Jules Verne is bound up with Michael Strogoff. It is called "The Mutineers," and the scene is Mexico. The illustrations for the long novel and this tale are by Férat, and accord well in spirit with Jules Verne's work, since they have in their own way all of his audacity. Michael Strogoff will be found an exciting work.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

—Life in South Africa. By Lady Barker. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1877.

—My Welcome Beyond, and Other Poems. By Allie Wellington. New-York: Dodd, Mead & Co. 1877.

—Storm-Driven. By Mary Healey. The Star Series. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1877.

—Love in Idleness. A Summer Story. By Ellen W. Olney. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1877.

—Handbook of Practical Landscape Gardening. By F. R. Elliott. D. M. Dewey, Rochester, N. Y. 1877.

—The Childhood of the English Nation. By Ella S. Armitage. New-York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.

—Almanach du Commerce et de l'Industrie. 5e. année. New-York: H. De Marell, No. 42 Great Jones street. 1877.

—Acoustics, Light, and Heat. By William Loce, M. A. Advanced Science Series. New-York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

—Russian Folk Tales. By W. R. S. Ralston, M. A., of the British Museum. New-York: Lovell, Adam, Wesson & Co.

—Practical Treatise on the Properties of Continuous Bridges. By Charles Bender, C. E. New-York: D. Van Nostrand. 1876.

—Addison and Goldsmith. Pamphlet sections of Hudson's text books of prose and poetry. Paper, Boston: Ginn & Heath. 1877.

—"The Jukes." A study in county pauperism, disease, and heredity. By R. L. Dugdale. New-York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.

—Transfer of Erin; or, the Acquisition of Ireland by England. By Thomas C. Amory. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1877.

—Civil Malpractice. A Treatise on Surgical Jurisprudence. By Milo A. McClelland, M. D. New-York: Hurd & Houghton. 1877.

—Astronomical Myths. Based on Flammarion's History of the Heavens. By John F. Blake. London: Macmillan & Co. 1877.

—The Banker's Almanac and Register for 1877. Twenty-sixth annual volume. Published by I. S. Homans, No. 251 Broadway, New-York.

—Offenbach in America. Notes of a Traveling Musician. By Jaques Offenbach. New-York: G. W. Carleton & Co. 1877. Advanced sheets.

—A Manual of Instruction in Latin, on the basis of a Latin Method. Prepared by J. H. Allen and J. B. Greenough. Boston: Ginn & Heath. 1877.

—Cameos from English History. The Wars of the Roses. By the author of "The Heir of Redclyffe." Third series. London: Macmillan & Co.

—The Convicts and Their Children. By Berthold Auerbach. Translated by Charles T. Brooks. Leisure Hour Series. New-York: Henry Holt & Co. 1877.

—Outlines of Field Geology. By Prof. Geikie, LL.D., F. R. S. Science Lectures at South Kensington. London and New-York: Macmillan & Co. 1877.

—Longman's Pocket Dictionary of the German and English Languages. By F. W. Longman, Balliol College, Oxford. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1877.

—Sir Roger de Coverley. From the Spectator. (Select British Essayists Series.) With an Introductory Essay by John Habberton. New-York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.

—A Pocket Dictionary of the French and English Languages. By Léon Contanseau, Professor of French in the late Royal Indian Military College, Addiscombe. New edition. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1877.

—The Absorption of Light and the Colors of Natural Bodies. By Prof. Stokes, F. R. S. Science Lectures at South Kensington. London and New-York: Macmillan & Co. 1877.

—Chemistry: Theoretical, Practical, and Analytical, as Applied to the Arts and Manufactures. New Encyclopedia, complete in 40 parts; part XX, pp. 977 to 1,094. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.

—Contanseau's Dictionary of the French and English Languages. By Leon Contanseau, Professor in the late Royal Indian College, Addiscombe. New Edition. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1877.

—Treasures of Art, Industry, and Manufactures represented at the International Exhibition, 1876. Buffalo, N. Y.: Clay, Cossack & Co. 1877. Large folio, Part I., Number I. Four-full-page chromolithographs.

—Song Victories of "The Bliss and Sankey Hymns." Being a collection of 100 incidents in regard to the origin and power of the hymns. With an introductory letter by Rev. George F. Pentecost, D. D. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

—The Holy Bible. Edited, with various Renderings and Readings from the best Authorities, by Rev. T. K. Cheyne, S. R. Driver, M. A., Rev. R. L. Clarke, and Alfred Goodwin, M. A., of Oxford University. London and New-York: Pott, Young & Co., Cooper Union, Fourth avenue.

EIGHT BODIES RECOVERED.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 9.—Eight bodies of the crew of the oyster schooner Laura, which capsized off Greenbury Point, near Annapolis, in the gale of Dec. 16, were recovered yesterday by dragging, and have been brought to this city. The bodies recovered are those of William S. Hitch, Captain; W. B. Dorman, Edward Williams, David Hughes, Martin Clougherty, of this city, and W. A. Leffner, Robert Hough, and Anton Muller, who shipped at Baltimore, but it is believed came from New-York. The bodies, which have been in the water nearly two months, were well preserved and easily recognized. Only one body remains unrecovered.

THE RIGHT OF ASYLUM.

THE SUBJECT PRESENTED IN A NEW LIGHT.

ANALYSIS OF THE CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LORD DERBY AND MR. FISH—IS THE AMERICAN DOCTRINE THE CORRECT ONE?—VIEWS OF MR. WEBSTER—OPINIONS OF FOREIGN WRITERS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The correspondence on extradition, contained in the last volume on "Foreign Relations," presents the subject in a light in which it has not been considered by the American people. The Message of the President on the 20th of June, 1876, announced that he had declined to yield to "the menace of an intended violation" by Great Britain of the extradition clause of the treaty of Washington, made in 1842, and intimated that that menace was based "on the requirements of a purely domestic enactment of the British Parliament, passed in the year 1870." Assuming the announcement to be a fair one, the country has been prepared to sustain the Government in resisting the infraction of a treaty on such a ground. The statement, indeed, was rather calculated to disturb the feelings of our people, who like menaces from no quarter, and, least of all, perhaps, from England; and who have well-defined ideas of the faith of treaties and of their independence of domestic legislation.

The Message made no allusion to the fact that Lord Derby in his note of May 4, (received at Washington May 17,) had disclaimed the conduct imputed to England, and had maintained that the duty of the British Government to protest against any extradited prisoner being tried for crimes other than those for which he had been surrendered, rested not on the act of 1870, an idea which he distinctly disclaimed, but on the general law of extradition, and that the act of 1870 was not "a purely domestic enactment of the British Parliament," but the embodiment "of the general opinion of all countries on the subject."

The case as exhibited by the correspondence presents another issue, and with larger scope than that presented by the Message; and the chief question which it offers for our solution touches the effect which the rule of interpretation adopted at Washington may have in depriving persons who shall be surrendered by the United States, charged with a particular crime specified by treaty, of the safeguards with which they have been heretofore surrounded by the international law and practice of Europe, and in permitting them to be tried and convicted by the foreign Government, on whose demand they are surrendered for criminal offenses not named in the treaty, and other offenses never contemplated by us, political, religious, and connected with military service.

In view of the thousands who have sought a refuge in this country from political motives and to escape military conscription, if it shall be found that the position assumed by the President is in fact "a menace" to the personal liberty of this class and to that right of asylum which constitutes one of the chiefest glories of the Republic, it is to be hoped that Congress will promptly correct the error before its adjournment; so far, at least, as to avoid the risk of national wrong and international complications. It is to be remembered, also, that nothing could be more calculated to interrupt the smooth working of our Extradition Treaties with the Continent—the mutual convenience and importance of which, in the exchange of persons actually guilty of public crimes, is more and more apparent, than the idea sanctioned and promulgated by the Government at Washington, that the party demanded, however innocent he might prove to be of the crime with which he was charged and for which he was surrendered, could still be held and punished by the power to which we had delivered him, as an offender against its political, religious, or military laws, and that for such offenders the Republic had ceased to be a land of refuge.

That Gen. Grant intended to make a decision which might have such an effect is not to be presumed. He distinctly approved of the contrary principle in assenting to the third article of the Extradition Treaty recently projected but never concluded with England. He frankly admitted in his Message that "it was his fortune, or misfortune, to be called to the office of chief magistrate without any political training." This was, perhaps, especially the case in regard to the rules of international law and the amenities of diplomatic intercourse; and while the country, always mindful of his great military services, will the more readily accept his assurance that "failures have been errors of judgment, not of intent," no readiness to pardon an error can exonerate us from the responsibility of correcting it and of arresting the mischief which it may threaten.

Without now referring to the grounds on which the Government bases its interpretation of the treaty, the judicial decisions on the jurisdiction of the courts, with small bearing on the political or international question, or the dicta and argument given in the correspondence, let us look at the rule by which it has defined its powers under the treaty with Great Britain, and which defines with equal explicitness—although the President makes no allusion to this fact—the powers of foreign States who have similar treaties with our Republic.

When Lord Derby, after the surrender of Lawrence, who, when extradited from Canada on a charge of forgery, was indicted at New-York for smuggling, asked in the case of Winslow a prior assurance that he should not be tried on any charge but that on which he was demanded, our Government had a sufficient reason for declining to give the assurance in the absence of power on the part of the Executive to control the action of the State courts, and this reason was properly stated. But the Government, not content with the ample plea of legal impossibility, proceeded to advance what it maintains to be its right under the treaty. It contended that "there is no agreement, express or implied, that he [the surrendered person] may not be tried for another offense of which he is charged, though not an extradition offense." It added: "He is in fact 'delivered up to justice,' and in the absence of any limitation by treaty to 'justice' generally, each independent State being the judge of its own administration of justice."

The Government, while claiming these absolute and unrestricted powers under the treaty as it stands, to deal with the surrendered person as it pleases, admits the propriety of providing certain limitations by additional stipulations, and it "was and is of the opinion * * * that a proper limitation might be made by providing that the criminal shall be tried for no political offense and for no crime not an extradition offense." That without such limitation in the treaty, "the criminal," meaning, as it would seem, the party surrendered on a charge of crime, and whom our law is supposed to regard as innocent until he is proved to be guilty, may be tried also for political offenses appears again from the argument of the Government in reply to Lord Derby. (Mr. Fish to Mr. Hoffman, May 22, 1876, page 237.)

"Lord Derby * * * asks what is to prevent the United States from obtaining a prisoner on one charge and trying him for a political offense? The answer is ready. The inherent inborn love of freedom, both of thought and of action, engraved on the hearts of the people of this country so deeply that no law can reach and no admiration would dare to violate. * * * Neither the extradition clause in the treaty of 1794 nor that of 1842 contains any reference to immunity for political offenses or to the protection of asylum for political or religious refugees. The public sentiment of both countries made it unnecessary. Between the United States and Great Britain it was not supposed on either side that guarantees were required of each other against a thing inherently impossible, any more than by the laws of Solon was a punishment deemed necessary against the crime of parricide, which was beyond the possibility of contemplation."

The point to be noted here is the position that, as between England and America, there is nothing in or out of the treaty to prevent either Government from trying a surrendered person for political offenses, except the peculiar love of freedom that characterizes the two countries, and which in this case rendered all further safeguards unnecessary.

Were we examining the argument of the Washington case, it might be properly asked if it was a like faith in the people and Government of the Hawaiian Islands which induced Gen. Taylor and Mr. Clayton to omit the limitation in their treaty with those islands, and whether Mr. Webster, when, as Secretary once more under Mr. Fillmore he omitted the guarantees in the treaty with Prussia, did so on the ground that there was in Prussia "an inherent, inborn love of freedom" which no administration at Berlin would dare to violate? It might also be remarked that the attempts to illustrate and justify the sentimental confidence in popular and governmental integrity, which the Government ascribes to Mr. Jay and Lord Granville in 1794, and to Mr. Webster and Lord Ashburton in 1842, by the amiable credulity which tradition attributes to the sage of Greece in regard to parricide, served rather to illustrate the difference between the idolons of antiquity and the thoughtful, practical, far-sighted statesmen of our own day.

Mr. Webster, with a clearer vision than the Athenian legislator, not only deemed parricide a crime for which punishment should be provided, but for which extradition should be arranged, and from the time of President Tyler to that of Gen. Grant provision has been made by successive treaties for the mutual return of parricides with France, Hayti, Mexico, Nicaragua, the Orange Free State, Sweden and Norway, and the Two Sicilies.

Touching the reasons why Mr. Webster deemed it unnecessary to declare in the Treaty of Washington that political offenses are excluded, his own words on the subject may be assumed to have more authority than the views of Solon on parricide; and even if he had not spoken, the application of the olden rule, Expressio unius exclusio alterius, would have been in accord with the views of the publicists and jurists which now constitute the international law of Europe on the subject of extradition. The tenth article of the treaty is as follows:

"It is agreed that the United States and her Britannic Majesty shall, upon mutual requisition by them, or their Ministers, officers or authorities respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with the crime of murder or assault to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, committed within the jurisdiction of either, shall seek an asylum, or shall be found within the territories of the other; provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had there been committed."

President Tyler, in his Message of Aug. 11, 1842, after referring to the pressing occasion for such a treaty in reference to the British provinces in America, said—and Mr. Webster himself wrote the message:

"The article on the subject in the proposed treaty is carefully confined to such offenses as all mankind agree to regard as heinous and destructive of the gravity of life and property. In this careful and specific enumeration of crimes, the object has been to exclude all political offenses or criminal charges arising from wars or intestine commotions; treason, misprision of treason, libels, desertion from military service and other offenses of similar character are excluded." (6 Webster's Works, 355.)

Mr. Webster underatood the meaning of words, and the force of this language could hardly be increased, especially when we recall the rules which, in advance of treaty stipulation, marked in Europe the extradition of alleged fugitives from justice under the comity of nations.

In a circular dated 15th April, 1841, more than a year before the Treaty of Washington, the Minister of Justice in France said:

"The extradition declares the offense which leads to it, and this offense alone ought to be inquired into, so that if, during the prosecution for the crime which has led to the extradition, there should arise the evidence of a new crime, a new demand of extradition ought to be made."

Some of the later authorities cited by the Lord Chancellor in his very learned and able speech seem to confirm entirely Mr. Webster's view. For he would hardly have congratulated the country on the fact that offenses of a political or religious character or for military service had been carefully excluded from the list of offenses for which a person could be surrendered, on the submitment of proper proofs, if it were understood that after his surrender, trial, and acquittal on that charge he could be arraigned and tried for another, "although not an extradition offense," when thousands of miles from his American house, without notice and without opportunity of defense.

Fœlix, who in his treatise on private international law devotes an entire chapter to extradition, says:

"The person who is surrendered cannot be prosecuted or condemned except for the crime in respect to which his extradition has been obtained."

From Dallays' Jurisprudence the Lord Chancellor cited "a remarkable case," that of Dermenon, who had been surrendered by Switzerland to France on a charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, and acquitted on that charge. Being accused of another, the Procureur Général of Dijon asked advice as to the disposition to be made of him, and the Minister of the interior ordered him to be reconducted to the frontier and placed once more in the hands of the Genoese authorities. The Minister of Justice directed this course, and it was said:

"We cannot take advantage of his having been given up to the French authorities upon a different ground, to try him for acts which have not, and could never have, been the grounds of the extradition."

Kluit, the jurist of Holland who has written a treatise on the surrender of fugitives, says:

"The surrendering State gave up the criminal on consideration of the grounds stated, but on different grounds; and that even if it be not fraud, but only carelessness, that leads a State, after demanding and obtaining the surrender of a criminal, to bring him to trial on some other charge than that for which he was surrendered, such a proceeding should not on that account be passed over."

Heffter, the well-known German jurist, whose authority on questions of international law is acknowledged in Germany and Austria, says:

"The individual whose extradition has been granted cannot be prosecuted nor tried for any crime except that for which the extradition has been obtained. To act in any other way and to cause him to be tried for other crimes or misdemeanors would be to violate the mutual principle of asylum and the silent claim contained by implication in every extradition."

The Lord Chancellor added that he was "absolutely unaware of any authority who had ever written the other way."

To understand the extent to which we are interested in the rules of extradition thus generally adopted in Europe, we have only to refer to our treaties with European States and with States not in Europe which are likely to be governed in this matter by European rules.

We have made treaties with Austria, Baden-Baden, Bavaria, France, Hanover, Italy, North Germany, Prussia, Saxony, Hesse, Hesse-on-the-Rhine, Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Meimngen, Saxe-Altenberg, Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Brunswick, Anhalt-Dessau, Anhalt-Bemburg, Nassau, Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, Waldeck-Reuss, Lippe, Hamburg, Frankfort, Bremen, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Oldenburg, Schaumburg-Lippe, Würtemberg, Sweden and Norway, Swiss Confederation, and the Two Sicilies, making 37.

Of other countries, we have made treaties with the Hawaiian Islands, the Orange Free State, Nicaragua, the Dominican Republic, Hayti, and Mexico.

It was announced by telegraph on the 5th January that an extradition treaty had been concluded with Spain, enumerating 26 offenses for which persons accused may be surrendered. Among the treaties named, some 15 declare that citizens of each State are not to be given up, to wit: Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Bremen, Hanover, Hayti, Mexico, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, North Germany, Oldenburg, Prussia, Sweden and Norway, and the Two Sicilies.

A still smaller number provide that extradition shall not be granted for political offenses, and this includes Austria, Baden, the Dominican Republic, France, Hayti, Italy, Mexico, Nicaragua, the two Sicilies, and the Orange Free State, leaving a large number of treaties where the persons extradited from America, and who under the rules prevailing on the Continent were protected from interference except on the one ounce on which the demand was made, are now surrendered, by the President's rule to what is called at Washington the "justice generally" of the foreign State, to be tried and condemned on "other than extradition charges."

Whatever dicta may be found to sustain the doctrine proclaimed from Washington, this simple fact remains, that it deprives persons surrendered by us of rights which we have acknowledged ought to be protected, and which even the monarchies and aristocracies of Europe have been accustomed to protect, and that it strikes a fatal blow at the safety of the distressed and persecuted of other nations who seek for refuge in our Republic. If Congress shall promptly recognize that fact, it will hardly fail to note the danger of the decision—especially to those who have escaped from military service—and make good by proper legislation the proud boast of our country to which Mr. Webster gave expression, when he said: "Whoever is in affliction from political occurrences in his own country looks here for shelter. Whether he be republican flying from the oppression of thrones, or whether he be monarch or monarchist flying from thrones that crumble and fall under or around him, he feels equal assurance that if he got foothold on our soil his person will be safe and his rights will be respected."

JOHN JAY.

No. 22 WASHINGTON SQUARE.

A CHARITY INVESTIGATION.

THE JUVENILE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

A COMMITTEE OF THE STATE BOARD OF CHARITIES IN SESSION IN THIS CITY—SEVERAL WITNESSES EXAMINED YESTERDAY—OFFICERS AND EMPLOYES OF THE INSTITUTION ON THE STAND—TWELVE OF THE BOOKS SHOWN TO HAVE BEEN MUTILATED—REPORT OF THE EXAMINATION OF THE ACCOUNTS BY EXPERTS.

Messrs. Theodore Roosevelt and Henry L. Hoguet, and Mrs. C. R. Lowell, of the State Board of Charities, met at No. 50 East Twentieth street, the office of the board in this City, yesterday morning, to investigate certain charges against D. F. Robertson, Secretary of the New-York Juvenile Guardian Society, preferred by Messrs. Stephen Pell and R. M. Jones, both formerly connected with the institution. The first witness called was Rev. Edward F. Edwards. This gentleman refused to be sworn, saying that owing to his position in his church he did not want to be mixed up with the affairs of the society. He made a statement, however, in which he said that he had not been connected with the institution for more than two years. The substance of his statement was that the affairs of the society had been badly managed by Mr. Robertson, and that he [the witness] had no confidence in him.

C. W. Goff was then called and sworn. He said that he had been connected with the institution for about four weeks; he had been a visitor of St. John's Guild, and at the request of Mr. Robertson he agreed to assist him for four weeks without pay; he went to the institution, and began his labors; the Treasurer gave him $25 and Mr. Robertson $5; besides these sums, he had expended $70 out of his own pocket; of the whole amount, $55 were paid for putting a room used as an office in the society's building in order; all the money received from the society went to pay for the room, by order of Mr. Robertson; part of the money spent by him was for food and part for a coffin given to a lady whose child had died; during the time he had been with the society he had visited 55 families, and had given relief to 110 families; there was, so far as he knew, only one person under pay of the society now engaged in charitable work.

Miss Frances K. Ferguson, the next witness, said she had been connected with the society since September, 1876; she was in charge of the sewing-machines of the society, and gave work to unemployed girls, and taught them to work on the machines; she had agreed to take the position without pay, requiring $9 a week only for her actual expenses; she had been paid the first week only; three weeks later Mr. Robertson told her the society had no funds, and she had remained without pay; she left a position with John M. Davis & Co. to go to the institution; the money she received for the shirts made on the machines she gave to them, retaining only enough to pay express charges and for machine-oil and needles; her means were sufficient to enable her to work without pay—she now worked purely for charity. In reply to a question, she said that she would not keep her present situation if she could get another. This witness was not sworn, as she said she was too nervous.

Henry W. Baldwin was then called. He testified that in 1874 he had been requested by Mr. Robertson to become a member of the board; he accepted and was afterward elected President; various charges were made against Mr. Robertson, and statements were also made that some of the books of the concern had been lost or stolen and mutilated; in April, 1875, as a member of an investigating committee, he obtained possession of 12 mutilated books, for which he held a receipt in which the fact of the mutilation was expressed. The witness exhibited a report of an examination of the books made at that time by experts. In this report it was stated that a continuous financial record could not be made from the data furnished; in consequence of this report Mr. Pell, the Treasurer, was put out, and Mr. Robertson was permitted to resign; witness was then elected President; shortly after he found that Robertson had as much influence with the board as before, and he [the witness] then asked that Mr. Pell be made Treasurer again, as he was the only man who could successfully oppose Mr. Robertson; Pell was not put back, and witness then resigned; he knew nothing of his own knowledge of anything wrong done by Mr. Robertson.

Mr. Stephen Pell was then called. Upon being sworn he said that three years ago he had acted as Treasurer of the society; all the money obtained by the collectors was put in his hands, and he paid them their commission for collecting it—15 per cent; a second commission of 5 or 10 per cent. more was paid to the collectors by Mr. Robertson; all the money that came in was paid to Mr. Robertson on vouchers. In reply to a question, witness said Mr. Robertson always had a sufficient amount of vouchers for back salary on hand to take out all the money paid in to him; on vouchers of that class he paid out $1,600, and then refused to pay any more; after his refusal the matter was brought up before the board, and Mr. Robertson claimed that they still owed

The New York Times

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 10, 1877.

AMUSEMENTS THIS EVENING.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—A MORNING CALL—MARRIED LIFE—Mr. Lester Wallack, Mr. John Gilbert, Miss Ada Dyas, Miss Effie Germon. Matinee.

BOOTH'S THEATRE.—FIFTH AVENUE—Mr. George Rignold, Miss Maud Granger. Matinée.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—THE DANICHEFFS—Mr. C. R. Thorne, Mr. W. R. Floyd, Miss Katherine Rogers, Miss Fanny Morant. Matinée.

PARK THEATRE.—OUR BOARDING-HOUSE—Mr. Stuart Robson, Mr. W. H. Crane, Mrs. A. F. Baker, Miss Maude Harrison. Matinée.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—LEMONS; OR, WEDLOCK FOR SEVEN—Mr. C. F. Coghlan, Miss F. Davenport. Matinée.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—THE BIG BONANZA—Matinée.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS (Spectacular)—Kiralfy Brothers. Matinée.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—MARTON, LE JOLIE BOQUETIERE. Matinée.

EAGLE THEATRE.—LA PETITE MARIEE (Opera Bouffe)—Mlle. Marie Aimée. Matinée.

HELLER'S WONDER THEATRE.—PRESTIDIGITATION, MUSIC, AND HUMOR—Mr. Robert Heller. Matinée.

STEINWAY HALL.—GRAND CONCERT—Miss Emma C. Thursby, Mr. B. Boekelman, Mr. C. Werner, Mr. T. Whiffin.

WICKERING HALL.—At 2 P. M.—GRAND CONCERT—Miss Emma Abbott, Mr. Brignoli, Mr. Case, Mr. Pratt, Mr. Maretzek.

NEW-YORK AQUARIUM.—RARE AND CURIOUS FISH AND MAMMALIA, STATUARY, &c.—Day and evening.

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART.—EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT STATUARY, PAINTINGS, &c. Day only.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.—MINSTRELSY, FARCES, AND NEGRO COMICALITIES. Matinee.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN.—EXHIBITION OF WATER COLORS. Day and evening.

WILMORE'S GARDEN.—EQUESTRIAN GAMES AND FIELD SPORTS.

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

This morning THE DAILY TIMES consists of TEN PAGES. Every news-dealer is bound to deliver the paper in its complete form, and any failure to do so should be reported at the publication office.

The four Electoral votes of Florida will to-day be counted for HAYES and WHEELER, and the proceedings of the Joint Convention will go on without interruption till the two sets of certificates from Louisiana are reached. The set which bears the signatures of the so-called Tilden Electors has not even the slender pretense of legality which was possessed by the corresponding returns from Florida. It is authenticated by no State authority, is sustained by no appointment of even a quasi-legal character, and can, in no conceivable sense be treated as "the voice of the State." The legal return from Louisiana will be contested mainly on three grounds—the alleged unconstitutionality of the Returning Board, the presumed defect of its composition in having failed to fill the vacancy in its membership, and the absence of power on the part of the Electoral College to fill two vacancies caused by the ineligibility of two Electors. It is not easy to see how arguments on the Louisiana case can be allowed to travel beyond the limited range, and it is equally difficult to understand how the Commission can do otherwise than accept the votes cast by the Republican Electors.

A correspondent of THE TIMES gives the opinions of Chief Justice CHURCH and ex-Gov. SEYMOUR in regard to the constitutionality and expediency of the Democratic device for settling the Presidential dispute by Commission. The Chief Justice is very emphatic in claiming that the plan was equally destitute of either attribute, and he points out very clearly that the stand taken by Democratic counsel in the Florida case is as subversive of Democratic principles as was the creation of the Commission itself. Judge CHURCH is perfectly clear that the action of the State authorities in Louisiana, as well as Florida, must be accepted as final, and he believes that CRONIN made a blunder fatal to Democratic claims on Oregon by convening a College of his own instead of attempting to force his vote in with those of the Republican Electors. These views are understood to be shared by all the members of the Court of Appeals, with the possible exception of Judge EARLE.

The dullness of the Louisiana investigation was relieved yesterday by some inquiries into the way in which the "visiting statesmen" employed their leisure at New-Orleans. Capt. DITTY, of Baltimore, who formed one of the Republican deputation, pleaded guilty to having attended a quadroon ball, and to having danced there. He had, however, taken the precaution to tell his wife all about it, so that the gallant Captain's domestic peace will not be disturbed by yesterday's evidence. But a decided sensation was created when the gay statesman from Baltimore testified that the revels of the ball had been shared by Hon. LYMAN TRUMBULL and Gov. PALMER, of Illinois. The Captain vigorously resented the suggestion that Judge TRUMBULL would designate his story as "stuff," and recalled, as an aid to the memory of the ancient and venerable reveler from Illinois, the fact that one of the "features" of the ball was a lady with pink eyes. That graphic touch appears to have convinced the committee that they had heard quite enough of the high jinks of the visiting statesmen of both parties.

An entertaining chapter of autobiography is furnished in the sketch of the public career of MADDOX, which we print on another page. MADDOX is not by any means a savory character. Nor is he such an important personage that one need waste much time upon him. But as a prominent figure in the short and inglorious Congressional career of DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, this obsequious, time-serving, double-faced rebel spy and camp-follower deserves a brief examination and description.

The Democratic minority of the Assembly Committee on Cities were certainly right in protesting against granting the Police Board the power of making street-cleaning contracts, as contemplated in Assembly bill No. 44, which was favorably reported yesterday. The present system has, in its present hands, been a disgraceful failure, but there is an extreme probability that the contract system would break down as completely if intrusted to the same set of incompetent jobbers. The proper function of the Police is to report failures to clean the streets, but when inspection is lodged in the same hands as execution, it is hopeless to expect anything like a check upon culpable neglect of duty. If the contract system is to be tried at all, let the giving out of the contracts be vested in some authority other than the Police Department, and let their officers, as well as those of the Board of Health, be charged with the duty of reporting upon the execution of the work. We are glad to find that the clause of the bill covering a job in the shape of a transfer of the offal contract from the Board of Health, has been stricken out in committee.

In another column we print an accurately compiled table of the census and election returns of North Carolina. It is a most suggestive statement. No disinterested person can examine it without being convinced that the late Presidential election in that State was dishonestly managed. TILDEN'S reputed majority was nearly 16,000. But the figures show that an obvious fraud of about 16,000 votes was committed. The machinery was in the hands of the Democrats, and it was run in the Tilden interest. As is demonstrated in the table to which we refer, the total adult male population of North Carolina is liberally estimated at 228,708. The total vote in November last was 234,731, or 6,023 more than the whole adult male population of the State. It is too late to influence the main result by such exposures as these. But the irrefragable evidence which we present simply proves the utter hollowness of the Democratic pretense that the party desires a fair count. On the contrary, a fair count is precisely what they have never permitted where it could be prevented.

Publicity is not yet given to the text of the extradition treaty with Spain which has just been ratified by the Senate. But we may conclude that its provisions are liberal. The press of Madrid clamored against the Foreign Office when TWEED was given up, arguing that the United States Government did not grant the extradition of Spanish criminals as easily as Señor CALDERON had acceded to the request of Mr. ADIE, the American Chargé d'Affaires. But it is notorious that Havana has long been the refuge of American outlaws of every grade. No such flagrant instance of defiance of justice has ever happened in New-York as the conduct of the murderer SHARKEY in Cuba. On the other hand, the Spanish Government has had the satisfaction of knowing that its constant refusal to negotiate an extradition treaty has allowed bankrupts and defaulters from Spanish dominions to find refuge in the United States. A competent authority has declared that the best record of Mr. CUSHING'S useful career in Madrid will be the new treaty which he has concluded.

THE DECISION AS TO FLORIDA.

By a vote of eight to seven, the Electoral Commission has decided that the votes of Florida should be counted for HAYES and WHEELER. The formal report to this effect was made up last evening, and will be sent this morning to the President of the Senate. It was signed by Justices BRADLEY, MILLER and STRONG, by Senators MORTON, EDMUNDS and FRELINGHUYSEN, and by Messrs. GARFIELD and HOAR. This decision was not unexpected, because it follows logically from the preliminary decision as to the admission of evidence. When the Commission concluded that it would consider only the contents of the packages opened by the President of the Senate, and sent by the two houses to the Commission, it was clear that the votes of Florida would ultimately be counted for HAYES. We have no doubt that a like result must have been reached if the Commission had gone into the question of the legality of the action of the Florida Board of Canvassers, and still more surely if it had gone into the question of the popular vote. It had no authority, no power, no semblance of excuse, for doing anything of this kind, and it so decided. Confining itself wholly to the returns, the decision as to the Electoral vote was reached, not more certainly, as we believe, but more rapidly.

There was, indeed, very little to consider in the certificates on which the Democratic claim was based. A couple of bundles of papers, setting forth a vote for TILDEN, cast by four men who held no colorable title to the office of Elector when the vote was cast, and who could not be given such a title by any subsequent proceedings, must have been very easily disposed of. The very form of the claim that these nondescript papers were evidence that the vote of Florida was for the Democratic candidate showed how utterly without legal foundation the claim was. The Commission was asked to recognize the papers as the "voice of the State." The Commission was appointed to find out, in the cases submitted to it, "which is the true and lawful Electoral vote" of the State, and "how many and what persons were duly appointed Electors in such State." It was asked by the Democrats to ascertain these facts from decisions of an inferior court in a private suit, and from the decision of the Supreme Court in a suit which was at most only collateral, and as to the main issue was wholly irrelevant. But it was not by such means that the Commission had any authority to proceed. The evidence, as it decided, which it could take was such only as had been required by the Federal statutes and sent up, in regular form, with the accustomed and authoritative verification, to the appointed officer of the United States. This kind of evidence was in the certificate of the Hayes Electors; it was all there, and it was nowhere else, not even in semblance or pretense. The decision of the Commission that it would regard only the evidence which the State had, in the prescribed manner and under the ordinary and well-established conditions, furnished to the Federal Government, carried with it the final decision reached yesterday.

The action of the Commission is to our view salutary. If the Commission itself is an irregular, abnormal body, placed, under the stress of unnecessary alarm, in the stead of the constitutionally designated officer, it is, at least, reassuring to know that it exercises the powers with which it has, by a great error, been endowed, as the proper officer should have done, had he not been stripped of his office. There are two cardinal reasons why the course of the Commission should be approved. The first, and most important, is, that it carries out the intent of the Constitution, not by the means fixed in the Constitution, but in effect. This is to the last degree to be desired. When a nation is in the possession of a written law, every departure from that law, every violation of its provisions, every stretch of authority beyond its limitations, every variation from the methods it lays down, is a blow at the supremacy of all law. It is a mine under the foundations of political order. Unwritten constitutions can be liberally construed without attacking their essence. Their meaning is always open to free interpretation, and depends on the accumulating force of precedents, in which one act counts for comparatively little. But with a written constitution it is far otherwise. The meaning lies clearly defined on the surface, and it is an evil thing for a people to get in the habit of disregarding or perverting or supplementing it. Since our Constitution gives to each State the appointment of Electors who, on a certain day, are to do their part in the election of a President, it is important that that power shall be respected, and the function once performed be accepted, because the Constitution intends it.

A second reason why the action of the Commission is to be approved is, that the distribution of powers in the election of a President, made by the Constitution, is essentially a just and effective one, which cannot be broken down or tinkered without grave consequences. However a President may be elected, the provision which leaves a certain part of the process to each State can only be overthrown to concentrate the whole power in the Congress, and Congress is not a proper organ for its exercise. The errors or omissions or frauds in any one State affect only the votes of that State; it is by a rare chance that they change the general result. But the errors or omissions or the frauds of Congress, if it had the matter exclusively in its hands, would be of indefinite range and incalculable consequence. They would go to the substance of the election. They would be central and controlling. The Congress has not for many years existed which could safely be trusted with such enormous powers.

Salutary as the action of the Commission has thus far been, however, we renew our suggestion that it affords no justification of the law by which the tribunal was created. It has done right, but the power it has used rightly was equally in its possession to use wrongly. It has justly employed a discretion which never should have been vested in it. It has sustained constitutional principles which never should have been exposed to defeat at its hands. It has done justice where it should have had no chance to work injustice. If it continues as it has begun, its best title to remembrance will be that it refrained from doing the mischief which it might have done, and which a large majority of those who aided in creating it hoped it would, and intended that it should, do.

PROTECTIVE MEASURES IN LIFE INSURANCE.

The general idea on which Mr. HUSTED rests his proposition for the appointment of a commission to consider the subject of life insurance legislation is good. There is need of a reorganization of the Insurance Department of this State, and the enactment of a comprehensive and well-balanced law for the regulation of companies in the interest of policy-holders and the public. And the attainment of both these ends might be more effectually secured by the labors of commissioners who bring to the inquiry the special knowledge which an intelligent treatment of life insurance requires, than by the individual action of members of the Legislature, subject only to the revision of its ordinary committees. The difficulty is in securing the appointment of proper commissioners. Without impeaching the integrity of the Governor, we cannot ignore his personal and professional affiliations in the matter of insurance, or the influences that are brought to bear whenever stringent remedial measures are suggested. The influence exercised by the department—judging of it by experience—is more likely to be on the side of the companies than of the public; and the companies most disposed to interfere are invariably those which seek to shape legislation with a view to their own protection. Bearing these contingencies in mind, it is impossible to be hopeful as to the results of Mr. HUSTED'S measure. He must furnish stronger guarantees than are embraced in a permissive bill, which leaves the appointment of commissioners to Gov. ROBINSON, "by and with the consent" of a Senate Committee whose voice has never yet been heartily raised in behalf of life insurance reform. A joint committee, representing the two chambers, with a really competent secretary unconnected in any capacity with companies, would for many reasons be preferable. The composition of the committee would be open to independent criticism; we could estimate the probable value of its labors in advance; and its results would be left to stand upon their merits, with none of the factitious authority claimed for the recommendations of a commission. In either case, as the Insurance Department is one of the things to be reformed, its relation to the inquiry to be conducted should be in all respects subordinate.

It is not necessary to await the slow process of such an inquiry before determining the expedience of legislation to regulate the amalgamation of life companies, and to provide for the winding up of those which may be proved to be insolvent. The evils of the present system, or want of system, are too palpable to be disputed. And as it is all but certain that the next twelve months will be more prolific of exposures and collapses than the last, immediate precautions are required to prevent the carrying out of frauds like that which New-Jersey justice has fortunately prevented. The points to be covered are few and obvious. It is not desirable to forbid amalgamations. What is wanted is (first) conclusive evidence as to the solvency of the companies concerned, and (second) the consent of a given proportion of the policy-holders to be absorbed. Subject to these conditions, amalgamation, in the present depressed state of the business, is a policy to be encouraged rather than prohibited. Its encouragement, however, presupposes the absolute efficiency of the Department and the independence of its administration. Not less urgent is the want of change in the management of the affairs of insolvent companies. Receiverships are well in their way, but they are slow, costly, and withal indifferent to the equities of a case. Next to a correct understanding of the position of a company, stands the realization of its assets and their pro rata division among the policy-holders. In such a matter there should be no room for conflict between the Department and the Receiver as to the custody or distribution of any portion of the funds. Their relative rights should be determined, and all obstacles to a prompt apportionment removed.

Fraudulent amalgamation is bearing fruit in Missouri. The telegraph reports the indictment at St. Louis of the President of the Columbia Life Company, who is also a Director of the Life Association of America, and of the Actuary of both companies, for perjury. The particular offense is said to be the making and swearing to false statements of the condition of the Columbia Life. The case, however, is known to have grown out of the tendency to amalgamate which weak and dishonestly-managed companies have for some time past displayed. The law of Missouri offered no hindrance to the multiplication of companies, and no intelligent observer could have doubted what the end of most of them would be. The first pinch of hard times brought tribulations upon them. Their earliest device was amalgamation, as though the absorption of one unsound company by another equally unsound could result in honest benefit to either. Then came a more criminal device. One company borrowed the assets of another for the purpose of making a statement, returning them when the exigency was over. The transaction involved false statements on both sides—one company swearing that it possessed assets which, in truth, it had borrowed; and the other that it possessed assets which, in truth, it had transferred for use to another. Out of a transaction of this sort, probably, has come the indictment of two of the officers of the Columbia Company, whose downfall must seriously affect the Life Association, which is even more disgracefully implicated in other exposures. The Life Association of America has an agency in New-York, and at the end of 1875 had 2,279 policies in force in this State. We have not heard that the Superintendent at Albany has revoked its permission to transact business here, or that he has even opened his eyes to the revelations affecting its condition which have been made elsewhere. In his amiable desire to prophesy smooth things, he has overlooked transactions to which the Life Association was a party, and which have led to its expulsion from Kentucky. New-York tolerates what Kentucky punishes. The Insurance Commissioner of the latter State has published the documents and facts which led him to revoke the licenses of the company's agents, and they are sufficient, not only to justify his action, but to excite wonder at the blindness or the indifference of the New-York authority. To secure control of the management of the St. Louis (now Columbia) Life Insurance Company, the Association expended $275,000 of its policy-holders' funds in a manner of which no explanation has been given; it withdrew $900,000 of the assets of the St. Louis Life; to avert suspicion from the latter, it retransferred temporarily nearly one-third of this amount, and then transferred it back to its own vaults. This is a specimen of the trickery employed by the Life Association to consummate its plans, and it is not easy to decide whether the faith of its policy-holders or of the public will be most shaken by the exposure. An application is to be made by the Insurance Department of Missouri for the appointment of a Receiver for the Columbia Company.

The same officer, among other suggestions for the amendment of the Missouri Insurance laws, proposes that he shall be enabled at any time to examine the affairs of a company, precisely as a bank superintendent may examine the affairs of a bank—without preliminary notice, and without waiting for any special statement on the part of the company. The warning now given affords time to the officers of a company for adjusting its affairs by exceptional methods, as in the case now brought to light at St. Louis. The recommendation is a judicious one, but it is made too late to restore confidence in the efficiency of the Missouri Department, which has allowed flagrant mismanagement to go unchecked. St. Louis has winked at more life insurance frauds than any other city of its size in the United States.

Moved by this fact, perhaps, the Governor of the neighboring State of Kansas declares his lack of faith in State supervision. "The State certificate of solvency," he says, "has proved in the past no security for insurers." Gov. BAGLEY, of Michigan, while praising the efficiency of the State Commissioner in respect of fire insurance, admits that he has not been able to protect holders of life policies from fraud and loss. The Continental policies held in Michigan amount to $2,700,000, and, so far as the State goes, they are unprotected. "In the case of failure," remarks the Governor, "each policy-holder must look out for himself, and as each one's interest is small, compared to the whole, the Receiver or Assignee disposes of the assets for the benefit of himself and the stockholders if he sees fit so to do, and the policy-holder is left as chief mourner." There is more truth than poetry in this aspect of the situation. The Governor discerns other troubles for policy-holders, chief among which are the varying and arbitrary conditions imposed and the openings they leave for litigation when the policies mature. His suggestion is that the State shall "designate a form of insurance policy, always non-forfeitable," and permit no other to be used in the State. The insurance world is not ripe for the discussion of indisputability; and for other occasions of forfeiture the Massachusetts law provides a remedy.

BOYTON'S MISTAKES.

Capt. PAUL BOYTON is at present cruising in Italian waters. Not very long ago he spent eighty-three consecutive hours in the river Po; since then he has floated down the Arno; and he is now engaged in descending the Tiber. Of course, if he likes this style of yachting, it is his own concern, but to most men it is painful to see an alleged fellow-being wasting so much time and energy by stubbornly clinging to obsolete methods of navigation.

Every one knows that Capt. BOYTON wears a life-preserving dress, in which he floats on his back in water, and propels himself either with a paddle or a small sail. It is difficult to see how he can find much pleasure in this pursuit. He is in no danger of sinking unless he knocks a hole in himself by running on a sharp reef, but he is compelled to remain in a tedious and uncomfortable position. If he were able to go on deck, so to speak, and stretch his legs by walking up and down his abdomen, or if he could go aloft and scan the horizon from the lofty elevation of his nose, the wearisome sameness of his voyages would be to some extent broken up. Owing to the way in which he is constructed, these recreations are impossible, and he can only vary the monotony of paddling head first by occasionally backing astern and slowly forcing his blunt boots through the water.

These inconveniences are, however, unavoidable, so long as Capt. BOYTON persists in converting himself into a sea-going vessel. Where he is at fault is in his stubborn refusal to avail himself of modern improvements in the art of propulsion. Whether we regard him as a sailing or a paddling craft, he is equally behind the age, and he has even failed to adopt the most efficient means of securing speed and weatherly qualities when under sail. He made a grave mistake when he had himself cat-rigged instead of cutter-rigged. He carries but one sail, and when he is running before a fresh breeze and rolling heavily—as he inevitably must, in consequence of his depth of hold and the dead weight of his skirt pockets—he is very apt to roll the extremity of his boom under, and thus incur the risk of a capsize. Had he adopted the cutter-rig, he could have safely scudded before a gale of wind under his foresail alone, his mainsail being snugly stowed and his topmast housed. A graver mistake, however, was his failure to provide himself with a centre-board, or even a temporary false keel. Owing to this unaccountable omission, he cannot beat to windward, and he makes an enormous amount of lee-way when sailing with a beam wind. Hence, unless he has the wind directly astern or on his quarter, his sail is worse than useless. It is idle to say that this is the fault of his model. His model is well enough, though he was evidently not designed for speed, but no light-draught man without either keel or centre-board can go to windward. For Capt. BOYTON to claw off a lee-shore under sail would be an absolute impossibility, and if ever he finds himself in such a situation, and his paddle breaks down, he may make up his mind that he will have to abandon himself to his underwriters and claim a total loss.

Doubtless, Capt. BOYTON'S friends will assert that his sail is intended to be used only as an auxiliary to his paddle, or as a final resort in case of any accident to the latter, and that in this respect he resembles the old-fashioned paddle-wheel steamers. But by what possible course of reasoning can either they or Capt BOYTON justify this imitation of an obsolete model? It is impossible that Capt. BOYTON does not know that the screw has completely driven out the paddle. It is true that he has the legal right to adopt any propelling machinery that he may fancy, but when he exhibits himself to the Europeans as the latest specimen of American marine architecture, he has no right to produce the impression that we are ignorant of the screw. It is possible that he may be in some way connected with the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, which, a few years ago, built a number of large paddle-wheel ships for the Pacific trade, long after the superior speed and economy of screw propellers had been demonstrated. Still, this would not be a sufficient excuse for his worse than folly, and the only way in which his conduct can be explained is upon the almost incredible hypothesis that he is ignorant of the screw.

Had this man fitted himself with a light three-bladed screw, driven by a small engine, using alcohol or petroleum instead of coal, he would have reflected some credit upon human ship-builders. He would have secured a much higher rate of speed than he can now command, and without the immense consumption of tissue which the steady use of the paddle requires. By dispensing with the cumbrous paddle, he would have had plenty of room for carrying fuel and fresh water, besides an additional quantity of freight. Of course, his machinery should have been of the simplest character, and as light as would have been consistent with strength, but there is no doubt that if he had gone to some prominent English or Scotch engine-builder he could have had light and powerful machinery put into him at much less cost than his continued use of the paddle has involved.

In addition to these grave defects, it is generally conceded that Captain BOYTON'S interior arrangements are wretchedly unsatisfactory. He is so badly ventilated that after a voyage of a few hours' duration he is entirely prostrated with excessive heat. He has never been coppered since he was first launched, and has hence been obliged to go on the dry-dock at frequent intervals in order to be thoroughly scrubbed. It may be granted that he is perfectly tight, and has never yet leaked a drop, but it is not certain that this is an advantage. A very slight leak, which would require him to use his pumps for ten or fifteen minutes every day, would not injure his cargo, but would tend to preserve the wood in the neighborhood of his keelson, and to keep his joints and butts swelled.

These criticisms are made, not in any spirit of hostility to Capt. BOYTON, who is probably stanch and seaworthy. When, however, he enters a foreign port with the American flag at his peak, and throws himself open for inspection as a specimen of what American builders can do, we have a right to demand that he should reflect credit upon his countrymen. Let him make the changes in his rig, machinery, and general fitting up which have been suggested, and we will then be able to feel proud of him. Until he does this he may be very sure that although he may astonish Frenchmen and other landsmen, no American sailor or ship-builder can look upon him with any real complacency.

AN OBSTRUCTIVE REPUBLIC.

Nearly all of the Central American Republics, as well as those of South America, possess something which is in the nature of a monopoly. Costa Rica has a first-rate coffee trade; Honduras monopolizes the best mahogany forests on the continent; Peru fairly exists on its guano deposits and nitrate of silver beds, and the United States of Colombia are maintained by Panama, which controls the railroad transit of the Isthmus. It is a real misfortune to the world that the narrow neck of land connecting the two continents should be in the possession of weak and ill-governed States. Nicaragua has lately been fully conscious of owning a valuable franchise for an inter-oceanic canal, and she seems determined to make the most of it. Just as Colombia has subsisted on the Panama Railroad transit, and Peru has flourished on guano and nitrates, Nicaragua proposes to draw subsistence indefinitely from her canal facilities. The Republic could no more build a canal across the country, from ocean to ocean, than it could build a railroad to the moon. It is the misfortune, rather than the fault of Nicaragua that it no sooner has an accumulation of specie in the national depositories than there happens a revolution. The Republic is always poor; it always will be in that condition until a new race of people supplant that which now misgoverns the country. But the transit route is as good as a mine to Nicaragua. To be sure, the revenues to be derived theretrom are only prospective; but the Republic will drive a hard bargain for the right of way, and, when all is done, the Nicaraguans will have a semi-annual revolution to determine who shall have the tolls to be levied and collected on the commerce of the world. Meantime, Nicaragua, unable to construct the great water-way, tranquilly sits on the most feasible route, and will not budge without being guaranteed a handsome income for ever after.

The Government of the United States has conducted the most complete and satisfactory of all the surveys for an inter-oceanic canal to connect the two oceans. Of the expeditions commanded by Commander SELFRIDGE, that which surveyed the Napipi route made the most favorable report. The more northern routes on the Isthmus of Darien are now considered impracticable. But, for various reasons, the Tehuantepec Isthmus seems to offer more encouragement to an inter-oceanic canal enterprise than any part of the narrow Isthmus of Darien. For a long time, since the conclusion of SHUFELDT'S surveys, the Government of the United States has been treating with that of Nicaragua for a convention to allow this great work to be begun by the Americans. Negotiations were in a forward state a few days since, and it was thought that a satisfactory treaty could be sent to the Senate before the end of this session. Naturally, our Government considers it highly desirable that the building of the canal shall be in the hands of our own citizens, and that the management of the enterprise, when completed, shall be intrusted to its originators and constructors. It is not pretended that Nicaragua could furnish anything more than the right of way with which Nature has endowed her. But the petty intrigues of the Central American Republic have embarrassed the course of negotiations, and now threaten to defeat them altogether. There is in Nicaragua a considerable foreign interest which is hostile to the United States, and is ready to destroy any scheme which might result in giving the much-coveted right of way to our people. As the Nicaraguans are themselves jealous of powerful neighbors, and are also disposed to make the most possible out of their route, they are not agreeable customers to deal with in this affair. Just at the moment of concluding the treaty, a report comes that the Nicaraguan Government has decided to make a contract with MEIGGS, the famous American railroad builder in Peru and Chili, and that he will build the canal. This seems preposterous, unless we take it for granted that MEIGGS merely represents a powerful association of capitalists. MEIGGS has shown himself to be a man of extraordinary energy and executive ability. Although he fled as a defaulter and in disgrace from the United States, he has developed rare faculties in his later career in South America. His proposition to take this gigantic contract to build an inter-oceanic ship canal is characteristic of the man. But daring though he is, it is not possible that he desires anything more than control of the franchise.

It is most unfortunate that this mighty enterprise, so long the dream of geographers and engineers, should be at the disposal of the little politicians who usually control Central American affairs. But it so happens that the Republic of Nicaragua is situated on a practicable canal route, by which the voyage from New-Orleans to Hong Kong may be shortened nearly 10,000 miles, and the voyage from New-York to the same port be made nearly 2,000 miles less than by the way of the Isthmus of Panama. It is likely, however, that the same causes which have interfered to prevent a favorable treaty between the United States and Nicaragua will operate to the disadvantage of other powers desirous of a treaty. It is well known that the reported application of MEIGGS is not the only obstacle in the way of the treaty now being negotiated. The Nicaraguan Government has been persistent in its demands; it is determined that the canal, if it is ever built, shall be like a toll-road for the enrichment of the Republic. The prosperous example of Colombia has not been without its effect upon Nicaragua. The Republic is disposed to drive a hard bargain, and to sit down at ease by a highway for the commerce of nations, absorbing revenues which it has not earned. The danger is that the highway will not be built during this generation.

THE STEAMER OLD COLONY.

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 9.—The steamer Old Colony, of the Newport and New-York Line, broke her crank-pin last night, off Stratford. She was towed to Point Judith by a New-Bedford propeller, and thence taken to Newport by the revenue cutter [illegible]

ALBANY.

GENERAL LEGISLATIVE BUSINESS.

THE STREET-CLEANING BILL REPORTED FAVORABLY—MORE NEW-YORK BILLS—REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES—BUSINESS IN THE SENATE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Feb. 9, 1877.

Speaker Sloan desiring to go home this week, and the business of the morning being mainly routine, he rattled it off with unusual rapidity, checked unnecessary talking, stopped the irregular introduction of bills by unanimous consent, knocked the breath out of Gen. Spinola on a point of order, settled the weekly adjournment question without talk, and adjourned the House about 1 o'clock, almost in the instant that Mr. Alvord made the motion, thereby affecting a great saving of the time and patience of the House. Among the big bundle of reports, adverse and favorable, which the Committee on Cities sent in this morning, the bill introduced by Mr. Cowdin in relation to cleaning the streets of New-York, came in with a recommendation for its passage. Mr. Mitchell, in behalf of his Democratic colleagues, dissented from the report of the committee on the ground that if the work of cleaning the streets be taken from the Police and let by contract, the letting of the contracts should not be given to the Police Board, but should be lodged with a board composed of the Mayor, Controller, Commissioner of Public Works, and President of the Board of Health.

The bill to provide for the completion of the Third District Court-house was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Mitchell introduced a bill, by request of the petitioners whose petitions accompanied it, to authorize the Mayor, Controller, and one of the Tax Commissioners, acting as a board, to hear the claims of the proprietors of the rooms used as Police Courts in the annexed district during the time from March 17, 1874, to the 17th day of August, 1875. There were two courts, one at the corner of Third avenue and the Southern Boulevard, the other at the corner of Washington avenue and One Hundred and Seventy-sixth street.

Mr. Strahan introduced a bill, accompanied by a memorial from the Mayor, Controller, Commissioner of Public Works, and the Corporation Counsel. The memorial explains the bill, which, though of the most formidable proportions, is simple in its object. It appears that by the act of 1871 the City acquired rights to draw water when needed from the natural lakes in Putnam and Westchester Counties; but through some error in drawing up the bill these rights were not sufficiently secured. The consequence has been that the owners of property adjoining the lakes have sued the City for taking water from them, and the only way in which the City could, under the present law, acquire complete rights over the lakes would be by buying the whole of the ground adjoining on them. The new bill is to supply the legal and technical deficiencies of the act of 1871. This is a most important bill for the City of New-York, but it is opposed by all Putnam County, where the property-owners want to compel the City to buy their land. Some difficulty is anticipated in its passage. It went to the Committee on Cities.

Mr. Coulter's bill to reduce the fare on the Elevated Railroad 50 per cent. was reported from the Railroad Committee this morning adversely. Mr. Coulter moved that the report lie on the table, which the House permitted, lying on the table being another term for allowing the bill to die quietly instead of being directly killed.

The following bill was introduced by Dr. Hayes this morning. It is general in character but evidently local in application:

Any railroad company * * * which may have been unable from any cause to begin the construction of its road and expend thereon 10 per cent. on the amount of its capital, as required by the amendment to said act passed April 25, 1867, the time for the completion of whose road as required by said amended act has not yet expired, shall hereby have the time for the completion of the railroad it was authorized to construct extended for a further term of two years beyond the time heretofore limited by said amended act; and any failure to begin construction and expend 10 per cent. of its capital shall not work a forfeiture of its corporate powers.

Dr. Hayes also introduced a bill declaring that no insurance company of any kind shall at any time of its organization use a corporate name or title which is already in use by an existing organization. The Superintendent of Insurance is authorized to reject any name which, by its similarity to one already in use, he may consider would lead to confusion and uncertainty.

Mr. Webb introduced an important bill to protect life and property on railroads, which was evidently suggested by the Ashtabula accident. By its provisions, the State Engineer and Surveyor is required to examine all bridges, viaducts, and other structures upon the railroads of the State, at least once in every four months. He is required to condemn any structure he may find unsafe, and to notify the company of that fact. The company is required to forthwith strengthen and repair such unsafe structure; and if they refuse to do so, a fine of $100 a day shall be inflicted upon them for every day after the thirtieth day following the day on which notice was served upon the company by the State Engineer.

At the request of Mr. Orr, of Erie, a bill for some local object was passed by the House this morning, without being either printed or considered. The same thing is done about once a week, at the request of members. It was a bill passed in this way that the Governor yesterday returned accompanied by a sharp veto message. Mr. Purdy, when his name was called to vote on Mr. Orr's bill, rose to excuse himself from voting, and for once, by the way, made a few brief and sensible remarks, calling the attention of the House to the absurdity and danger of passing bills without any one knowing what they were. The bill was passed, however, and the only remedy for this pernicious practice is for some one to pluck up sufficient courage to refuse consent when unanimous consent is asked to rush a bill through.

THE SENATE.

Senator Gerard introduced a bill to prevent the poisoning of passengers on emigrant ships resulting from fumigation. Several deaths of children and many cases of sickness of adults have occurred from the carelessness of the Health Officer of the Port of New-York, or his assistants, in the use of materials employed in fumigation. Drinking-cups and other utensils on the ships have been used by the Health Officer in dipping sulphuric acid and other poisonous liquids, and by neglecting to cleanse them after being thus used, much sickness and suffering have been caused to emigrants for which the steam-ship companies in several instances have been held liable in damages. The bill makes the Health Officer and his employes civilly and criminally liable for neglect and carelessness in the use of disinfecting fluids from which serious results shall follow.

On motion of Senator Woodin, the four bills introduced by him last week and favorably reported, relating to the offices of County Clerk, Register, Coroners, and Commissioner of Jurors, were made the special order for Tuesday next.

Senator Prince introduced a bill incorporating "The Cathedral of St. John," in the Diocese of Long Island. Bishop Littlejohn and his associates are made the first incorporators and are permitted to purchase, hold, and convey for all the legitimate purposes of the corporation, property whose annual income shall not exceed $250,000.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ORDERS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—Capt. L. A. Kimberly is ordered to command the Omaha; Capt. William P. McCann is ordered to command the Lackawanna, on the Pacific Station; Lieut. L. C. Logan is ordered to duty at the Naval Observatory, at Washington; Lieut. Thomas E. Grove to the Pensacola Navy-yard; Lieut. Marcus B. Buford to the Monongahela, at Baltimore; Lieut. Albert C. Berry to the Franklin, at New-York; Master Charles K. Galloway to temporary duty at the Naval Academy; Capt. Edward Simpson, detached from the command of the Omaha, is ordered home; Capt. James A. Green is detached from the Lackawanna and ordered home; Lieut. Commander Charles E. Clark is detached from the command of the Monocacy and ordered home; Lieut. Thomas A. Dubieta is detached from the Pensacola Navy-yard and placed on waiting orders; Ensign William H. Slack is detached from the Franklin and ordered to the Naval Observatory.

HIGH ART IN BOSTON.

CONSECRATION OF TRINITY CHURCH.

AN EVENT OF NO ORDINARY CHARACTER—A LARGE CONGREGATION PRESENT—DISTINGUISHED CLERGYMEN IN ATTENDANCE—IMPRESSIVE RELIGIOUS CEREMONIES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 9.—An event of no ordinary character was the consecration here to-day of the new Trinity Church (Rev. Phillips Brooks) just completed, at an expense of fully $750,000, and with not a dollar of debt. The consecration services attracted a congregation of people representative of the culture and wealth of the city. Among those of the laity present were Gov. Rice, ex-Gov. Bullock, of Worcester; Chief Justice Gray, Mayor Prince, Robert C. Winthrop, and Martin Brimmer, and among the clergy of other denominations were Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody, of Harvard College; Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Rev. Robert Laird Collier, Rev. Dr. S. K. Lothrop, Rev. Chandler Robbins, D. D., Rev. Rufus Ellis, Rev. Dr. Miner, and Rev. Henry W. Foote, of King's Chapel. The services began at 11 o'clock, when the magnificent building was filled. The services were altogether formal. At just 11 the great organ pealed forth the processional. The long line of prelates and clergymen included a majority of the settled ministers in the diocese, and many from New-York and other places. Right Rev. Bishop Paddock headed the procession, and following him came Right Rev. Horatio Potter, Bishop of New-York, Right Rev. William Woodruff Niles, Bishop of New-Hampshire, and Right Rev. M. A. Dewolfe Howe, Bishop of Central Pennsylvania. The Bishop of Massachusetts sat at the right of the communion table, the Bishop of New-York on the opposite side, and facing the congregation were two other prelates of the Church. The line of Presbyters was headed by the Rector, Rev. Phillips Brooks, who, with the venerable Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Sr., of New-York, and Rev. Dr. George Zabriskie Gray, Dean of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, sat to the right of the Bishops, Rev. Dr. A. H. Vinton, Preacher of the Day, Rev. Henry C. Potter, of Grace Church, New-York, and Rev. Dr. S. P. Parker, of Sheffield, Mass., being installed at the other side of the chancel. The other clergy, robed in surplices, were seated without the chancel rail. The service of consecration began with the recital of the verses of the Psalm, Domini est Terra, by the Bishop of the diocese and the clergy alternately. As soon as the ministers were seated the instrument of donation and request to consecrate were read by Charles Henry Parker, Esq., Senior Warden of the parish, and after the consecration prayers and litany had been said by the Bishop, the sentence of consecration, giving the episcopal sanction, was read by Rev. Dr. W. R. Huntington, Rector of All Saints Church, Worcester. Morning prayer to the Venite was read by Rev. Dr. T. S. Yocom, Rector of St. Paul's, Staten Island, the proper Psalms for the service being given by Dr. Richard Newton, Rector of Epiphany Church, Philadelphia. The first and second lessons were read respectively by Rev. Arthur Brooks, of the Church of the Incarnation, New-York, and Rev. C. A. L. Richards, of St. John's, Providence. The creed was said by Rev. J. A. Paddock, D. D., Rector of St. Andrews, Brooklyn, and brother of the Bishop of the diocese. The other prayers were said by Rev. D. Burroughs, of Christ's Church, Boston, and after the singing of the hymn, "I'll wash my hands in innocence," the antecommunion service was begun by Rev. Dr. Tyng, of New-York. The admonition beginning "Hear also what our Lord Jesus Christ saith," with the prayer which follows, was said by Bishop Niles. Rev. Dr. Potter, of New-York, read the Epistle, and Rev. Dr. Gray, of Cambridge, the Gospel.

After the hymn beginning "With one consent let all the earth," the sermon by Rev. Dr. Vinton, Rector of Emanuel Church, was given. It was a very eloquent and impressive discourse founded on the text: "And I saw no temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the Temple of it."—Rev. xxi., 22. The administration of the Lord's Supper followed the sermon, the Bishop of the diocese consecrating the elements, and there being many communicants, both of the clergy and laity. The offertory sentences were read by Rev. Arthur Brooks, the prayer for the church militant was offered by Rev. Dr. L. P. Parker, and the exportation and confession were read by Right Rev. Bishop Howe, the absolution being pronounced by Bishop Potter. The prayer of humble access was made by the celebrant. The musical portion of the service was rendered by the regular church choir—Miss Alice Parker, Miss Esther Morse, Dr. S. W. Langmaid, and H. M. M. Aiken—and was very fine.

Trinity is one of the wealthiest parishes of the Episcopal Church in this country, and its pulpit has been graced by some of the greatest preachers in the denomination. Among these have been George Washington Doane, afterward Bishop of New-Jersey; John Henry Hopkins, late Bishop of Vermont; Thomas March Clark, the present Bishop of Rhode Island; Manton Eastburn, the last Bishop of this diocese, and Jonathan M. Wainwright, once Bishop of New-York.

DESCRIPTION OF THE NEW EDIFICE.

A MIXTURE OF SPANISH AND MOORISH ARCHITECTURE—THE GROUND PLAN OF THE BUILDING A GREEK CROSS—THE INTERIOR DECORATED THROUGHOUT IN OILS—GREEN AND GOLD THE PREVAILING COLORS—STATUES OF ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL.

The church built by the congregation of Mr. Phillips Brooks to replace that destroyed in the great fire has been the occasion of what must be considered a new departure in art in the United States. The building, which was erected by Messrs. Gambrill & Richardson, of New-York, occupies a triangular bit of ground, with rear on Clarendon street and front on the irregular square which lies before the new Art Museum. The quiet tones of the façade and the central tower, which rises behind and beyond it, contrast strongly with the brilliant colors and bas-reliefs of light stone that adorn the portion of the Art Museum already completed. For this new and magnificent edition of old Trinity is composed in two shades of a soft-colored stone, with only the higher roofs of the central tower bright with light-colored tile-work. On Clarendon street and the north corner of the irregular triangle stands the chapel and vestry-room, connecting with the main building by a series of pillared, or "cloistered" ways. The church itself is most strongly distinguished by the great central tower before mentioned. This overhangs or spans the widest space of the church, where it forms the centre of a short Greek cross. The head of the cross is composed of the apse or chancel; the wings or transepts are comparatively shallow, while the broad foot of the cross is bounded by the entrance doors and the façade. A building after this plan is naturally a very solid, short, and lofty structure. Its character is that of a closely-built edifice intended for a Northern climate. Yet it is not Gothic. Outside, and even more so within, its character is Saracenic by origin, or, to speak more correctly, Romanesque. Indeed, it is said to approach somewhat to a church in Auvergne, France, where Spanish and Moorish influences have affected the architecture. Mr. Richardson has had almost exclusive control of the building; it is mainly due to his exertions that the interior has been decorated after the fashion about to be described, and in fact that the good people of Boston had so fine a show yesterday, on Consecration Day.

The new departure in art alluded to consists in this: Trinity presents the first instance where a church has been decorated throughout in oils—or a near substitute for oils—by artists of the highest talent. Mr. Richardson should have credit, not alone for succeeding in influencing the committee to enter on an experiment novel to America, but for selecting an artist of New-York whose cultivation, both general and professional, fits him especially for an undertaking of such magnitude. Mr. John La Farge is not a popular artist, but the best art is seldom popular; Mr. Richardson selected him because he was the kind of man that the most careful committee in Europe would have pitched upon. To assist him, Mr. La Farge, last Autumn, called from New-York Messrs. Francis Lathrop and Auguste St. Gaudens, while Boston furnished two more able young artists, Messrs. Frank D. Millett and G. W. Maynard. The time allowed for the completion of the work was ridiculously short, but, in spite of the assurances from croakers that the thing could not be done in time, yesterday saw almost everything completed, save certain minor details which will not interfere with the general scenic effect.

Owing to the conformation of the building—a lofty tower, with chancel, transepts, and nave running from it to the four points of the compass—the façade is not imposing, nor is there, from that view, any special evidence of the order of architecture to which it belongs. But when one has entered the doors and penetrated through the vestibule into the nave, the Moorish character is at once apparent. The effect within is architecturally very imposing. The nave joins with the great central space under the tower by one of those fine horse-shoe arches, typical of Moorish architecture, while its companion arch above the apse is seen beyond. To this style of architecture the decorations of the roof and walls of the nave—from sketches originally by Mr. Francis Lathrop—have been tastefully adapted. They are variegated after an Oriental cast, and in choice of harmonious colors give a sombre magnificence to the first view. Blues, greens, dull reds, and gold have been cast in scientific confusion over this ceiling and across the walls. Where the windows that light the nave cut into the swell of the ceiling, gold has been laid on in broad tones, while the eye on passing forward into the main church is carried along by repetitions of the same note on the capitals of the four great pillar-masses that support the tower, and on the roof of the chancel. From the vestibule doors, which are handsome affairs of dark wood with small panes of stained glass let in, the gigantic decorative figures on the east walls of the tower already appear and beckon one on.

These consist of a St. Paul on the right and a St. Peter on the left of the arch leading into the chancel or apse. Strictly decorative in design, they nevertheless affect one with something of a personality in themselves. Yet they cast no shadows on the wall where they are painted, and maintain the reserved attitudes which religion has given to figures of their symbolic nature. St. Paul is dressed in a green cloak. This figure was painted by the young New-York sculptor, St. Gaudens. St. Peter has a white drapery, while the favorite green note that reverberates from every wall is repeated in his costume by his body-coat underneath. He holds the keys, although as a rule Mr. La Farge does not seem to have affected greatly the use of the conventional symbols in connection with their various figures. Between these two great saints, and higher up, where the arch has left comparatively little space on the wall, Mr. La Farge has painted two groups of angels looking out of some kind of celestial window. They are very lovely in tones and exhibit—it was understood that Mr. La Farge himself is responsible for most of the painting on this wall—the wonderful qualities of that artist as a colorist.

In fact, the colors used on the inner walls of Trinity are so powerful and harmonious that they remind one at once of the new expression now used in painting, the orchestration of colors. The highest art has been applied to the blending of hues naturally akin, and the avoidance of clashing colors, and the skillful use of one color to raise or depress an adjacent hue. Like a composer, Mr. La Farge and his little corps of assistants have not been content with mere detached melodies, but have woven one into another and artfully reproduced at certain distances the main harmony that seemed to have been lost. The simile will be plain enough to those who remember how the motif of a symphony delights the musical-minded by gradually extricating itself from a mass or sound only to plunge again into another complication. The background on which all the paintings have to stand is a dull red, not always of the same shade. But as to the other colors, the conjecture is hazarded that the motif in the decoration of this church lies in a green which runs from almost black to that peculiar sheeny green gold, such as one sees on certain snakes, or the fine throat-feathers of certain birds, or again on the wing cases of beetles both here and in Brazil. The highest note is reached in an uncompleted figure of St. Thomas, in the north transept.

The method used for these decorations is not fresco. Fresco would not be able to render such vivid colors, even if competent workmen could be procured to lay the plaster fresh for painting every day, nor could fresco be so easily retouched. It is a painting in wax by a kind of encaustic method, with this difference, that heat is applied to the medium which carries the paint. The medium is composed of wax, (either white or yellow,) Venetian turpentine, and common turpentine, together with a little rosin, and is warmed at least once a day. Paints are mixed with this as required and applied to a rather roughly-finished wall. Where it has been possible the spaces to be painted have been treated with some preparation to prevent a too great absorption by the mortar, but the short time allowed for the work has caused a great deal of confusion in this particular, as well as in others. The foregoing applies to the figures on the walls of the tower. The ceilings have been prepared with size and only water-colors used in their decoration. We must leave the transepts and north and south walls of the central tower to another occasion. The apse, which is exclusively occupied by chancel, font, lectern, &c., has its ceiling treated, as before mentioned, in gold, with the dark ribs of its beams showing against it. Between the windows of the semi-circular apse are tablets with gold backgrounds, containing the Lord's Prayer and other inscriptions usually placed in such positions. These tablets are almost the only strongly discordant elements in the church. They are quite out of keeping with the feeling of the rest of the decoration, and are, moreover, badly lettered and (in one case) misspelled. Below them, and above the row of chairs for the clergy, runs a broad, unadorned strip of uniformly colored wall, which is to receive, if the congregation desires it, a procession of figures already sketched out in the fertile brain of the chief painter. Doubtless, if this be completed, it will be Mr. La Farge's greatest work, in comparison to which all his majestic figures here present and his remarkable paintings already known to lovers of art, will be insignificant. As the wall now stands it has no decoration whatever, although manifestly the most important space in the whole church. It is painted of the same color as the four heavy clusters of pillars that uphold the tower. They are of a fine deep olive, a low note, perhaps, of that green conjectured to form the key of the whole system of mural decoration, exclusive of background, in New Trinity.

BURIED ON HIS 102D BIRTHDAY.

The Seneca Falls Courier of the 8th inst. says: "On Monday morning Aaron Easton died in the town of Tyre, being within two days of 102 years old. Mr. Easton was born in New-Jersey, and came to this county in the year 1817, having lived in either this town or Tyre since that time. He was a man of small stature, but possessed of great physical as well as intellectual vigor. At the advanced age of 100 years he boasted of walking several miles to town, and seemed as active as most men of four score. His centennial was duly celebrated upon its arrival, and it was an occasion which he enjoyed. He was probably the oldest man in Western New-York, if not in the entire State. The funeral was held 102 years from the day of his birth.

ARREST OF AN ALLEGED NEGRO MURDERER.

Detectives Dolan and Slevin, of the Fifteenth Precinct, last night arrested a negro named John Allen, of No. 335 West Twenty-eighth street, on the charge of robbing Josephine Johnson, a colored woman, of No. 75 Minnetta lane, of $75 worth of jewelry and clothing. This woman informed the detectives that four months ago Allen robbed and murdered a colored man in Charleston, S. C., and that a reward of $500 was offered by the authorities of that city for his capture. Allen is employed as a waiter in a restaurant in Broadway, near Howard street, and since his arrival in this City has lived with a colored woman named Mary Throps, in West Twenty-eighth street. The Police of Charleston will be communicated with to-day for the verification or denial of the woman Johnson's statement.

LAWLESSNESS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The following was received this afternoon:

GREENSBORO, N. C., Feb. 9.

Commissioner Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C.:

District Attorney Rusk writes Marshal Douglass that at a trial of a distiller before Commissioner Morris, in Henderson County, on the 3d inst., 20 armed and mounted men attacked the court, fatally wounding Harkins, Deputy Marshal. The other officers escaped. The distiller on trial was fatally wounded. I am executing your orders as rapidly as possible.

WAGNER, Revenue Agent.

BUSINESS FAILURE IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Feb. 9.—Cushing, Kirk & McLean, wholesale dealers in boots and shoes at the corner of Wabash avenue and Madison street, this morning filed their petition in voluntary bankruptcy. Their liabilities are $293,000 and assets $100,000. The creditors of the firm are chiefly in Boston and New-York.

WASHINGTON.

THE LOUISIANA REPORT.

VIEWS OF THE HOUSE SPECIAL COMMITTEE THAT VISITED THE STATE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The House Special Committee on Louisiana Affairs made their report to-day, in the course of which they say: In the late canvass the policies pursued by the two parties were essentially different. The Republicans do not appear to have made any strenuous efforts to maintain order and secure a peaceful election. The Democrats, not solely, it is believed, on the part of all of them because of their love of order, but for prudential reasons also—knowing that any violence or disturbance would be seized upon as a pretext for reversing the action of the people at the polls—did counsel the preservation of peace and the observation of law. Upon such a course could they only hope to succeed. The interests of the Republican Party lay in the direction of disturbance and violence, and the past history of that organization in Louisiana assures us its readiness to consult its advantages without scruple as to the means to be employed. The committee conceive that the means by which the large number of the colored votes were secured for the Democratic ticket at the late election, were not such as can be rightfully or legally characterized as intimidation. They were, when stripped of the false presentation made of them by the knavery of those who are to profit by the success of their scheme, no more than such as are resorted to in all the cities and States of this Union at every election in which large public interest is elicited. Conceding for the Returning Board all the judicial dignity claimed for it by the admirers of its unparalleled iniquities, it cannot be denied that, in order to give validity and effect to its decisions, where it has attempted to throw out and reject the returns from polls, the jurisdictional fact required by the statute must affirmatively appear, and, unless that fact does so appear, its action in the case was without jurisdiction, and on its face null and void. The board had no right, under the laws of Louisiana, to throw out or count out the polls and votes they have thrown out and counted out, and their action in that behalf is without authority of law, and void and void. The committee further state that if there is any law in the State of Louisiana providing for the election of Electors of President and Vice President the canvass and compilation of the vote for Electors must be made under the special acts of the State upon that subject, and by a board composed of other persons or officers than those constituting the Returning Board. O. H. Brewster, one of the candidates for election on the Hayes ticket, held on and after the 7th day of November last the office of Surveyor General for the State of Louisiana, and could not therefore be, and was not chosen or appointed Elector.

A. B. Levisse, another candidate for Elector on the same ticket, was United States Commissioner, and was not chosen Elector. Subsequent to Nov. 7, and before Dec. 6, last past, the said Brewster and the said Levisse pretend to have resigned their respective offices of Surveyor General and United States Commissioner When the other Electors pretending to be elected on the same ticket met to cast their votes for President and Vice President, Brewster and Levisse did not meet with them, and the places of said Brewster and Levisse were declared or treated as vacant because of their absence. The other Electors then filled the places of Brewster and Levisse vacant because of their absence with the same, Brewster and Levisse then being present; all of which doings were fraudulent devices to void the constitutional provision which rendered the same void and of no effect in law, even had any of the Electors on said ticket been elected by the people, as they were not. The filling of such vacancies was without authority of law, and conferred no right upon Brewster or Levisse to vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The committee made only such investigation or inquiry into the election and canvass of votes for State officers in Louisiana as was incidental to inquiry as to the general fairness of the election in said State and the result thereof.

The testimony taken discloses the fact that by both the votes actually cast, and the votes as forwarded to and received by the Board of Returning Officers, Nichols was elected Governor of Louisiana by a majority approximating the majorities received by the Tilden Electors, and freed from the condition growing out of the Presidential contest, he would be accepted as the duly elected Governor of Louisiana by the almost universal acclaim of her people.

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

CONGRESSIONAL AID ASKED FOR—A SITE ON BEDLOE'S ISLAND REQUIRED—THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATION.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The President to-day transmitted to Congress a message enclosing a memorial at the request of the committee, composed of many distinguished citizens of New-York, recently appointed to co-operate with a generous body of French citizens, who design to erect in the harbor of New-York a colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world." The memorial is signed by William M. Evarts, E. D. Morgan, William C. Bryant, and others, respectfully asking the concurrence of the President, requesting him to transmit the memorial to Congress, and asking that a site on Bedloe's Island be given, on which to erect the statue in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of American independence.

The President in his Message says: "Very little is asked of us to do, and I hope the wishes of the memorialists may receive your very favorable consideration."

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

HOW THE STATE VOTED FOR TILDEN—INTIMIDATION EVERYWHERE — OPENING OF THE POLLS DELAYED TILL NOON — THE LARGER PART OF THE REPUBLICAN VOTE NOT CAST.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—D. C. Kerns, of Mississippi, testified to-day before the Senate Subcommittee investigating the late elections in Mississippi, that he is Clerk of the Court of Fayette County. At the election in November, 1875, many of the colored voters in Fayette County did not dare to vote the Republican ticket, owing to the fact that the Republican candidate for Treasurer of that county (a colored man) had been shot on the day previous to the election. At the late election the Democrats delayed the opening of the polls until the middle of the day, and then made the voters march to the ballot-box in pairs—a Republican and a Democrat together. When the pairs had finished voting it was time to close the polls, and thus the Republicans were kept from polling a majority of the votes. A large number of colored Republicans were prevented from voting by the closing of the polls.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The Senate this afternoon ratified the extradition treaty between the United States and Spain. The injunction of secresy as to the text of the treaty has not yet been removed.

The following were the balances in the Treasury at the close of business to-day: Currency, $11,054,481; special deposit of legal tenders for redemption of certificates of deposit, $35,525,000; coin, including $54,673,600 in coin certificates, $88,267,600; outstanding legal tenders, $364,984,812.

The President has recognized M. Du Courthial as Consul of France, at New-Orleans; Louis M. Avendano, Consul ad interim of Mexico and its dependencies, at New-Orleans, and James Hunter, Vice Consul of Portugal, at Darien, Ga.

Secretary Morrill's condition is reported somewhat improved to-night, and such as to give encouragement to the hopes for his recovery.

The Smithsonian Institution has received from France a telegram announcement of a comet discovery by Borelly, Feb. 8, in right ascension, 17 hours 13 minutes, declension one degree 37 minutes south; daily motion, plus 1 minute, 44 seconds in right ascension, and plus 3 degrees, 7 minutes in declination. The comet has a brilliant round nucleus.

Senator Ferry, President pro tem. of the Senate, to-day received from Montana a feather over two feet long from a black eagle, the sender saying he wanted him to certify the election of President with it, and asking him in case Hayes is counted in to use the quill part; and in case Tilden is counted in to use the feathered end.

Representative Willis, of New-York City, to-day presented 15 immense petitions signed by merchants, bankers, and business men generally in different parts of the country, asking for a repeal of the war taxes on banks, bankers, and banking institutions, which were appropriately referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, before whom a bill to that effect is pending which provides for a repeal of all taxes on bank deposits and bank capital.

Senator Mitchell says his report on Oregon affairs is not yet finished; that when finished it will be submitted to the full Committee on Privileges and Elections for their consideration; and, further, that the notice of it recently published is without authority, and is in the main incorrect.

Hon. Fernando Wood's Committee on Military Interference in the South agreed to-day, by a strict party vote, to take testimony in advance of the printing of the documents recently sent by the President to the House. Alexander C. Haskell, Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee of South Carolina, testified that everything was peaceful, and that the State authorities were competent to preserve good order.

AMUSEMENTS.

ENGLISH OPERA.

Ambroise Thomas' well-known "Mignon" was sung at the Academy of Music last evening. The performance, which was given for the benefit of Miss Kellogg, was largely attended, and its progress was marked by frequent tokens of approval on the part of the audience. Miss Kellogg, who has been kept from the stage by indisposition since the week commenced, was complimented by a greeting of exceptional cordiality, and her singing of those familiar numbers of the score which expressiveness and tunefulness long ago commended to popular favor was heartily applauded. "Mignon," however, has been interpreted so often that it would be quite superfluous to enumerate the particular lyric vantage-points of the heroine. As for the prima donna's acting, this, too, was continuously equal to the unwonted variety of which the nature of the character admits, the melancholy posey of the first and last acts being contrasted very happily with the brilliant comedy—if that be not too strong a term—of act the second. William, as heretofore, was allotted to Mr. Maas, whose final romance had to be repeated. Messrs. Turner and Peakes filled the other male rôles, and Filina found a capable representative in Miss Rosewald, who rendered the polonaise with precision and brio. Mrs. Seguin was Frederick. At to-day's matinée, "Faust," with Miss Kellogg, will be the attraction; the performance, it should be remembered, is to be the last of the series.

MISS ABBOTT'S CONCERTS.

Miss Abbott sang for the second time at Chickering Hall, last evening, and renewed the very favorable impression wrought on the occasion of her début. Her voice, as we have already recorded, is of much beauty and force, her phrasing generally artistic and always expressive, and her delivery so earnest and dramatic that a great deal can be expected from her, we should judge, in operatic representations of a not too trying nature. She interpreted, yesterday, a ballad from "Il Guarany," by Gomez; the familiar romance from "Mignon," and the soprano's share of Arditi's duet, "Una Notte a Venezia," besides responding with sundry English ballads to invariable encores. The ballad from "Il Guarany" is a pretentious sort of composition, of considerable difficulty of execution, and, proportionally, of rather slight effect. Its interpretation, however, proved Miss Abbott to be more equal to florid vocalization than we anticipated, and her staccato passages — not to mention certain vocal effec s referred to in a previous article—impressed us as particularly true and brilliant. She rendered the air from "Mignon" with taste and sentiment, but we did not think the change made at its close was in keeping with the character of the melody, or sufficiently effective to be justifiable on that account. The applause, as we have implied, was most generous. Miss Abbott had, as heretofore, the co-operation of Signori Brignoli and Ferranti; of Mr. Case and of Mr. Seifert, a violinist new to local audiences. Mr. Seifert plays with technical skill, but his tone is small and his bowing utterly unequal to the brilliancy of such music as Paganini's or Joachim's, both of whom were represented on the programme. Mr. Case, who executed solos by Wolff and Mathias, has a nervous but vigorous touch and a clean and crisp tone. Thus far his selections have not been happy, for, with the exception of a number by Chopin, he has chosen for performance no piece calculated to reveal anything beyond the purely technical traits of his style.——A matinee concert—the last of the series in which Miss Abbott is concerned—is announced for to-day.

BRIEF MENTION.

"Marion" will be given twice to-day at the New Broadway Theatre.

The Aquarium continues to be open to the public, afternoon and evening.

Mr. Heller will give a matinée entertainment at the Wonder Theatre, to-day.

Two performances of "Around the World in Eighty Days" occur to-day, at Niblo's Theatre.

The first matinée performance of "Fifth Avenue" takes place at Booth's Theatre to-day.

The San Francisco Minstrels will give an entertainment at their opera-house, this afternoon.

"Our Boarding House" will be the attraction, this afternoon and evening, at the Park Theatre.

A matinée representation of "Lemons" may be witnessed to-day at the Fifth Avenue Theatre.

"The Big Bonanza" will be performed this afternoon and this evening at the Olympic Theatre.

"A Morning Call" and "Married Life" will constitute to-day's matinée programme at Wallack's Theatre.

The first matinée performance of "The Danicheffs" may be enjoyed to-day, at the Union Square Theatre.

A concert of vocal and instrumental music, in aid of the relief fund of the Epiphany Guild, will be given at Steinway Hall, this evening. Miss Thursby, Mr. Werner, Mr. Boekelmann, and Mr. Whiffin are to be the principal artists.

SUSPECTED COUNTERFEITERS ARRESTED.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 9.—Alfred Taylor, William Buckley, alias Murphy, James Jones and Vincent Woods, all colored, were arrested to-day by a United States detective, charged with dealing in counterfeit money. It is asserted that they have been passing $10 counterfeit notes of the National Bank of Muncie, Ind., and that they are portion of a gang led by Ogle and McKernan, who were recently arrested.

SENTENCE OF COUNTERFEITERS.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 9.—In the United States District Court to-day, Benjamin T. Shandon, of Logan County, recently convicted of passing counterfeit money, was sentenced to one year in the Penitentiary on each of his charges. John Haff of Alton, was sentenced to one year in the Penitentiary on a similar charge.

PLAN FOR ARCTIC EXPLORATION.

NEW-HAVEN, Feb. 9.—The Chamber of Commerce of this city, at a special meeting this evening, passed resolutions indorsing Capt. Howgate's plan for Polar colonization, and approving the proposed appropriation of $50,000.

THE SOUTH PASS JETTY CHANNEL.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 9.—The man-of-war Plymouth, Commander Barrett, from Pensacola, for New-Orleans, passed through South Pass Jetty Channel this morning at low tide, drawing 19 feet and 6 inches.

KILLED WHILE WALKING ON THE TRACK.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 9.—Mrs. Margaret Kirby, aged 50 years, was killed by an engine of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad this forenoon while walking on the track at Union Factory, near Ellicott Mills.

SUICIDE OF A FARMER.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 9.—Henry Barrows, of Pelham, a farmer, hung himself this morning, while temporarily insane.

OBITUARY.

Albert F. Webster, whose health began to fail two years ago, and who made a voyage to the Sandwich Islands with the hope of relief, died at sea, on board the schooner Bonanza, on the 27th of December. He was well known to the readers of magazines as one of the best and most promising writers of short stories and sketches. The news of his death is a surprise to his friends, his latest letter, dated Nov. 26, having brought tidings of a marked improvement in his health.

TIME'S CHANGES.

"Three hundred years ago," says the Burlington Hawk-Eye, "forks were unknown in England, and a man could scoop up all the green peas he could carry on the flat of his knife and shovel them into his mouth without having his wife stamp on his corns or nudge his elbow and spill the peas all over where his napkin ought to be and never is, and say, in a hoarse, reproachful whisper, 'Why, Bartholomew!'"

TRICHINA IN CONNECTICUT.

The New-Haven Journal of the 9th inst. says: "Recently three more cases of trichina have developed in this vicinity. Three boys living in East Haven with their father were taken ill some time ago, about the time that Mr. Harder and family, living in George street, were prostrated from eating ham containing trichina. The boys kept complaining, and appearing to be sick their father brought one over to Dr. Ruickoldt, who, upon inquiry, learned that they had all eaten of the same ham which had affected Mr. Harder and family so seriously. A boarder at Mr. Harder's, working at the same shop where the boys were, gave them some of the ham to eat while eating dinner at the shop, not knowing then but that it was perfectly good. The boys are thought to be improving. Mr. Harder's wife and one child are still feeling the effects of the trichina severely, the other members of the family having recovered. We learn that Dr. Ruickoldt has a number of this species of animalcule alive and active at his office."

EARLY HISTORY OF ARKANSAS.

In his Message to the Legislature of Arkansas, Gov. Miller says: "It is now 72 years since the laws of the Federal Government were first extended over this portion of the French Territory of Louisiana, and 57 years since the Territory of Arkansas was organized. We claim the prestige of having had the foundation of European civilization laid within our borders 291 years ago. The historic annals of this period, so far as Arkansas is concerned, remain to this day unwritten. The citizens of Louisiana have preserved the French and Spanish records relating to the entire territory of the South-west formerly under the dominion of those nations, but the documents thus preserved are almost unknown to our people. It may be asked, therefore, whether the time has not come for us to make some effort toward rescuing from oblivion the thrilling records of our history; and I submit for your consideration whether it may not be desirable for us to lend aid and encouragement to the compilation of the early history of our State."

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—1 A. M.—For New-England, stationary or rising barometer, north-west, shifting to south-west winds, warmer, partly cloudy weather.

For the Middle Atlantic States, increasing northeast to south-east winds, stationary or higher temperature, falling barometer, and partly cloudy or clear weather.

IN THIS CITY.

The following record shows the changes in the temperature for the past 24 hours, in comparison with the corresponding date of last year, as indicated by the thermometer at Hudnut's pharmacy:

1876.	1877.		1876.	1877.
3 A. M.	34°	26°	3:30 P. M.	43°	38°
6 A. M.	34°	24°	6 P. M.	42°	36°
9 A. M.	37°	26°	9 P. M.	41°	35°
12 M.	42°	33°	12 P. M.	42°	32°

Average temperature yesterday ..... 31.4°
Average temperature for corresponding date last year ..... 39.5°

ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

A. B. Meeker, of Chicago, is at the St. Nicholas Hotel.

Hon. Henry R. Selden, of Rochester, is at the Metropolitan Hotel.

Ex-Gov. J. Gregory Smith, of Vermont, is at the Windsor Hotel.

United States District Attorney Richard Crowley, of Lockport, N. Y., is at the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

Capt. Dickson, of the Third Hussars, British Army, and Hon. W. G. Whiteley, of Delaware, are at the New-York Hotel.

Col. Lopez Fabra and Señor de la Gaudara, of the Spanish Centennial Commission; Charles Parrish, of Wilkesbarre, Penn., and M. Hall Stanton, President of the Philadelphia Board of Education, are at the Astor House.

"Down in the Mouth."

Where there is a continual dropping down into the back of the mouth, with irritation and inflammation of the nasal cavities and throat, with hawking, spitting, and a sense of fullness about the head, be not deceived, or fancy it a simple cold. You are afflicted with that scourge of this climate, Catarrh, the forerunner of Consumption. In its early stages a few bottles of Dr. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY will effect an entire cure. When confirmed, Dr. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY should be used in connection with the Remedy. These standard medicines have been before the public many years, and their use has been attended with the most gratifying success. A full discussion of Catarrh and its rational treatment is contained in The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, a book of over nine hundred pages, illustrated with two hundred and eighty-two engravings, bound in cloth and gilt. Price, post-paid, $1 50. Address Publishing Department, World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y.—Advertisement.

A DULL HEADACHE, COSTIVENESS, LOW Spirits, and no appetite are some of the indications of a bilious attack, arising from a torpid liver. Dr. JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS will soon restore the liver to action, drive all symptoms of biliousness from the system, and assist in bringing about a regular action of the bowels.—Advertisement.

To the Gentlemen of New-York.

We respectfully desire to announce that we have this day reduced the price of our widely popular Silk Hats to $5, and our fashionable Derby Hats to $3. In making this announcement we desire to note a recent reduction in cost of labor as enabling us to meet the exigencies of the times, and to assure you that in emulation of the high character and reputation of our fabrics in the past, we shall aim to produce the Ameridon Hat of the future. Very respectfully,

F. H. AMIDON'S SON,
220 5th av.
—Advertisement.

GOOD HEALTH is one of the greatest of earthly blessings, and bathing is a most important help. Families using B. T. BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP may be sure of a necessary of the bath and toilet, which is alike delicate, pure, and fragrant, fitted alike for infants and adults.—Advertisement.

White Wheat Gluten.

For Dyspeptics. Send for circulars. HEALTH FOOD COMPANY, No. 137 8th st.—Advertisement.

LELAND'S Sturtevant House, New-York. Reduced to $2 and $3 50 per day, with board. Rooms, European plan, $1 per day and upward.—Advertisement.

No business house can afford to be without the electric protection of Holmes Burglar Alarm Telegraph Company, No. 571 Broadway, by their Central Office system. It is the best protection from burglers in the City or New-York, as the houses of H. B. Claflin, J. Horton, and Bacon & Eaton can testify, where burglars have been caught. Beware of imitators, who get a few cents by doing what they see others do, and declare they have a better protection for half the money. They have an exceedingly poor record. We jingle no bells at our door.

First Premium

Awarded by Centennial Exposition to ELECTRO SILICON. The best article for cleaning and polishing silverware and household utensils. Sold by druggists, house furnishers, jewelers, and grocers.

You are not old but have Gray Hair. Why don't you use PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM? You certainly prefer the natural color and vigor to the baldness that follows neglect.

Everdell's, 302 Broadway, elegant Wedding and Ball Cards, Foreign Note Papers, Coat of Arms, lowest prices.

Pomeroy's Trusses—By far the Best in Use. Ask your physician. POMEROY TRUSS CO., 745 B'way.

Let your family have the Witness. It may be worth more than thousands to them.

The official list of unclaimed letters appears in the Witness every Tuesday and Friday.

The Witness will shortly occupy the late Presse Building, in Frankfort st.

Advertisements intended for good families should be sent to the Witness.

MARRIED.

BARBOUR—BARNES.—In the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, Thursday evening, Feb. 8, by Rev. Wm. Ives Budington, D. D., Mr. LUCIUS A. BARBOUR, of Hartford, to Miss HATTIE E. BARNES, daughter of A. S. Barnes, Esq.

HAMMOND—FESSENDEN.—In Brunswick, Me., Feb. 7, by Rev. E. H. Byington, WILLIAM HAMMOND, Esq., of Portland, and SARAH C., daughter of the late Thomas Fessenden, of this City.

DIED.

ATWOOD.—Feb. 8, 1877, Mrs. REBECCA GODFREY, relict of Capt. David Atwood, of Chatham, Mass., in the 79th year of her age.

Funeral at the house of her son-in-law, E. W. Davis, No. 902 Lexington av., Sunday at 2 o'clock P. M. Relatives and friends invited to attend without further notice.

BARRETTO.—In this City, on Friday, Feb. 9, HENRY COSTA, son of the late Francis Barretto.

The relatives and friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend his funeral from St. Andrew's Church, 127th st. and 4th av., on Monday, 12th inst., at 12 o'clock. Train leaves Grand Central Depot at 11:30 A. M.

DENNIS.—Suddenly, on the 8th inst., of apoplexy, THOMAS DENNIS, in the 64th year of his age.

Funeral services at his late residence, in 83d st., seventh house west of 8th av., at 3:30 P. M. on Saturday.

FETTUS.—On Thursday, Feb. 8, 1877, JAMES FETTUS, aged 50.

Funeral on Saturday, 1 o'clock, from his late residence, No. 574 West 47th st. Friends and relatives are invited.

FISK.—At Watertown, Thursday, Feb. 1, 1877, ISAAC HUBBARD FISK, in his 66th year.

FROST.—On Thursday, Feb. 8, LOLA, youngest daughter of William R. and Henrietta B. Frost.

Funeral on Sunday, 11th inst., at 2 o'clock P. M. from the residence of her parents, No. 2b East 33d st. Relatives and friends respectfully invited.

HAWK.—On Friday

FRAUDS IN THE ELECTION.

THE VOTE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

THE CENSUS AND THE ELECTION RETURNS—WHOLESALE FRAUDS DEMONSTRATED BY CONVINCING FACTS AND FIGURES—THE BRAZEN RASCALITY OF THE ADVOCATES OF AN HONEST COUNT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I send you herewith a tabular analysis of the election in North Carolina, which will do something toward explaining how it was that the State gave a Democratic majority of 16,000, and cast a vote 38,000 greater than was ever known before. The table may need some brief explanations.

1. The first column gives the number of adult males in the State in 1870, according to the census reports of the United States by counties. This includes Indians, unnaturalized foreigners, and idiots and lunatics. The second column gives the normal increase of the population in each county since that time. The growth of the State has never exceeded 8 per cent. in any census period, or 5 per cent. in six years. The third column is an aggregate of the first two, or the entire adult male population of each county.

2. The next three columns give the Electoral vote of the State by counties, and the remaining four show the comparison between the adult population and the vote of each county. Where the vote is in excess of the adult male population of a county, the difference is put in the column headed "Excess;" where it is less, the difference is put in the column headed "Deficiency." The two remaining columns merely show the "excess" or "deficiency" in the form of percentage.

3. In connection with these explanations, it should be remembered that the State of North Carolina has been subject to less change as regards her population, and less fluctuation in the rates of increase during the various census decades, hitherto, than any other State of the Union. Having the lowest rate of intelligence, or rather the highest of illiteracy, she has also the minimum grade of enterprise of which the American mind seems capable. A population grading low in wealth and intelligence is always indisposed to change, and there is an almost entire absence of internal migration in the State. During the six years from 1870 until 1876 inclusive, there was an entire absence of any immigration which should affect in any material degree the population of the State. On the contrary, there were certain movements of population, from known and visible causes, which tended materially to reduce its population. First among these causes was the return North of men who settled here in business immediately after the close of the war. As is well known, there was a considerable immigration to this State in 1865-6-7-8. Already in 1870 the return tide had set in, so that a study of the census of that year will disclose the startling fact that there were fewer persons living in the State who were born without its limits in 1870 than in 1860 by several hundreds. From 1870 to 1873, the reign of the Kuklux greatly stimulated the zeal for Northern emigration, until the number of Northern men in the State is hardly a tithe of what were resident here at that time. In further evidence of this outgoing tendency of the population of the State is the fact that three great Northern railroads, having connections and agencies in the State, report about 5,000 tickets sold to different points in the North and West, during the years 1871, 1872, and 1873, the greater part of them being what were known as "emigrant tickets." the traffic having assumed such proportions as to justify special rates to that class of travel, from the middle and western portions of the State. In the east, the decadence of the lumber business, and the almost entire cessation of the shingle business, as well as the decrease in the working of turpentine plantations, has led to the removal of very many laborers from this State to South Carolina and other Southern cotton States. So that while there has been no general cause, no known and sufficient influence, to lead us to anticipate an unusual increase of population, we can see many which would induce a thoughtful observer to expect a reduction of the normal rate of increase during the six years last past.

4. Keeping these facts in mind, let us consider some of the deductions which arise upon a consideration of the table presented. It will be observed that the total male population of the State 21 years old and upward in 1870 was 217,913, adding to which 5 per cent. of itself, we have 228,703 as the total adult male population in 1876, according to the usual rate of increase. Of this population, it is fair to suppose that the usual proportion were idiotic and lunatic; that some were sick upon the 7th day of November last—even too sick to vote; that some were absent from the State, and others by neglect and mischance failed to vote. So that it would be quite unreasonable to expect the vote to equal the whole number of adult males in the State. Upon examination, however, we find that the Electoral vote aggregates 234,731, or 6,023 more than the whole number of adult males in the State! Even this showing is so evidently and astoundingly impossible that it is only pretended to be accounted for by the claim that the census is inaccurate. As each voter represents, at the very lowest estimate, at least five persons, in order that this excuse should be held valid it is necessary that we suppose an error of more than 30,000 to have been made in a population of a little better than a million, even if every adult male in the State was entitled to vote and did vote. We know that from 1,200 to 2,000 of these adult males were confined in different prisons of the State on that day, so that the census error, if we could adopt that hypothesis, could not by any means be less than 40,000 to make the vote cast an honest one. This showing is of itself sufficiently astounding, and must satisfy any human being possessed of a spark of honesty and a modicum of reason, of the perpetration of the most stupendous frauds; but it pales into absolute insignificance before the fact which a further consideration of the table clearly proves.

It will be observed that in certain of the counties the vote fell below the aggregate number of adult males resident therein, according to the census and normal ratio of increase. It may not be improper just here to remark that in every county, except two, in which there was a Republican Board of Commissioners, there was a "deficiency," that is, the vote fell below the aggregate of adult males, and in those two the excess was very slight. The aggregate "deficiency" in the State is 10,041, or, in other words, there were 10,041 adult males scattered through these counties who did not vote. Or, to state it in still another form, these counties lacked 10,041 of their normal aggregate of adult males. It will be recollected that in our former comparison we considered the vote claimed to have been cast with the entire adult strength of the State, but from this analysis we see that there were 10,041 adults in the State who did not vote; consequently they must be deducted also, as well as the 6,023 which are in excess of the total adult population. So that we have the vote which was counted 16,064 in excess of the aggregate of adult males, deducting the difference in those counties in which the vote was less than the aggregate of adult males. If it should be proposed to cover this gap with the cry of error in the census, it will require an error of upward of 80,000 in a little better than 1,000,000. In other words, the census takers must have missed about every twelfth person in the State.

How was it done? By systematically voting "the cradle and the grave!" At hundreds of precincts there was scarcely a Republican who could read. At very few was there anything like equal intelligence with that of the Democrats. At few, comparatively, was there sufficient intelligence and experience to detect fraud. Probably four-fifths of the young white men of the State were banded together in Democratic clubs. No colored man dare dispute the age of one of them. The few white Republicans were unable to obtain accurate data, and so the "infant class" voted solidly for Vance and Tilden. If any one will take the pains to estimate from the census of 1870 the number of white male children in the State who would be at this time between 16 and 21 years old, he will readily see where the bulk of this impossible vote came from. It is a noticeable fact that so astounding is the result that the Democratic papers of the State have not dared to publish the result by counties. It will be seen that the demonstrable fraud was not less than 16,000 votes. The actual fraud was much greater, and no fact can be clearer than that an honest count of the legal vote of the State would have given its 10 Electoral votes to Hayes by a considerable majority. Tilden's money and the combined effort of unscrupulous intelligence against ignorance and poverty were sufficient to overweigh the will of the people and obtain by fraud a State they could not otherwise hope to carry. Yet in the face of this astounding infamy, these political Pharisees clamor for an honest count, and claim the election of Tilden!

R. R. G.

Abstract of vote of 1876 as compared with census of 1870, showing normal increase, male adults 1876, excess and deficiency on vote, and rate per cent:

FIRST DISTRICT, (CONGRESSIONAL.)

Counties.	Male Adults, 1870.	Normal Increase, (5 per cent.)	Male Adults, 1876.	Presidential. Republican Vote.	Presidential. Democratic Vote.	Total Vote, 1876.	Excess Above Male Adult Population.	Deficiency Below Male Adult Population.	Excess Per Cent.	Deficiency Per Cent.
Beaufort	2,964	148	3,112	1,543	1,723	3,266	154	....	4.94	....
Bertie	2,627	131	2,758	1,653	1,126	2,781	23	....	0.83	....
Camden	1,232	63	1,295	558	684	1,239	....	56	....	6.49
Chowan	1,391	70	1,461	806	629	1,435	25	....	1.77	....
Currituck	1,131	57	1,188	398	992	1,390	202	....	17.00	....
Dare	656	33	689	227	305	542	....	147	....	21.33
Gates	1,443	72	1,515	511	909	1,420	....	95	....	6 20
Hertford	1,805	9	1,895	1,081	1,020	2,101	206	....	10 87	....
Hyde	1,413	71	1,484	636	898	1,534	70	....	4.71	....
Martin	2,160	108	2,268	1,134	1,234	2,434	216	....	9.60	....
Pamlico	....	....	....	513	745	1,258	....	....	....	....
Pasquotank	1,842	92	1,934	1,218	847	2,065	131	....	6.77	....
Perquimans	1,697	85	1,782	1,020	832	1,852	70	....	4 48	....
Pitt	3,580	179	3,759	1,895	2,136	4,031	272	....	7.23	....
Tyrrell	930	47	977	264	353	821	....	156	....	15.96
Washington	1,493	75	1,574	1,005	692	1,697	123	....	7.82	....
Total	26 400	1,321	27.721	14 512	15,424	29,935	1,467	510	5.035	1 839

SECOND DISTRICT.

Craven	4,849	242	5,091	2,868	1,289	4,157	....	934	....	18.32
Edgecombe	5,288	264	5,552	3,841	1,652	5,493	....	59	....	1.06
Greene	1,742	87	1,829	1 067	896	1,963	134	....	7.32	....
Halifax	4 651	233	4 884	3,226	1,683	4 909	25	....	0.51	....
Jones	1,156	58	1,214	801	597	1,398	184	....	15.15	....
Lenoir	2,138	107	2 238	1,506	1 214	2,720	482	....	21.53	....
Northampton	3,153	158	3 311	2,191	1,424	3,615	304	....	9.18	....
Warren	3,593	180	3,773	2,499	1,330	3,819	46	....	1.21	....
Wayne	3,797	190	3,987	2,188	2 284	4,472	485	....	12.16	....
Wilson	2,462	123	2,585	1 162	1,771	2,933	348	....	13.46	....
Total	32,829	1 642	34,464	21 349	14 130	35.479	2 008	993	5.826	2 881

THIRD DISTRICT.

Bladen	2,618	131	2 749	1 400	1,407	2 807	58	....	2 16	....
Brunswick	1,700	85	1 785	1,044	1,052	2,049	264	....	14.62	....
Carteret	1,972	104	2,176	709	1,150	1,859	....	317	....	14.56
Columbus	1,842	92	1,934	770	1,431	2 201	267	....	13.80	....
Cumberland	3,460	173	3,633	2 123	2,230	4,353	720	....	19 81	....
Duplin	2,992	150	3,142	1 253	2,195	3,448	306	....	9.73	....
Harnett	1,758	88	1,846	736	1,070	1,806	....	40	....	2.17
Moore	2,453	123	2,576	1,203	1,365	2 568	....	8	....	0.03
New-Hanover	6,443	322	6 765	2 994	1,634	*4,628	....	*2,137	....	*31.59
Onslow	1,600	80	1,681	550	1,317	1,867	187	....	11.13	....
Pender	....	....	....	1,252	1,172	*2,424	....	....	....	....
Sampson	3,060	153	3,213	1,671	2,100	3,771	558	....	17.36	....
Total	29,983	1,501	31,493	15,703	18,073	33,778	2 357	2,502	7.48	7.94

* Add the vote of Pender County, 2,424, and it gives New-Hanover an excess of 287, or an excess per cent. of 4.24.

FOURTH DISTRICT.

Chatham	4,008	200	4,208	1,870	2,140	4,011	....	197	....	4.68
Granville	5,057	253	5,310	2,412	2,179	4,591	....	719	....	13.54
Franklin	2,788	139	2,927	1,920	1,873	3 793	866	....	29.58	....
Johnston	3,430	172	3,602	1,682	2,174	3,856	254	....	7.05	....
Nash	2,169	108	2,277	1,342	1,716	3,058	781	....	34.29	....
Orange	3,549	177	3,726	1,668	2,428	4,096	370	....	9.73	....
Wake	7,738	387	8,125	4 441	4,313	8,754	629	....	7.74	....
Total	28 739	1,436	30,175	15,335	16 824	32,159	2,900	916	9 61	3.03

FIFTH DISTRICT.

Alamance	2,474	124	2,598	1,146	1,391	2,537	....	61	....	2.40
Caswell	3,402	170	3,572	1,632	1,493	3,125	....	447	....	14.30
Davidson	3,497	175	3,672	1,773	1,782	3,555	....	117	....	3.29
Guilford	4,491	225	4,716	1,968	2,334	4,302	....	414	....	9.62
Person	2,187	109	2,296	989	1,911	2,900	....	96	....	4.36
Randolph	3,592	176	3,698	1,570	1,775	3,345	....	353	....	10.55
Rockingham	3,075	154	3,229	1,498	2,155	3,653	424	....	11.60	....
Stokes	2,235	112	2,347	980	1,222	2,202	....	145	....	6 58
Total	24,883	1,245	26,128	11,556	13,363	24 919	424	1 633	1.70	6.53

SIXTH DISTRICT.

Anson	2,360	118	2,478	1,317	1,599	2,916	438	....	15.00	....
Cabarrus	2,383	119	2,502	927	1,641	2,568	64	....	2.49	....
Catawba	2,044	102	2,146	446	1,874	2,320	174	....	7.50	....
Gaston	2,179	109	2,288	815	1,250	2,065	....	223	....	18.09
Lincoln	1,803	90	1,893	637	1,130	1,767	....	126	....	7.13
Mecklenburg	5,324	266	5,590	2,647	3,417	6,064	474	....	7.81	....
Montgomery	1,385	69	1,454	752	648	1,400	....	54	....	3.85
Richmond	3,022	151	3,173	1,456	1,350	2,806	53	....	1.53	....
Robeson	3,276	164	3,440	1,739	2,117	3,856	416	....	10.78	....
Stanly	1,477	74	1,551	427	957	1,384	....	167	....	12.06
Union	2,208	110	2,318	724	1,556	2,280	....	38	....	1.66
Total	27,163	1,358	28,415	11,887	17,539	29,426	1,619	608	5.501	2,066

SEVENTH DISTRICT.

Alexander	1,228	61	1,289	344	846	1,190	....	99	....	8 31
Alleghany	691	35	726	150	527	677	....	49	....	7.23
Ashe	1,773	89	1,862	892	1,077	1,969	87	....	1.95	....
Davie	1,880	94	1,974	702	1,036	1,738	....	236	....	13.57
Forsythe	2,573	129	2,702	1,529	1,496	3 025	323	....	10.63	....
Iredell	3,338	167	3,505	1,949	2 407	3,649	144	....	3.94	....
Rowan	3,423	171	3,595	1,826	2,189	3,415	....	180	....	5.56
Surry	2,273	114	2,387	1,019	1,339	2,364	....	23	....	0 99
Watauga	1,006	50	1,056	329	712	994	....	62	....	6.24
Wilkes	2,795	140	2,935	1,505	1,384	2 889	....	46	....	1.59
Yadkin	2,083	101	2,184	1,098	905	1,991	....	133	....	6.68
Total	25,013	1,152	26,165	9,900	13,931	23,881	504	838	2.115	3.517

EIGHTH DISTRICT.

Counties.	Male Adults, 1870.	Normal Increase, (5 per cent.)	Male Adults, 1876.	Presidential. Republican Vote.	Presidential. Democratic Vote.	Total Vote, 1876.	Excess Above Male Adult Population.	Deficiency Below Male Adult Population.	Excess Per Cent.	Deficiency Per Cent.
Buncombe	3 021	151	3,172	1,186	1,991	3,177	5	....	0.15	....
Burke	1,770	89	1,859	578	1 217	1,795	....	64	....	3.56
Caldwell	1,490	75	1,565	988	1,193	1,479	....	86	....	5.81
Cherokee	1,444	72	1,516	339	680	1,219	....	304	....	25.08
Clay	498	25	523	184	315	499	....	24	....	4.80
Cleaveland	2,338	117	2,453	483	1,769	2,252	....	201	....	8 93
Graham*	....	....	....	....	....	....	....	....	....	....
Haywood	1,467	73	1,540	427	1,010	1,437	....	103	....	7.17
Henderson	1,433	72	1,505	755	748	1,503	....	2	....	0.13
Jackson	1,263	63	1,326	241	672	913	....	413	....	45.28
Macon	1,356	68	1,329	282	770	1,052	....	277	....	26.33
Madison	1,402	70	1,472	512	895	1,707	235	....	13.77	....
Mitchell	851	43	894	747	558	1,305	411	....	31.49	....
McDowell	1,659	83	1,742	543	963	1,506	....	236	....	15.66
Polk	815	42	857	342	408	750	....	107	....	14.27
Rutherford	2,409	120	2,529	1,110	1,278	2,388	....	141	....	5.90
Swain	....	....	....	92	415	453	....	....	....	....
Transylvania	704	35	739	236	459	695	....	44	....	6.33
Yancey	1,067	53	1,120	335	746	1,081	....	39	....	3.60
Total	24 895	1,246	26,141	9,141	16,062	25,203	651	2.041	2.583	8.098

*Votes with Cherokee.

RECAPITULATION.

Congressional Districts	Male Adults 1870.	Normal Increase per cent. (5	Male Adults 1876.	Presidential. Republican Vote.	Presidential. Democratic Vote.	Total Vote 1876.	Excess.	Deficiency.	Excess per cent.	Deficiency per cent.
First District	26,400	1,321	27,721	14,512	15,424	29,936	1,467	510	5.035	1.839
Second District	32 822	1,642	34 464	21,349	14,130	35,479	2,008	993	5.826	2.881
Third District	29,998	1,501	31,449	15,705	18,073	33,778	2,357	2,502	7.492	7.945
Fourth District	28 739	1,436	30,175	16 824	15,335	32,159	2,900	916	9 610	3.035
Fifth District	24,883	1,245	26,128	11,556	13,363	24 919	424	1,633	1.701	6.533
Sixth District	27,163	1,358	28,415	11,887	17,539	29,426	1,619	608	5.501	2.066
Seventh District	25,013	1,152	26,165	9,900	13,931	23,831	504	838	2.115	3.517
Eighth District	24,895	1,246	26,141	9,141	16,062	25,203	651	2,041	2.583	8.098
Total	917,913	10,795	928,708	109,385	125,346	234,731	11 932	10,041	5.216	4.390

AN INDIANA TOWN EXCITED.

SOME BELGIAN RESIDENTS ARRESTED ON THE CHARGE OF FORGERY TO A LARGE AMOUNT.

From the Indianapolis Journal, Feb. 5.

About four months ago M. Jean Baptiste Henri Vandervelpen and his wife, a pretty, vivacious creature, came to the town of Goshen, Elkhart County. They were pleased with the appearance of the place and announced their intention of making it their residence permanently. They were not wealthy, however, and would be obliged to put their musical talent to practical use. They were an interesting couple, and the good people of Goshen extended to them a hand of welcome. They were polite, and their daily walk and conversation gave unmistakable evidence of good breeding and familiarity with the best society. Goshen was charmed, and in a very brief space of time the new arrivals had the entrée of the best families in the town. They soon had large classes, and were swimming along on the top wave of prosperity until Thursday last, when an ugly cloud appeared that soon overcast the whole heavens, and on the day following the storm burst in fury.

The cloud appeared in the person of an agent of the Belgian Government, in the Hon. D. Mellish by name. The arrival of this personage in the town had a remarkable effect on the music teacher and his wife, and they were thrown into the wildest excitement. The agent proceeded to strike while the iron was hot, and in a short time he caused their arrest on a warrant sworn out before a Justice of the Peace, as he said, to prevent them from leaving the State. The community was outraged, and nothing could make the friends of the accomplished couple believe that they had been guilty of a crime, as the agent gravely insisted was the case. Such a thing was too absurd for belief, and sympathizers made haste to strengthen the bond of sympathy by insisting that they were the victims of a mistake, which would all be explained in time. Habeas corpus proceedings were instituted in the Elkhart Circuit Court, before Judge William A. Woods, and a hearing set for Friday morning, at which hearing the prisoners were liberated by the court amid loud applause from the citizens who filled the court-room.

The people crowded around to offer their congratulations, but just at this most interesting juncture Deputy United States Marshal Will C. David, of this city, stepped into the arena with a warrant issued by Kenneth Ewing Mellish, United States Commissioner for the Southern District of New-York, for the arrest of Jean Baptiste Henri Vandervelpen, and Jeanette Damas, on a charge of forgery. Mr. David proceeded to read the warrant which was issued under the provisions of title LXVI of the Revised Statutes of the United States for giving effect to certain treaties between the United States and foreign Governments for the apprehension of criminals. The warrant was good for any part of the United States, and is the first of the kind ever served in Indiana. This important fact was not understood by those in the room, however, and they proceeded to kick up a fuss, and it was with difficulty that the Marshal could serve the warrant, the purport of which was as follows:

The persons named were charged with having, within the jurisdiction of the Kingdom of Belgium, fraudulently and feloniously, and with intent to defraud the estate of the Baron de Pasquet d'Acorsse, late of Bathey, Belgium, but now deceased, forged and counterfeited an obligation purporting to have been the act of the Baron, in favor of Jeanette Damas. The obligation was given in the warrant in French, and the translation immediately read as follows:

"Good for 500,000 francs, payable after my death to Miss Jeanette Damas.

BATHEY, this 29th of August, 1862.

BARON De PASQUET D'ACORSSE."

It is further alleged in the warrant that in May, 1864, this forged obligation was filed and recorded in the office of the Clerk of the City of Brussels, and set up as a claim against the estate of the late Baron in an action commenced before the civil tribunal sitting in the Palace of Justice at Namur, Belgium. The warrant was long, and was as full of international law as a novel statute, but it served the purpose. Mr. David answering it, took them at once into his custody.

The court-room seemed turned into a very pandemonium, and for a few moments there was every indication of a collision between the officers and the bystanders, brought on by an excited attorney of Goshen, who loudly asserted that Mr. David's process was void, and advised the parties to disregard him and go about their business. The excitement increased, but Mr. David mantully held his ground, and stated that he was there with a warrant for the arrest of these people, and he proposed to execute it. His manner quieted the turbulent crowd, which permitted him to take the prisoners to safe quarters. Mr. Osborn, attorney for the Vandervelpens, instituted habeas corpus proceedings, and Messrs. David and Mullick were cited to present the prisoners in court at 3 o'clock and show cause why they restrained the Vandervelpens their liberty, which was responded to, Messrs. Osborn and Johnson appearing for the Vandervelpens and Capt. J. A. Mitchell and Judge Wilson for the officers. The case occupied Friday afternoon and evening and Saturday morning, and the arguments of the counsel on both sides were presented with ability and earnestness. The decision of the Judge was in favor of the officers. He stated that the warrant was sufficient authority upon which to make an arrest in any State or Territory in the United States, and although he disliked to do so, he was constrained, from the conviction of the law, to return it to the officer sought for. Highly elated at the result of the case, Mr. David started his prisoners for New-York Saturday night, in charge of Mr. Mullick. On receiving the prisoners from the Marshal, Mr. Mullick gave a receipt in the name of "Consert Bros.," attorneys for the Belgian Government."

THE REAL ESTATE MARKET.

At the Exchange yesterday, (Friday,) Feb. 9, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, E. D. Gale, Esq., Referee, E. A. Lawrence & Co. sold a five-story brick tenement-house, with lot 25 by 103.3, on East 14th st., south side, 195 feet west of Avenue B, for $13,350, to Adam Kropf, plaintiff in the legal action. The same firm, under a similar court order, same Referee, disposed of the four-story and basement brown-stone front house, with lot 18.9 by 102.2, No. 150 East 78th st., south side, 362.6 feet west of 3d av., for $10,994, to William Trotter, Jr., plaintiff in the legal action.

The legal sale by V. K. Stevenson, Jr., of a house, with lot, on 5th av., north of 48th st., was adjourned to Feb. 23. The property announced for sale by Scott & Myers, located on East 125th st., west of 4th av., was withdrawn.

TO-DAY'S AUCTIONS.

To-day's sales, all at the Exchange, are as follows:

By Hugh N. Camp, Supreme Court foreclosure sale, G. I. Whitehead, Esq., Referee, of a building, with lot 23.7 by 99 by 23.9 by 101.10, No. 228 Pearl st., south side, between Piatt st. and Burling slip. Also foreclosure sale, by order of the Court of Common Pleas, E. M. Henry, Esq., Referee, of a house, with lot 20 by 80, on 2d av., east side, 42 feet north of 74th st.; also a house, with lot 20.2 by 80, on 2d av., east side, 83 feet north of 74th st.

By Scott & Myers, Supreme Court foreclosure sale, Charles T. Middlebrook, Esq., Referee, of a house, with lot 19.6 by 74, on East 49th st., north side, 200 feet east of 3d av.

By William Kennelly, Superior Court foreclosure sale, Alfred Erbe, Esq., Referee, of a plot of land, 125 by 154.2 by 126.7 by 130.9, on East 59½ st., south side, 125 feet west of 1st av.

By R. V. Harnett, foreclosure sale, by order of the Court of Common Pleas, R. M. Henry, Esq., Referee, of three houses, with lots each 20 by 100, on West 57th st., south side, 115 feet west of 6th av.

By A. J. Bleecker & Son, Supreme Court foreclosure sale, C. C. Bigelow, Esq., Referee, of two lots, each 25 by 100, on Schuyler st., south side, 150 feet west of Cortlandt av., Morrisania.

EXCHANGE SALES—FRIDAY, FEB. 9, 1877.

NEW-YORK.

By E. A. Lawrence & Co.

1 five-story brick tenement house, with lot, East 14th st., n. s., 195 ft. w. of Avenue B, lot 25x103.3 ..... $13,350

1 four-story and basement brown-stone-front house, with lot, No. 150, East of 78th st., s. s., 362.6 ft. w. of 3d av., lot 18.9x102.2 10,994

RECORDED REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

NEW-YORK.

Thursday, Feb. 8.

Front st., w. s., 33.3x64; Joseph Levy to New-York and Brooklyn Bridge $18,000

20th st., s. s., 239.6 ft. e. of 1st av., 20x92; Philip Brady to Matthew H. Coyle 10,500

142d st., s. s., 256.6 ft. e. of Alexander av., 50x100, 32d Ward; Mary Schramme and husband to Thos. E. S. Dwyer 8,000

Rivington st., s. e. corner Suffolk st., 18.10½x52; Edward Fox to John Schnugg 22,000

Rivington st., s. e. corner Suffolk st., 18.10½x52; Thos. Thacher and wife to Edward Fox.

Madison av., e. s., 22.2 ft. n. of 79th st., 20x77; Maria Kelly to Stephen V. W. Stout 2,300

38th st., n. s., 267.8 ft. e. of 3d av., 28.6x92.9; Charles W. Wear, Referee, to Silas Booth 25,000

32d st., n. s., 300 ft. e. of 2d av., 25x98.9; Chas. F. Wells, Referee, to Thos. Mumtha 6,950

LEASE.

Peck slip, n. w. corner Water st., 5 years; John N. Estel to Ernst Mangels 5,450

CITY REAL ESTATE.

NO. 10 WEST 48TH ST.

For sale this very desirable four-story brick house, 25 feet front, with dining-room extension, butler's pantry, and back stairs; perfect order; lot 100.5; Columbia college ground rent, $350; lowest price, $30,000. E. H. LUDLOW & CO., No. 3 Pine st.

FOR SALE—AT A BARGAIN, AN ELEGANT FOUR-story high-stoop brown-stone house, 25x70x100; house in perfect order; located in West 38th st., close to 5th av.; location unsurpassed, as it overlooks the Grand Pisaa, (entrance to Central Park at 5th av.) For full particulars apply to HOMER MORGAN, 2 Pine st.

FOR SALE.—HOUSES ON WEST 21ST ST. 22D st., 23d st., 28th st., 30th st., and other desirable locations; Country seats and farms for exchange; also, Brooklyn houses at our offices.

HALL & SQUIRES, No. 203 West 23 st.

FOR SALE—DWELLINGS, BROWN-STONE fronts, from $5,000 to $10,000. Also, one plate-glass and brown-stone front store. ISAAC W. J. BEDELL, builder, No. 327 Smith st., Brooklyn.

FOR SALE.—AN ELEGANT FOUR-STORY, HIGH-stoop brown-stone house, 18.8x55x100; parlor cabinet in good order; a bargain. No. 150 West 53d st.; keys at owner's. No. 141, opposite.

FOR SALE—SEVERAL BROWN-STONE HOUSES in the vicinity of the Park, $8,000 to $36,000; to let $500 to $2,000. JOHN W. STEVENS, Broadway and 52d st.

A LARGE NUMBER OF HOUSES BELONGing to estates and institutions for sale or rent at low rates. KINGMAN F. PAGE, No. 42 East 23d st.

BROOKLYN REAL ESTATE.

UNION COLLEGE LANDS IN THE FIRST, Second, and Third Wards of Long Island City, new county site of Queens County, and in the Seventeenth Ward of Brooklyn, including valuable water front on the East River and on Newtown Creek, all docked and filled, for sale or lease on easy terms. Apply to H. S. ANABLE, Long Island City.

COUNTRY REAL ESTATE.

FOR SALE.—THE ELEGANT COUNTRY SEAT AT Rhinebeck; finest place on the Hudson, and contains 35 acres of highly cultivated land, embellished with lawns, shade trees, and shrubbery, and upon which are a large brick mansion, coach-house, cottages for farmer, coachman, and gardener; commands most extensive and beautiful views of a river and lake, with mountain background; location healthful; neighborhood unexceptionable; and a fine rolling country for riding and driving. This property offers to persons of taste, culture, and refinement a residence of unequaled beauty. It was purchased by the late owner at a cost of $30,000, and since purchase he expended upward of $40,000 upon it in improvements. A large portion of the purchase money may remain on mortgage. Address D., Box No. 5,434, New-York Post Office.

EXCHANGE.—THREE HANDSOME COUNTRY residences within one hour of New-York, free of mortgage, to exchange for City improved property not too heavily encumbered. Apply to T. S. SHEPHERD, No. 145 Broadway.

ORANGE, N. J.—COUNTRY HOUSES, LANDS, and village lots for sale; a great variety. Also, furnished and unfurnished houses to let for season or year, by WALTER E. SMITH, formerly Blackwell & Smith, Orange, corner of Main and Court sts.

REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

EIGHTY-FIFTH STREET.—NEW-YORK SUpreme Court.—City and County of New-York.—FRANCIS R. WALES, plaintiff, against LEWIS J. PHILLIPS, William J. Sherwood, John Burke, and Frederick Lewis, as Assignees of Lewis J. Phillips, for the benefit of creditors' defendants.—In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale, made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the 15th day of November, 1876, I, Robert Sewell, the Referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the Exchange Salesroom, No. 111 Broadway, in the city of New-York, by Bell, P. Fairchild, auctioneer, on SATURDAY, the 24th day of February, 1877, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, the following-described premises to wit: All those six certain lots, pieces, and parcels of land known and distinguished on a certain map or lands in Bloomingdale, in the (late) 12th Ward of the City of New-York, belonging to William W. Woolsey, made by Edwin J. Smith, City Surveyor, in June, 1850, with alterations and additions made in May, 1863, and filed in the office of the Register of the City and County of New-York, in tin case 219, as Numbers 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, and 286, which said six lots, taken together, are bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the northerly side of Eighty-fifth street, distant two hundred feet easterly from the easterly side of the Ninth avenue, and thence running northerly and parallel with the Ninth avenue one hundred feet; thence running easterly and parallel with Eighty-fifth street, one hundred and fifty feet; thence southerly and parallel with the Ninth avenue, one hundred feet, to Eighty-fifth street, and thence westerly along Eighty-fifth street, one hundred and fifty feet, to the place of beginning.—Dated New-York, February 2, 1877.

ROBERT SEWELL, Referee.

G. W. COTTRELL, Plaintiff's Attorney, No. 175 Broadway, New-York. f3-law3wS

REAL ESTATE WANTED.

WANTED—FIVE ROOMS (UNFURNISHED) FOR housekeeping by an American family; must be situated between 14th and 40th sts., and 6th and 8th avs.; private house preferred; gas and use of bath-room; rent must not exceed $20 per M. Address for two days Albert, Box No. 225 Times office.

WANTED—BY A PHYSICIAN AND WIFE A FIRST-story French flat, or part of a small house, with all improvements, between 4th and 6th avs. and 20th and 50th sts.; references exchanged. Address MEDICUS, Box

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

SALES AT THE STOCK EXCHANGE—FEB. 9.

SALES BEFORE THE CALL—10 A. M.

$3,000 Ches. & O. 1st.		500 Cen. of N. J.	21¼
do. cp. on	25½	700 do.	21
100 Del. & Had.	85	2000 do.	21¼
600 At. & Pac.	16	335 do.	21¼
200 Pacific Mail	24¾	400 do.	21⅝
500 do.	24⅝	1100 do.	21
400 do.	24⅝	100 do.	21
100 do.	24¾	100 do.	20⅞
1800 West. Un.	71	100 do.	20⅜
1700 do.	70⅞	400 do.	20⅝
1700 do.	70¾	200 do.	20⅜
300 do.	70⅞	100 do.	21
950 do.	71	500 do.	21
600 do.	70⅞	100 do.	21⅛
3500 do.	70⅞	100 do.	21⅜
500 do.	71	1000 Lake Shore	52⅞
500 do.	71⅛	2500 do.	53
1000 do.	71⅛	700 do.	53⅛
100 do.	71⅛	500 do.	53
600 do.	71⅛	300 do.	53⅛
300 do.	71⅛	200 H. & St. J. Pf.	25
300 do.	71⅛	1500 North-western	33
300 N. Y. Cen. & H.	101	100 do.	33⅜
100 do.	101⅜	100 do.	33½
30 do.	101⅜	100 do.	33¼
1200 Erie Railway	8½	400 do.	33½
300 do.	8⅝	200 do.	33⅜
100 Ill. Cen.	53	200 do.	33¼
100 Mich. Cen.	45	200 do.	33¼
100 do.	44⅞	500 St. Paul Pf.	48¾
200 do.	44⅞	3200 do.	48¾
1000 do.	44⅝	500 do.	48¾
100 do.	44⅝	100 do.	48¼
300 do.	44⅝	1500 do.	48¼
100 do.	44⅝	200 do.	48¼
400 do.	44⅝	600 do.	48⅜
1200 Rock Island	101	500 Del., La. & W.	68
2000 do.	101¼	400 do.	69
1000 North-w. Pf.	51½	100 do.	69¼
200 do.	51⅝	200 do.	69¼
300 do.	52

GOVERNMENT STOCKS—10:15 AND 11:30 A. M.

$10,000 U. S. 6s. '81, reg.	113¼	$10,000 U. S. 5s. 10-40	111
10,000 U. S. 5-20 R., '67	113	10,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '67	113
3,000 U. S. 5s. '81, R	110⅞	60,000 do.	112.113

FIRST BOARD—10:30 A. M.

$10,000 La. 7s con.	59½	100 Chi., B. & Q.	116⅜
10,000 Mo. 6s, Fd. '94-5	107½	150 do.	116
7,000 Mo. 6s, long	106	100 Mich. Cen.	43⅝
10,000 D. of C. 3.65s.	72⅝	do.	44⅞
1,000 Chi., B. & Q.	112¾	do.	44⅝
10,000 Chi., R. I. & P.	108¾	do.	45
6,000 C., R. I. & P.	103	do.	44⅞
4,000 N. J. C. 1st. con.	73½	do.	44⅞
2,000 N. J. C. Conv.	68½	400 Un. Pac.	66⅛
2,000 do.	68	700 L. N. & M. S.	53¼
12,000 L. & N. Con.	50	do.	53⅛
8,000 M. & St. L. & M. Div.	86	100 do.	53⅜
1,000 M. & St. L.	87	100 do.	53⅜
4,000 C. & N. W. con.	103½	500 do.	53⅜
6,000 N. W. C. C. G.	91½	2300 do.	52⅞
2,000 C. & N. W. S. F.	107	100 do.	52⅞
2,000 C. & N. W. 1st.	105½	2300 do.	52⅞
1,000 M. & E. 1st.	99	1500 do.	52¾
2,000 Du. & S. C., 2d div.	105	500 do.	53
1,000 Keok. & Minn.	89	100 do.	52⅝
5,000 Ohio & M. con.	87½	400 do.	52⅝
3,000 O. & M. 2d.	52½	400 do.	52⅝
1,000 West. Pac.	97½	750 do.	53
10,000 St. L. M. & M.	98	1000 do.	53⅛
1,000 Un. Pac. 1st.	104½	2000 Ill. Cen.	53
1,000 Un. Pac. s. f.	97½	50 do.	53⅜
2,000 do.	97¼	100 C. & P. Gd.	93
1,000 A. & T. H. 2d	87	100 do.	93¼
1,000 do.	89	100 C. & N. W.	83⅜
5,000 T. & W. 1st.	104	100 do.	83
5,000 T. & W. 1st. ex coupon	91	100 do.	83⅞
3,000 R., W. & O. 1st.	70½	100 do.	83⅝
3,000 St. L. & I. M. 1st	98	200 do.	83⅝
5,000 D., M. & T. 1st.	105	300 do.	83⅝
1,000 Erie 2d con.	91	100 do.	83⅝
1,000 M. & St. Paul, c. s. f.	82½	200 do.	83⅝
48 Am. Exch. Bank	109⅞	300 do.	83⅝
80 Mechanics' Bank	90	100 do.	83⅝
50 B'k of Amer.	134	100 C., M. & St. P.	71
100 Del. & Hudson	55¾	b.c.	53
540 do.	b.c.	300 do.	48⅜
520 do.	55¾	100 Wab. Pac. Com.	18½
1900 West. Union	71¾	Rec's	7⅞
500 do.	71⅞	700 do.	7⅜
1100 do.	71⅞	1100 D., L. & W.	68¼
1000 do.	72	700 do.	68½
1000 do.	72	400 do.	68⅝
100 do.	72	100 do.	68⅜
100 do.	71⅞	5 C., B. & Q.	114
1100 do.	71⅞	300 do.	113⅞
200 U. S. Ex.	52	100 do.	113
500 N. Y. C. & H.	101⅜	200 L. S. & M. S.	33⅝
300 do.	101½	100 do.	33⅜
100 do.	101¾	100 do.	33⅜
100 do.	101⅞	100 do.	33¼
300 do.	101⅞	100 do.	33¼
200 do.	101¾	100 do.	33¼
100 do.	101¾	100 do.	33¼
200 do.	101¾	110 do.	33¼
1600 do.	102	300 C. M. & St. P. Pf.	48¼
900 do.	s60.100	300 do.	48¼
10 U. S. Ex.	51¾	300 do.	48¼
50 do.	51¾	100 do.	48⅜
7 Amer. Ex.	58	100 do.	48
28 Adams Ex.	102½	100 do.	48⅜
100 West. Un.	71⅝	100 Chi. & Alt.	106
300 do.	71⅝	100 C. & R. 1st.	103⅜
225 do.	71⅝	100 do.	s60.100
600 do.	71⅝	500 do.	s60.100
600 do.	71⅝	100 do.	101
1000 do.	71⅝	200 do.	101
100 do.	71⅝	200 do.	100⅜
1700 do.	71⅝	1700 do.	100⅜
2700 do.	71⅝	100 do.	100⅜
1000 do.	71⅝	100 do.	100⅜
100 do.	71⅝	100 do.	s7.100
300 do.	71⅝	100 do.	100⅝
900 do.	71⅝	100 do.	100⅝
100 do.	71⅝	200 D., L. & W.	69
100 do.	71⅝	1900 do.	69
1300 do.	71⅝	400 do.	68⅞
1400 do.	71⅝	100 do.	68⅝
25 Pac. Mail	24⅝	100 do.	68⅜
100 do.	25	100 do.	68¼
300 Erie Rail.	8½	100 do.	68⅜
200 do.	8⅝	400 do.	s10. 67⅞
20 Mor. Ex.	90	100 do.	68¼
5 do.	b.c. 89½	300 do.	68⅜
100 Pac. of Mo.	b.c. 2⅜	900 do.	68¾
100 N. C. & I. C.	b.c. 83	300 do.	68⅜
115 Rens. & Sar.	108	1100 do.	68½

SALES BEFORE THE CALL—12:30 P. M.

$40,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '67	113	100 C. of N. J.	20⅜
12,000 D. of C. 3.65s.	72½	400 do.	20⅜
15,000 C. R. I. & P. s. f.	103	500 do.	20⅜
200 Del. & H.	s3. 55¾	600 do.	20⅜
500 West. Un.	70⅝	1000 do.	20
100 do.	71⅜	700 do.	20
300 do.	71½	200 do.	s3. 19⅞
1400 do.	71⅜	200 do.	19⅞
100 do.	s3. 71⅜	100 do.	19⅞
900 do.	71⅜	100 do.	19¾
100 Erie Railway	8⅜	100 do.	20
400 do.	8⅜	200 do.	19⅞
500 Pacific Mail	24⅞	100 do.	19⅞
100 Lake Shore	53	100 do.	19⅞
800 do.	53⅛	600 do.	19⅞
100 do.	s3. 53⅜	300 do.	19⅞
200 do.	b3. 53⅜	400 do.	19⅞
300 do.	53⅜	5 do.	19⅞
500 North-w.	s30. 32	100 Rock Island.	101
100 North-west. Pref.	52⅜	100 St. Paul	18½
100 Ill. Cen.	s3. 53	300 St. Paul Pref.	48¾
200 do.	53	300 do.	s3. 48¾
1400 Del., L. & W.	68⅜	100 do.	48⅜
200 do.	s6. 68⅜	100 Ohio & Miss.	6¾
800 do.	68⅜	200 C., C. & I. C.	2¾
50 Mor. Ex.	90	100 do.	2¾
100 C. B. & Q.	s60.111	200 do.	2⅜

SECOND BOARD—1 P. M.

$50,000 J. Y. C. 1st.	72	100 Chi. & N. W. Pf.	b.c. 83¼
7,000 C., R. I. & P.	103⅛	500 do.	83¾
1,000 C. & N. W. 1st.	105	300 do.	83¾
15,000 H. 1st 7s. R.	120	200 C. of N. J.	20⅜
5,000 Sc. Mo. 1st.	99¾	600 do.	20⅜
55,000 D. P. 1st.	104¾	600 do.	19⅞
1,000 U. Pac. s. f.	97½	700 do.	19⅞
5,000 U. P. 7s, L. G.	102⅜	100 do.	19⅞
4,000 La. 1st 7s	97½	100 do.	19⅞
7,000 Tol. & W. 1st.	104	100 do.	19¾
3,000 St. L. & I. M. 1st	98	200 do.	20
5,000 D., M. & T. 1st.	105	300 do.	19¾
1,000 Erie 2d con.	91	100 do.	19¾
1,000 M. & St. Paul, c. s. f.	82½	600 do.	19¾
48 Am. Exch. Bank	109⅞	300 do.	19⅞
80 Mechanics' Bank	90	100 do.	19⅞
50 B'k of Amer.	134	100 C., M. & St. P. Pf.	b.c. 83¾
100 Del. & Hudson	55¾	300 do.	48¾
540 do.	b.c. 55½	100 do.	48⅜
520 do.	55¾	100 Wab. Pac. Com.	18½
1900 West. Union	71¾	Rec's	7⅜
500 do.	71⅞	700 do.	7⅜
1100 do.	71⅞	1100 D., L. & W.	68¼
1000 do.	72	700 do.	68½
1000 do.	72	400 do.	68⅝
100 do.	72	100 do.	68⅜
100 do.	71⅞	5 C., B. & Q.	114
1100 do.	71⅞	300 do.	113⅞
200 U. S. Ex.	52	100 do.	113
500 N. Y. C. & H.	b.c. 101⅜	200 L. S. & M. S.	33⅝
300 do.	101½	100 do.	33⅜
100 do.	101¾	100 do.	33⅜
100 do.	101⅞	100 do.	33¼
300 do.	101⅞	100 do.	33¼
200 do.	101¾	100 do.	33¼
100 do.	101¾	110 do.	33¼
1600 do.	102	300 C. M. & St. P. Pf.	b.c. 48¼
900 do.	s60.100	300 do.	48¼
10 U. S. Ex.	51¾	300 do.	48¼
50 do.	51¾	100 do.	48⅜
7 Amer. Ex.	58	100 do.	48
28 Adams Ex.	102½	100 do.	48⅜
100 West. Un.	b.c. 71⅛	100 Chi. & Alt.	b.c. 101
300 do.	71⅝	100 C. & R. 1st.	103⅜
225 do.	71⅝	100 do.	s60.100
600 do.	b3. 71⅝	500 do.	s60.100
600 do.	71⅝	100 do.	101⅛
1000 do.	71⅝	200 do.	101
100 do.	b3. 71⅝	200 do.	100⅜
1700 do.	71⅝	1700 do.	100⅜
2700 do.	s3. 71⅝	100 do.	100⅜
1000 do.	71⅝	100 do.	100⅜
100 do.	s5. 71⅝	100 do.	s7.100⅜
300 do.	b3. 71⅝	100 do.	100⅝
900 do.	71⅝	100 do.	100⅝
100 do.	71⅝	200 D., L. & W.	b.c. 69
100 do.	b3. 71⅝	1900 do.	69
1300 do.	s3. 71⅝	400 do.	68⅞
1400 do.	71⅝	100 do.	68⅝
25 Pac. Mail	24⅝	100 do.	68⅜
100 do.	25	100 do.	68¼
300 Erie Rail.	b.c. 8½	100 do.	68⅜
200 do.	8⅝	400 do.	s10. 67⅞
20 Mor. Ex.	90	100 do.	68¼
5 do.	b.c. 89½	300 do.	68⅜
100 Pac. of Mo.	b.c. 2⅜	900 do.	68¾
100 N. C. & I. C.	b.c. 83	300 do.	68⅜
115 Rens. & Sar.	108	1100 do.	68½

SALES BEFORE THE CALL—12:30 P. M.

$40,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '67	113	100 C. of N. J.	20⅜
12,000 D. of C. 3.65s.	72½	400 do.	20⅜
15,000 C. R. I. & P. s. f.	103	500 do.	20⅜
200 Del. & H.	s3. 55¾	600 do.	20⅜
500 West. Un.	70⅝	1000 do.	20
100 do.	71⅜	700 do.	20
300 do.	71½	200 do.	s3. 19⅞
1400 do.	71⅜	200 do.	19⅞
100 do.	s3. 71⅜	100 do.	19⅞
900 do.	71⅜	100 do.	19¾
100 Erie Railway	8⅜	100 do.	20
400 do.	8⅜	200 do.	19⅞
500 Pacific Mail	24⅞	100 do.	19⅞
100 Lake Shore	53	100 do.	19⅞
800 do.	53⅛	600 do.	19⅞
100 do.	s3. 53⅜	300 do.	19⅞
200 do.	b3. 53⅜	400 do.	19⅞
300 do.	53⅜	5 do.	19⅞
500 North-w.	s30. 32	100 Rock Island.	101
100 North-west. Pref.	52⅜	100 St. Paul	18½
100 Ill. Cen.	s3. 53	300 St. Paul Pref.	48¾
200 do.	53	300 do.	s3. 48¾
1400 Del., L. & W.	68⅜	100 do.	48⅜
200 do.	s6. 68⅜	100 Ohio & Miss.	6¾
800 do.	68⅜	200 C., C. & I. C.	2¾
50 Mor. Ex.	90	100 do.	2¾
100 C. B. & Q.	s60.111	200 do.	2⅜

FRIDAY, Feb. 9—P. M.

The weakness of the coal shares constituted the most prominent feature of speculation on the Stock Exchange to-day. New-Jersey Central fell off from 21 at the opening to 19, subsequently recovered to 20¼, with final sales at 19¼. It is currently reported that the effort to raise the $3,000,000 necessary to enable the company to tide over its difficulties has resulted in complete failure, and that consequently the corporation is about to pass into the hands of a Receiver. Delaware and Hudson Canal recorded a decline of 4 ₱ cent. from the closing quotation of yesterday. The opening price to-day was 57½, whence there was a drop to 54, with closing transactions at a recovery of only ¼ ₱ cent. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, while somewhat weak, was steadier than the other coal shares, and fluctuated between 69¼ and 68⅛, closing at 68½. Western Union was firm in the early dealings, and subsequently, under purchases to cover short contracts, advanced from 70¾, which was the lowest point touched, to 72, closing sales being effected at 71⅞. Lake Shore opened at 53⅛, declined to 52¾, but afterward rallied and closed at 53¼. North-western preferred showed a recovery from the depression which yesterday characterized the dealings in the stock, and rose from 51½ to 53⅛, with closing sales at 53. The North-western common and St. Paul shares were about firm. Erie sold at 8, against 8⅞ at the close yesterday, with a subsequent recovery of ⅛ ₱ cent. Among investment shares Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy dropped off from 116½ to 113¼, with sales on 60 days, sellers' options, at 112 and 111. New-York Central sold at 101 regular and at 100 seller 60 days. Rock Island declined from 101⅜ to 100½, and closed at 101¼. The dealings in Express shares were confined exclusively to American Merchants' Union, which sold at 52.

The entire transactions for the day amounted to 173,552 shares, which embraced 39,600 Western Union, 27,335 New-Jersey Central, 26,500 Lake Shore, 20,150 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 13,700 North-western, 8,900, St. Paul, 7,130 Erie, 6,800 Michigan Central, 5,600 Rock Island, 4,730 New-York Central, 4,460 Delaware and Hudson Canal, 2,025 Pacific Mail, and 1,150 Illinois Central.

There was an ample supply of money on call at 3@3½ ₱ cent. until late in the day, when there were offerings at even lower figures. Prime mercantile paper was quoted at 4@4½ ₱ cent. The national bank notes received at Washington for redemption amounted to $700,000. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying par, selling 3-16 premium; Charleston, steady, buying par, selling ¼ premium; Cincinnati, quiet, buying 50@par, selling 1-10 premium; St. Louis, par; New-Orleans, commercial ⅛; bank ¼, and Chicago 60 premium.

The foreign advices reported British Consols and American securities steady and without important change in prices. At London, consols for both money and the account closed at 95⅜@95¾; United States 10-40s at 110⅝@110¾; New 5s at 107⅜; 1865s (old,) at 105⅝@105¾, and 1867s at 109¾. Erie was weak; the common closing at 8⅛ and the preferred at 19. At Amsterdam Northwestern preferred sold at 50¼. French Rentes advanced from 105f. 95c., and closed at 106f. 12½c. The Bank of England lost £50,000 on balance to-day.

The sterling exchange market was weak and slightly more in favor of buyers, prime bankers' bills being obtainable at $4 84@$4 84½ for long, and at $4 85@$4 85¼ for demand. The nominal rates remain as last quoted.

The gold speculation was firm, and the price advanced from 105¾ to 105⅞, with final sales at the latter figure. The market was quiet and presented no especial feature. On gold loans the rates ranged from 2¼ to 4 per cent. for carrying.

There was comparatively little business in Government bonds, and the variations in prices were unimportant, owing to the steadiness of gold. The demand continues to run chiefly on the 1867s, which were taken at 113. The market closed firm in tone. Railroad bonds were steady as a rule. New-Jersey Centrals were a marked exception, Consolidated Firsts declining 1½; Convertibles, 2¼, and Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Consolidated 1 ₱ cent., touching 72, 68, and 50 respectively. Milwaukee and St. Paul, I. and M. Division, fell off to 86; Chicago and North-western Firsts, to 105, do. Consolidated gold coupons to 91⅜, and Milwaukee and St. Paul, La Crosse Division, to 97¾. Rock Island 7s were active at 108⅜@108¾, and Union Pacific Firsts at 104⅛@104¼. Harlem registered Firsts sold at 120, and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy 8s at 112¾. Ohio and Mississippi Consolidated rose to 87½. Alton and Terre Haute Seconds, preferred, sold at 87@89. In State bonds the transactions were small. Louisiana Consols sold at 59½, a decline of 3¾ ₱ cent. since Tuesday last, when the last sale was made. Missouri Funded of 1894–5 were 2 ₱ cent higher, selling at 107½; do. long 6s sold at 106. District Columbia 3.65s were steady at 72½@72⅝.

The imports of dry goods at the port of New-York for the week ending this date were $2,070,752, and the amount marketed, $2,066,553. The total imports of dry goods at the port since Jan. 1 were $11,117,499, and the total amount marketed $10,916,163.

UNITED STATES TREASURY, NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1877.

	Thursday.	Friday.
Gold receipts	$241,721 49
Gold payments	424 258 45
Gold balance	70,401,299 49
Currency receipts	497,013 89
Currency payments	408,589 76
Currency balance	43,427,845 69
Customs	214,000 00

CLOSING QUOTATIONS—FEB. 9.

American gold	105¾	105⅞
United States 5s. 1881, coup	110¾	110⅞
United States 5-20s. 1867, coup	113	113½
Bills on London	4 84@4 84½	4 84¼@4 84½
New-York Central	101¾	101½
Rock Island	101⅜	101½
Pacific Mail	24⅜	24⅞
Milwaukee and St. Paul	18½	18⅝
Milwaukee and St. Paul Pref	48⅝	48⅝
Lake Shore	53	53¼
Chicago and North-western	33⅛	33¾
Chicago and North-western Pref	51¾	53
Western Union	71⅜	71⅞
Union Pacific	66¾	66½
Delaware, Lack. and Western	69⅛	68½
New-Jersey Central	21¾	19½
Delaware and Hudson Canal	58¼	54½
Morris and Essex	90	90
Panama	123	122
Erie	8⅛	8⅛
Ohio and Mississippi	6⅝	6¾
Harlem	140¼	140½
Hannibal and St. Joseph	21¾	21½
Hannibal and St. Joseph Pref	25	25
Michigan Central	45½	45
Illinois Central	53	53⅛

The extreme range of prices in stocks and the number of shares sold are as follows:

	Highest.	Lowest.	No. of shares.
New-York Central	101½	101	4,730
Erie	8⅝	8	7,130
Lake Shore	53¼	52⅝	26,300
Wabash	7⅜	7⅜	200
North-western	33⅜	32	7,700
North-western Preferred	53	51½	6,000
Rock Island	101⅜	101½	5,600
Mil. & St. Paul	18½	18½	100
Mil. & St. Paul Pref	48⅝	48	5,800
Pittsburg	93	93	150
Del., Lack. & Western	69¼	68½	20,150
New-Jersey Central	21⅝	19	27,335
Delaware & Hud. Canal	58	54	4,460
Chicago & Alton	101	101	100
Michigan Central	45	44⅜	6,800
Illinois Central	53	53⅜	1,150
Union Pacific	66½	66½	400
Chicago, Bur. & Quincy	116½	113¼	982
Missouri Pacific	2⅜	2⅜	100
C., C. & I. C.	2¾	2⅜	650
Hannibal & St. Joseph Pref.	25	25	200
Ohio & Mississippi	6¾	6⅝	200
Western Union	72	70¾	39,600
A. & P. Telegraph	16½	16	100
Pacific Mail	25	24¾	2,025
Quicksilver Pref.	21¾	21½	100
American Mer. Union Ex.	52	52	450
Total sales			173,552

The following table shows the half-hourly fluctuations in the Gold market to-day:

10:00 A. M.	105⅜	1:00 P. M.	105⅜
10:30 A. M.	105⅞	1:30 P. M.	105⅞
11:00 A. M.	105⅞	2:00 P. M.	105⅞
11:30 A. M.	105⅜	2:30 P. M.	105⅞
12:00 M.	105⅞	3:00 P. M.	105⅞
12:30 P. M.	105⅞

The following were the closing quotations of Government bonds:

	Bid.	Asked.
United States currency 6s	123½	123½
United States 6s, 1881, registered	113¼	113½
United States 6s, 1881, coupons	114	114¼
United States 5-20s, 1865, registered	108⅞	109
United States 5-20s, 1865, coupons	108⅜	109
United States 5-20s, 1865, new, coup	110⅛	110⅜
United States 5-20s, 1865, new, coup	110⅛	110¼
United States 5-20s, 1867, registered	113	113¼
United States 5-20s, 1867, coupons	113	113⅜
United States 5-20s, 1868, registered	116¼	116⅜
United States 5-20s, 1868, coupons	116¼	116⅜
United States 10-40s, registered	111¼	111⅜
United States 10-40s, coupons	114½	114⅝
United States 5s 1881, registered	110⅞	111
United States 5s 1881, coupons	110⅞	111
United States 4½s, 1891, registered	107⅝	107⅞

The Sub-Treasurer disbursed in gold coin $35,000 for interest, $35,500 for called bonds, and $5,700 silver coin in exchange for fractional currency.

The following were the gold clearings by the National Bank of the State of New-York today:

Gold cleared	$32,005,000
Gold balances	1,331,280
Currency balances	1,411,280

The following is the Clearing-house statement to-day:

Currency exchanges	$74,061,022
Currency balances	3,327,063
Gold exchanges	7,605,392
Gold balances	1,363,809

The following were the bids for the various State securities:

Alabama 5s. '83	33½	H. & St. Jo., due '86	107½
Alabama 5s. '86	33½	H. & St. J., due '87	107
Alabama 8s. '86	33½	N. Y. Reg. B. L.	101½
Alabama 8s. '92	17	N. Y. Comp. B. L.	101½
Alabama 5s. '93	22	N. C. 6s, old, R. J.	21½
Ark. 6s. funded	28	N. C. 6s, A. & O.	21½
Ark. 7s. L. R. & F. S. 1s	10	N. C. 6s, N. C. R. J. & J.	69
Ark. 7s, Mem. & L. R.	10	N. C. 6s, do. c. off J. & J.	49
Ark. 7s, L. R., P. B. & N. O.	10	N. C. 6s, do. c. off A. & O.	49
Ark. 7s, Mo. & L. R.	10	N. C. 6s, Fd'g Act. '66	16
Ark. 7s, Ark. Cen. R.	10	N. C. 6s, Fd'g Act '68, 15	16
Connecticut 6s	110	N. C. new bds. J. & J.	12
Georgia 6s	93	N. C. new bds. A. & O.	12
Georgia 7s, n. b	105	N. C. S. T. class 1	2
Georgia 7s, indorsed	103	N. C. S. T. class 2	2
Georgia 7s, gold bds	105	N. C. S. T. class 3	2½
Illinois 6s, '66, '76	101	Ohio 6s	103½
Illinois War Loan	102	Rhode Island 6s	120
Kentucky 6s	101	S. C. 6s	36
Louisiana 6s	40	S. C. 6s, J. & J	35
Louisiana 6s, n. b	40	S. C. 6s, A. & O	35
La. 6s, new Fl. Bds	40	S. C. 6s, Fd'g Act. '66	35
La. 7s, Penitentiary	40	S. C. 6s, J. & J.	45
La. 6s, Levee bonds	40	S. C. L. C. '89, A. & O.	45
La. 8s, Levee bonds	40	S. C. 7s, '88	35
La. 8s, L. Bs. of '75	40	S. C. Non. F. bs	2½
La. 7s, Consolidated	59¾	Tenn. 6s, old	42½
Michigan 6s '78-'79	101	Tenn. 6s, n. b., n. s.	42
Michigan 7s, '90	113½	Tenn. 6s, n. b., o. s.	42
Michigan 7s, '90	113½	Virginia 6s, n. bds. '66	30
Mo. 6s, due in '77	100⅝	Virginia 6s, n. bds. '67	30
Mo. 6s, due in '78	101¼	Va. 6s, Con. Bonds	78½
Fund. bs, due '94-5	107½	Virginia 6s, ex. m'd c.	67¼
Long bs, '20 to '30	106¼	Va. 6s, Con. 2d s	37½
Asy. or Un'y, due '92	106¾	Dis. of C. 3.65s, 1924	72½

And the following for railway mortgages:

B., C. R. & M. 1st 7s	38	L. S. Div. bds	107
C. & Ohio 6s 1st	22	L. S. Cons. R. 1st	107½
Chic. & A. S. F., 1st	115	Mich. C. Con. 7s. 1902	103
Chic. & Alt. Income	104½	Mich. C. 1st 8s, '82 SF.	112
Joliet & Chic. 1st	108	N. Y. Cen. 6s, '83	104¾
La. & Mo. 1st, gtd	84	N. Y. Cen. 6s, '87	105⅜
C., R. & Q. 8 ₱ ct. 1st	112	N. Y. C. & Hud. 1st	117
C. R. I. & P. 1st 7s	108¾	N. Y. C. & Hud. 1st	112
C. R. I. & P. S. F. 6s. '95	102	Hud. R. 7s. 2d. S. F. '65	112½
C. R. of N. J. 1st. n.	103	Harlem 1st 7s. C.	120¼
L. & W. B. Con. G'd.	49⅞	Harlem 1st 7s. R.	120¼
M. & S. P. 1st 8s. P. D.	113¼	N. Missouri 1st	93⅜
M. & St. P. 1st 7s. I. & M.	86	Ohio & M. Con. 7s	87½
M. & St. P. 1st 7s. C. & M.	94½	Cen. Pac. Gold bds	107½
M. & S. P. 1st. La C. D.	97	Cen. P., San J. B'ch	91¾
M. & S. P. 1st I. & M. D.	85	C. P. State Aid bds	107
M. & St. P. 1st C. & M.	97	Cen. Pac. L. G. bs	93½
M. & St. P. Con. S. F.	82½	West. Pacific bs	104
M. & St. P. Dubuque	105	Union Pac. 1st 6s	104½
C. N. W. Sink. F.	106½	Union Pac. L. G. 7s	102¾
C. & N. W. Ext. bds	100	P., Ft. W. & Chic. 1st	119
C. & N. W. 1st	105½	Clev. & P. Con. S. F.	110½
Iowa Mid. 1st. 8s	94	Col., Chic. & Ind. 1st	35¼
Galena & Chic. Ext.	106¼	Col., Chic. & Ind. 2d	6⅜
Chicago & Mo. Riv. 7s	98	Ill. Cen. 1st. 7s	106
C., C. & I. 1st 7s. S. F.	110	St. L. & Iron Mt. 1st	98
Del., L. & W. 2d	108½	Alton & T. H. 1st	106
Del., L. & W. 7s. C.	103	Alt. & T. H. 2d Inc.	71
M. & E. 7s. of 1871	102	B. & S. Ill. 1st, 8s	87½
Erie 2d 7s	79	T., P. & W. 1st, E. D.	85
Erie 3d 7s	104½	T., P. & W. 1st, Ex.	104½
Erie 4th 7s	102⅝	T., P. & W. 1st, I. D.	82¼
R., N. Y. & E. 1st	77	Tol. & Wab. 2d	75
R., N. Y. & E. L. bds	91	T. & W. Eqip. Bds.	16
H. & S. J. Land G'rnt.	110	T

MR. FIELD'S REBEL WITNESS.

JOSEPH H. MADDOX'S SERVICES TO THE CONFEDERACY.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE OF HIS DISLOYALTY TO THE UNION FOUND IN THE CONFEDERATE RECORDS—HIS OFFERS TO THE REBEL GOVERNMENT — INFORMATION FURNISHED FROM INSIDE THE UNION LINES—HIS SINCERITY DOUBTED BY THE REBEL AUTHORITIES—A DOUBLE GAME PLAYED WITH A VIEW TO PRIVATE GAINS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1877.

J. H. Maddox, who has been relied upon by David Dudley Field to establish the existence of a bargain on the part of Gov. Wells, of the Returning Board, to sell Louisiana to the Democrats, has a history. Part of it is in the nature of autobiography, which becomes interesting at this time, because Maddox swore in his testimony that he was in the Union service during the war, and gave everybody the impression that he was a stanch Union man. He represented himself as having been employed to gain information for the Union side, and to aid him in this business he had a pass through the Union lines. He admitted having had one interview with Jeff. Davis, but said he had never given Davis any information. The evidence of his own letters and the Confederate records sold to the Government by his friend Pickett tell a different story from that which Maddox now swears to. It is quite possible—and the papers suggest—that during the war, as during his adventures in New-Orleans, he was playing a double game. Even he himself has stated that he was serving the Confederacy and making a private gain at the same time.

RICHMOND, Sept. 7, 1862.

To the Honorable Secretary of War:

SIR: I desire authority to raise a regiment of Cavalry in the lower counties of the western shore of Maryland, viz.: Calvert, Prince George's, St. Mary's, and Charles. I have no doubt that I can speedily secure enough men, who will furnish their own horses, from this district; and I hope to be enabled to do this in time to join our Army while in that State. Respectfully,

J. H. MADDOX.

This paper has the following indorsement:

The within applicant, Joseph H. Maddox, Esq., of St. Mary's County, Md., is personally known to me as a man of high character and social position, highly educated and possessed of a very large fortune. As Captain of a squadron of dragoons, under command of Col. Butler, during the Mexican war, he acquitted himself with great credit. During the present war his time and fortune have been most lavishly expended for the benefit of our cause, and an incarceration of three months in Fort Warren affords another proof of his devotion to the [Southern cause] same. This application receives the fullest indorsement from Provost Marshal Griswold, W. H. Norris, Esq., and, indeed, it is believed, from every prominent citizen of Maryland now in Richmond. Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM NORRIS, Captain C. S. A.

Maddox's application was received at the Confederate War Department on Sept. 8, 1862, and was answered upon the same day, as appears by an indorsement made to that effect. The application bears the following additional indorsement:

Authorize him to raise a regiment or battalion of cavalry in Maryland. G. W. R.

The above indorsement was made by G. W. Randolph, Secretary of War of the Confederacy.

The request of Maddox seems to have been urged by citizens of influence with the Confederate military authorities, as may be inferred from the indorsement made on his application. The following additional recommendation was also filed:

The Adjutant General C. S. A.:

DEAR SIR: The names of the gentlemen spoken of in my communication of yesterday are Joseph H. Maddox and John B. Brockenbrough. Mr. Maddox steps at the Spotswood Hotel when in Richmond. The address of Mr. Brockenbrough I do not know certainly, but think it is Richmond. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, E. LOUIS LOWE.

ASHLAND, Sept. 10, 1861.

Maddox at once started to recruit his regiment of cavalry from among his friends in Southern Maryland. While thus engaged, or prior to commencing active recruiting, he was vigilantly looking out for the interests of the Confederacy, and furnished them such information of the movements of the Federal forces as might prove advantageous to the Confederate military authorities. On Sept. 12, 1862, he wrote the Confederate Secretary of War from Westmoreland, Va., as follows, the letter being marked at the Confederate War Office as having been received Sept. 15, 1862:

HAGUS, WESTMORELAND COUNTY, Sept. 12, 1862.

Hon. G. W. Randolph, Secretary of War:

SIR: From what I can learn here, I am satisfied that the Yankees are moving their stores from Washington. The river has been for several days full of vessels going to Washington and returning. All go up empty and return deeply loaded. I can see distinctly that there are no soldiers on the boats coming down. Several have passed up with troops, and many with horses. I hope to make a landing in St. Mary's County, Md., in a day or two, and that I will be able to give a good account of myself.

I would suggest the propriety of establishing a daily mail across the Potomac at this point. Capt. Norris will explain my ideas in regard to it. Yours, in haste, J. H. MADDOX.

Appreciating the value of obtaining for the Confederates trustworthy information of the movements of the Union forces and the purposes of the United States Military authorities, Capt. Norris, of the Confederate Signal Service, after conversation with Maddox, recommended to President Davis, through Secretary Randolph, the establishment of a corps of trusty carriers and messengers, and in furtherance of his scheme recommended the employment of Maddox as an agent at Washington to obtain full and reliable intelligence of all matters of interest to the Confederacy. Capt. Norris' plans of operations are set forth in the following letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Sept. 12, 1862.

Hon. G. W. Randolph, Secretary of War:

GENERAL: The verbal suggestions recently made respecting regular and rapid communication with Maryland and the North are renewed, employing eight couriers and seven seamen. I propose to furnish the Government daily with communications from our friends in Washington, Baltimore, &c., and also the Northern journals, and perhaps with dispatches from the Army.

Even should the present line be interrupted, it might be judicious to multiply the chances of transmitting Army intelligence, and, should our forces advance at once, the route through lower Maryland would for some time be the most safe, direct, and available.

Trusty messengers and the Federal mails will be the agents relied upon across the Potomac. Mr. Maddox, now raising a regiment of cavalry in Maryland, has, with great spirit and self-devotion, volunteered to execute this part of the duty. His means for obtaining intelligence from men of judgment and position in Washington are peculiarly great, and his facilities for forwarding dispatches. In this connection I beg to suggest anew, for the consideration of the President, a proposition to station a reliable officer in Quebec; his duty to convert into cipher, or the reverse, and forward all dispatches to the President to and from our agents and Ministers abroad. It is believed that this could be accomplished with but little delay beyond that of regular mail time, and with no possibility of discovery. The details of the several plans have been fully matured, and only await your approval to be put into immediate operation. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, &c.

WILLIAM NORRIS, Captain Signal Corps.

Hon. GEORGE W. RANDOLPH, Secretary of War.

Upon receiving this letter, Secretary Randolph referred it to President Davis, with the following indorsement:

Respectfully submitted to the President.

The necessary steps will be taken to open communications with Maryland. Shall the suggestion of stationing an agent in Quebec be adopted?

G. W. RANDOLPH, Secretary of War.

The following indorsement was made on the letter by President Davis himself:

No objection to communicating with agent in a changed key, but it would be unsafe to rely on such means, as I do not think, if the cipher could not be read, that the letters would be allowed to pass through United States mails. J. D.

MADDOX'S LOYALTY TO THE CONFEDERACY SUSPECTED.

What services Maddox rendered the Confederacy between September, 1862, and May, 1863, are not shown by any records made in that period. It seems, however, that his loyalty to the Confederacy became suspected, and that the authority granted him to recruit a regiment of cavalry in Maryland was in consequence withdrawn. It is highly probable Maddox found that it would be more safe and profitable to speculate commercially on both sides, which dangerous business naturally caused him to be suspected. It was during this period, no doubt, that he succeeded in possessing himself, through false representations, with a permit to trade from President Lincoln. In his testimony before Mr. Field's committee, Maddox swore he had a permit to pass through the lines from President Lincoln, but in view of his record during the war this statement is considered questionable.

Upon visiting Richmond in May, 1863, Maddox was detained in custody by the Confederate military authorities, and was subsequently paroled, as will be seen from the following:

HEAD-QUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF HENRICO, RICHMOND, June 6, 1863.

Joseph H. Maddox, a citizen of Carroll County, Md., is detained in custody by the authority of the Confederate States, and goes at large upon the execution of his parole of honor that he will not attempt to cross the line of the Potomac or leave the City of Richmond without permission of the public authority of Confederate States.

JOHN H. WINDER, Brigadier General.

While under parole Maddox appears to have continued to perform such service as he was able for the Confederacy. He regarded his arrest as a great act of injustice, in view of the valuable services rendered the Confederacy, as will be seen by his letter to Gen. Winder, dated May 20, 1863, and charged that his detention was caused by malicious reports of personal enemies.

The following extract from a dispatch from Major Norris, signal officer, shows that Maddox was communicating to the Confederates information about the movements of the United States forces stationed at Fortress Monroe:

SIGNAL OFFICE, June 22, 1863.

[Special dispatch from Capt. C. H. Causey, in Elizabeth County, Va.]

[Extract.]

I was not able to keep my confidential agent last night on the lower peninsula, as the lower peninsula is filled with provost guards enrolling negroes, nolens volens. I saw M., who informed me that Keyes' head-quarters are at Fortress Monroe. He thinks his force does not exceed six thousand, (6,000.) Official. WILLIAM NORRIS, Major, &c.

The following letter written by Maddox to Gen. John H. Winder narrates his services to the Confederacy:

RICHMOND, July 20, 1863.

GENERAL: Some six weeks ago I came to Richmond on business. I thought that I had been of great use to the authorities of the Confederacy, as I certainly had the desire to promote the interests of this country and the successful progress of its cause. In acquiring information in the United States which it would be the interest of the authorities here to have, I had necessarily come into contact, and had of choice associated much, with prominent officials of the Federal side. This association, it would seem, started suspicion of my loyalty to the South, which suspicion was communicated from some source to men in power here, and evidently attached to me on my arrival in Richmond. The President of the Confederacy suggested that I had so acted in its behalf that he thought I could not return to my home in safety, and that he was prepared to see my services offered to the cause of which he is the chief. Acting upon his suggestion, my services were immediately tendered—the sphere of action indicated for which I felt qualified and which was most agreeable to me. The Secretary of War declined my offer, saying an acceptance was "unadvisable at this time." I presumed his action was founded upon the then existing state of affairs in Maryland. Richmond was threatened in a few days, it raised a command and entered the camp in her defense. I was at the head of a battalion consisting for the most part of Maryland men. These after a few days were willing to enlist regularly as mounted men under my command, provided they could be furnished with horses, and I, having the means to procure them, was willing to advance for that purpose. This being satisfactorily arranged, I obtained names nearly sufficient to establish the proposed organization, and again offered my services to the Secretary of War, who declined to give me the authority required to raise the battalion. Having ascertained that I was regarded in some powerful quarters as a suspected person, I proposed to disband my battalion and return to my home in Maryland. My application was refused; so that it seems this Government will not accept my offer to enter service at the head of a battalion raised and to be furnished by myself primarily, nor will it give me the privilege of withdrawing to my home on the other side of the Potomac.

While Gen. Lee's movements were shrouded in mystery I made no objection to the decision of the Secretary, but there can no longer be any reason founded on that idea. Gen. Lee's late movement to the Virginia side of the Potomac leaves the present a fit moment for me to return to Virginia, so that I may not find it "unadvisable" after new movements of the Army shall have been made.

If the Secretary of War will permit my return to Maryland at any time, the present would appear to be the most appropriate time. I desire that my passport shall be now furnished. If it is his purpose to detain me in this country as a suspected person, I ask that the Government will have the direciness to put me in durance by some sign that will furnish me the evidence of that fact. If it be a prison, let me be incarcerated, so that I can by law effect my own deliverance; if it be merely a confinement to certain boundaries, let me have a statement in writing, to show that I am detained against my will, to the end that by its exhibition elsewhere I may prevent embarrassment to my estates.

The Secretary promised to see you, and I concluded he would consult and determine with you whether it were best to permit my return to Maryland or to parole me here as a prisoner. This is my preference, under the circumstances, to return to Maryland. Any position in service now would be unacceptable, having been refused twice, and I could only take it with a conviction that suspicion would follow my movements, to carp at any misfortune that might overtake me, as if that had furnished evidence of my original bad faith, while I could not hope for the equal chances of advancement with others in the event of success. I can find in the retirement of my home and attention to private interests, which have suffered from my absence, the means of employing time usefully, and a compensation for the failure on my part to attract friendship by the zeal with which I proposed to serve the cause of a brave people struggling for independence, which has and will continue to have my warmest sympathy. I am, with sentiments of esteem, very truly yours, &c., J. H. MADDOX.

This letter was referred to the Secretary of War by Gen. Winder without comment. No reply appears among the records.

MADDOX AGAIN PROTESTS HIS LOYALTY TO THE REBEL CAUSE.

Being unable to accomplish what he desired through Gen. Winder, Maddox addressed the following letter to President Davis. It will be noticed that in this letter Maddox again refers to his valuable services to the Confederacy, and reminds President Davis that he pursued the course marked out for him by Mr. Davis:

RICHMOND, Aug. 14, 1863.

Mr. President:

The object of this note is to request your direction to the Adjutant General to return to me a letter written to you by me, without signature, from Richmond Court-house, Va., and to request you to return the letter I addressed to you some six weeks since.

I avail myself of the occasion so submit to your perusal certain documents which you will find inclosed. This is done that there may be no mistake in your privity to the fact that I have pursued the course you invited me to take, and that my offers of service have not only been repeatedly declined, but, instead of being put in commission, I have been put in duress.

It is not my purpose to complain. Under other auspices services like mine would have attracted a regard more in accord with my zeal; but I have no reason to question the sincerity with which another course has been taken. I submit, and now ask that you will, after the perusal of this note, return it and the inclosures to my address, care of Kent, Paine & Co. Respectfully, your obedient servant, J. H. MADDOX.

His Excellency Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States.

Upon this letter President Davis made the following indorsement:

The request to return the note and its inclosures is complied with, but this leaves nothing on which to act, and is equivalent, therefore, to a withdrawal of other requests the note contains. J. D.

Aug. 14, 1863.

Upon the same date Maddox wrote the following to Gen. Winder:

RICHMOND, Aug. 14, 1863.

Brig. Gen. J. H. Winder:

SIR: I have been here for nearly three months upon some vague idea affecting my loyalty to the Confederate States. I have repeatedly asked to know the charges against me, and have invariably been informed that none exist. Yet I am not allowed to return home. I respectfully ask that you will investigate my case, and thus give me an opportunity of meeting the charges that may be made against me. Respectfully, your obedient servant, J. H. MADDOX.

HEAD-QUARTERS DEPARTMENT, Aug. 14, 1863.

There are no specific charges—indeed, I may say any charges—against Mr. Maddox on file at these head-quarters. J. H. WINDER, Brigadier General.

In proof of his loyalty to the Confederate cause, and as furnishing evidence of the injustice done him, on Aug. 28 Maddox wrote as follows, inclosing a letter received from his wife. The party to whom the letter was addressed does not appear, but it has the official marks of the Confederate War Office on its back, showing that it was laid before the military authorities:

RICHMOND, Aug. 28, 1863.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just received your note dated yesterday, for which I thank you. This morning a gentleman arrived from Baltimore, and brought the inclosed letter to me from my wife. If the President will read it, he will, I think, be less inclined to credit the slanders against me. I have news from my estates in St. Mary's County, and my affairs there need my immediate attention. I have sent bond and cor $5,000 in Federal exchange to my wife; the exchange, I fear, is lost.

Partly for gain, and partly to help a cause dear to my heart, I engaged in an undertaking which has resulted in pecuniary loss and personal discredit, and may result in my ruin.

May God forgive those who have thus pursued and persecuted me.

If the Secretary of War had given me an opportunity for explanation all would have been right. It was certainly due to one who was serving the country. Respectfully, in haste, yours, &c.

J. H. MADDOX.

The following is the letter from Mrs. Maddox. Those portions marked by asterisks are omitted because they are strictly private:

ANTRIM, Aug. 4, 1863.

MY DEAR HUSBAND: Your letter of the 20th reached me yesterday, and I can hardly tell you of the feeling of deep despair it gave me. In the thought of such a prolonged separation and the grief caused by it, I almost forget to see the good that has been done you by the dashing of your hopes of usefulness to the cause so dear to you by the malice of pretended friends. * * *

We were not much troubled by the soldiers in their passage through here. Nearly the whole of Meade's Army passed through Tarrytown, and the citizens were disposed to incite the soldiers to commit all the depredations upon the property that they could, by telling them that we were secessionists, &c. I think our lonely condition, as two unprotected females, saved us in a measure from a great deal of trouble we would have had if you had been at home. They tried to corrupt our servants, but finding them so loyal to us, they said it was useless to talk to them, they knew we were a set of secessionists from the master down to the niggers!

Antrim was selected—so I have been told since—as the battle ground. We saw them surveying the fields, near the woods, below the house. The intention of the enemy, they say, was to attack Lee at Gettysburg and fall back to this part of the country. In that event we would have been ruined. * * * I was very much worried by the trespass upon the property, but toward the last I learned to bear it more patiently. They had it in their power to do us all the harm they wished, and no doubt they would have ruined the place if it had not been a little one of their way to come out here. The main body of the Army came up the Frederick road, and, we being off the road, saved us from a great deal of annoyance. I could write all day about the scenes through which we have passed since you left. *

I trust the misunderstanding that has arisen between you and your friends may soon be settled, and that you will soon be home. I cannot imagine how this could have been brought about. I thought your position so clearly defined that no trouble could ever arise in regard to it. If there is any prospect of you being long detained from home, please let me sell Antrim and go to you. * * Your wife, L.

MADDOX REQUESTS AN INTERVIEW WITH PRESIDENT DAVIS.

Shortly after writing the foregoing letter, Maddox wrote to Col. William Preston Johnston, vindicating himself of the charges against him, and asking for an interview with President Davis.

MY DEAR SIR: I had occasion, some short time ago, to request the President to return to me certain letters written by me, without signature, to any one; and I learn that he is under the impression that he had complied with my request. But as the letters have not reached me, and as I am indisposed to write to him again upon the subject, I venture to tax your kindness so far as to ask you to look to the matter for him, and will esteem any efforts to call the attention of Mr. Davis to the former request of mine, and to see that the said letters are returned to me.

Your relations to the President may enable me, through you, to make some explanations which seem to be necessary to remove erroneous impressions that I learn he entertains. I am my own defense entirely and concealed nothing. I did not volunteer any explanations about my private affairs, for such would have been unseemly and impertinent.

I listened to rumors impugning my sincerity, and felt secure in the confidence I presumed to have been established in my character, for which I could safely rest "as on a rock." I heeded the suggestion that I should enter the service of the Government when it was supposed unsafe for me to return home; and when Gen. Lee passed beyond the borders of the Confederacy and entered my native State, I offered to go and raise a regiment of cavalry. This was postponed, as I presumed, from prudential motives arising from the situation in Maryland. The Secretary of War indorsed upon the papers referred to his action by the President that "it was unadvisable at this time to grant the authority." I obeyed the desire to wait. The situation changed. Meantime I had taken up arms to join the Confederate Army in the capital, and was in the field for some days. There I learned that my battalion, composed chiefly of Marylanders, would enlist in the cavalry, for the war, upon the condition that I furnish the horses required. Possessing the means, and still supposing myself to be pursuing the wish of the President, I agreed to furnish the horses to mount a battalion, of which I was to assume the command, and with whom I was ready to enter the service immediately. All the arrangements were made with men in numbers nearly sufficient for the battalion, and nothing remained but to obtain the authorization of the Secretary of War to complete the organization. This had no connection whatever with my original proposition, and so certain was I that it would be promptly accepted by Mr. Seddons that I, in several cases, advanced a part of the bounty money to the men.

I applied in person to the Secretary of War for the authority; I stated the facts in as plain English as I knew, and his reply was "that he had granted such authority often before, and been disappointed, and had concluded not to do so again." There can be no misunderstanding of this matter between Mr. Seddons and me, and I am thus minute in describing the particulars of my offer and its rejection, because the character of this offer itself has been perverted, and instead of being a merit to my credit, seems to have been so stated to the ear of the President as to have aggravated suspicion against me. This offer was not only refused, but the fact was made apparent that I was regarded with a suspicion that even a Presidential indorsement did not remove from the mind of the Secretary of War.

Was it strange that I, who had not asked favors, and who had only proffered evidences of friendship, should seek to withdraw from a country where my advances had been so repulsed? I was given to understand that I would not be accepted among those commissioned to sustain the cause of the Confederacy, and moreover that I would not be suffered to depart; in other words, I was held in duress—a political prisoner. I have stood since upon the terms of a parole. Is it strange under these circumstances I should seek to regain my home, where no function had been performed, and which had failed to secure the confidence which had been expressed to me or to give me protection or support? This is the only explanation of my desire to have my letters; they can do other parties now no service; they will not compromise me when in my own keeping.

As to my investments in Maryland, the explanation is simply that my wife, who had money independent of me, invested it in a farm in Carroll County, which she holds in her own right, as purchased with her own funds. This purchase was made after an interview I had with Mr. Davis, shortly after my release from Fort Warren. I submitted my case then to the President, and he advised me to return to Maryland, and left events to develop. Mr. Benjamin was present at that conversation. My desire to return with my funds to Maryland was not for the purpose of investment, but to liquidate a debt upon property that I could not honestly remove without. There was a debt due on my negroes (about 70 in number) which I felt bound to pay, believing I could move them. I have during the war nearly always had money in Richmond, at times large amounts. I own real estate to some value in the South.

I am still desirous to withdraw after all that has occurred. If not permitted to return to Maryland, I wish to go South and look after other interests. I do not seek to force explanations, and I do not aspire to favors. Standing on the foundation of that right which belongs in a Government like this, to the humblest man, I shall seek no more than that I be treated with justice, and be permitted to make my own way unmolested by public authority, when I demean myself with propriety before the law.

I wish you to make these explanations of my status, as opportunity may occur, return the letters, and believe me very truly yours, &c.,

J. H. MADDOX.

Col. WILLIAM PRESTON JOHNSTON, present.

P. S.—I find that I am unable to make as full an explanation as I desire in any position. I desire the good opinion of the President, and hope not to lose it by any fault of mine. If he will grant me an interview at his house, any evening, I think I can explain all things to his satisfaction. I had a delicacy in asking this before, but as the President's mind is certainly prejudiced against me, and I am no longer an applicant for position, I think it is due to my character to relieve his mind of it if possible. J. H. M.

The foregoing was laid before President Davis, indorsed as follows:

Inclosed letter sent to me to lay before the President. WILLIAM PRESTON JOHNSTON, Colonel and Aide de Camp.

The letter was referred to the Secretary of War, at that time J. H. Seddons, with the following indorsement made by President Davis:

Secretary of War, whose attention is called to the matter of the detail of mounted men. The letters referred are supposed to be those on which I made an indorsement, of the import of which the writer appears to be advised. J. D.

Aug. 31, 1863.

Secretary Seddons was not satisfied with Maddox's explanation, as will be seen from the following indorsement made under that of President Davis:

I do not deem it advisable to give the authority; nor, indeed, can I admit myself prepared to give any military trust to this applicant.

Sept. 2, 1863. J. H. S., Secretary.

MADDOX ENGAGED TO FURNISH MEDICAL SUPPLIES.

Mr. Maddox with this ceased all efforts to regain the confidence of the leaders of the Southern Confederacy; but two months after his letter was written to Col. Johnson, Dr. Spottswood, Medical Purveyor of the Confederate Navy, communicated with Maddox with a view of employing him in obtaining certain medical supplies then very much needed by the rebels. Following is Dr. Spottswood's letter to Maddox:

CONFEDERATE STATES NAVY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE MEDICINE AND SURGERY, RICHMOND, Nov. 6, 1863.

J. H. Maddox, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: The necessities of the Navy Department demanding an immediate supply of articles, of which I hand you herewith a schedule, and there being some uncertainty as to the delay of the shipments under charge of Dr. Gibslin, I desire to know if you can in any way furnish the articles required without delay, and if you can, I wish to know upon what terms you will undertake immediately to fill the requisition. Respectfully, &c.,

W. A. N. SPOTTSWOOD, Surgeon in Charge, &c.

To the foregoing Maddox replied promptly as follows:

RICHMOND, Nov. 7, 1863.

Medical Purveyor, Confederate States America:

SIR: Referring to your note of the 6th inst., I have to say I think the articles of which you stand so much in need might be supplied, provided one could act with license from the Government.

You are probably aware that in my own person I have not been favored with the confidence of that Department to which such privileges emanate, and it may be remarked that I have grown into such odor on the other side that now it would be unsafe for me to fall into the hands of the enemy. I would not be willing to risk my safety by attempting in person the execution of any enterprise demanding my personal presence within the lines of the enemy.

If the privilege could be obtained for an agent to superintend the sales of tobacco, and a license can be given to me to purchase a quantity for shipment, the proceeds might be turned into the articles you require, and I will cheerfully embark the pecuniary means by way of advance of purchase and ship it, with a view to your accommodation, upon the same terms as to outlay and reimbursement as contained in our original contract. Mr. Leon Duvall is a proper person to fill such agency, and it only remains for you to procure for him the necessary license from the proper department to put your wishes in a fair way for execution.

In so far as my ability may assist by advancing and by risking means may be calculated to accomplish your wishes, I stand ever ready to meet any call that may be supposed calculated to advance the public interest. Respectfully yours, &c.,

J. H. MADDOX.

In accordance with the suggestion of Maddox, a license was issued to purchase and ship tobacco, the license being issued upon the following recommendation from Dr. Spottswood:

I recommend that the license to purchase and ship tobacco across the lines be granted to J. H. Maddox, Esq., and that Mr. Leon Duvall have a pass to act as his agent, with a view of turning the proceeds of sales of tobacco into articles demanded immediately and immediately for the use of the Navy Department, of which articles he has the schedule.

W. A. N. SPOTTSWOOD, Surgeon in Charge.

RICHMOND, Nov. 7, 1863.

Maddox has a large claim against the United States for tobacco alleged to have been captured, and it is believed the tobacco captured was that which he engaged to trade in exchange for medical supplies to be used in the naval service of the Confederate States. The evidence here furnished of his disloyalty should be sufficient to vitiate any claim of this kind he may prefer against the United States.

ADDITIONAL PROOF OF MADDOX'S REBEL SYMPATHIES.

If any additional proof of the disloyalty of John H. Maddox to the United States during the rebellion is needed it is furnished by Mr. Maddox himself in the following letter, which needs no explanation:

RICHMOND, Dec. 23, 1863.

Hon. James A. Seddons, Secretary of War:

SIR: After sustaining heavy losses of property occasioned by my detention in Richmond, for causes which have never been explained to me, but which, I presume, in the exercise of a commendable vigilance, no doubt considered sufficient justification for the course of the public authority, I am informed that my family, with such of my Maryland property that is left me, and which can be removed, consisting of some 40 slaves, &c., &c., may in a few weeks be expected to remove from St. Mary's County, Md., to the Virginia side of the Potomac River to remain thereafter permanently in the Confederacy. This evidence of my intention may or may not be accepted as a proof of my loyalty to a cause with which, in its darkest hours, I thus identify my family and my fortune; but I trust, at least, it may be sufficient apology for my asking from your written authorization to Mr. Jacson Bell, my agent, for the introduction of some 12,000 or 15,000 pounds of bacon, which constitutes a supply for my family and slaves, and which has been prepared for and moves in company with them, or at least, so as to be easily accessible for their use.

As the seizure of this supply would put me to the most serious inconvenience, and subject me to great loss, to avoid a chance of a calamity of the kind, I request that you will give me a paper to authorize Mr. Bell to pass, with the bacon, unmolested by the military authorities, and, that the same shall not be impressed for public use.

I have contemplated a scheme of surprise of Leonardstown, Md., to be conducted by myself, after my family is secure on this side of the Potomac. I think it can be effected and I hope you will so far forego your former doubts as to my desire to render service to the cause of the South, as to lend me in this matter a vigorous assistance, and, to me, at this standing point from which I may with authority from the Government raise an independent battalion of cavalry, to be composed of Marylanders and others, not subject to conscription. To make the attack successful I would require a detachment temporarily from Col. Brady's Virginia command (Col. Johnson commanding, some 75 or 80 men). I think I can directly raise as many more, and with 150 men I am willing to lead the enterprise in person. The Federal cavalry at Leonardstown is composed of 100 men. The scheme embraces the capture of a steamer and cargo, together with horses, cavalry equipments, clothing, arms, and personal effects. I propose that the steamer and cargo shall be turned over to the Government, but that the horses, equipments, arms, and other personal effects shall remain the property of the captors, to facilitate the quick enlistment of the desired independent battalion.

Should you think favorably of the leading features of this scheme, I shall take great pleasure in placing the details before you at the earliest moment. Respectfully yours, &c. J. H. MADDOX.

Secretary of War Seddons granted the request preferred in the foregoing letter in the following indorsement:

Reasonable supplies for family consumption, and free from the impressment of the department. I can give no other than the general protection offered by law. J. A. S., Secretary.

4 Jan'y, '64.

A SELF-EXCUSED MURDERER.

The Hartford Courant of Friday contains the following: "Twenty-two years ago a young man in New-Haven was engaged to marry a young woman there. For some reason she transferred her promise to marry; if not her affections, to another person. The first suitor, who was a respectable mechanic, disapproved of the match and declared that his rival was a disreputable person who would lead his affianced a wretched life, and that while he could surrender her himself, he would rather she should die than marry that man. Accordingly, and with cool nerve, he went home from the awful fate of such a degrading marriage, he killed the girl. He did not attempt to conceal his deed; he justified it, and regarded himself as the savior of the girl's happiness. He was tried for murder, and acquitted on the ground of insanity, although he stoutly denied that he was insane, and said that he had acted upon his cool conviction of what was best for the girl, and was ready to suffer the penalty of the law for the homicide. Acquitted, he was remanded to the county jail by the court; he remained there seven or eight years, all the time protesting that he was in his right mind, and that the State should either hang him for murder or release him. He was then transferred to the State Prison at Wethersfield, by what authority it does not appear, under no sentence. There he has remained until this day, in the same state of mind, apparently rational on all subjects except that he insists that he had a right to kill the girl to save her from dishonor; and that if the State thought otherwise it should have punished him as a murderer. This is the story of Willard Clarke, who has now petitioned the Assembly to remove him from the State Prison to the Insane Asylum at Middletown."

YALE'S REPLY TO CORNELL.

The Ithaca Journal of Thursday thus expresses itself: "The excuse that Yale gives for not accepting the challenge sent by Cornell to row an eight-oared race next Summer is rather flimsy. It is declared that the Yale Boat Club is heavily in debt and cannot afford to incur the expense incident to such a race. If the contest should take place a week after the Harvard-Yale race, (to which Cornell would gladly assent,) the additional expense would be trifling—simply the cost of boarding eight men for that length of time. If the Eastern college does not dare to meet Cornell again on the water for fear of defeat, (though not feeling inclined to admit the fact,) she certainly should not offer such silly excuses as the above for refusing the challenge. If there be anything in the statement that Harvard wants to be directly challenged before she will agree to meet Cornell, we have little doubt that that objection will shortly be overcome."

A BALL IN HIS EYE.

The Elk River (Sherburne County, Minn.,) News narrates the following: "We have information of a remarkable circumstance occurring to Mr. T. T. Cook, who is a brother to W. H. and J. H. Cook, of Anoka, and who, we are informed, resided here one Summer, a few years since, and will be remembered by many of our citizens. Mr. T. T. Cook was a Union soldier, and while engaged in a fight with Morgan's raiders, at Cynthiana, Ky., on the 11th of June, 1864, received a wound in the left eye, by which that organ was destroyed. The wound was never carefully examined, the surgeons thinking it was made by a splinter or spent shot. The wound never healed, and has proved a great annoyance to Mr. Cook. But last Thanksgiving morning, while at Daniel Floch's, in West Sheuango, Penn., a Minie ball dropped out of his eye, followed by a purulent discharge. The ball weighed 1½ ounces, and had lain imbedded in the skull, near the eye, for 12 years 5 months and 18 days."

LAW REPORTS.

THE CHECK FORGERY CASE.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF THE BROKER MAXWELL—HIS STORY OF THE CASE—HORACE E. BROWNE'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE NEGOTIATIONS WITH MAXWELL.

The examination of George L. Maxwell, the broker charged with negotiating the forged $64,225 check, was resumed yesterday morning at the Tombs Police Court, before Justice Duffy, Assistant District Attorney Herring, and Mr. Peckham appearing for the prosecution, and Mr. Seward and Gen. Foster for Maxwell. Maxwell was cross-examined by Mr. Peckham, and testified that he had been a broker and member of the Stock Exchange 30 years; he was not a member of the Gold Board, and, if he purchased gold, he would have to employ a broker; he met Horace E. Browne for the first time in October last, at which time Browne wanted to get up a mining company; witness saw Browne very often afterward in New street, and used to play billiards with him at a saloon in that street; it was about the 23d of December that Browne first spoke to him about buying gold and Government securities for an institution, and he agreed with him to do so and secretly divide the commissions with some one inside of the institution, which Browne afterward told him was the New-York Life Insurance Company; witness saw Browne on the 2d of January, and told him he had got the order and check from the insurance company and was going to the Union Trust Company to get the check certified, and Browne told him that was the wisest thing he could do; witness was ordered to buy the gold on the 3d of January, but did not buy it till the 5th, because he thought the insurance company might countermand the order in the meantime, as gold had gone up a little; witness called on Mr. Brachvogel, a clerk in the New-York Life Insurance Company, in company with Gen. Foster, on the afternoon of the 3d of January, and Gen. Foster showed Brachvogel a letter which witness had received from a messenger who witness supposed came from, the insurance company, and asked Brachvogel whether it was signed by an officer of the insurance company, and Brackvogel said it was not; witness had lost that letter and did not remember the name signed to it; it was an order from the insurance company to buy gold, and only the signature was shown to Brachvogel.

Mr. Edward King, President of the Union Trust Company, called by Mr. Seward, testified that he was present when Maxwell was brought to the Trust Company by Mr. Dewitt C. Hays; Maxwell was requested to produce the letters about the check, and get Horace E. Browne to come to the office; Maxwell brought the letters on that day, and Browne came the next day, and so did Maxwell.

Mr. Cohen, of the firm of Richards & Cohen, who purchased $50,000 gold for Maxwell, called by Mr. Peckham, testified that he took the gold check for $50,000 to Maxwell & Blood's office, and offered the check to Blood, who asked that the check should be converted into gold certificates, and at Maxwell's wish witness tried to get the check changed so as to get four $10,000 certificates, one $5,000 certificate, and five $1,000 certificates; but instead he got five $10,000 certificates, which he brought to the office and gave to Blood.

Runyon W. Martin, Jr., called by Mr. Peckham, testified that on the 5th of January Maxwell asked him whether he was doing anything in gold; told him that he was buying gold for an institution up town, and said he would put him in the business if he liked, as he did not know much about gold transactions himself; witness told him that he could not do it, as he would have to get the gold before he got the check to pay for it, and he could not lose the time required in sending up town on such business; on the following morning witness went to Maxwell's office and asked him what institution he wanted him to do business for, and was told that it was a life insurance company in New-York, or the New-York Life Insurance Company, he [witness] could not remember which.

Horace E. Brown, called by Mr. Peckham, testified that Maxwell had agreed to arrange for negotiating checks purporting to be sent to him from the New-York Life Insurance Company, the understanding being that 55 per cent of the amount realized on such checks was to go to the company, 20 per cent. to officers of the company and 25 per cent. to Maxwell and his friends; witness told Maxwell that hundreds of thousands of dollars might be got out of the company in this way; Maxwell told witness that he had committed a forgery, and had been informed that he could not be held criminally even on an indorsement, as that would merely follow the certification of the Trust Company; he said that in the event of a discovery the verdict of public opinion would simply be that he was a fool, and ought to be sent to the company to ascertain whether everything was right instead of doing business so blindly; on the 2d of January witness saw Maxwell, who told that he had received the letter and check from the messenger supposed to come from the insurance company; Maxwell told him that if any trouble came William H. Beers, the Vice President of the insurance company, was going to be the man who would run it; [Mr. Beers was sitting near the witness when he said this, and laughed heartily;] witness told Maxwell that the books of the insurance company would be so arranged that there would scarcely be any possibility of detection, unless, by some inadvertence, the books should be examined at some unexpected time; if a premature exposure should happen they were both agreed that officers of the company, who were in the scheme, might make the point that the check or checks (which were genuine) were forged. Witness, in conclusion, told how he got a $10,000 gold certificate from Maxwell, gave $5,000 to Chadwick, spent some of the balance, and deposited the remainder ($3,300) in the safe of a lawyer, Mr. Flanagan, at No. 35 Wall street, from whence it had been taken by witness' counsel, Mr. W. Wirt Hewett, and given to Mr. Peckham, who had receipted for it.

The cross-examination of Browne was put over to 10:30 o'clock this morning.

AN ALLEGED WRONGFUL SEIZURE.

The case of Edward Aaron, a minor, by his guardian, Rachel Rauth, against Godchaud & Hirsch was brought to trial before Judge Joseph F. Daly and a jury, in Part III. of the Supreme Court, yesterday. The plaintiff alleges that he was the owner of a hat store at No. 148 Bowery, and that his goods were seized at the instigation of the defendants on Sept. 11, 1873. He claims $3,000 damages. The defendants in answer deny that the plaintiff was the owner of the goods, and allege that they caused the seizure to be made by a City Marshal under an execution on a judgment obtained by them in a suit in a District Court against Levi Aaron, the father of the plaintiff, who they claim, is the real party in interest. An appeal from that suit is now pending. The case will be continued.

Thomas D. Hall brought suit in the Supreme Court against Smith E. Tuttle to recover for advances on a cargo of nuts, mostly pea-nuts. In Part II. of the court yesterday Hall obtained a judgment by default for $62,752 34.

The counsel for the people in the $6,000,000 Tweed suit filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday the bill of costs of the appeal in the case to the Supreme Court, General Term, which recently sustained the judgment in favor of the people. The bill is for $179 15.

The Court of Oyer and Terminer will be opened on Monday in the room usually occupied by Part I. of the Supreme Court, and will be presided over by Judge Brady. Part I. of the Supreme Court, presided over by Judge Donohue, will be held in the General Term room of the court.

James Drisc

SHIPPING.

WHITE STAR LINE.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL, CARRYING UNITED STATES MAIL.

The steamers of this line take the Lake Routes recommended by Lieut. Maury, U. S. N., going south of the Banks on the passage to Queenstown all the year round.

ADRIATIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 10, at 3 P. M.
BRITANNIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
CELTIC.....SATURDAY, March 10, at 2 P. M.
GERMANIC.....SATURDAY, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

From White Star Dock, Pier No. 53 North River.

These steamers are uniform in size and unsurpassed in appointments. The saloon, staterooms, smoking and bath rooms are amidships, where the noise and motion are least felt, affording a degree of comfort hitherto unattainable at sea.

Rates—Saloon $80 and $100, gold; return tickets on favorable terms. Steerage, $18.

For insertion of plans and other information apply at the Company's offices. No. 37 Broadway, New-York.

J. CORTIS, Agent.

CUNARD LINE B. & N. A. R. M. S. P. CO.

NOTICE.

With the view of diminishing the chances of collision the steamers of this line take a specified course for all seasons of the year.

On the outward passage from Queenstown to New-York or Boston, crossing meridian of 50 at 43 latitude, bearing to the north of 43.

On the homeward passage, crossing the meridian of 47 at 42, or nothing to the north of 42.

FROM NEW-YORK FOR LIVERPOOL AND QUEENSTOWN.

PARTHIA....WED., Feb. 14 BATAVIA....WED., Feb. 28
CHINA.....WED., Feb. 21 ABYSSINIA..WED., March 7

Steamers marked ✠ do not carry steerage passengers.

Cabin passage, $80, $100, and $130, gold, according to accommodation. Return tickets on favorable terms.

Steerage tickets to and from all parts of Europe at very low rates. Freight and passage office, No. 4 Bowling Green.

CHAS. G. FRANCKLYN, Agent.

LIVERPOOL AND GREAT WESTERN STEAM COMPANY. (LIMITED.)

LIVERPOOL, (Via Queenstown.)
CARRYING THE UNITED STATES MAIL.

TUESDAY,

Leaving Pier No. 46 North River as follows:

DAKOTA.....Feb. 13, at 3 P. M.
NEVADA.....Feb. 20, at 10 A. M.
IDAHO.....Feb. 27, at 3 P. M.
MONTANA.....March 6, at 10 A. M.
WISCONSIN.....March 13, at 3 P. M.
WYOMING.....March 20, at 9 A. M.

RATES OF PASSENGERS REDUCED.

Steerage, $26; intermediate, $40; cabin, $35 to $80, according to state-room. Offices, No. 29 Broadway.

WILLIAMS & GUION.

ATLAS MAIL LINE.

BI-MONTHLY SERVICE TO JAMAICA, HAYTI, COLOMBIA, and ISTHMUS, and to PANAMA and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall.) First-class full-powered iron screw steamers, from Pier No. 51 North River.

For KINGSTON (Jam.) and AUX CAYES.

ATLAS.....Feb. 8

For HAYTI, COLOMBIA, ISTHMUS OF PANAMA, and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall.)

ANDES.....Feb. 14
ALPS.....Feb. 28

Superior first-class passage accommodation.

PIM, FORWOOD & CO., Agents,
No. 56 Wall st.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE.

SAILING FROM PIER NO. 29 NORTH RIVER.
WEDNESDAYS and SATURDAYS at 3 P. M.,
FOR CHARLESTON, S. C., FLORIDA, THE SOUTH, AND SOUTH-WEST.

CITY OF ATLANTA.....SATURDAY.....Feb. 10
GEO. W. CLYDE.....WEDNESDAY.....Feb. 14

SUPERIOR PASSENGER ACCOMMODATIONS.

Insurance to destination one-half or one per cent. Goods forwarded free of commission. Passenger tickets and bills of lading issued and signed at the office of

JAMES W. QUINTARD & CO., Agents,
Or W. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 6 Bowling Green.
Or BENTLEY D. HASELL, General Agent
First Southern Freight Line, 317 Broadway.

STATE LINE.

NEW-YORK TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, DUBLIN, BELFAST, AND LONDONDERRY.

These first-class full-powered steamers will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Canal st.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.....Thursday, Feb. 8
STATE OF VIRGINIA.....Thursday, Feb. 22
STATE OF NEVADA.....Thursday, March 1

First cabin, $80, $65, and $70, according to accommodations; return tickets, $110, $125. Second cabin, $45; return tickets, $80. Steerage at lowest rates. Apply to

AUSTIN BALDWIN & CO., Agents,
No. 72 Broadway, New-York.

STEERAGE tickets at 204 Broadway, and at the company's pier, foot of Canal st., North River.

ANCHOR LINE U. S. MAIL STEAMERS.

NEW-YORK AND GLASGOW

Bolivia....Feb. 10, 2 P. M | Anchoria...Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
Alsatia....Feb. 17, 8 A. M. | California..March 3, 8 A. M.

From Pier No. 20, North River.

Cabins $65 to $80, according to accommodations; intermediate, $35; Steerage $28.

NEW-YORK AND LONDON.

Italia.....Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | Utopia..Feb. 24, 2 P. M.

Cabins, $55 to $70. Steerage, $28. Cabin excursion tickets at reduced rates. Drafts issued for any amount at current rates. Usmann's Pier Nos. 20 and 21, North River, N. R. HENDERSON BROTHERS, Agents, No. 7 Bowling Green.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD.

STEAM-SHIP LINE BETWEEN NEW-YORK, SOUTHAMPTON, AND BREMEN.

Company's Pier, foot of 20th st., Hoboken.

RHEIN.....Sat., Feb. 10 | HERMANN...Sat., Feb. 24
ODER.....Sat., Feb. 17 | NECKAR...Sat., March 3

RATES OF PASSAGE FROM NEW-YORK TO SOUTHAMPTON, HAVRE, OR BREMEN.

First cabin.....$100 gold
Second cabin.....60 gold
Steerage.....30 currency

Return tickets at reduced rates. Prepaid steerage certificates, $32 currency. For freight or passage apply to OELRICHS & CO., No. 2 Bowling Green.

INDIAN LINE.—MAIL STEAMERS.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.

CITY OF CHESTER, Saturday, Feb. 17, at 7:30 A. M.
CITY OF RICHMOND, Saturday, March 3, at 8 A. M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS...Saturday, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

From Pier 45 North River.

CABIN, $80 and $100, Gold. Return tickets on favorable terms. STEERAGE, $28, Currency. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, State-rooms, smoking, and Bath-rooms amidships. JOHN G. DALE, Agent,
Nos. 15 and 33 Broadway, N. Y.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO FRANCE.

THE GENERAL TRANSATLANTIC COMPANY'S MAIL STEAMERS BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND HAVRE, Calling at PLYMOUTH (G. B.) for the landing of Passengers.

Will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Morton st., every alternate Saturday, beginning with:

LABRADOR, Saturday.....Feb. 10, 3 P. M.

For particulars address
LOUIS DE BEBIAN, Agent, No. 55 Broadway.

FOR SAVANNAH GA.,

THE FLORIDA PORTS,
AND THE SOUTH AND SOUTH-WEST.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE, CENTRAL RAILROAD OF GEORGIA, AND ATLANTIC AND GULF RAILROAD.

WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY.

SAN JACINTO, Capt. HAZARD, SATURDAY, Feb. 10, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

R. LIVINGSTON, Capt. MALLORY, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14, Pier No. 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agent, No. 409 Broadway.

SAN SALVADOR, Capt. NICKERSON, SATURDAY, Feb. 17, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

GENERAL BARNES, Capt. CRESSWAY, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 21, Pier 16 East River, 3 P. M. MURRAY, FERRIS & CO., Agts., 62 South st.

Insurance ONE-HALF PER CENT. Superior accommodations for passengers. Through rates and bills of lading in connection with Central R. R. of Georgia, Atlantic and Gulf Railroad, and Florida steamers City Point and Dictator; also, with the steamer J. R. SCUYLER, which has been placed on the inside route from Savannah to Florida, and offers unsurpassed accommodations.

C. H. OWENS, Agent A. & G. R. R. No. 315 Broadway.
GEORGE YONGE, Agent C. R. R. of Ga., No. 409 Broadway.

FLORIDA.

Caution to travelers! Great reduction in fare via the inland route from Savannah to all Florida ports. Only $2 to Jacksonville. Meals and state-rooms extra. The elegant steamer J. R. SCHUYLER makes close connection with all Savannah steamers, thus forming the quickest and most agreeable route as well as the lowest in fare. Accommodations for passengers unsurpassed. Travelers are cautioned against purchasing through tickets via any other route.

PACIFIC MAIL AND PANAMA TRANSIT STEAM-SHIP LINES.

FOR CALIFORNIA, JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, NEW-ZEALAND, BRITISH COLUMBIA, OREGON, &c.

Sailing from Pier No. 42 North River.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

Steam-ship COLON.....Thursday, Feb. 15

Connecting for Central America and South Pacific ports.

From SAN FRANCISCO to JAPAN and CHINA.

Steam-ship CITY OF TOKIO.....Thursday, March 1

From San Francisco to Sandwich Islands, Australia, and New-Zealand.

Steam-ship CITY OF SYDNEY.....Wednesday, Feb. 28

For freight or passage apply to
WM. P. CLYDE & CO., or H. J. SULLAY, Superintendent, No. 6 Bowling Green, Pier No. 42 N. R., foot Canal st.

NEW-YORK, HAVANA, AND MEXICAN MAIL S. S. LINE.

Steamers leave Pier No. 3 North River at 3 P. M.

FOR HAVANA DIRECT.

CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17
CITY OF VERA CRUZ.....Wednesday, Feb. 21
CITY OF NEW-YORK.....Wednesday, Feb. 28

FOR VERA CRUZ AND NEW-ORLEANS,

Via Havana, Progreso, Campeachy, Tuxpan, and Tampico.

CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17

Steamers will leave New-Orleans Feb. 23 and March 16 for Vera Cruz and all the above ports.

Fortnightly passage to City of Mexico.

FALES, SANDERS & SONS, Nos. 51 and 53 Broadway.

NEW-YORK AND HAVANA DIRECT MAIL LINE.

These first-class steamships sail regularly at 3 P. M., from Pier No. 13 North River as follows:

COLUMBUS.....WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14
MEXICO.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24

Accommodations unsurpassed. For freight or passage apply to WM. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 6 Bowling Green. McKELLER, LULING & CO., Agents in Havana.

NATIONAL LINE.—Piers 44 and 51 North River, FOR LONDON.

CANADA.....Saturday, Feb. 10, at 2 P. M.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.

Helvetia...Feb. 10, 2 P. M. | England..Feb. 17, 7:30 A.M.

Cabin and steerage passage, and drafts from $1 upward, issued at very low rates. Company's offices No. 69 Broadway.

W. J. HIRST, Manager.

SHIPPING.

RED STAR STEAM-SHIP LINE.

Appointed to carry the Belgian and United States mails. The following steamers are appointed to sail

TO ANTWERP.

From Philadelphia. From New-York.
VADERLAND.....Feb. 15 | KENILWORTH.....Feb. 3
NEDERLAND.....March 10 | SWITZERLAND.....Feb. 27

Saloon passage in currency.

First Cabin, $90. Second Cabin, $60. Steerage, $26.

PETER WRIGHT & SONS, General Agents, Philad'a.
No. 52 Broadway, New-York.
JOHN McDONALD, No. 8 Battery place, New-York.

Merchants' Steam-ship Line to Brazil.

FOR PERNAMBUCO AND BAHIA.

Steam-ship CASSINI will sail about MARCH 1. Rates of passage and freight have been fixed on a low basis. For further information apply to the agent.

R. B. BORLAND, No. 70 Wall st., New-York.

HAMBURG American Packet Company's Line, for PLYMOUTH, CHERBOURG and HAMBURG.

GELLERT.....Feb. 15 | SURVIA.....March 1
POMMERANIA.....Feb. 22 | LESSING.....March 8

Rates of passage to Plymouth, London, Cherbourg, Hamburg, and all points in Saxony: First Cabin, $100 gold; Second Cabin, $80 gold; Steerage, $30, currency

KUNHARDT & CO., Gen. Agents, C. H. RICHARD & SONS, General Passenger Agents, 61 Broadst., N. Y. 61 Broadway, N. Y.

RAILROADS.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT TRUNK LINE
AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

Trains leave New-York, via Desbrosses and Cortlandt Streets Ferries, as follows:

Express for Harrisburg, Pittsburg, the West and South, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, 8:30 A. M., 6 and 8:30 P. M., daily.

For Williamsport, Lock Haven, Corry, and Erie, at 8:30 P. M., connecting at Corry for Titusville, Petroleum Centre, and the Oil Regions. For Williamsport and Lock Haven, 8:30 A. M.

For Baltimore, Washington, and the South, "Limited Washington Express" of Pullman Parlor Cars daily, except Sunday, 9:30 A. M.; arrive Washington 4:10 P. M. Regular at 8:40 A. M., 1, 6, and 9 P. M. Sunday, 6 and 9 P. M.

Express for Philadelphia, 7:30, 8:30, 8:40, (9:30 Limited,) 10:30 A. M., 12 M., 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30, 9 P. M., and 12 night. Sunday, 8:30 A. M., 1, 5, and 9 P. M. Emigrant and second-class, 7 P. M.

Accommodation for Trenton, 7 A. M., 2 and 4:10 P. M.

For trains to Newark, Elizabeth, Railway, Princeton, Trenton, Perth Amboy, Flemington, Belvidere, and other points, see local schedules at all Ticket Offices.

Trains arrive: From Pittsburg, 6:20 and 10:30 A. M., and 10:20 P. M. daily: 10:10 A. M. and 6:50 P. M. daily, except Monday. From Washington and Baltimore, 6:30, 9:50 A. M., 4:10, 5:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday, 6:30, 9:50 A. M. From Philadelphia, 5:05, 6:20, 6:30, 9:50, 10:10, 11:50 A. M., 2:10, 4:10, 5:10, 6:50, 8:40, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday 5:05, 6:20, 6:30, 9:50, 11:50, A. M., 6:50, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M.

Ticket Offices, Nos. 526 and 944 Broadway, No. 1 Astor House, and foot of Desbrosses and Cortlandt streets, in New-York; 264 Fulton street, Brooklyn; Nos. 114, 116, and 118 Hudson street, Hoboken: Depot, Jersey City. Emigrant Ticket Office, No. 8 Battery place.

FRANK THOMSON, General Manager. D. M. BOYD, Jr., General Passenger Agent.

TO PHILADELPHIA
VIA
PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

THE OLD-ESTABLISHED ROUTE AND SHORT LINE between
NEW-YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.

14 Through Trains each way daily: 3 Depots in Philadelphia, 2 in New-York.

4 Tracks, the most improved Equipment, and the Fastest Time consistent with absolute safety.

Express Trains leave New-York, via Desbrosses and Cortlandt streets Ferries, as follows:

7:30, 8:30, 9:40, (9:30 Limited,) 10:30 A. M., 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30, 9 P. M., and 12 Midnight. Sunday, 8:30 A. M., 5, 6, 7, 8:30, and 9 P. M.

Returning, trains leave Philadelphia 3:20, 8:30, 7, 7:30, 8:30, and 11 A. M., (Limited Express, 1:35 P. M.,) 1:40, 4, 5:30, 7, and 7:35 P. M., and 12 Midnight. On Sunday, 3:20, 3:30, 7, 8:30 A. M., 4, 7, 7:35 P. M., and 12 Midnight.

Ticket Offices, Nos. 526 and 944 Broadway, No. 1 Astor House, and foot of Desbrosses and Cortlandt sts., No. 4 Court st., Brooklyn; Nos. 114, 116, and 118 Hudson st., Hoboken; Depot, Jersey City. Emigrant Ticket Office, No. 8 Battery place.

FRANK THOMSON, General Manager. D. M. BOYD, Jr., General Passenger Agent.

NEW-YORK CENTRAL AND HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—Commencing Dec. 26, 1876, through trains will leave Grand Central Depot:

7:15 A. M., Western and Northern Express, with drawing-room cars to Canandaigua.

8:30 A. M., special Chicago and St. Louis Express, with drawing-room cars to Rochester and Buffalo. also, through car to St. Louis.

11:00 A. M., Northern and Western Express.

3:30 P. M., special Albany, Troy and Western Express arrives at Buffalo 7:10 A. M.

5:00 P. M., Express, with sleeping cars, for Watertown and Canandaigua. Also for Montreal via Plattsburg.

8:30 P. M., Pacific Express, daily, with sleeping cars for Rochester, Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Cleveland, Indianapolis, and Louisville. Also for Chicago, via both N. Y. Central and M. C. Railroads, and to Montreal via St. Albans.

11:00 P. M., Express, with sleeping cars, for Albany and Troy. Way trains as per local Time Tables.

Tickets for sale at Nos. 252, 261, and 413 Broadway, and at Westcott Express Company's offices, Nos. 7 Park place, 785 and 942 Broadway New-York, and 333 Washington st., Brooklyn.

C. E. MEEKER, General Passenger Agent.

ERIE RAILWAY.

Winter Arrangement of through trains. From Chambers Street Depot. (For 23d st. see note below.)

9:00 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Cincinnati and Chicago Day Express, drawing-room coaches to Buffalo.

10:45 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Express Mail for Buffalo and the West. Sleeping coach to Buffalo.

7:00 P. M., daily, Pacific Express to the West. Sleeping coaches through to Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Cincinnati, and Chicago without change. Hotel dining-coaches to Chicago.

7:00 P. M., except Sundays, Western Emigrant train.

Above trains leave Twenty-third Street Ferry at 8:45 and 10:15 A. M., and 6:45 P. M.

For local trains see time-tables and cards in hotels and depots.

JNO. N. ABBOTT, General Passenger Agent.

NEW-YORK, NEW-HAVEN, AND HARTFORD RAILROAD.

After Dec. 10, 1876, trains leave Grand Central Depot (42d st.) for New-Canaan Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1, 4:40 P. M.; Danbury and Norwalk Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1, and 4:40 P. M.; Naugatuck Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3 P. M.; Housatonic Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3 P. M.; New-Haven and Northampton Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3:40 P. M.; for Newport at 8:05 A. M. and 3 P. M.; Boston and Albany Railroad at 8:05 and 11 A. M., 3 and 9 P. M., (9 P. M. on Sunday;) Boston, (via Shore Line,) at 1 and 10 P. M., (10 P. M. on Sundays.) Boston and New-York Air Line, 8 A. M., 1 and 11:30 P. M.

Way trains as per local time-tables.

LEHIGH VALLEY RAILROAD.

ARRANGEMENT. PASSENGER TRAINS. JAN. 1, 1877.

Leave depots foot of Cortlandt and Debrosses sts., at 6:30 P. M.—Night Express, daily, for Easton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Wilksbarre, Pittston, Sayre, Elmira, Ithaca, Auburn, Rochester, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and the West. Pullman's sleeping coaches attached.

General Eastern office corner Church and Cortlandt sts. CHARLES H. CUMMINGS, Agent.

ROBERT H. SAYRE, Superintendent and Engineer.

WICKFORD RAILROAD ROUTE TO NEWPORT, R. I.—Passengers for this line take 8:05 A. M. and 1 P. M. express trains from Grand Central Depot, arriving at 4:18 and 8 P. M. at Newport.

THEODORE WARREN, Superintendent.

DIVIDENDS.

Office of the NEW-YORK FIRE INSURANCE COMP'Y,
NO. 72 WALL ST.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 5, 1877.

76th Dividend.

A SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND OF 10 PER CENT. has this day been declared, payable on demand.

AUGUSTUS COLSON, secretary.

CHICAGO AND ALTON RAILROAD CO.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
CHICAGO, Feb. 8, 1877.

Notice is hereby given to the Stockholders of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company that a cash dividend of four (4) per cent. has this day been declared upon the Preferred and Common Stock of this Company, payable at the banking-house of the Company's Agents, Messrs. M. K. Jesup, Paton & Co., No. 52 William street, in the City of New-York, on the 1st day of March next, to holders who are registered as such at the close of business hours on the 17th day of February, inst., at which time the transfer books will be closed, and reopened for transfers on the 2d day of March next.

W. M. LARRABEE, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE NEW-YORK, PROVIDENCE AND BOSTON RAILROAD COMPANY, (STONINGTON RAILROAD,)
NEW-YORK, Jan. 25, 1877.

QUARTERLY DIVIDEND OF TWO AND ONE-HALF PER CENT., out of the earnings of the past three months, will be paid at the office of Messrs. M. Morgan's Sons, No. 39 William st., New-York, on the 10th day of February.

The transfer-books will be closed from the 1st to the 10th, both inclusive.

F. B. NOYES, Secretary.

CLEVELAND AND PITTSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.—Office of Secretary and Treasurer, Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 3, 1877.—The regular guaranteed quarterly dividend of this company, at the rate of Seven per Cent., per annum on the new guaranteed stock, will be paid on and after the 1st March proximo, at the office of the Farmer's Loan and Trust Company, No. 26 Exchange place, New-York.

The transfer-books will close on the 10th inst. and reopen on the 2d March.

G. A. INGERSOLL, Secretary.

NEW-YORK AND COLORADO COMPANY,
PARK BANK BUILDING,
NEW-YORK, Feb. 10, 1877.

DIVIDEND NO. 1.—A DIVIDEND OF ONE PER cent. has been declared on the capital stock of this company, payable at this office, on and after March 1, 1877, to the stockholders of record at the closing of the transfer-books, which will close on the 20th day of February, instant, and reopen March 2, 1877.

H. GROENEMEYER, Secretary.

THE ST NICHOLAS NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK,
NEW-YORK, Jan. 30, 1877.

DIVIDEND.—A SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND OF Four per Cent. has been declared by the Directors of this bank, payable on and after the 12th day of February next. The transfer books will be closed from the 1st to 13th proximo.

A. PARKHURST, Cashier.

HOLDERS OF CERTIFICATES FOR THE first due coupons of the First Mortgages on the Main Line of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad Company may present them to the Metropolitan National Bank, and have the interest on the coupons added to the certificate.

REMOVALS.

REMOVAL.—RIDGELY & CO., IMPORTERS OF lace curtains and embroideries, have removed from No. 110 Worth st. to Nos. 79 and 81 Worth st. between Broadway and Church sts.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 1, 1877.

FINANCIAL.

ELIZABETH CITY 7s,

MATURING 1878 TO 1896.

FOR SALE BY

VERMILYE & CO.,

Nos. 16 and 18 Nassau St.

NEW-YORK CITY 6s,

DUE IN 1879.

OSWEGO CITY 7S,

DUE IN 1888,

ELIZABETH CITY 7S,

DUE IN 1896,

FOR SALE BY

DANIEL A. MORAN,

NO. 40 WALL ST.

THE BANK OF MONTREAL

IS PREPARED TO ISSUE

CIRCULAR NOTES
AND
LETTERS OF CREDIT

TO TRAVELERS,
available in all parts of the world.

CHARLES F. SMITHERS, WALTER WATSON, } Agents
NOS. 59 AND 61 WALL ST.

CINCINNATI 7 3/10 PER CENT

MUNICIPAL BONDS, DUE 1906. A LIMITED AMOUNT FOR SALE BY

KUHN, LOEB & CO., NO. 31 NASSAU ST.

J. H. HAAR, Member Gold Exchange. J. HENGSTLER, Member Gold Exchange. R. M. RAVEN, Member Stock Exchange.

HAAR & CO.,

BANKERS AND BROKERS,
No. 45 WALL ST.

DEALERS IN SPECIE AND UNITED STATES SECURITIES. BUY AND SELL STOCKS, BONDS, AND GOLD FOR CASH OR ON MARGIN. SPECIAL ATTENTION PAID TO ORDERS FOR INVESTMENTS.

ORDERS EXECUTED AT THE PHILADELPHIA AND BOSTON STOCK EXCHANGES.

TO INVESTORS.

BROOKLYN WATER BONDS,
PAYABLE 1899.
For sale by
GEORGE K. SISTARE,
NO. 24 NASSAU ST.

OFFICE METROPOLITAN INSURANCE CO.,
No. 108 Broadway, New-York, Jan. 29, 1877.

THE UNDERSIGNED HAS MADE AN arrangement with the CONTINENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY, No. 102 Broadway, assets over $3,000,000, whereby that company will substitute its policies in place of those issued by the Metropolitan Insurance Company, to take effect in each case upon the surrender of the policies of this company.

Policy-holders are invited to send in their policies for such substitution at once.

CHARLES E. APPLEBY, Receiver.

UNITED STATES EXPRESS COMPANY,
TREASURER'S OFFICE, No. 82 BROADWAY,
NEW-YORK, Jan. 27, 1877.

THE TRANSFER-BOOKS OF THIS COMpany will be closed Feb. 3, at 2 P. M., and reopened Feb. 16.

THEO. F. WOOD, Treasurer.

WABASH RAILWAY COMPANY.—CERTIFIcates for funded coupons sought and sold. National Express Company stock for sale. W. H. DICKINSON, member New-York Stock Exchange, No. 14 Wall st.

A. C. BURNHAM, NO. 33 PINE ST., NEW-YORK. A.—Investment securities paying eight to ten per cent. for sale. Western mortgages a specialty for sixteen years. References in New-York, Boston, Hartford, and Philadelphia. Send for lists.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO.,
NO. 59 WALL ST.,
ISSUE COMMERCIAL and TRAVELERS' CREDITS AVAILABLE IN all PARTS of the WORLD.

$150,000 TO LOAN ON BOND AND mortgage on New-York City improved property. Apply to GRANT BROTHERS, No. 2 Exchange court.

TO LOAN ON BOND AND MORTGAGE—ON City and Brooklyn improved property. Address Box No. 5,434 Post Office.

FIRE INSURANCE STOCKS
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
E. S. BAILEY, No. 65 Wall st.

ELECTIONS.

OFFICE OF THE CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY OF MARYLAND, No. 71 Broadway,
NEW-YORK, Feb. 7, 1877.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STOCKholders of this company for the election of President and Directors, and transaction of other business, will be held at noon on WEDNESDAY, the 21st inst. The transfer-books will close at 2 o'clock P. M., on the 10th inst., and reopen on the 23d inst.

H. C. HICKS, Secretary.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR THIRTEEN Directors of the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company will be held at the Depot, 6th av., corner of 43d st., on TUESDAY, Feb. 13, 1877, from 12 to 1 o'clock.

H. S. MOORE, Secretary.

STEAMBOATS.

STONINGTON LINE

FOR BOSTON AND ALL POINTS EAST.
REDUCED FARE.

Elegant steamers leave Pier No. 33 North River, foot of Jay st., at 4:30 P. M.

Tickets for sale at all principal ticket offices. State-rooms secured at offices of Westcott Express Company and at No. 863 Broadway.

PROVIDENCE LINE.

Freight only, steamers leave Pier No. 27 North River, foot of Park place, at 4 P. M. Freights via either line taken at lowest rates.

D. S. BABCOCK, Pres. L. W. FILKINS, G. P. Agent.

FALL RIVER LINE

FOR BOSTON AND THE EAST.
FARES REDUCED.

Leave New-York daily, (Sunday excepted,) from Pier No. 28 North River, foot of Murray st., 4:30 P. M.

BORDEN & LOVEGAD, Agents.

GEO. L. CONNOR, General Passenger Agent.

FOR NEW-HAVEN, HARTFORD, &c.—Fare $1; steamers leave Peck slip for New-Haven at 3 and 11 P. M., connecting with road.

FOR BRIDGEPORT AND ALL POINTS ON Housatonic and Naugatuck Railroad.—Fare $1. Steamers leave Catharine slip at 11:30 A. M.

BANKRUPT NOTICES.

IN BANKRUPTCY.—IN THE DISTRICT COURT of the United States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of WILLIAM J. SCHLOSS, bankrupt.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by William J. Schloss, of the City of New-York, in said district, duly declared a bankrupt under the Acts of Congress of the United States, title "Bankruptcy," for a discharge and certificate thereof from all his debts, and other claims provable under said title, and that the 19th day of February, 1877, at 11 o'clock A. M., at the office of Isaiah T. Williams, Esquire, Register in Bankruptcy, No. 4 Warren street, in the City of New-York, is assigned for the hearing of the same, when and where all creditors who have proved their debts, and other persons in interest may attend, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of the said petition should not be granted.—Dated New-York, on the 26th day of January, 1877.

GEO. F. BETTS, Clerk.

ja27-law3w8*

IN BANKRUPTCY.—IN THE DISTRICT COURT of the United States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of HENRY TRISDORFER, bankrupt.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by Henry Trisdorfer, in said district, duly declared a bankrupt under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, for a discharge and certificate thereof from all his debts, and other claims provable under said act, and that the 24th day of February, A. D., 1877, at 11 o'clock A. M., at the office of Mr. Henry Wilder Allen, Register in Bankruptcy, No. 152 Broadway, in the City of New-York, is assigned for the hearing of the same, when and where all creditors who have proved their debts and other persons in interest may attend, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of the said petition should not be granted.—Dated New-York, on the 26th day of January, 1877.

GEO. F. BETTS, Clerk.

IN BANKRUPTCY.—IN THE DISTRICT COURT of the United States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of HENRY TRISDORFER, bankrupt.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by Henry Trisdorfer, in said district, duly declared a bankrupt under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, for a discharge and certificate thereof from all his debts, and other claims provable under said act, and that the 24th day of February, A. D., 1877, at 11 o'clock A. M., at the office of Mr. Henry Wilder Allen, Register in Bankruptcy, No. 152 Broadway, in the City of New-York, is assigned for the hearing of the same, when and where all creditors who have proved their debts and other persons in interest may attend, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of the said petition should not be granted.—Dated New-York, on the 26th day of January, 1877.

GEO. F. BETTS, Clerk.

ja27-law3w8*

IN BANKRUPTCY.—IN THE DISTRICT COURT of the United States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of HENRY TRISDORFER, bankrupt.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by Henry Trisdorfer, in said district, duly declared a bankrupt under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, for a discharge and certificate thereof from all his debts, and other claims provable under said act, and that the 24th day of February, A. D., 1877, at 11 o'clock A. M., at the office of Mr. Henry Wilder Allen, Register in Bankruptcy, No. 152 Broadway, in the City of New-York, is assigned for the hearing of the same, when and where all creditors who have proved their debts and other persons in interest may attend, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of the said petition should not be granted.—Dated New-York, on the 26th day of January, 1877.

GEO. F. BETTS, Clerk.

ja27-law3w8*

IN BANKRUPTCY.—DISTRICT OF NEWJERsey, ss.—At Newark, on the 25th day of January, A. D. 1877.—The undersigned hereby gives notice of his appointment as Assignee of NEWTON A. MERRITT and THOMAS J. WHITE, of Newark, in the County of Essex, and State of New-Jersey, within said district, who have been adjudged bankrupts upon their own petition, by the District Court of said district.

E. N. MILLER, Assignee, &c.,
ja27-law3w8* No. 782 Broad st., Newark, N. J.

IN BANKRUPTCY.—IN THE DISTRICT COURT of the United States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of WILLIAM A. BARBER and HENRY C. BUSH, Bankrupts.—In Bankruptcy.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by William A. Barber and Henry C. Bush, the bankrupts above named, in said district, duly declared bankrupts under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, for a discharge and certificate thereof of all their debts and other claims provable under said act and the revised statutes of the United States, title, "Bankruptcy," and that the Twenty-seventh day of February, 1877, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the office of John Fitch, Esq., Register in Bankruptcy, No. 345 Broadway, in the City of New-York, is assigned for the hearing of the same, when and where all creditors who have proved their debts, and other persons in interest, may attend, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petition should not be granted.—Dated New-York, on the 28th day of January, A. D. 1877.

OLIVER FISKE, Messenger, Southern District of New-York.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of JOSEPH SCHMITT, bankrupt.—In Bankruptcy.—A warrant in Bankruptcy has been issued by said court against the estate of Joseph Schmitt, of the County of New-York, of the State of New-York, in said district, adjudged a bankrupt upon the petition of his creditors, and the payment of any debts and the delivery of any property belonging to such bankrupt to him or for his use, and the transfer of any property by him are forbidden by law. A meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt to prove their debts and choose one or more Assignees of their estate will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at No. 7 Beekman street, New-York City, in said district, on the 28th day of February, A. D. 1877, at one o'clock P. M., at the office of James F. Dwight, Esq., one of the Registers in Bankruptcy of said Court.

OLIVER FISKE, Marshal—Messenger.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of WILLIAM A. BARBER and HENRY C. BUSH, Bankrupts.—In Bankruptcy.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by William A. Barber and Henry C. Bush, the bankrupts above named, in said district, duly declared bankrupts under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, for a discharge and certificate thereof of all their debts and other claims provable under said act and the revised statutes of the United States, title, "Bankruptcy," and that the Twenty-seventh day of February, 1877, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the office of John Fitch, Esq., Register in Bankruptcy, No. 345 Broadway, in the City of New-York, is assigned for the hearing of the same, when and where all creditors who have proved their debts, and other persons in interest, may attend, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petition should not be granted.—Dated New-York, on the 28th day of January, A. D. 1877.

OLIVER FISKE, Messenger, Southern District of New-York.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of JOSEPH SCHMITT, bankrupt.—In Bankruptcy.—A warrant in Bankruptcy has been issued by said court against the estate of Joseph Schmitt, of the County of New-York, of the State of New-York, in said district, adjudged a bankrupt upon the petition of his creditors, and the payment of any debts and the delivery of any property belonging to such bankrupt to him or for his use, and the transfer of any property by him are forbidden by law. A meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt to prove their debts and choose one or more Assignees of their estate will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at No. 7 Beekman street, New-York City, in said district, on the 28th day of February, A. D. 1877, at one o'clock P. M., at the office of James F. Dwight, Esq., one of the Registers in Bankruptcy of said Court.

OLIVER FISKE, Marshal—Messenger.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of WILLIAM A. BARBER and HENRY C. BUSH, Bankrupts.—In Bankruptcy.—Notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed in said court by William A. Barber and Henry C. Bush, the bankrupts above named, in said district, duly declared bankrupts under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, for a discharge and certificate thereof of all their debts and other claims provable under said act and the revised statutes of the United States, title, "Bankruptcy," and that the Twenty-seventh day of February, 1877, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the office of John Fitch, Esq., Register in Bankruptcy, No. 345 Broadway, in the City of New-

INSURANCE AFFAIRS.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE COMPANY.

AN INVESTIGATION BEFORE TWO REFEREES —EVIDENCE BEFORE MR. BUTLER RELATING TO THE SYSTEM OF BOOK-KEEPING PRACTICED BY THE COMPANY—ANOTHER INQUIRY BEFORE MR. DEWITT FOR THE DISSOLUTION OF THE CONCERN.

The hearing in the case of the Continental Life Insurance Company was continued yesterday before the Referee, Mr. William Allen Butler, at No. 20 Nassau street. Mr. L.V. Styles, the Cashier of the company, was called and testified relative to various entries in the cash-book. The witness stated that the book had been taken out of his possession by Mr. Rogers on Oct. 24 last, and that he had not seen it again until Jan. 23, when it was returned to him by Mr. Anderson. The witness then read the items of amounts, aggregating $155,146 08, which were entered in the cash-book in the hand-writing of Mr. J. P. Rogers, the original vouchers of which the latter gentleman had taken from the witness. The witness had copies of the vouchers for all but $10,844 64 of the above sum. This amount was charged on a book which was kept in the money-drawer by the direction of the President and Secretary. The witness next read the copies of the vouchers of L. W. Frost, for $41,120 03; of J. P. Rogers, for $30,668 17; of R. C. Frost, for $32,060 68; of Justus Lawrence, for $33,436 78; of R. R. Jones, for $1,564 07; of M. B. Wynkoop, for $7,296 30, and of G. Hilton Scribner, for $4,000; the original vouchers for these amounts the witness had not seen since Aug. 28 last, when Rogers took them; on that occasion the matter of entering them in the cash-book was spoken of, and Rogers said he would take them and return them to their place in the safe; the witness had not seen them since that time, and did not know where they were; he had searched for them in the safe a great many times, and was ready to say that they were not there; the copies that he had just read before the Referee he had made himself, by the advice of counsel, for his own protection; the witness next read an entry on page 101 of the cash-book, under date of Oct. 2, 1872, of $52,915 43 charged to the Empire Mutual Life Insurance Company. This entry was made in Mr. Rogers' handwriting, and was not on the book when it was in the witness' possession. It represented money advanced to the Empire Mutual Company, and also money advanced to two other parties on the stock of the company. It was classed on the cash-book as cash. The witness, at the request of Mr. Moses, of counsel for the policy-holders, then read the notes and checks and other vouchers for $24,770 91 loaned to the Empire Mutual Company, and also the vouchers for $28,144 52 loaned to parties on the Empire Company's stock. These vouchers represented moneys taken out of the Continental Company, but witness did not know for what consideration they were so taken out, neither had he any means of knowing, of his own knowledge, the character of the transaction. In response to a question, the witness declared that under the system of business as conducted by the company, the Secretary might have received the money and have given him instructions regarding it; witness did not know of the existence of any agreement by which the Continental was to pay for the stock of the Empire Mutual; he had heard there was such an agreement, but knew nothing of it; the Secretary and President would know about the agreement if it were in existence; the witness did not know of his own knowledge that there was any redemption of the stock of the Empire Mutual by the Continental, but he inferred that there was from the character of many of the vouchers for the $52,915 43. The witness next read from page 102 of the cash-book an entry, under date of Oct. 9, of the bonds and mortgages of the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company for $116 400. The entry was made by witness by the order of Mr. Frost, who had given him a memorandum of the amount, and told him he might enter it, stating at the same time that the bonds and mortgages would be delivered to him afterward. The entry would represent that the Continental had received $116,400 in cash, and had invested it in the bonds and mortgages. There were, however, no bonds or mortgages received to correspond with the entry. The witness, in reply to questions from the Referee, stated that about $200,000 of the $450,997 41 represented in the annual statement of Dec. 31, 1875, as being deposited in bank, was represented by the receipts and vouchers, including those of the Empire Mutual Company, which had been carried into the cash-book as "cash on hand." He could not tell without examination whether the remainder of the sum was actual cash, or whether it consisted of some other documents similar to the receipts and vouchers. He understood that the amount reported to be deposited was actually in the bank in December, 1875. It was a custom, he said, for the amount of the vouchers to be paid in for a day or two, in order that the company's statement might be sworn to, after which proceeding they were again withdrawn from the company.

At this point the further hearing of the case was adjourned until Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

THE INVESTIGATION BEFORE MR. DE WITT.

Mr. Abram V. DeWitt, the Referee appointed by Judge Osborn at a Special Term of the Supreme Court of Albany County, to take proofs touching the application of the Attorney General for the dissolution of the Continental Life Insurance Company, and the supersedng of John J. Anderson as Receiver, on the ground that he was appointed by collusion and fraud, commenced his hearing in this City yesterday, at the office of Mr. John L. Hill, No. 20 Nasau street. The Attorney General was represented by Hon. Henry Smith, and Messrs. John McKeon, William Barnes, R. W. Van Pelt, and Raphael J. Moses appeared for numerous policyholders of the company Mr. John O. Hoyt, the validity of whose proceedings by which Mr. Anderson was appointed, is questioned, was represented by Mr. Robert Sewell, and Mr. Frederick R. Coudert appeared for the new Receiver, Mr. Grace, Mr. John L. Hill being associated with him. Before the opening of the proceedings, Mr. Coudert stated that he had not as yet had an opportunity of examining the condition of the proceedings, and he therefore asked an adjournment. This motion was opposed by Mr. Smith, who thought the hearing should be proceeded with at once. The Referee finally decided that the hearing should proceed, and that such testimony should be taken as was offered by counsel. Mr. Coudert entered a protest, or what is termed a special appearance, objecting to the further hearing on the ground that the company had been dissolved and Mr. Grace had been appointed its Receiver, and was now in possession and administering its affairs. He urged also that inasmuch as the purpose of the present proceeding was in a great measure the removal of Mr. Anderson, its usefulness was in part destroyed.

Mr. John O. Hoyt was the first witness called, and testified that he resided in Brooklyn for a number of years; he was at the present time and had been for the past 12 or 13 years a real estate broker and operator at No. 171 Broadway. The witness was examined at length regarding his connection with the Continental Company, and testified that he was the holder and owner of 15 shares of the capital stock, and that he had brought an action for the appointment of a Receiver and to have the affairs of the company wound up. The examination was carried on by Mr. Smith for the Attorney General, who questioned the witness at great length in an apparent endeavor to show that the purchase of the stock and the bringing of the suit was collusive. He said that he purchased the stock in question from Mr. Rufus C. Frost in the month of August last; he paid $1,000 for 15 shares of a par value of $1,500, which he considered was about all it was worth; at the time the purchase was made the stock was only paying 7 per cent. interest; his reason for purchasing the stock, the witness stated, was that inducements had been held out to him by Mr. Frost, who told him that if he could get an "inside hold" on the company he would be enabled to get a good deal of business from it, such as the negotiating of loans on bonds and mortgages. The stock, he added, was delivered to him at his office by Mr. R. C. Frost, to whom he paid $1,000 in greenbacks of his own money; the money paid by him for the stock was not given him for the purpose of making the purchase; no one had induced him to bring on the action for the company's re-solution; he found that he could get no loans from the concern, and that it was sinking. Further questioning of the witness elicited the fact that some persons, he could not remember who, sent him a report, in which the company's real estate was set down at be.ween $700,000 and $800,000; he knew from experience that it would not sell for $300,000; again, it was a matter of common rumor that the Continental had lost $50,000 by the failure of the Loaners' Bank, and between $20,000 and $30,000 in a Southern insurance company, and for these reasons he brought suit.

Mr. Smith then questioned the witness closely with a view to showing that he had no means wherewith to purchase the stock above mentioned, and he testified that he had during the same year (1876) several other stock transactions, among them the purchase of 300 shares of Cedar Rapids Railroad Stock. Mr. Smith pressed his inquiries as to Mr. Hoyt's property, and the latter's counsel objected on the ground that his private business had nothing to do with the action, and that the mere fact that Mr. Hoyt owned stock in the Continental Company, and brought suit against it, did not give the representatives of the Attorney General the right to examine into his private affairs. The Referee allowed the inquiry so far as to permit questions touching his general pecuniary condition at the time of the purchase, and the witness stated that he was possessed of personal and real estate, and owned, particularly, lands in the West which, before the recent depression, were valued at $60,000; it would be difficult to say what the property was worth to-day. The witness was then examined in relation to his dealings with the Messrs. Frost, and said he had never seen one of them; he had a slight acquaintance with one of them, from whom he purchased the stock. At this point the hearing was adjourned.

THE COLUMBIA LIFE INSURANCE.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 9.—Celsus Price, the State Superintendent of Insurance, has appointed a board of special examiners under the law to appraise the assets, and especially the real estate, of the Columbia Life Insurance Company of this city. It is also the purpose of the Insurance Department to apply to the court for the appointment of a Receiver for the company, on the ground that the depreciation of its assets, especially its real estate, has been so great that it is no longer safe for the company to continue business.

INSURANCE AGENTS ARRESTED.

BOSTON, Feb. 9.—Joseph H. Dwyer, of Dwyer Brothers, insurance brokers, in this city, was arrested yesterday for fraudulently placing $33,000 insurance with companies not authorized to do business in this State. State detectives also arrested Samuel Kimball and Henry B. Williams for doing the business of brokers without proper licenses. A general arrest of fraudulent insurance agents is contemplated.

THE MURDER OF MARY FLOOD.

RESULT OF THE CORONER'S INQUEST—A VERDICT AGAINST HER HUSBAND AND AGAINST JOSEPH MORRISON AS AN ACCESSORY.

The inquest in the case of Mary Flood, who was fatally stabbed by her husband, James Flood, in front of No. 52 Crosby street, early last Sunday morning, attracted a large crowd to the Coroner's office yesterday. The examination of witnesses by Coroner Ellinger was begun at noon and concluded late in the afternoon, when the jury rendered a verdict against the accused husband, and decided that Joseph Morrison was an accessory. The first person examined was William Foster, a compositor, and a tenant of No. 52 Crosby street, who testified that, some time previous to the murder, the Floods lived in that house on the first floor; while the couple lived in the house witness did not at any time hear them quarrel, but he had heard rumors to the effect that Mrs. Flood was "a fast woman;" on the morning of the tragedy witness was awakened by his wife, who said that some persons were fighting in the street; witness arose, looked out of the window, and saw blood-stains on the sidewalk; he next heard a groan, and on going down stairs found a woman in the hallway covered with blood, and standing over her were several policemen; the dying woman was Mrs. Flood.

James Conway, an officer of the Fourteenth Precinct, testified that when he found the woman in the hallway her clothing, which consisted merely of a chemise and a black skirt, was saturated with blood; after making an examination of the hallway the witness went out and found the "reamer"—the instrument used by Flood—on the sidewalk near the entrance to No. 52; it was smeared with fresh blood spots. Officer Corey, of the Fourteenth Precinct, said that the deceased woman apparently lived in constant fear of her husband, who, it was evident, was exceedingly jealous of her; she asked the witness about a month ago to protect her, as Flood had accused her of intimacy with the young German grocer, William Alfke, who is familiarly known in the neighborhood as "Billy"; on the same night Flood told witness that "a Dutchman was interfering in his family affairs;" about three weeks ago the officer saw Mrs. Flood leave her residence late at night, and enter the hallway leading to the room at the rear of Alfke's store; on the night of Feb. 3, witness, while patrolling Crosby street, met Flood as he emerged from Alfke's hallway; he informed the officer that Mrs. Flood was then with Alfke, and wanted the witness to fetch her out.

Joseph Morrison, the all-night companion of Flood, who accompanied him to Alfke's grocery on the morning of the murder, was next placed on the stand, and testified in substance as follows: He first described how he and Flood, after spending the greater portion of the night of the 3d inst. drinking at a saloon in the Bowery, went to Brooklyn, but returned to New-York soon after, and after stopping for drinks at the saloon No. 277 Bowery, went in the direction of Crosby street for some tobacco; they stopped in front of No. 52 Crosby street at the suggestion of Flood, who said that the store would be opened soon; requesting the witness to look out for the opening of the door, and to notice particularly if a woman emerged from the store, Flood walked into the hallway, and soon after the witness, who remained on the sidewalk, heard a noise as if some one was kicking at a door; a little later Flood rushed out on the sidewalk and excitedly called for the Police and went back again; as he did so, the door of the grocery was opened, and a woman, partially dressed, ran from the store across the street; she was closely followed by Flood; the witness, fearing arrest, then went away and did not see Flood strike the woman.

William Alfke, from whose store the woman was seen to escape by Morrison, testified that he made the acquaintance of Mrs. Flood six months ago; she frequently visited his store to purchase groceries and liquors, and often during the last three months of her lifetime voluntarily shared his sleeping apartment at night; on the night of Saturday, Feb. 3, she entered the store about 11 o'clock, and they retired at 1 A. M.; Alfke arose at 6 A. M., and while in the act of making a fire heard Flood, out in the hallway, peremptorily ordering "that Dutchman" to open the door. Mrs. Flood, recognizing the voice of her husband; hurriedly arose and fled through the front entrance to the street; some person standing without cried "Here she is," and then Flood ran out; Alfke did not make any effort to protect the woman, and did not know that she had been murdered until informed by a Policeman.

Officer Quinn, of the Fourteenth Precinct, testified that on searching Alfke's room he found portions of Mrs. Flood's clothing in the bed.

After some unimportant testimony was adduced from other witnesses the jury retired, and after a brief consultation returned with a verdict to the effect that Mary Flood died of stab-wounds inflicted with an instrument known as a "reamer," by her husband, and they recommended that Joseph Morrison be committed as an accessory. The prisoner was soon after transferred to the Tombs.

THE KINGS COUNTY CLUB.

At the annual meeting of the Kings County Club held with closed doors on Thursday evening, the following Board of Directors was elected: Robert D. Benedict, Peter W. Ostrander, John F. Henry, James Watts, G. H. Roberts, A. B. Thorne, John H. Burtis, Peter Milne, Jr., David S. Arnott, E. L. Langford, Albert Daggett, W. L. B. Steers, James McLear, S. B. Dutcher, E. B. Fowler, B. B. Silliman, John M. Pheips, Jonathan T. Norton, E. D. Berri, William Waring, E. A. Tweedy. The session was long and exciting lasting until an early hour yesterday morning. A heated debate sprang up on a resolution offered by one of the members rescinding the resolutions, passed at a former meeting of the club, censuring the Mayor for appointing, and the Republican Aldermen for voting to confirm, Corporation Counsel William C. DeWitt. The resolutions were rescinded by a large majority. The club is the principal Republican social organization in the county, and a number of its members think that Mayor Schroeder could have found a Republican able to fulfill the duties of Corporation Counsel as well as Mr. DeWitt, who, they claim, is not only a Democrat, but a bitter partisan.

THE REMAINS OF JOHN O'MAHONY.

The body of John O'Mahony, which had been embalmed by an undertaker, was placed yesterday in the officer's room of the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, at Essex Market, and during the day was visited by a large number of friends and admirers.

At a meeting of the Council of the Fenian Brotherhood, and a committee of Irish Nationalists, held in the afternoon, it was decided to send the remains of Col. O'Mahony to Ireland for burial. The body will be taken by the steamer Dakota, of the Williams and Guion Line, which sails next Tuesday. On Monday night the corpse will be borne to the Church of St. Francis Xavier, West Sixteenth street near Sixth avenue, where a requiem mass for the dead will be chanted. On Tuesday, a funeral procession, consisting of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, the Veteran Corps, Irish Volunteers, Irish Brigade, and representatives of the various Irish-American societies, will attend the body to the steamer. Two members of the Fenian Brotherhood, and two or more prominent Irish-Americans will accompany the body to Ireland.

THE WONDERS OF THE AQUARIUM.

The Aquarium has succeeded in adding to its collection of wonders a young bladder nose seal. This animal differs in many particulars from the ordinary seal, to which family, however, it belongs. The most curious thing about it is that it has the faculty of inflating and distending with air the upper portion of its nose to an immense size. It measures over six feet in length and weighs 300 pounds. The harp seal since its arrival has refused the most tempting food, and snarls and snaps at all his admirers when they venture too near his apartments. Its death is expected to occur at an early day, owing to its refusal of all food.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

Washington Hadley, china, of No. 169 Sixth avenue, made an assignment to James W. Hasiett yesterday.

James A. Cox and Daniel Hargan, composing the firm of Cox & Hargan, leather, of No. 184 William street, assigned their property to John Nugent.

Prescott Burbank and George P. Nash, composing the firm of Burbank & Nash, merchants, of No. 49 Broad street, made an assignment to Louis B. Rade.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Mr. W. B. Smith, of Baldwins, Long Island, fell dead yesterday at Second avenue and Thirty-fourth street.

Samuel Cantrell, the Fourth avenue shoe dealer who shot himself in the Putnam House on Thursday morning, was still alive last night, but unconscious.

By order of the Customs authorities, five Skye terriers, which their owner attempted to smuggle into this country, will be sold at public auction to-day.

The Directors of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company claim to have received from $37,000 to $40,000 additional subscriptions yesterday, at "a rough calculation."

Gilmore's Garden will be opened to-night, and the entertainment will consist of four trotting races, a colored fat men's foot-race, over hurdles, a ladies' flat race, and athletic sports.

The next lecture in the Cooper Union free course for the people will be delivered this evening, at 8 o'clock, in the Great Hall, by Dr. A. B. Crosby, on "The Human Foot," with stereopticon views.

Deputy United States Marshal Holmes, who has been lying dangerously ill at St. Vincent's Hospital from the effects of injuries inflicted by his insane wife, was reported out of danger yesterday.

The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund met yesterday and authorized the Controller to sell by auction the leases of a number of lots owned by the City, and also some of the market cellars, for a term of two years from the 1st of May next.

A woman of respectable appearance is soliciting donations toward the support of the Home for the Aged of the Church of the Holy Communion. No such person is authorized to receive subscriptions or donations for the above named institution.

Harriet McNeil, aged 68, residing at Lockport, N. Y., was run over by a Madison avenue stage last evening at Pine street and Broadway. The driver, Leeb Gilman, was arrested, and Mrs. McNeil was sent to the Chambers Street Hospital, suffering from a broken thigh.

A woman has called lately on several well-known charitable ladies, bearing a letter purporting to be written by the principal Sister of St. Luke's Hospital. The letter requests aid in sending pretended sufferers to San Francisco, and bears the forged signature of the Sister's name in full.

The seventh annual reunion of the Bowdoin Alumni Association of New-York will take place at the Hotel Brunswick, Twenty-sixth street and Fifth avenue, on Tuesday evening, Feb. 13. The list of members includes many prominent citizens of New-York, and it is expected that the affair will be a very enjoyable one

A grand musical service will take place tomorrow morning in the Church of St. Cecilia, at the corner of Second avenue and One Hundred and Fifth street. The fine choir of the church will sing Gonzanelli's grand mass in G, and at the Offertory Mr. Henry Brandels will sing the Cujus Animam from the "Stabat Mater."

The Customs authorities have submitted for chemical analysis specimens of sugar believed to have been artificially colored, and entered as a low-grade article. It is suspected that extensive frauds have been perpetrated in this way. The coloring matter is said to be harmless, and to evaporate on exposure to the air, leaving the sugar pure white.

President Sloan, of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Company, said to a TIMES reporter yesterday that he will positively not enter into any new coal combination, believing it to be in antagonism with the interests of his company to do so. Several persons representing other companies have endeavored to persuade him to take a contrary course, but he has declined even to discuss the subject.

BROOKLYN.

John Williams alias John Thompson, convicted of an attempt to pass a counterfeit $10 bill, was yesterday sentenced to five years at hard labor in the Kings County Penitentiary.

Miss Clara Morris being, on account of ill-health, unable to give a benefit promised by her in aid of the sufferers by the Brooklyn Theatre disaster has subscribed $200 to the relief fund.

Henry Dennis, aged 50 years, dropped dead yesterday morning at the Inebriate Home, Fort Hamilton. Deceased, who was a painter by trade, entered the Home voluntarily on the 6th of January.

Mr. Charles Holt, an old and much-respected resident of this city, died yesterday morning at his residence, No. 93 Cambridge place, in his 72d year. Mr. Holt was formerly President of the Brooklyn Choral Union.

The temporary foot-bridge to be used by the workmen in laying the great cables of the Brooklyn bridge was completed yesterday. There is now one continuous path from the Brooklyn to the New-York anchorage.

Justice Barnard yesterday granted an order directing Abram H. Daily, in his quo warranto proceeding against Surrogate W. L. Livingston, to furnish the latter with a bill of particulars. Mr. Daily contests Mr. Livingston's election on the ground of fraud in counting the votes.

The Directors of the Bay Ridge and Coney Island Railroad have announced their intention of locating the terminus of a branch of the road in Greenpoint. This determination solves the much mooted problem among Greenpointers of "How to establish rapid communication with the lower part of New-York."

Richard Harvey, aged 23, of No. 172 Clinton street, a dissipated young man, and one of the heirs to a fortune of a $1,000,000 left by his deceased father, was committed by Justice Walsh yesterday on a charge of stealing an overcoat worth $35 from the house of James Porter, No. 88 Fulton street. Harvey admitted his guilt.

William Hudleston, of No. 94 Union place, who was arrested on Thursday night on a charge of striking Margaret Robinson with a frying-pan, and breaking three of her ribs, was yesterday committed by Justice Ferry to await the result of the woman's injuries. Hudleston says that he struck the woman because she tried to induce his wife to drink.

A grand complimentary concert and soirée dapsante, tendered to Prof. Angelo Noziglia, of the late Brooklyn Theatre orchestra, by the Ancient Craftsmen's Association, will take place at the Athenæum, Atlantic avenue and Clinton street, on Thursday evening, Feb. 15. Arbuckle and other celebrated artists have volunteered their services, and the programme will be varied and entertaining.

William C. Church brought suit some time ago against James E. Remington & Sons to recover $20,000 for services alleged to have been rendered to the defendants in negotiating an adjustment of claims, for arms purchased, against the French Government. Justice Pratt, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, directed the jury to find a verdict awarding the plaintiff $1,000. The defendants admitted that amount to be due before the trial.

NEW-JERSEY.

Mr. John J. Carolan, the elocutionist, reads for the Laurel Society of St. John's Church, Summit avenue, Jersey City Heights, on Monday evening the 12th inst.

George Smith and Christopher Feeley were sentenced yesterday in the Hudson County Court of Sessions to five years in State Prison for passing counterfeit money.

Frederick Weinach, a Newark saloon-keeper, who was on trial for manslaughter in having caused the death of Anthony Eggert by pushing him off his stoop, has been acquitted.

The authorities of New-Brunswick contemplate purchasing Masonic Hall for a City Hall. A committee of citizens has been appointed to consider the matter and ascertain what the hall can be purchased for.

Charles Perkins, a brakeman in the employ of the Reading Railroad Company, was thrown from a coal car at Milham, Thursday, and received injuries which will probably prove fatal. His right leg had to be amputated.

At a late hour Thursday night Capt. Rogers, Captain of a grain barge lying at the foot of Fifteenth street, Jersey City, was returning to the barge in company with his wife, when he was attacked by four men, who knocked him down and beat him in a brutal manner, his cries attracted the attention of Deputy Sheriff Michael Hurley, who came to his assistance, and the ruffians fled.

Albert Huber, the proprietor of the "Crystal" in Jersey City, whose place was raided a few weeks ago by the Police, and who was subsequently convicted of keeping a disorderly house, was sentenced yesterday to six months in the Penitentiary. Judge Hoffman took occasion to remark that the sentence must not be taken as a criterion for similar cases, being made thus light because Huber had expressed a willingness to reform.

Rev. Isaac M. See, the Presbyterian minister who was recently on trial for permitting women to occupy his pulpit, has appealed from the decision in the case. Dr. Craven, the prosecutor, has also appealed. Mr. See objects to the decision because it went too far, and Dr. Craven because it did not go far enough. A committee of three elders has been appointed to prepare a minute expressive of the views of the Presbytery in regard to balls, theatrical performances, and amusements of all sorts.

SUICIDE OF A CABINET-MAKER.

Coroner Croker was notified yesterday of the fact that W. F. Leviness, a cabinet-maker, committed suicide by jumping from the second floor of his residence, No. 135 East One Hundred and Fourth street. It was subsequently ascertained that Leviness, who was confined to his bed suffering from chronic meningitis, on Monday evening arose, during the temporary absence of his wife, and jumped out of a front window. While his wife was in another apartment attending to some household duties her attention was attracted by the strange whining of a pet dog at the basement door, and, on looking out, she discovered her husband lying in the area. He was removed indoors, and soon recovered consciousness, but died on Thursday evening. Leviness could not recall what prompted him to jump out of the window. It is probable that he committed the act while subject to a fit of delirium resulting from his ailment.

HOW COLORED CITIZENS WERE VICTIMIZED.

During the past Summer some of the colored people of this City approved of the idea of organizing a cheap excursion to the Centennial, and intrusted the details of the matter to Mrs. Elisabeth Duffuls, the well-known Quakeress and doctress, and Superintendent of the Colored Mission at No. 451 Seventh avenue. Mrs. Duffuls entered into the spirit of the enterprise with warmth, and was visited by a white acquaintance named James A. Lane, of Harlem, who represented himself as a dentist, and volunteered to make all arrangements for the excursion. It was decided to have a grand trip to Philadelphia and back by water, and Lane received $100 from Mrs. Duffuls to pay the first installment on the hire of the steamer Granite State, which he said he had chartered for the occasion. Measures were accordingly taken for carrying out the projected trip, and an imposing circular was issued to the colored folks in this City. Tickets at $1 50 with $2 additional for state-rooms, sold freely, and when the day of the excursion arrived, an immense crowd of excursionists thronged the pier. Two o'clock came and went, but no signs of the Granite State could be seen, and after waiting patiently until dark, the excursionists departed sorrowfully to their homes, consulous that they had been swindled. Lane was subsequently arrested for obtaining money by false pretenses, and was convicted in December, but subsequently obtained a new trial. When the case was called by Assistant District Attorney Rollins yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, Lane pleaded guilty to the charge, and Judge Sutherland sentenced him to one year and six months in State Prison.

A COUNTY CLERK SUED FOR LIBEL.

Public interest in the trial of James M. Brann, County Clerk of Hudson County, on a charge of libel, seems to increase, and yesterday the crowd seeking admission to the court was so large that after the court-room was filled the Constables were directed to close the doors and admit none except witnesses or persons directly interested in the case. The indictment on which the County Clerk is being tried charges him with having caused to be printed and distributed a circular containing scurrilous libels on the personal character of M. Mullone, editor and proprietor of the Jersey City Argus, couched in vile and indecent language. The testimony thus far adduced shows that previous to the time the circular was issued Brann declared his intention of issuing it, and also that he was in the habit of making the same statements as were contained in the circular in bar-rooms and other public places. Seth Wilbur Payne, the editor of a paper which has since suspended publication, testified that Brann brought him the manuscript of the circular and requested him to publish it; he declined, because he considered it unfit for publication. Alice Huntley Payne, wife of the previous witness, corroborated her husband's testimony, and added that she advised her husband not to publish it. Several other witnesses were examined, and the case was still on when the court adjourned until Monday.

WRESTLING MATCH.

Prof. William Miller and Mr. Ernest Treher entered into an agreement yesterday for a wrestling match, to take place on Monday, Feb. 19. The match was made for the best three in five, without restrictions as to grips. The place where the match is to take place will be decided on Monday next.

WILMINGTON NAVAL STORES MARKET.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Feb 9.—Spirits of Turpentine quiet at 40c. Resin firm at $1 85 for Strained. Crude Turpentine steady at $2 05 for Hard, $3 05 for Yellow Dip, and $3 05 for Virgin. Tar steady at $1 60.

"MOREAU-LEFEVRE," the oldest and most French of Champagnes. VICTOR E. MAUGER, 110 Reade st., N. Y. —Advertisement.

PASSENGERS ARRIVED.

In steam-ship Alsatia, from Glasgow.—Miss Devlin, Mrs. Braden, S. Braden, Miss Minnie Braden, Master Willie Braden, L. W. Moses, Mrs. Moyes, John T. Booth, Mr. Pearson, R. H. Campbell, John Hurd, Thos. Bowman, Miss Thile A. Ware, Mr. McFarlane.

MINIATURE ALMANAC—THIS DAY.

Sun rises.....7:00 | Sun sets.....5:29 | Moon rises..5:47

HIGH WATER—THIS DAY.

Sandy Hook...6:03 | Gov. Island..6:52 | Hell Gate....8:14

MARINE INTELLIGENCE.

NEW-YORK.....FRIDAY, FEB 9.

CLEARED.

Steam-ship Claribel, (Br.,) Ferguson, Gonaives, Port au Prince, and Jacmel, Pim, Forwood & Co.

Barks Manila H., (Ger.,) Gonner, Buenos Ayres. Funch, Edye & Co.; Suito, (Ital.,) Balsamo, Lisbon, Slocovich & Co.; Caldbeck, (Br.,) Hudson, Liverpool, Bowring & Archibald.

Brigs Harry and Aubrey, (Br.,) Briggs, Bridgetown, Barbados, Dwight & Hunt; Stella, (Swis, Montevideo and Uruguay, A. Abbott; Estas, (Norw.,) Mortensen, Lisbon and Corunna, Louis Tetens.

ARRIVED.

Steam-ship Helvetia, (Br.,) Pearce, Liverpool Jan. 24, and Queenstown 25th, with mdse. and passengers to F. W. J. Hurst.

Steam-ship Gellert, (Ger.,) Barends, Hamburg Jan. 22, via Havre 24, with mdse. and passengers to Kunhardt & Co.

Steam-ship W. A. Scholten, (Dutch,) Jansen, Rotterdam Jan. 29, via Plymouth 2d inst., with mdse. and passengers to Funch, Edye & Co.

Steam-ship Cortis, Freeman, New-Orleans Jan. 31, with mdse. and passengers to Clark & Seaman.

Steam-ship E. C. Knight, Chichester, Georgetown, D. C., and Alexandria, with mdse. and passengers to J. L. Roome, Jr.

Steam-ship Fanita, Howe, Philadelphia, with mdse. and passengers to James Hand.

Steam-ship Agnes, Burdick, Philadelphia, with mdse. and passengers to Bogart & Morgan.

Steam-ship Alsatia, (Br.,) Campbell, Glasgow Jan. 27, Moville 28th, with mdse. and passengers to Henderson Brothers.

Ship Gen. McClellan, Wheeler, San Francisco Sept. 26, with mdse. to Sutton & Co.—vessel to Lawrence, Giles & Co.

Bark Johann Kepler, (Ger.,) Spille, Hamburg 55 da., with empty barrels to H. Koop & Co.

Bark Elise Eschricht, (Ger.,) Wishagen, Rio Janeiro 49 da., with coffee to order.

Bark Stanmore, Lonberg, Newry Dec. 20, in ballast to Pendergast Bros. Anchored in Gravesend Bay for orders.

Bark Caspari, (Norw.,) Black, Stettin 82 da., with empty barrels to Funch, Edye & Co.

Brig Anna Maria, (of Salcombe,) Thornton, Rio Janeiro 55 da., with coffee to Brown Bros. & Co.—vessel to G. F. Bulley.

Schr. Hereward, (of Gloucester, Mass.,) Greenleaf, Fortune Bay, N. F., 20 da., with fresh frozen herring to master.

Schr. W. R. McDonald, McDonald, Fortune Bay, N. F., 20 da., with fresh frozen herring to master.

Schr. Acadia, (of Pictou, N. S.,) Cameron, Cardenas 13 da., with sugar to order.

Schr. Falcon, (of Gloucester, Mass.,) Potter, Fortune Bay, N. F., for Philadelphia.

Schr. Catharine W. May, Davis, Boston.

Schr. Black Chase, Boston.

Schr. Frank G. Dow, Simpson, Boston.

Schr. Nellie Lamper, Higgins, Boston.

Schr. Mary Hamlin, Fuller, Boston, for Philadelphia.

Schr. Alethea, Fisher, Boston.

Schr. Mary Riley, Riley, Boston.

Schr. Hyle, Oliver, Providence, for Port Johnson.

Schr. Ontario, Sprague, Providence, for Port Johnson.

Schr. Trenton, Walls, Providence, for Port Johnson.

Schr. Adeline Townsend, Risley, Providence, for Port Johnson.

Schr. Helen Thompson, Jones, Providence.

Schr. Mattie B. Ruion, Ruion, Providence.

Schr. David G. Floyd, Gifford, Providence.

Schr. Terrapin, Worster, Providence.

Schr. Ida L. Ray, Powers, Fall River.

Schr. Ney, Chase, Fall River.

Schr. Elisa B. Coffin, Cole, Fall River.

Schr. Sarah J. Smith, Snow, Fall River.

Schr. West Wind, Romer, Warren.

Schr. J. Burley, Northrup, Warren.

Schr. Sea Bird, Curtis, Virginia.

Schr. John K. Hurst, Cook, Wickford.

Schr. Argo, Gurney, Wareham.

Schr. Game Cock, Quigley, Millstone Point.

Schr. Lizzie Taylor, New-Haven.

Schr. Baltimore, Hall, New-Haven.

Schr. Niagara, Wescott, New-Haven.

Schr. John Brooa, Fox, New-Haven.

Schr. Fashion, Carberry, New-Haven.

Schr. Loon, Wakely, New-Haven.

Schr. Francis Hallock, Hallock, New-Haven.

Schr. Edwin, Francis, New-London.

Schr. Sarah Cullen, Anderson, Providence.

Schr. Minquas, Phillips, Providence.

Schr. Lizzie A. Sunali, Warwick, New-Bedford.

Schr. A. M. Ackens, Daggett, New-Bedford.

Schr. A. G. Hazard, Mask., Essex.

Schr. Anna, Hawkins, Warren.

Schr. Bramhall, Hamilton, Portland.

Schr. John Mason, Williams, Portland.

Schr. James A. Parsons, Sutter, Boston.

Schr. John N. Parker, Moore, Boston.

Schr. B. N. Hawkins, Hawkins, Boston.

Schr. Charlotte Agasta, Hickey, Eastport, with fish to master.

Anchored at Hart Island:

Schr. Ella Clifton, Kemble, (of and from St. John, N B.,) with lath.

Schr. George Glendon Jewett, (of Boston,) Harrington, from St. John, N. B., with lumber.

WIND—Sunset, light, N.; clear.

SAILED.

Steam-ship City of Dallas, for Fernandina; ships Meichior, for Bremen; St. Stephen, for San Francisco; brigs Dauntless and Ortolan, for Cardenas.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Bark Maud Scammell, (of St. John, N. B.,) Thompson, from Dublin, which arr. 7th and anchored at Sandy Hook for orders, was towed to the City this afternoon, 9th.

SPOKEN.

By brig Anna Maria, Jan. 8, lat. 35 64, lon. 34 20, bark Mount Vernon.

By schr. Acadia, Jan. 30, lat. 30 lon. 81, ship Samaria.

By ship Gen. McClellan, Nov. 6, lat. 29 S., lon. 31 W., ship Margretta.

BY CABLE.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—Sld. 1st inst., Scepir; 4th inst., Drowning Sophie, Rosina Bruno; 7th inst., Elisa Quierolo, Abraham Young, the latter for Matanzas; Carl Georg, for Tybee; Muriel, Capt. Nicholson; 8th inst., Mary Lowerison, for St John, N. B.; Ivanhoe, Capt. Kirkpatrick, for Sandy Hook; Cambriare, Capt. Hill, for Tybee; Bravo, Capt. Christophersen; Samuel D. Carlton, the latter for Hampton Roads; Lord Clarendon, Mariner, Nuovo Dovero; 9th inst., Camilla, Capt. Christensen; Catterina Accame, Posiedon, H. D. Brookman, the latter for Tybee.

Arr. 4th inst., Elisla, Ross, Capt. Roig; 5th inst., Gerda; 7th inst., G. P. Harbitz, Aiphonsine, General Skeptzy, Graham's Polls; 8th inst., Hugh Cann, Kate M. Hilton, J. N. Gannewell, City of Vienna; 9th inst., Grasmere, Capt. Windmer, Aima, Capt. Thorhjornsen; Herbert, Lieutenant, Soren, Berner, Weymouth.

QUEENSTOWN, Feb. 9.—The Williams & Guion Line steam-ship Wisconsin, Capt. Forsyth, from New-York Jan. 20, for Liverpool, arr. here at 8 o'clock this morning.

MOVILLE, Feb. 9.—The Anchor Line steam-ship Caledonia, Capt. Allison, from New-York Jan. 26, for Liverpool, arr. here last night.

QUEENSTOWN, Feb. 9.—The Cunard Line steam-ship Abyssinia, Capt. Murphy, from New-York Jan. 31, for Liverpool, arr. here at 5 P. M. to-day.

[INCORPORATED IN 1851.]

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE

MASSACHUSETTS MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING DEC. 31, 1876.

Net assets Dec. 31, 1875.....$5,681,120,42

RECEIPTS IN 1876.

Premiums	$1,058,458 71
Interest and rents	360,303 35	$1,418,762 06
Total		$7,099,882 48

DISBURSEMENTS.

Death claims	$338,507 43
Matured endowments	38,297 00
Surplus returned to policy-holders in dividends	245,639 78
Surrender'd and cancelled policies	226,251 43
Total payments to policy-holders		$848,695 64
Commissions and salaries	$151,452 37
Other expenses	33,872 35	190,325 22
Taxes, licenses, and other State fees	$10,246 83
Reinsurance	5,244 78
Profit and loss	2,000 00	$17,491 61
Total disbursements		1,056,512 47
Net assets Dec. 31, 1876		$6,043,370 01

NET ASSETS

The New-York Times.

VOL. XXVI.....NO. 7929. NEW-YORK, SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1877.---TRIPLE SHEET. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

THE COUNTING OF THE VOTE

A HALT IN THE PROCEEDINGS.

DEMOCRATIC TRICKERY AGAIN—THE HOUSE REFUSES TO GO ON WITH THE FLORIDA CASE, AND TAKES A RECESS UNTIL MONDAY—EXTRAORDINARY RULINGS OF SPEAKER RANDALL—RUMORS OF FUTURE DEMOCRATIC REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—The House and Senate both met at 10 o'clock this morning, but it was evident no quorum could be obtained at that early hour, and the usual recess was taken till 12 o'clock. The expectation was that the joint meeting would immediately take place, but in the House Milton Sayler moved that the Senate be informed that the House would be ready to receive them at 1 o'clock. This was clearly a breach of the provisions of the bill, which require an immediate meeting. The point of order was made by Mr. Hale, but of course was overruled by Randall. Hale declined to call the yeas and nays, but gave notice he would do so when any further motion for delay was interposed. The Senate chose to await the time set by the House, but transacted no business, it being held that no business was in order. But in the House the usual proceedings were continued. The Senate appeared at 1 o'clock, the decision of the Electoral Commission was read, the objections to receiving it were offered by Mr. Field, and at 1:20 the Senate retired to its chamber, that the objections might be considered in the two houses. Immediately upon reassembling, the Senate proceeded at once to consider the objections. After the objections had been read, Mr. Stevenson, of Kentucky, moved a recess until Monday morning, urging the importance of the subject as a reason why time should be given that Senators might study the proposition. The motion for a recess was defeated by an yea and nay vote. Nearly one hour was consumed in considering propositions presented by various Senators with reference to the proper parliamentary form of language to be employed in formally confirming the decision of the Commission. Finally Mr. Sherman's resolution was accepted, which declares that the decision of the Electoral Commission touching the vote of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto in joint convention to the contrary notwithstanding. This resolution both confirms the decision of the Commission and negatives the objections presented by Mr. Field. Mr. White, of Maryland, offered a substitute non-concurring in the decision and declaring the Tilden Electors to be the legal Electors for Florida. This was rejected by yeas 26, nays 45. Mr. Sherman's resolution was then adopted by yeas 44, nays 25—a strict party vote. Contrary to general expectation there was no debate in the Senate on the question. After waiting 30 minutes to ascertain the purpose of the House, and learning that body had taken a recess, the Senate also took a recess until Monday morning.

In the House, as soon as the Senate had departed, Mr. Lynde, who had been selected for the purpose, moved a recess till 10 o'clock Monday morning. This motion was immediately met by a point of order that it could not be entertained under the law, which requires the objections to be immediately voted upon. This point of order was discussed for over an hour, the Republicans claiming that the motion for a recess was not in order, and that it was a violation of the spirit, and even the direct provisions, of the law, which was designed to have the count speedily determined. Mr. McCrary made a strong point, that the motion was in violation of the provisions of the Constitution, to which Warren, of Massachusetts, answered in substance that the motion was as much constitutional as the law. Mr. Hoar claimed that one recess was allowable under the bill till 10 o'clock Monday, but that only one recess could be taken till the objection was acted upon. Randall finally ruled that it was in order to move a recess, and the recess was taken, by a strict party vote. Randall implied in his ruling that on Monday the case must be acted upon without a recess, but his ruling was so worded that he is not bound by it to so rule, and on Monday he may again rule that a recess till the next day is in order. Whether such a recess will be attempted depends upon what the party councils may determine to-morrow.

There is, of course, intense excitement over the situation, but it is quite remarkable that the excitement has not led to any turbulence or disorder. The strain cannot continue. Unless the leading men in the Democratic Party display some patriotism, and hold the rank and file of their party followers in check, there must be disturbances before the affair is ended. To-night the air is full of wild threats and rumors, and the rumor is currently reported that Justices Field and Clifford have already retired from the Commission. This must of course be untrue, for the Commission had a short meeting this afternoon, approved the minutes of yesterday's session, and adjourned till 4 o'clock on Monday.

WEAKNESS OF THE LAW.

HOW THE CANVASS MAY BE CARRIED OVER TO THE 4TH OF MARCH—THE HAND OF DAVID DUDLEY FIELD — DEMOCRATIC SCHEMERS AT WORK—DETERMINATION OF THE REPUBLICANS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—The Democrats have disclosed a weakness in the Electoral Commission law which was referred to, but not very clearly pointed out, before the bill was voted on. It was then only stated in general terms that the provisions were not specific against delay in the count, and that it would be possible for the canvass to be carried over to the 4th of March without reaching a conclusion. The framers of the bill saw that the Electoral Commission must be several days engaged in examining the questions laid before it, and to prevent delay in the business of Congress, it was provided that the two houses might take a recess from day to day, and go on with their ordinary legislative work, being always ready to assemble in joint meeting whenever an announcement should come from the Commission of a decision having been reached on any matter pending before it. Advantage can be taken of this provision by the majority in the House to adjourn from day to day, with the Florida decision in the situation where it now is, the vote remaining uncounted, and in this manner the counting of the vote can be delayed till after the 4th of March, and an election be prevented. It is only necessary for Randall to make a partisan, though rather plausible, ruling, and for the Democrats to vote together for a recess every day. The sole question is whether, as a party, they will deliberately determine to make the law a nullity for which all but 18 of their members voted. There is another plan said to be under serious discussion, and the authorship of it is attributed to David Dudley Field. It is that all the Democrats on the Commission immediately resign, and the fillibustering on filling the vacancies would consume the remainder of the time till the 4th of March. The reason assigned for the resignations would, of course, be the partisanship of the Commission, and the basis of the charge would be that none of the Republicans on it would vote for Tilden. The Democrats do not, of course, vote as partisans, though they have voted constantly together on every question, large or small, which has been presented. It is probable that sober second thought will prevent the adoption of any of these wild schemes, though they are said to be advised from New-York, and the advice is accompanied with promises of two Cabinet offices to the South if that section will stand solidly by the Northern leaders.

It is claimed by many Democrats that the object of taking a recess till Monday was very simple and sincere. The reasons of the Commission which are presented with the Florida decision had not reached the counsel of the Democrats till this morning, and the terms of the decision made necessary a complete change in the programme relative to Louisiana. There was not time to prepare objections to present to-day when the returns from Louisiana should be opened, which would be sufficiently ingenious to meet the altered conditions, and therefore it was deemed necessary to seek by a recess to secure further time for making the Louisiana case presentable. This was the argument on which the party was held together on the vote to-day, and it is said by many Democrats that the count will be allowed to proceed on Monday without further delay. But this is not the sentiment of a large portion of the party, and there are many conferences and private caucuses to see what measures of the character of those noted above can be sustained by a majority vote.

The action of the House on Monday will be watched with the greatest anxiety. If it develops a determination to prevent the consummation of the Electoral count under the law, such indignation will be aroused and find expression as never was witnessed in the land against any act of public dishonor. Such action will meet with retaliation on the part of the Republicans, who will not under such circumstances refuse to sustain the President of the Senate, when the 3d of March comes round, in completing the count and declaring Hayes elected. It may turn out, however, that the Democrats will not refuse to stand by the measure which they almost unanimously supported.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The temper in which the House to-day took a recess until Monday occasions much comment, some persons supposing the Democrats intend at the next meeting to engage in dilatory motions concerning the decision of the Commission in the Florida case, and thus obstruct proceedings, but the more prominent and active Democrats say that nothing of the kind is intended; that the House had a right to take a recess, and this was done in order to enable their political friends to carefully examine into the pending question and to read the papers as they will appear in print, and that on reassembling Monday, after the necessary preliminaries, the House will vote without factious opposition, and thus complete action in the Florida count. Next will be counted the vote of Georgia, to which there will be no objection, and following this Illinois, when objection will be made to Elector Chaffee, on the ground of ineligibility, and evidence will be presented to establish it. The two houses will separate on this objection. When it shall be disposed of, the votes of Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, and Kentucky, to which there are no objections, will be counted. After these comes the State of Louisiana, which some persons regard as the most important point in the contest. Twelve other States intervene before Oregon shall be reached. A conclusion in all the disputed points may not be consummated for a week or ten days.

THE SCENE IN THE HOUSE.

WHO WAS THERE AND WHAT THEY DID.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—In anticipation that the grand Electoral Tribunal would report its decision in the Florida case to the two houses in joint convention to-day, the galleries of the House began filling up at an early hour. The House met as usual, at 10 o'clock, and immediately took a recess until 12 o'clock. Then there was at once a scene of confusion on the floor. Mr. Hunton was surrounded by scores of Democrats, and engaged with them in earnest conversation. Mr. Evarts, of the Republican counsel, came into the House chamber, passed over to Mr. Hoar's seat and had a long conference with him. Senator Bayard came over also and had a long consultation with Messrs. Payne and Hunton. Mrs. Fish was one of the early arrivals at the Capitol, and took a seat in the diplomatic gallery, Justice Swayne, of the Supreme Court, also occupied a seat in the gallery. Associate Justice Field, of the Commission, came into the Senate Chamber during the recess from 10 to 12 o'clock, and had a long and earnest conference with Senator Bayard. The Senate, accompanied by their officers, came into the House at 1 o'clock. On a row of seats in the rear facing the Speaker's chair sat William M. Evarts, Stanley Mathews, Justice Miller, Senator Cameron, E. W. Stoughton, and others. Among those present on the floor to-day were ex-Senators Fenton, Pease, Fowler, and Foote, Secretary Chandler, Secretary Robeson, Postmaster General Tyner, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Gorham, ex-Sergeant at Arms Ordway, W. E. Chandler, Secretary Cameron, ex-Gov. McCormick, Public Printer Clapp, ex-Representatives Farnsworth, Eldredge, McKee, and J. M. Wilson, and Sixth Auditor McGrew. The Police arrangements at the Capitol to-day were similar to those when the joint convention met last. A passage was kept open by the Police from the Senate to the House wing, and no one was allowed to pass toward the House unless he bore the requisite large yellow ticket. Excellent order was maintained at all parts of the building, and although there was considerable complaint on the part of those who were refused admission, the disappointed ones, as a rule, took the matter good-naturedly.

THE PROCEEDINGS IN FULL.

THE SENATE IN SESSION.

The recess having expired at 10 o'clock this morning, the Senate resumed its session at that hour. The Chair laid before the Senate the following communication:

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the Electoral Commission to inform the Senate that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same touching the Electoral vote from the State of Florida, and herewith, by direction of said Commission, I transmit to you the said decision in writing, signed by the members agreeing therein, to be read at a meeting of the two houses, according to said act. All the certificates and papers sent to the Commission by the President of the Senate are herewith returned.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of the Commission.

To Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, President of the Senate.

But few Senators being present, on motion of Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, a call of the Senate was ordered, and at 10:15 o'clock 27 Senators had answered to their names.

Mr. BOUTWELL said as the subject presented to the Senate was of much importance, and as there might not be a quorum present, even by 12 o'clock, he moved that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators. Agreed to. Pending the execution of that order, the Chair announced as the Conference Committee on the Fortification Appropriation bill Messrs. Windom, Logan, and Davis.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, said he did not object to the appointment of the committee, but he desired to inquire whether it was not a distinct understanding in the Senate that no business whatever should be done between 10 and 12 o'clock A. M.; not even a call of the Senate should be ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tem., Mr. Ferry, replied that was technically the understanding, and the Senator [Mr. Davis] was correct, but now that the decision of the Commission had been received, it was thought the Senate should be full, hence the call was ordered. The understanding that no business was to be transacted applied to the time that the Commission was deliberating on the question submitted to it.

The Senate then, at 10:30, took a recess until 12 o'clock. Upon reassembling at noon, nearly all the Senators were present, and among the prominent persons on the floor were Judge Field, of the Electoral Commission, and Judge Black, of counsel for the Democrats before that Commission.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, said the Senate, having been notified that the Commission to decide the contested Electoral vote for President and Vice President had arrived at a decision on the case of Florida, he moved that the Secretary be directed to notify the House of Representatives that the Senate is now ready to meet that body for the purpose of proceeding in the canvass of the Presidential vote. Agreed to, and the Secretary proceeded to execute the order.

At 12:20 P. M. Mr. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared at the bar of the Senate and announced that the House would be prepared to meet the Senate in the hall of the House at 1 o'clock this day, to proceed with the further count of the vote for President and Vice President. At 12:35 the Senate, headed by Mr. Ferry, President pro tem., and the officers of the body, left its chamber for the hall of the House.

THE HOUSE IN SESSION.

The House met at 10 o'clock this morning and took further recess until 11:55 o'clock. At that hour the Speaker laid before the House a communication from Justice Clifford, the presiding officer of the Electoral Commission, stating that he was directed by that Commission to inform the House of Representatives that it has considered and decided on the matters submitted to it touching the Electoral vote of Florida, and has committed said decision to the President of the Senate.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, offered a resolution directing the Clerk of the House to inform the Senate that it would be ready to receive that body at 1 o'clock, for the purpose of proceeding with the counting of the Electoral votes.

Mr. HALE of Maine, moved to amend by notifying the Senate that the House was ready at this time to receive the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, raised the point of order that under the provisions of the Electoral bill the House was obliged to receive the Senate at the present time.

The SPEAKER overruled the point of order.

A division being taken on Mr. Hale's amendment, it resulted 90 to 129, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE said he would not now call for the yeas and nays, but he would whenever another attempt was made to delay the proceedings. The resolution was then adopted.

BOTH HOUSES IN JOINT SESSION.

Precisely at 1 o'clock the Doorkeeper announced the arrival of the Senate of the United States. The Speaker repeated the announcement, and he and all the members arose and remained standing while the Senate, preceded by its officers, one of them bearing two strong mahogany boxes containing the returns, filed in in order, and took the seats reserved for them. The President of the Senate took the Speaker's chair, the Speaker occupying the chair on his left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER then rose and said: "The joint convention of Congress for counting the Electoral votes now resumes its session. The two Houses having separated, pending a submission to the Commission of objection to the certificates from the State of Florida, have now reassembled to hear and to coincide or otherwise with the decision of that tribunal, which decision has been signed by a majority of the Commission in writing. It will be entered on the journal of each house." The Secretary of the Senate then read the decision of the Commission, which is printed in full below:

DECISION OF THE COMMISSION.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION, WASHINGTON, }
Feb. 9 A. D. 1877. }

To the President of the Senate of the United States presiding in the meeting of the two houses of Congress under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877."

The Electoral Commission mentioned in said act having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes of the State of Florida, and the objections thereto, submitted to it under said act, now reports that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act, and has decided and does hereby decide, that the votes of Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, named in the certificate of M. L. Stearns, Governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the Commission as aforesaid, and marked No. 1 by said Commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and the said persons are lawfully to be counted as therein cegified, namely: Four votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President; and four votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New-York, for Vice President. The Commission also has decided, and, hereby decides and reports, that the four persons first before named were duly appointed Electors in and by said State of Florida. The ground of this decision, stated briefly as required by said act, is as follows: That it is not competent under the Constitution and law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses, to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the Governor of the State of Florida in and according to the determination of their appointment by the Board of State Canvassers of said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed Electors, or by counter-proof to show that they had not, and that all proceedings of the courts, acts of the Legislature or of the Executive of Florida, subsequent to the counting of the votes of the Electors on the prescribed day, are inadmissible for any such purpose. As to the objection made to the eligibility of Mr. Humphreys, the Commission is of opinion that, without reference to the question of the effect of the vote of an ineligible Elector, the evidence does not show that he held the office of Shipping Commissioner on the day when the Electors were appointed. The Commission has also decided, and does hereby decide and report, as a consequence of the foregoing, and upon the grounds before stated, neither of the papers purporting to be certificates of the Electoral votes of said State of Florida numbered 2 and 3 by the Commission, and herewith returned, are certificates of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

Done at Washington, the day and year first above written.

SAMUEL F. MILLER,
W. STRONG,
JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
O. P. MORTON,
FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
JAMES A. GARFIELD,
GEORGE F. HOAR, Commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER then rose and asked whether there was any objection to the decision.

Mr. FIELD, of New-York, then presented objections, which were thereupon read by the Clerk of the House, as follows:

THE DEMOCRATIC OBJECTIONS.

An objection is interposed by the undersigned Senators and Representatives to the decision made by the Commission constituted by an act entitled "An act to provide and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," as to the legal Electoral vote of Florida, on the following grounds:

First—That the decision determined that the vote cast by Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, as Electors of President and Vice President of the United States, in and for or on behalf of the State of Florida, is the true and legal Electoral vote of the said State, when in truth and fact the vote cast by Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert E. Hilton, and Robert Bullock is the true and lawful vote of said State.

Second—For that said Commission refused to receive competent and material evidence tending to prove that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, W. H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not appointed Electors in the manner prescribed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, but were designated as Electors by the Returning Board of said State corruptly and fraudulently, in disregard of law, and with the intent to defeat the will of the people expressed in the choice of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert E. Hilton, and Robert Bullock, who were legally and regularly appointed Electors by the State of Florida in the manner prescribed by the Legislature thereof.

Third—For that the decision aforesaid was founded upon the resolution and order of said Commission previously made, as follows:

Ordered, That no evidence will be received or considered by the Commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two houses by the President of the Senate, with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the Electors.

Fourth—For that said decision excludes all the evidence taken by the two houses of Congress by the committee of each house, concerning frauds, errors, and irregularities committed by the persons whose certificates are taken as proof of the due appointment of Electors.

Fifth—For that said decision excludes all evidence tending to prove that the certificate of Stearns, (Governor,) as also that of the Board of State Canvassers, was procured or given in pursuance of a fraudulent and corrupt conspiracy to cheat the State of Florida out of its rightful choice of Electors, and to substitute therefor those who had not been chosen or appointed Electors by said State in the manner provided by the Legislature thereof.

Sixth—For that the said Commission refused to recognize the right of the courts of the State of Florida to revise and reverse the judgment of the Returning Board or Board of State Canvassers rendered through fraud, without jurisdiction, and rejected and refused to consider the action of said courts after their decision that Charles H. Pearce, F. C. Humphreys, W. H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not entitled to cast the Electoral vote of the State of Florida, which said decision was rendered by a court of said State in a case lawfully brought before said court, which court had jurisdiction over the subject matter thereof, and whose jurisdiction over the said Charles H. Pearce, F. C. Humphreys, W. H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long has attached before any act was done by them as Electors.

Seventh—For that said decision excludes all evidence tending to prove that the State of Florida, by all the departments of its Government, legislative, executive and judicial, had decreed as fraudulent all the certificates of Gov. Stearns, as well as that of the State Canvassers, upon which certificate the said Commission has acted, and by means of which the true Electoral votes of Florida have been rejected and false ones substituted in their stead; and Eighth—For that to count the votes of Charles H. Pearce, F. C. Humphreys, W. H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long as Electors for President and Vice President would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Signed by Senators Jones of Florida, Cooper of Tennessee, Barnum of Connecticut, Kernan of New-York, Salsbury of Delaware, McDonald of Indiana; Representatives Knott, Field, Holman, Tucker, Thompson of Massachusetts, Jenks, Finley, Sayler, Ellis, Morrison, Hewitt of New-York, and Springer.

WITHDRAWAL OF THE SENATORS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER then asked whether there were any further objections to the decision. After a pause he said: "There being none, the Senate will retire to its chamber so that the houses respectively may consider and determine the objections." The Senators thereupon withdrew.

The Senate returned to its chamber at 1:20 P. M., and the President pro tem. announced that he having submitted to the two houses of Congress in joint meeting the decision of the Electoral Commission in regard to the vote of Florida, a member from New-York objected thereto, which objection would be read by the Secretary. This having been done, the Chair said: "Shall the objection submitted to the decision of the Commission be sustained by the Senate?"

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, thought the objections should be considered seriatim rather than as a whole.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, said it seemed to him that the form of the question should be, "Shall the decision of the Commission stand notwithstanding objections made thereto?"

Mr. STEVENSON, of Kentucky, said he would like to have the objections printed, and the Senate should take a recess until Monday.

Several Senators on the Republican side interposed with "Oh! no!"

Mr. STEVENSON said Senators could say "Oh! no!" but this was an important subject, and he was unwilling to have the vote taken now. He gathered from reports that all the evidence taken by both houses of Congress in reference to Florida had been excluded by the Commission. Nothing would be lost by taking the recess. In his experience no important paper was ever considered by the Senate before being printed, and no paper was of more importance than that now before the Senate. He moved that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock Monday morning, and that the decision and objections be printed, which motion was rejected—yeas, 26; nays, 44—a strict party vote, the Democrats voting in the affirmative and the Republicans in the negative.

After some discussion it was ordered that the papers be printed in the Record.

DEMOCRATS FILIBUSTERING FOR TIME.

Mr. WHYTE, of Maryland, submitted the following:

"Ordered, That the Senate do not concur in the decision made by the Commission created under the act approved Jan. 29, 1877, but that the votes cast by Wilkinson Call, Robert Bullock, J. E. Yonge, and R. B. Hilton, as Electors of the State of Florida, are the true and lawful votes for President and Vice President of that State, and should be counted as the Electoral vote of the State of Florida."

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, moved to amend so as to provide that the decision of the Commission shall be sustained, and to insert the names of the Republican Electors instead of the Democratic Electors named in Mr. Whyte's order. Several other propositions looking to the ratification of the decision of the Commission were submitted, but subsequently withdrawn, and Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, submitted the following:

Resolved, That the decision of the Commission upon the Electoral votes of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WHYTE, of Maryland, argued that the law itself ratified the decision of the Commission unless the two houses of Congress overruled it. There was no necessity for any order affirming the decision. It stood unless reversed by the two houses of Congress.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, hoped all the propositions would be rejected and the vote taken upon the question as submitted by the President pro tem.

Mr. MERRIMON, of North Carolina, inquired if the Senate had two hours for discussion.

Mr. SARGENT said the two hours were running now.

Mr. MERRIMON thought not, and argued that the two hours did not commence until the main question was put.

A VOTE TAKEN IN THE SENATE.

Mr. HAMLIN withdrew the amendment, which he submitted to the order of Mr. Whyte, and offered the following:

Resolved, That the vote of the State of Florida should be counted for R. B. Hayes for President and William A. Wheeler for Vice President, as determined by the Electoral Commission.

At the request of Mr. MERRIMON the decision of the Electoral Commission submitted to the Joint Convention was read. The question being on the order submitted by Mr. Whyte, it was rejected—yeas 26, nays 45—a strict party vote, as follows:

YEAS.
Bailey,	Hereford,	Norwood,
Barnum,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Bayard,	Jones, (Fla.,)	Ransom,
Bogy,	Kelly,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Kernan,	Stevenson,
Cooper,	McCreery,	Wallace,
Davis,	McDonald,	Whyte,
Eaton,	Maxey,	Withers—26.
Goldthwaite,	Merrimon,
NAYS.
Alcorn,	Cragin,	Morrill,
Allison,	Dawes,	Morton,
Anthony,	Dorsey,	Ogleshy,
Blaine,	Ferry,	Paddock,
Booth,	Frelinghuysen,	Patterson,
Boutwell,	Hamilton,	Robertson,
Bruce,	Hamlin,	Sargent,
Burnside,	Harvey,	Sharon,
Cameron, (Penn.,)	Hitchcock,	Sherman,
Cameron, (Wis.,)	Howe,	Spencer,
Chaffee,	Ingalls,	Teller,
Christiancy,	Jones, (Nevada,)	Wadleigh,
Clayton,	Logan,	West,
Conkling,	McMillan,	Windom,
Conover,	Mitchell,	Wright—45.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, stated that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] was absent from the Senate on account of sickness. He [Mr. Edmunds] would vote against the order, and the Senator from Ohio would vote for it. He therefore withheld his vote.

Mr. NORWOOD, of Georgia, stated that his colleague [Mr. Gordon] was confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. WHYTE said the Senate having refused to order otherwise, the decision of the Commission stood, and now it was only necessary for the Senate to notify the House of Representatives that it was ready to proceed with the count of the votes.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, said he desired the Senate to affirm the decision of the Commission directly. With such affirmative vote it would go to the country with more strength, and for that reason he had prepared his resolution affirming the decision. The question was then taken on the resolution of Mr. Hamlin, and it was agreed to—yeas 43, nays 25—a strict party of vote.

After some further discussion, Mr. SHERMAN said he did not like the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine, and just adopted, because it contained the names of the persons voted for. He hoped the vote by which that resolution was agreed to would be reconsidered, and the one submitted by himself would be adopted in place thereof.

THE SENATE FIRM FOR THE RIGHT.

Mr. HAMLIN said he offered the resolution just adopted under a misapprehension. Since examining that submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Sherman,] he found that it affirmed the decision. He therefore moved to reconsider the vote, which resolution was agreed to, and it was so ordered.

The resolution of Mr. Sherman, as above given, was then agreed to—yeas, 44; nays, 25—a strict party vote.

Mr. SARGENT, of California, moved that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate had come to a determination in regard to the decision of the Electoral Commission, and was now ready to meet the House of Representatives to proceed with the count of the vote. Agreed to.

At 5 o'clock the PRESIDENT pro tem. announced that he had been informed the House had taken a recess until 10 o'clock Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN said the Senate should be prepared with a full Senate at 10 o'clock Monday, to resume the count, and he hoped the understanding which had prevailed, as to no business being done between 10 and 12 o'clock A. M., would be considered at an end now, as it was desirable that all Senators should be present at 10 o'clock Monday.

Mr. CONKLING said he understood the House had taken a recess without using up two hours for debate which the law allowed. The two hours might be taken by the House on Monday morning, and it was no use for the Senate to assemble at 10 o'clock and sit idle for two hours before the count could be resumed. He inquired of the Chair if legislative business would be in order Monday morning.

The CHAIR replied in the negative.

After some further discussion, the Senate, at 3:10 o'clock, took a recess until 10 o'clock Monday.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE.

DEMOCRATIC OBSTINACY.

As soon as the House had come to order after the withdrawal of the Senate, Mr. LYNDE, of Wisconsin, moved that the House take recess until 10 o'clock Monday.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, raised the point of order that, under the provisions of the Electoral bill, it was not competent for the House to take recess at this time. The only thing it could do was to proceed immediately to determine whether it would coincide in the decision of the Electoral Commission. The bill provided that when the houses separate to consider an objection to the decision of the Commission, they shall immediately proceed to argue whether they shall support that decision, and that no other business shall intervene. He appealed to the Chair not to overrule the point of order which, to a certain extent, tested the efficiency of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, opposed the point of order, holding that there was nothing in the bill which prevented the House from taking a recess. He thought that it was not unreasonable that the House should ask for two days to consider a decision which the Commission had been nearly 10 days in considering.

Mr. MCCRARY, of Iowa, thought that the House had now arrived at a point where it was obliged, under the Constitution of the United States, to count the votes, and in that stage the House could take no recess until a State was reached which would have to go to the Commission.

Mr. KASSON, of Iowa, said that in the conclusion of the report of the Joint Committee on the Electoral Vote it stated that the message of the Electoral bill was necessary to allay public excitement and agitation. If the majority of the House took a recess to-day until Monday, instead of going on with the count, public agitation would be increased tenfold. The people of the country would ask why the House was suspending the process of the law and postponing action on the decision of the Commission. They would ask it it was the intention of the House of Representatives to prevent the completion of the Presidential count. Right or wrong that question would be asked to-morrow morning from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. Certainly the reasons given for this delay were entirely inadequate. There was no need for delay to consider that decision, because the question which the Commission had considered had been considered by members even before the Commission had been organized. He submitted to the patriotism of the House of Representatives, to the interest it had in preserving the peace and prosperity of the country, that it should interpose no unnecessary delay in that process of law to which the whole country was looking for its salvation. The spirit of the bill was to insure rapid action, and it was for the consideration of the Speaker whether if there was any doubt on the subject of a recess the doubt was not to be solved in favor of the manifest intention of the act.

Mr. WARREN, of Massachusetts, replied to Mr. Kasson's argument. He argued that to say that the question as to the Florida votes was settled on the simple report of the Commission, was to speak directly in the face of the act itself and of the very purpose at which it aimed.

Mr. HOOKER, of Mississippi, also argued in support of the right of the House to take a recess.

THE RIGHT TO TAKE A RECESS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, argued against the right to take a recess. He held that the only present duty of the House was to discuss the objections to the decision for two hours and then vote upon it and let the two houses come together again in joint convention. Any other interpretation would nullify the Electoral act and would be revolutionary.

Mr. HOSKINS, of New-York, argued against the power of the House to take a recess.

Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts, stated that the language of the Constitution was imperative that when the Electoral votes were opened they shall be counted, and that for 75 years there had not been a single instance of a recess being taken under such circumstances. The provision for a recess found in the Electoral act was applicable to another stage of the proceedings, but not to the existing stage. If the House took now a recess till Monday, it could take one from Monday till Tuesday, and from Tuesday till Wednesday, and so on till Congress had expired, and thus defeat the performance of the constitutional duty of the House. He trusted that the Chair would not make a decision which would involve the House in this trouble.

A PARTISAN SPEAKER.

After further discussion by Messrs. JONES, of Kentucky, SAYLER, of Ohio, HARTRIDGE, of Georgia, HOAR, of Massachusetts, and COX, of New-York, the point of order was overruled by the Speaker. He held that in the fifth section of the Electoral act, which is that, while the two houses shall be in joint meeting, no debate shall be allowed, &c., and which had been referred to by Mr. Hoskins, had no pertinency to the question. The portions of the act which had pertinency to a recess were, first, a part of the fourth section, which provided that, if there be objection to the report of the Commission, each Senator and Representative may speak 10 minutes, and, that after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each house to put the main question without further debate. This, he thought, was under that directory clause a recess could not be taken at any other time than the present. If the debate had been entered upon a motion to take a recess would not be in order. The other portion of the bill bearing on the subject was that part of the fifth section which reads, "and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in reference to the counting of such votes or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either house acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such house not beyond the next day (Sundays excepted) at 10 o'clock in the forenoon." It was a fact, the Speaker continued, that this was the first time when a question has arisen, and it having now arisen for the first time, the Chair thinks that it is competent for the House to take a recess until Monday at 10 A. M. if its judgment so directs.

Mr. HALE—Then the Chair overrules the point of order?

The SPEAKER—The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HALE—I respectfully appeal from the decision.

Mr. COX—I move to lay the appeal on the table. Carried—156 to 76.

The question was then taken on the motion for a recess till Monday at 10 A. M., and it was carried—Yeas, 163; nays, 103.

During the vote a message was received from the Senate that it had overruled the objection to the decision of the Commission in the case of Florida, and was ready to meet the House in joint convention, and the Speaker intimated that he would have the Senate informed that the House had taken a recess.

MURDER IN THE SECOND DEGREE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HUDSON, Feb. 10.—The jury in the case of The People against John V. Kiere and his wife Ellenora, indicted for murder, came into court this morning after being out all night, and rendered a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree against Kiere, but not against his wife. The unfortunate man was thereupon sentenced to be imprisoned in the State Prison at Dannemora, Clinton County, for life. He appeared to be unmoved when the sentence was pronounced, and throughout the delivery of the remarks of Judge Osborne, which were of a very solemn and affecting character, he did not show any feeling. His wife, however, who had previously remained passive, was moved to tears.

EXPLOSION IN A NEWSPAPER OFFICE.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—About 12:20 o'clock last night the boiler of the Daily News establishment exploded, demolishing the two-story extension of the building in which it was situated, ruining a folder, and injuring four cylinder presses to some extent. The loss is not yet ascertained, but is not very heavy. Two or three folders were scalded and bruised.

BANK FAILURE.

POTTSVILLE, Feb. 10.—The Mountain City Bank, of Pottsville, Penn., suspended payment this morning. The Directors assign as a reason the heavy withdrawal of deposits, and state that time will be required to realize the assets.

WASHINGTON.

SPECIMEN DEMOCRATIC TRICKERY.

HOW CONGRESSMAN MORRISON SUCCEEDED IN GETTING A PARTISAN REPORT BEFORE THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION—THE MINORITY REPORT EFFECTUALLY SUPPRESSED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—The Congressional Record for to-day, which consists of no less than 200 pages, was not issued until late in the forenoon. It is mainly taken up by the report of Mr. Morrison's Louisiana committee. As was generally expected, it is a highly-colored partisan document, which speaks of murders and outrages with the evident intention of trying to conceal them, and attempts to prove that the vote of the State was cast, and should be counted, for Tilden and the Democratic State officers. George M. Beebe, of New-York, is among the signers of the report. The document is printed in the Record because the appropriation for printing it in the usual form and manner is exhausted. By the trick of sending it to the Record, the Democrats place their ex parte testimony before the Electoral Commission, while the minority report, made by the Republican members of the committee, is suppressed and not allowed to appear.

THE LOUISIANA INVESTIGATION.

MINORITY REPORT PREPARED BY REPUBLICAN MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE—A FATAL ATTACK ON CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS POINTED OUT—THE RETURNING BOARD FULLY SUSTAINED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—Representatives Hurlburt, W. Townsend, Danford, Crapo, and Joyce have made their minority report in the Louisiana investigation, concluding as follows:

For the first time in the history of this country it has been attempted to destroy the lawful and formal expression of a State in the election of a President, by assuming the power in the House of Representatives to examine into any and all the polls, and to purge the election; to make itself the Returning Board, and determine, by a partisan vote, what Louisiana ought to have done. We regard it as the most fatal attack ever attempted upon constitutional right, as a gross usurpation of power, as subjecting in its natural development the entire question of a President to the will or decision of the House of Representatives. What has been attempted by this Democratic House in Louisiana may be done on the same principle by some other dominant party in any other State whose vote may be in the way of their party candidate. The cry of fraud is quickly raised, and is readily repeated, and far too easily believed. Evilence is always ready to support that or any other charge, if great political advantage is to be gained.

The only way to preserve the just balances of power is to stand by and support the formal, deliberate, and lawful decision of tribunals constituted for the purpose ordained under the Constitution, by the highest State authority, by laws which have been expounded and sustained by the proper supreme Courts. Any other course is to substitute guess-work for legitimate decision—the rule of a mob for orderly processes of law—the control by a House of Representatives whose days are numb

LONDON STAGE GOSSIP.

PECULIARITIES OF THEATRICAL PEOPLE ABROAD.

"ACTRESSES AND THEIR "PROTECTORS"—INCIDENTS OF STAGE LIFE—THE TRIALS OF A MANAGER—RIGNOLD'S TRIP ACROSS THE SEA AND WHAT CAME OF IT—A SUIT FOR DAMAGES WITH A MORAL ATTACHED—THE NEW OPERA OF BIORN—WHY ADVERSE CRITICISMS ARE WRITTEN FOR A GREAT DAILY—GENERAL GOSSIP.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Jan. 27, 1877.

The inner life of the theatre has a peculiar atmosphere of romance, singularly in keeping with outside views of the profession, which the public rightly regard as without the pale of ordinary society. No women, it would seem, have better chances of marriage than successful actresses; no women as a rule are more unfortunate in their matrimonial alliances. Miss Amy Fawsitt, who died recently in New-York, though never in any sense a great actress, achieved a popularity at the Vaudeville which, accompanied with good and womanly conduct, brought her several offers of marriage, of which any respectable girl might have been proud. She made the usual mistake of her class, and having made that mistake committed the error of too many who achieve sudden success. She refused the part offered to her in "Our Boys," which has now been running some six or seven hundred nights. Then came disappointment upon disappointment, and matrimonial misery. One night she arrived at the Court Theatre bruised and excited. She said she had fallen down, but presently she vowed she dared not go upon the stage, because her husband had sworn he would shoot her from the pit, and she detected him sitting there in the very spot which he had warned her he would select, and she knew he carried a weapon. Was it surprising that eventually she had to relinquish her engagement at the Court on account of severe nervous attacks. Is it surprising that she found it impossible to renew the vigor and charm of her youth in New-York, and that she died a sad and lonely woman. Miss Nellie Power, of the Vaudeville Theatre, is another young lady who, at the height of her somewhat fictitious success, married what is called "a swell," and retired magnificently from the stage, to return to it for a livelihood, bearing the tainted name of a schemer and an adventurer. I could give you half a dozen other examples, and in each case the lady who has won her position in the profession has turned her back upon it to marry into what she considered a higher social grade, but only to discover that in the end she has not only to keep her "swell," but to submit to all kinds of miseries and degradation. It is not in the interest of virtue to say so, but those "ladies of the stage" who prefer "protectors" to husbands seem to be the most cared for and the happiest. They have sealskin jackets, diamonds, broughams, and, in many cases, don't condescend to take salaries; but these "ladies," as a rule, only flourish in burlesques and light opera, and, happily, this class of entertainment does not pay nowadays. Even Mr. Hollingshead, of the Gaiety, says he has given up "legs" for good, the genuine legitimate uses of the theatre being far more profitable. "The Invisible Prince," one of Planche's most charming old extravaganzas, with Miss Jennie Lee in the title rôle, is not a great hit at the Globe, though it is splendidly mounted and has a cast worthy of the work. The public wants stronger meat than this, and they will have it or keep away from the theatres altogether.

Reverting back to the romantic incidents of stage life, the history of "Henry V.," at the Queen's, is not without its special interest. The play and some of the effects were rehearsed at York. If a man believed in omens the awful death of the chief gas-man might have given Mr. John Coleman pause. The poor fellow was blown to pieces by an explosion in the cellar of the theatre during the first rehearsal. Soon afterward, during the decoration of the Queen's Theatre, where the piece was in preparation, a painter fell from the scaffolding and was killed. On the opening night, a carpenter, in some little difficulty beneath the stage connected with the working of a platform upon which some property horses were raised to complete a battle tableau, was literally decapitated by the collapse of one of the stays or supports of the trap. Three deaths! And chronicled now for the first time, not in London, but 3,000 miles away, because our newspapers are too busy with foreign affairs to notice such trifles. Mr. Coleman hopes, however, that his own great losses and troubles have purged "Henry V." of the gloom and depressing influences of these memories and sad incidents, and he is looking for the reward of his labors in the future—looking to the provinces and to America for a solid recognition of his magnificent mounting of the drama in which he has so ingeniously combined "Henry IV." and "Henry V." in one striking spectacular play. The dresses and scenery cost $25,000, and when the manager came to grief, Mr. John Ryder, the well-known actor and dramatic coach, cabled to the States to bring Mr. George Rignold to open in "Henry V." With these accessories on Boxing night, Ryder felt certain that he would be able to obtain the use of the properties, but he had counted his chickens too early. A friend of Coleman's had purchased the dresses and effects for "the other John," who at once announced "Henry V.," with all the original dresses and scenery, for a grand tour. Meanwhile, however, Mr. George Rignold was on the sea, and in due course in London, where he recounted to admiring friends his successes in America. The Queen's did open on Boxing night, and for that night only, the saloon-keeper of the theatre finding the money. "East Lynne" was the attraction of the night, and the saloon-keeper lost $100, which little sum was the last straw on the camel's back, and landed the saloon-keeper in the Bankruptcy Court! Then Mr. George Rignold advertised that he was organizing a company to play "Henry V." in the English Provinces, and the papers backed him with a few favorable lines in reference to his "American triumph." Mr. John Coleman reiterated the announcements of his own show, and so the ball was kept rolling. The next thing we hear is that Mr. Rignold has gone back to America, and that during the year he will return to play "Henry V." in his own native town of Birmingham. Rather a thin conclusion to so much bounce. Coleman opens at Edinburgh in March, and gets to Birmingham in "the merry month of May," and is negotiating also to run his show through the United States. The adaptation is admirably done, and as a spectacle no Shakespearean work was ever produced so gorgeously or with so much care as to archæological details. Mrs. Charles Kean placed at the adapter's disposal the elaborate and authentic works prepared for her husband; Mr. Charles Reade and Mr. Phelps helped him to ransack the Bodleian Library and the library of Magdalen College, Oxford, for authorities upon the subject; Mr. Phelps gave him hints derived from his experience at the Sadlers Wells revivals; he was indebted to Mr. Calvert, whose Henry V. is familiar to you in New-York, for the idea which culminated in the great central effect of "The Battle of Agincourt;" Dean Stanley gave him the run of Westminster Abbey, where he learned some new things among the relics of the past; and his own knowledge of the subject combined enabled him to produce a series of pictures which were novel and eminently effective. An experience of American taste and an insight into American scholarship leads me to believe that whatever your opinion of Mr. Coleman's merits as an actor may be, you will find much that is singularly instructive and interesting in his illustrations of the pageantry and pomp of the grand old English days of regal state and splendor.

Theatrical circles have had a piquant scandal to discuss in the action brought by Mr. Arthur Stirling on behalf of his wife, better known in professional life as Mrs. Charles Vyner, and as Miss Cleveland. Mrs. Stirling was the wife of Mr. Charles Vincent, or Vyner, lessee of the Theatre Royal, Melbourne, Australia. Her husband was thrown from a horse and killed some years ago, and she left Melbourne with a small fortune. She resolved to come to England by way of San Francisco, and to play wherever she had a chance. With this view she engaged Mr. Donaldson (who is known to fame as Mr. Edmund Leather) as her leading man and agent. All this did not transpire on the trial, but it completes the story and may be added to the legal details with perfect propriety. The two artists performed here and there in various cities, and finally parted on the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Donaldson preferring to go to San Francisco and the buxom widow to London. Here she appeared in Wilkie Collins' "Woman in White," and later in "The Two Orphans," at the Olympic, having first done a Provincial tour. In her early days she had known the circumspect but heavy tragedian, Mr. Arthur Stirling, whom she returned to find married to the sister of Mr. Charles Thorpe, who had made a large fortune in Australia. Arthur was living in good style with his wife and half a dozen ready-made children, for Mrs. Stirling had been previously married. Presently Mr. Leather (otherwise Donaldson) came to England and made his mark as the hero in Mr. Charles Reade's "Wandering Heir," at the Amphitheatre, Liverpool, and the Queen's, London. Mrs. Vyner invited him to visit her at her pretty little house, in the neighborhood of Regent's Park. On this occasion, she says, she reminded him that he owed her $250, but in court he flatly denied the sottimpeachment. By and by Mr. Arthur Stirling, in the midst of proceedings for divorce against his wife, found himself a widower, and before his friends had time to condole with him they were called upon for their congratulations. He had married Mrs. Charles Vyner. Mme. Celeste and Miss Herbert (Mrs. Crabbe) were among the guests at the wedding, which was duly chronicled in that dullest of trade journals The Era. Mrs. Vyner had money, and among her assets it is to be presumed were returned the $250 said to be owing by Donaldson; for as soon as the marriage festival was over, her new lord demanded this purse from that gentleman. Whether it was from the desire to possess himself of this not very large purse, or to justify his wife, or to find out what the relationship was between Mr. Donaldson and his wife, nobody knows; but Mr. Stirling issued a writ and sued Donaldson in a superior court. Counsel were engaged on either side, and for half a day Stirling, dressed in the height of fashion, had to sit and listen to the story of his wife's travels, on sea and land, with the stalwart and handsome Donaldson, related amid much sniggering and laughter of a crowded court. It transpired that the two artists lived in the same lodgings at the Sandwich Islands, and acted there by command of his Majesty, the King, who paid them a hundred dollars, and took the receipts. Here they had a great quarrel, and Mrs. Vyner vowed she would make Donaldson smart some day. They then returned certain presents they had made to each other. Mrs. Vyner denied that she ever gave Donaldson a locket; but Donaldson said she did, and was always very kind to him, except on this single occasion of their quarrel. They naturally had some financial transactions together, and Donaldson acknowledged in court that Mrs. Vyner lent him money, but he declared they had a final settlement before parting and squared everything. He never heard it said that he owed her $250 until he was served with a writ for the money. The Judge suggested that the litigants should settle their differences out of court, but they declined, and, without deliberating for five minutes, the jury gave the verdict for Donaldson, with costs; so that Mr. Stirling loses, in addition to the money for which he sued, something like $1,500. It was this gentleman who played Nathan, the Jew, so successfully in "Leah," when that drama was first produced by the Batemans in London, and it was Mrs. Vyner who produced a pirated version of the piece with great success in Australia, and thus prevented Miss Kate Bateman from visiting that colony. I need not tell you that the dear old Colonel anathematised Mrs. Vyner in consequence, and hated her ever afterward. He also had a bitter quarrel with Stirling. It is a pity he did not live long enough to sit through the trial of Stirling vs. Donaldson, the moral of which supports the philosophy of Mr. Sam Weller, Sr., on the subject of widows, and is equally favorable to the Shakespearean warnings against jealousy. Mr. Stirling retired from that court of law a sadder and a wiser man.

The event of the time is the production of the new opera of "Biorn," founded upon "Macbeth," to which I have already referred in previous letters. The libretto is the work of Mr. Frank Marshall, and is full of merit. The principal changes from the original story are that Macduff (Rollo) is in love with Lady Macbeth, who confesses the murder of the King to him; the witches are changed to nornir, or fates; and at the end in the banqueting scene, Macbeth, in rushing upon Rollo to kill him, is impeded by his wife, whom he accidentally slays, while he is stabbed to the heart by Rollo; and the new King, the true successor, comes to the throne, under the guardianship of Rollo. Mrs. Marshall was Elfrida, or Lady Macbeth, but she was very ill on the first night, and has not yet recovered her voice, though she plays the sleep-walking scene with marked intelligence and a certain grace, but the part is heavy, and requires the weight and dramatic and vocal power of Titiens to do justice to its amalgamation of devil and angel. Biorn, or Macbeth, was played by Signor Mottino, who was as firm and steady as a rock in words and music, but he had neither the dramatic fire nor the vocal strength demanded by the situations and the musical score. Miss Cora Stuart as Rollo made a genuine success. Graceful, vivacious, and possessing a rich soprano voice, she stood out in every picture, and was rewarded with loud and genuine bursts of applause. The music is characteristic, meritorious, here and there it breaks into pretty pastoral melodies, and now and then it rises to the level of operatic inspiration; but it is uneven, and it cannot be said to rank on the whole with the foremost work of our modern composers. The opera is splendidly mounted and the orchestra perfect. Portions of the book are in every way worthy of the subject, and throughout its pages are scattered "verses for music" which are quite gems in their way—the following serenade for example:

"Wind, idle wind, that kisses her tresses,
Breathing thy song in the shell of her ear,
Tell her of eyes that are yearning to see her,
Whisper, oh whisper, thy Rollo is near.

Sweet gentle moonbeams that creep in her bosom,
Nestle there closely and plead ye my part;
Shine from her eyes in the soft glance of pity,
Kindle with love her cold, passionless heart."

The criticisms of the piece, as a rule, are untavorable; but the Daily Telegraph laid itself out for a notice that was peculiarly brutal. The critic treated the whole affair as an elaborate joke, brought to a fitting conclusion by the librettist answering the call of "author" with a white muffler round his throat. Mr. Marshall replied to the critic. The Telegraph declined to insert the letter. Mr. Marshall says the critic was ordered to "slate" the work, as he is ordered to "slate" everything that is produced at the Queen's, because Mr. Labouchere, the owner, will not let the proprietors of the Telegraph go behind the scenes and have boxes free whenever they want them. Marshall is writing a pamphlet embodying this and other charges against the paper, with a careful answer to the critic, and we are looking for a bright, bitter and spicy brochure on "Critics and Criticism," which will wake up Peterborough Court considerably, for Mr. Marshall has the pen of a ready writer, and he is going about with his teeth set and his fingers in his splendid curly hair. Mrs. Marshall looks very ill, and the dead set which has been made against her here had the effect of making her look and feel frightened in every serious situation of the piece. She has a fond and devoted husband, and somebody will have to suffer for all this. The writer of the Telegraph critique is Mr. Joseph Bennett, the "musical editor," who was recently induced to relinquish half a dozen engagements and give his entire services to Mr. Levy Lawson.

They have restored the cottage or hut scene of Osip to "The Danicheffs," as it stood in the original French, and the drama is now an undoubted success. The honors of the acting are carried off by Mr. Warner, Mr. Clayton, Mr. Vezin, and Miss Lydia Foote. Lord Newry, it is understood, objects to certain alterations which have been made in the work, but they are changes for the better, and a stronger or better melodrama has not been produced on the English stage for many years. There is every prospect that it will be sufficiently successful to revive the fortunes of St. James' Theatre, and that at last Mrs. John Wood will score a success. She is, however, only joint speculator, but it business is really as good as I hear it is the treasury will be full enough for two.

"Richard III." with Mr. Henry Irving in the title rôle, and the play relieved of every line that is not Shakespeare's, will be produced at the Lyceum on Monday. Mr. F. C. Burnand is writing a comic play for the Gaiety. "Hunted Down" will go from the Globe to the Gaiety at Dublin in a fortnight. "Dan'l Traduced," a burlesque of Mr. Gilbert's play, is not successful at the Strand Theatre. On Feb. 3, "On Bail," Mr. Gilbert's extended version of "Committed for Trial," will replace "Hot Water" at the Criterion. Miss Jennie Lee leaves the Globe and goes on a provincial tour in a week or two. A stock company is going to be formed for the Aquarium Theatre. "Si Slocum" is to be produced at an East End house. Mrs. Monckton and Lady Sebright will appear shortly at a London theatre for a charitable object, and Mr. B. L. Farjeon, the Christmas story teller, is shortly to marry the daughter of Rip Van Winkle—I mean Jefferson, with which interesting announcement I may be permitted to close my budget of theatrical news and notes on news.

GERMAN JOLLITY SUPREME.

THE NIGHT AFTER THE BALL.

JOYOUS SUPPLEMENT TO THE GRAND PUBLIC DANCE—THE HEIGHT OF MUSICAL PLEASURE AND BEER-DRINKING—THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LIEDERKRANZ ORGANIZATION—A SKETCH OF ITS UPS AND DOWNS.

"Commers" and "gemuetlichkeit," inseparable as they are untranslatable, twin gems of Germanic expression, condense a world of meaning into their few syllables, living together as a single lovable memory in every heart that has learned to know them and appreciate at its full worth the delicious philosophy that "'tis better to laugh than be sighing." There is no word in English for either of them, but by many words some idea may be conveyed at least of their significance. Perhaps the best way to do so will be to describe a "commers," which is an occasion pervaded by a thorough gemuetlichkeit, which is the spirit of the occasion. None are more happy in their conduct of a commers than the festive and tuneful brethren of the Liederkranz, and never are they in better trim for such enjoyment than on the night succeeding their annual grand masquerade. Perhaps it may be because the Ponderous German mind wakes gradually only to the possibilities of sport, and when started, moves on its objective point of fun in masses, as it were, so that the excitement of a carnival night is little more than a preparation for still greater indulgence and relaxation on the night thereafter. Perhaps, also, a vague faith in "the hair of the dog will cure the bite," may incline some of them to an especial fondness for beer on the evening after that exceptional revel, and no doubt numbers seek the commers as a valid excuse for indulging that reluctance to going to bed which many men have after "making a night of it." Whatever may be their impulses, from 100 to 150 of the members of the Liederkranz, old and young, sit down together the night after the ball to smoke, drink beer, sing, drink beer, make funny speeches, drink beer, laugh, drink beer and enjoy general good-fellowship—and beer.

So they sat last Friday evening, more than 100 of them, around the long tables in their handsome clubhouse on Fourth street, and made merry. But the occasion was an extraordinary one. It was not only the regular after ball commers. It was the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the formation of their society. Quite appropriately they opened the evening's proceedings by singing in chorus the familiar old Suabian ballad: "Schier dreissig jahre bist du alt, hast manchen sturm erlebt." [Just thirty years art thou old, hast lived through many storms.] Then the President of the Society delivered his annual address. When he arose to speak, the genial face of ex-Mayor C. G. Gunther smiled blandly and hazily upon him through the smoke from the further end of the tables; to his left beamed the benign countenance of Justice Otterbourg; on his right sat the venerable white-headed "Papa" Windmuller, the only one remaining of the founders of the Liederkranz; on every side were men of high social standing, prominence in the mercantile and financial world and note in political affairs. Before each man stood a glass of beer; at the doorways stood a corps of nimble waiters quick to refill the empty glasses; through a wide central door opening into a larger and less brilliantly lighted hall could be seen a large orchestra.

President Steinway said in February, 1846, upon a call issued by a German musician named Krauskopf, a meeting was held at the old Shakespeare Hotel to organize a German singing society. At that time there was but one such organization in the country, the "Maennerchor" of Philadelphia. Of the 150 gentlemen who attended that meeting, only 25 proved their faith by their works to the extent of contributing 25 cents each as a basis of operations. With those 25 members and in that humble way started the Liederkranz, which now has over 900 members, owns more than $100,000 worth of property, and may justly be deemed the strongest and most flourishing organization of its kind in the world. The gentleman who proposed the existence of the society was its first Musical Director. During the past 27 years, however, the present efficient Director, Agricol Paur, has wielded the baton at every rehearsal and concert except three. The formation of the Liederkranz seemed to start up a crop of singing societies, not only in New-York, but throughout the country. Some of those have since passed away, others have been consolidated, but the old Liederkranz has always held its place at the head of the list as the strongest and most flourishing, numbering among its members the best of our German citizens, and ranking highest in musical attainments up to the present time. In June, 1850, this society attended in Philadelphia the first musical festival ever given in the United States, and, in the competitive singing, carried off the first prize in a magnificent rendering of a chorus from "La Fille du Regiment," and in 1851 produced here the first German opera, "Czar and Zimmerman," ever publicly performed in this country. In 1852 the first general Saengerfest was held here, but proved an entire financial failure, involving all the local societies deeply in debt. The Liederkranz alone had to pay some $2,000 to clear itself. That brought on hard times and their inevitable consequences of ill-feeling and squabbling, one result of which was the secession of about 20 members, who started the "Arion" as a rival to the parent society.

It never, however, realized the expectations of its founders. The Liederkranz had quite recovered by 1853, and from that on took a prominent part in all the great Saengerfests in different parts of the country. In 1853 and 1857 it took part in the festivals at Philadelphia; in 1854 and 1859 at Baltimore; 1855 in New-York; 1860 in Buffalo. Then it suffered from the civil war. More than 100 of its best members joined the Army of the Union, and over 50 laid down their lives on the battle-field in defense of the country of their adoption. In 1863, however, the society was strong enough to buy for its uses the two handsome dwellings Nos. 31 and 33 East Fourth street, and removed from their old head-quarters, in Pythagoras Hall, on Canal street, near the Bowery. Since then it has enjoyed a season of uninterrupted prosperity, and its club promises have been still further enlarged by the purchase in 1869 of the house No. 35 East Fourth street. Its musical triumphs have been as gratifying as its financial success. First prizes were taken by its singers at the great Saengerfests of Philadelphia in 1867, Chicago in 1868, and Baltimore in 1869. It also bore an important part in the New-York festival of 1871. Since that time it has mainly confined itself to the giving of occasional magnificent concerts, in which, by its musical drill and proficiency and its numerical strength, it has been enabled to present worthily many works of the great masters that could not otherwise have been heard here. It has also done another thing for which it deserves credit, in founding a free music school for young girls, where at present from 80 to 100 pupils, with promising voices, receive thorough instruction from the most competent teachers. The list of its Presidents recalls a series of names well and honorably remembered by New-Yorkers, emoracing Dr. Ludwig, "Papa" Windmuller, Mr. Jellinghaus, O. Ottendorfer, Dr. Lellman, O. Sackersdorf, L. Kammerer, Gen. L. Burger, ex-Mayor C. G. Gunther, and finally the present incumbent Mr. William Steinway, whois now serving his fourth term of office. In conclusion, the speaker made an eloquent appeal for the maintenance of German unity and feeling, and proposed "three cheers for the German Liederkranz." Members sprang to their feet, waving their glasses in the air and shouting lustily, while the trumpets blared and the drums resounded. Then all quaffed the contents of their glasses, resumed their seats, and while more beer was being brought, joined in the old Suabian song, "Nu' gang's zum Brünele drink aber net."

Mr. Bernard, one of the members, sang with fine expression and excellent voice Schubert's "Am Meer," and being loudly applauded followed it with a tender Lorelei ballad for which he played his own accompaniment.

The health of "Papa" Windmüller was proposed by the President, who, to do the toast due honor, commanded "Exercitium Salamander." "Salamander," "Salamander," "Salamander," shouted an hundred voices in response to the invitation. "A musical Salamander," further commanded the President, but as he seemed about to commence the "Exercitium," and many glasses were unfilled, there swelled on the air from all parts of the hall a thundering chorus of "Bier, hier, bier, hier, oder ich fall um." Speedily the waiters did their duty, and then the President directed, "Watch my left hand," holding it out before him and beginning to count "ein—zwei—trei." At "ein" the glasses rambled together on the tables; "zwei," and their rattling became a roar; "trei," and all was instant silence as every glass was lifted to its possessor's lips and drained of its contents. Then all held aloft while the President counted "ein—zwei—trei," and at the latter syllable they all came down together with a simultaneous bang that sounded almost like a cannon shot. Again the rumbling roll broke forth like distant muttering thunder, coming nearer and growing louder and louder as the President's left hand was raised, and his lips could be seen moving as if he were saying "ein," and then "zwei." The "zwei" marked the extremest elevation of the hand and the climax of the noise. From that the descending hand commanded a gradual diminuendo, from fortissimo down to pianissimo, and when "trei" was counted, the sound seemed but a muttering among the glasses over the riot in which they had just participated. Again "ein—zwei—trei" were counted, and at the latter each glass was raised above the holder's head. Very quickly now, and for the last time, "ein—zwei—trei," and with a shock, as of but one glass, all were again upon the table. Then up in a grand volume of harmony swelled that thrillingly magnificent chorus. "Esse quam bonam," sung by all present, and accompanied by the orchestra. Higher and higher, mounting to a glorious climax, rose the strains, then ended suddenly, and for an instant there was perfect silence. Then the waiters rushed about with beer.

"Papa" Windmüller stood up to reply. A long green shade dropped over his eyes; a very long pipe-stem, with a big bowl at one end of it, and his smiling face at the other, was in his hand. He only suspended his smoking long enough to say that his friend, Justice Otterbourg would respond for him, and the Justice did so in a very felicitous little speech that elicited hearty applause.

Agricol Paur came to the front with an armful of music-books, and, under his leadership, the members sang finely a chorus, "Farewell to the Mountains." And the waiters continued to rush about with beer. The Secretary went about with a hat, collecting money by voluntary subscriptions, to defray the expenses of the evening. Some members threw in dollar bills, others put in twos and fives, and some even contributed tens and twenties. Soon the hat was so full that the secretary had to press down its contents. And the waiters did not relax their activity in supplying beer. A humorous gentleman sang a funny song in a queer Polish-Jew dialect, and everybody laughed so heartily that thirst was redoubled, and the waiters, with their beer, were in greater demand than ever.

Between the songs and speeches, the orchestra—well supplied with beer and sympathising fully with the general jollity—played lively fragments of Offenbach's merry naughtinesses. Men began to beat time with their glasses to the strains of that intoxicating music, to lay their arms over each other's shoulders and laugh together, not at anything especially funny, but from sheer gladness of heart. In on the general disorder broke, like a clarion call, the first notes of "Die Wacht am Rhein" from the orchestra, and in a moment more all were singing it enthusiastically, with a glow of earnest feeling that was beautiful to see. But singing makes one thirsty, and so "Bier, hier, bier, hier, oder ich fall um" was the next chorus, and so the happy hours were wiled away with song and speech and story, merry conceit and jest and kindly words, clinking of glasses and emptying of glasses and refilling of glasses. The air became more and more blue with smoke, higher and higher rose the pile of beer kegs in the adjoining hall, faster and faster blew the musicians their exciting Offenbachian strain, yet all the while, steadily at his post, guiding and directing the fun, placid as a moonbeam, sat the President, with the beaming Windmüller at his side puffing the long pipe.

By and by the older members reluctantly straggled homeward one by one, but the commers did not end until long after midnight. In all, that long sitting, however, it is worthy of remark, notwithstanding the vast quantity of beer consumed, not one man was intoxicated, and not a single incident occurred to mar the general harmony or do violence to the jovial, kindly brotherhood of feeling so well characterized by that comprehensive word, "gemuetlichkeit."

WOMEN ON SCHOOL BOARDS.

THE BILL IN THE STATE SENATE MAKING THEM ELIGIBLE—A WIDE-SPREAD SENTIMENT IN FAVOR OF THE MEASURE—WOMEN'S USEFULNESS ON SCHOOL BOARDS DEMONSTRATED IN OTHER STATES AND COUNTRIES.

The question, "Shall women be permitted to serve on School Boards?" which has already been answered in the affirmative in many of the Eastern and Western States, is now a matter of discussion in New-York. A bill making women eligible for positions on the boards throughout this State was presented in the Senate a few weeks ago by Senator William N. Emerson, of Rochester, and was referred to the Committee on Education, which consists of Senators Gerard, Wagstaff, and McCarthy. The two first-named gentlemen, it is understood, were friendly to the measure, but Mr. McCarthy opposed it, and the bill was therefore reported from the committee for the consideration of the Senate. In the meantime, the fact that such a measure is pending, has attracted the attention of those favorable to it throughout the State, and a large number of petitions and memorials were in circulation for the signatures of those in favor of the measure. One has been sent from Munroe County signed by the School Commissioners. One in this City has already received the signature of Mr. William Wood, President of the board of Education, and many members of the Board, while others are rapidly securing the names of leading lawyers and business men. Those engaged in collecting signatures say that they find a very favorable feeling to the measure.

The experiment of putting women in those positions has been tried with considerable success in England, Scotland, and this country. In regard to the recent election for members of school boards in England, Miss Mary E. Beedy, an American lady, writes to the Woman's Journal:

"The opposition to having women upon the school boards is not only not increasing, but is diminishing, and this view is confirmed by the following facts: The first school board election in the third since school boards began to be established in England. Miss Becker, the editor of the English Women's Suffrage Journal, has kept her place upon the Manchester School Board from its formation, and is recognized as one of its most efficient members. Miss Sturge, a niece of the noted philanthropist Quaker, Joseph Sturge, has served two terms upon the Birmingham School Board. She retiron at the recent election, and her place has been filed by a Miss Kenurick. Mrs. Bucton enters upon her second term in the school board of Leeds, with a larger majority than any other candidate. The first school board in London had two widely-known and most efficient women—Mrs. Dr. Garrett Anderson, whose professional duties required her to retire at the end of her first term of office, and Miss Emily Davies, who, having been the leader in establishing Girton College for women at Cambridge found her presence at the college necessary for directing the work. Both these ladies, like Prof. Huxley, had gone upon the school board to assist in giving prestige to the work of the board and in getting the work successfully started. The second London board contained Mrs. Cowell, sister of Mrs. Dr. Garrett Anderson, and Miss Chessar, one of the most learned women teachers in London. These ladies are accredited with excellent work, but they did not bring with them the same public reputation and influence that attended Miss Davies and Mrs. Dr. Garrett Anderson, and they, too, found it necessary to retire at the end of one term. Of the four other lady members—one is Miss Helen Taylor, the step-daughter of John Stuart Mill, and the editor of both Mr. Buckle's and Mr. Mill's posthumous works; another is Mrs. Westlake, the daughter of Augustus Hare, an able political writer, whose scheme for the representation of minorities is well known among all friends of a rational government."

Just preceding this election many English papers were warm in their advocacy of the presence of women on these boards, some of the leading journals having editorials urging that all rate-payers should vote for the lady candidates. In a long article on the subject the London Daily News says:

"It will be a serious hindrance to the successful accomplishment of the task that still awaits the energy and skill of the new board, if the places of the two ladies who have seats on the present board should not be filled by suitable representatives of their sex. It has gone on to point out several instances in which the presence of women on the board secured advantages to the female scholars which the men had either overlooked or neglected, and adds: "Men constantly fall into mistakes on questions affecting the other sex from sheer ignorance, because they have no occasion in their daily lives to observe and remember the facts that tell in favor of women. It is of the utmost importance that some ladies, at least, should be on the board, not merely to see that the educational interests of girls are not neglected, but to communicate with the school-mistresses, and afford them that sympathy and support which can best be given by women to women."

Women have served with marked success on school boards in Massachusetts, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, and other Western States. In Joliet, Ill., Miss Sarah C. McIntosh has just been elected Superintendent of Schools. In Michigan women not only serve on the boards but vote for school officers, and here, as elsewhere, the experiment has proved a success.

INDICTED FOR PERJURY.

INSURANCE OFFICIALS IN ST. LOUIS ACCUSED OF MAKING FALSE STATEMENTS—TWENTY-ONE COUNTS IN THE INDICTMENT.

From the St. Louis Journal, Feb. 8.

The Grand Jury have had the insurance crookedness under investigation for some time, and at noon yesterday came to a vote upon the indictments pending against John T. Douglass, President of the Columbia Life Insurance Company and Director in the Life Association of America, Edwin W. Bryant, Actuary of both companies and Vice President of the former. The indictments charged perjury in making and swearing to false statements as to the condition of the Columbia Life, and contained 21 counts. Each one of these counts was approved unanimously, and true bills against Douglass and Bryant were returned. The Grand Jury entered the criminal court-room shortly after 12 o'clock, and reported these indictments with a number of others to Judge Jones, who ordered warrants issued immediately for the arrest of the indicted parties. These proceedings were conducted with such successful secrecy that the press reporters could obtain no definite information upon the matter, and the evening papers barely alluded to the fact that it was rumored two indictments had been returned against certain insurance men.

Mr. John T. Douglass came down to his office yesterday noon. About 4 o'clock Mr. Bryant made his appearance, and with painful trepidation informed Douglass that there was a rumor upon the streets that he (Bryant) had been indicted by the Grand Jury. Mr. Douglass evinced little or no surprise. He suggested to Mr. Bryant the propriety of proceeding at once to the criminal court-room for the purpose of fixing up the little formality of bond, &c., so as to avoid all the annoyances connected with an arrest. At 5:30 o'clock Messrs. Douglass and Bryant entered Clerk Clabby's office. Mr. Douglass approached the Clerk, and after shaking hands with him, remarked: "I understand you have a warrant for the arrest of my friend, Mr. Bryant, here?" Clabby looked at Mr. Douglass curiously for a moment or two, and then, with a twinkle in his eye, replied: "Yes, and I have one for your arrest too, Mr. Douglass!" The intelligence fell like a thunderbolt upon the ear of the unsuspecting man. He staggered back a pace or two, clasped his hands upon his breast, and uttered a few inarticulate sounds. It was a painful picture.

"What is the charge?" he at last found tongue to inquire. "Perjury!" replied the Clerk.

Again the old man tottered back, as if completely overcome by shame. His face was pale as death and his hands twitched convulsively. Finally, as if suddenly recollecting himself, he caught Mr. Bryant by the arm, and going a little to one side, the two hastily discussed the situation, and then Mr. Douglass inquired the amount of security that would be required of each. Upon learning that $1,500 each was required, Mr. Douglass withdrew and soon returned with I. Z. Smith, Esq., who signed the bond of each of the indicted parties. The three then left the court-room.

TEMPERANCE IN ILLINOIS.

The Temperance Reform Clubs of Illinois will hold a convention in Freeport, commencing on Tuesday, Feb. 20, and continuing three days. Delegates representing the clubs will be entertained free of cost by the citizens. All organizations and friends of temperance are invited to be present.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

The following assignments for the benefit of creditors were filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday: Levy Cohn to Harris Cohn; Arthur C. Searles to Edward C. Johnston; Francis J. Donnelly to John Duff, and Morritz Mehesy to Edward Nollain.

Frederick F. Beals, President of the American Sardine Company, of No. 51 Broadway, has gone into voluntary bankruptcy with liabilities of $56,000, and nominal assets of $41,000. The largest creditors are Mrs. Jane A. Famargo $20,000; First National Bank of Cooperstown, N. Y., $13,627; Mrs. H. Beals, $8,125; Zach E. Simmons, $6,433; Marine National Bank, $5,500.

TROTTING AT GILMORE'S GARDEN.

A very large assemblage witnessed the sports in Gilmore's Garden last evening. In addition to the trotting events, there was a colored fat men's foot-race and a ladies' flat-race. For the first trotting race there were six entries, but all the horses did not come to the pole. The first two-mile heats were won by the b. g. Harvey in 2:50 and 2:47, respectively. The third heat was awarded to the s. g. Pat Lynch on account of a foul, although Harvey passed the goal first. The time of the heat was 2:49. The blk. m. Jennie Moore won the last three heats in 2:49, 2:49¼, and 2:48½ respectively.

A grand trotting match for $300, two-mile heats between the black gelding Harry, and the bay gelding Frank, was won by the former in two straight heats. The time was 5m. 36s. and 5m. 51s. A trot for $400, mile heats, was participated in by the gray gelding Ben Thompson, bay gelding Doubtful, and brown gelding Ben. Ben Thompson won the first two heats, but was pressed closely by Ben. In the third heat Ben Thompson and Ben fouled one another, and the judges decided it a dead heat. The fourth heat was won by Ben Thompson in 2:43½, and the race was accordingly awarded to him. The horse Myron Perry was entered for a race against time, the desire being that he should equal Pilot's time, 2:25, the best ever made in the Garden. He failed, however, after three trials. His best time was 2:27½.

MAIL ROBBERIES.

NEW-YORK LETTER-BAGS CUT OPEN IN CINCINNATI—OTHER LOSSES ON THE WAY TO LOUISVILLE.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of Saturday prints the following statements, on the alleged authority of Special Mail Agent Johnston of that city:

"A general robbery system has been going on among the mails at the Little Miami Depot and along the line of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad for some time past, though the best detective skill could not trace it to a responsible source. A number of mail-bags disappeared from the Little Miami Depot a few months ago, but were returned when the trail became hot under the search of the Government officers. The parties who returned them claimed that the bags had been lost, and as a theft of them could not be proved, the matter was dropped there. But about a month ago an Eastern mail-bag—from New-York City, we believe—disappeared while being carried from Pittsburg to Columbus. No trace of it or its contents has yet been found. These robberies occurred at the Little Miami Depot during the night of the 16th of last month. Two mail-bags from the East were cut open, and part of their contents abstracted and carried away. Both were en route to Louisville. The one had been made up along the Pittsburg and New-York Railroad, between those two points, and the other was collected by the Postal-car Agent between Pittsburg and Columbus, on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad. The train from the East which brought them into Cincinnati that evening was late, and missed connection with the Louisville Short-line train going South. The mail, therefore, consigned to Louisville had to wait until next morning. Now, right here is a little mystery. No one seems to know for a certainty what was done with the two robbed mail bags during the interval between their arrival here and the departure of the 6 o'clock Short-line train next morning. Mr. Johnston says they should have been deposited in the Cincinnati Post Office, but they were not. He further states that the various railroad companies have a contract with the Government to carry the mail from one end of the route to the other, and that they and their agents are responsible for its safe-keeping from the time they receive it till it is delivered at its destination. Where the bags were while at the depot is not clearly known. The depot authorities say they were locked up in the postal-car of the morning Short-line train, which was standing in the depot all night. But Mr. Johnston thinks may be they were left lying all night on the trucks, exposed to anybody who came along with a bad intention. The robbery was discovered the next day, when a party brought in some broken envelopes which he had found near the Little Miami Depot. He delivered them to Mr. Johnston, who, on examination, discovered that they were addressed to Louisville, and had been mailed at New-York on the 15th. From these two facts he came to the conclusion that an Eastern mail-bag en route to Louisville the night before had been robbed. A telegram to the Louisville Postmaster confirmed this theory. The clerk at that point, on emptying the two bags of what was left in them, discovered that a slit had been cut in each and part of the letters therein taken out. The bags were sent to Mr. Johnston. We saw them both in his office yesterday. Each has a slit of about three inches long, and of a zig-zag course, ripped in their sides—just such as would be produced by a rapid jerk of a pocket-knife. It is not certain how much valuable mail was lost, as it has not yet been time to hear from the East, whence the letters came."

CAUSE OF SICKNESS IN HOMES.

A PAPER BY COL. WARING READ BEFORE THE HEALTH ASSOCIAT

CURRENT LITERATURE.

A CLOSED BOOK.

I read it long ago, and as I read,
A world of wonder rose before my eyes
And widened into vastness, dimly spread
'Neath solemn skies.

Beyond the page my emulous desire
Divined the marvels of unwritten scenes—
I was ambitious, by the school-room fire,
Just in my teens!

Now, though the book has faded out of mind,
Though all that dreamy pageant I forgot,
Its shadow lingers, vast and undefined,
And haunts me yet.

The far-off glory dies in pallid gleams—
Cannot a yearning sigh the flame restore?
Cannot I read again, and dream those dreams
Once more—once more?

Never. The child has passed away, the book
Is closed, and 'mid my childish memories laid,
With all its magic in it. I would look,
But am afraid.

Men do not name it 'mid immortal works,
And laggard Fame is slow to find it out.
Perhaps. And yet within my soul there lurks
Something of doubt.

How if the visions whose dim figures thickened
Round me, and thronged my yet unpeopled air—
How if the fear, whereat my pulses quickened,
Should not be there?

How if the shadow, awful in its gloom,
Were dwarfed and shriveled when the daylight dawned—
How if I smiled above the empty tomb—
How if I yawned?

How if I marveled at myself, and him
I honored once? Surely the Past might rise
In human shape, and look at me with dim,
Reproachful eyes.

Because for his enchantment long ago
I had no thanks to give in later days—
Oh, dreams that flickered in the firelight glow,
Be his your praise!

He gave my fancy wings, and in its flight,
No fault, no failure, could it stoop to note;
Perhaps I read the book he meant to write,
Not that he wrote.

Why should the knowledge that in awe began
Be ended now in laughter barbed with pain?
And why take back the faith that never can
Be given again?

No, he shall keep it! Do not draw the curtain,
Let my dim wonder be a wonder still—
I will not read it—I am almost certain
I never will!

—Spectator. MARGARET VELEY.

THE SHADOW OF THE DOOR.

A river, eighty or a hundred yards in width, flowing with a strong current—a rounded point projecting well out on its eastern bank, and changing just there the general direction of the stream—the region, in the western part of North Carolina, before the hills rise into mountains—these are the only features of the general landscape which the reader of the following narrative will have to bear in mind.

On the point mentioned, elevated some twenty feet above the water, stood, at the time when I saw it, many years ago, a plain house of wood in the ordinary carpenter's style. Unlike most houses of its class, which are usually placed as near the public road as possible, this was but a few yards from the river, while the road that followed the main course of the stream cut across the base of the projection on which the house stood, and which included the fifty acres and more of the small farm attached to it. With the road at a distance in front, and a broad stream, fringed with trees, in its rear, the house and its occupants were very nearly shut out from the observation of all but persons who directly approached it.

It had been built and occupied for a few years by William Dempton, who, with the wife he brought with him, made his appearance as an entire stranger to the neighborgood. He said nothing of his affairs, except that he wanted to purchase a small property. He invited no questions, and, if not surly, was unsocial. His wife was one of the subdued sort—in the cut and color of her dress, the tone of her voice, the meekness of her manner, and even the washed-out hue of her complexion. People felt, somehow, that they learn ed more of him by looking at her than in any other way.

There was little learned, however, in any way. Dempton bought the land lying between the road and the river; paid for it in cash; seemed to have money enough to do what he wanted, but evidently wanted to do as little as possible—except in building a house much larger than he had need of. When a year or two went by the problem which his coming had presented took a new form; not why he came and who he was; but what was the use of a house and a farm to a man who was not using either for the purpose that other men would?

II.

"William, will you let me speak to you?"

"Speak! why not? I haven't stopped you."

"Yes, you have, again and again; for you know what I mean, and I can't keep still about it."

"I guess you can, for you've got to. It's you that have shut us both up; for if I let you begin on anything, you get round right off to the same cursed old subject again."

"That's not true now, William, and hasn't been for a long while, as you know; for it was something harder to bear than blows that shut my mouth, except when I had to speak, as I must speak now."

"You can't say I ever struck you," returned the man, with the manner of one who was willing to get up an altercation, if he could change the subject in that way.

"Nor have I said you did—with your hand; nor, for that matter, though you are speaking so harshly now, with hard words either. But you've laid a weight on me by your looks and manner that's just crushing the very soul in me. Don't go away,"—and as the man rose to his feet she rose also,—"I'll go with you if you do. I'll wait till you come back, if it's all night. Speak I will, and of nothing else, even though the worst happens I've been afraid of."

She had just acquitted him of using hard words, and one look into his face showed that he had no need of them. Sombre-visaged as he always was, and with strongly-marked features, he was not ill-looking, with some smoothness of skin and freshness of complexion. But while his wife was speaking the skin seemed more tightly drawn across the forehead, sharp lines cut the smooth cheek the deep-set eyes half closed as if to hide the expression that glowed within, and the paleness of repressed passion spread over his face.

"What are you afraid of?" He uttered the words quietly; but there was a change in his tone like that in his countenance. The woman evidently observed and felt that gathering up and preparation of the spirit to do ill which is more fearfully suggestive even than its outbreak. Her hands, pressed against her bosom, trembled; her voice sank lower in a compressed tone that seemed to exhaust the lungs with the one word "Murder."

For a brief pause they stood—he with his eye fixed upon her, she shrinking from it, yet as one resolved to go through what she had begun. Then, suddenly, with an impatient movement of his head, he exclaimed, "Pho! what put that into your head?"

Slowly drawing a long breath, as if something had not happened she expected, the woman answered—

"You put it there, William. I've seen it in your eye; I've read it in your manner. I can't be mistaken. I'm sure the thought of getting me out of the way has come to you more than once. It hasn't frightened me for myself. What good is life to me? I'd be glad to leave it—but not by your hand. Yet it's not that that's breaking me down and has closed my lips till the words come in spite of me. It's not of myself and you together that I've been thinking, but of you and murder together. You say that I always came back to the same subject. That is why I did, because there is murder in it."

"Are you crazy?" here Dempton broke in. "In what was there murder? Do you know what you say?"

Perhaps it had not surprised him that she had entertained some personal apprehensions; indeed, he had somewhat played upon her fears. But her last words evidently touched upon something for which he was not prepared. There was a startled as well as inquiring look upon his face as he raised his head abruptly. Her reply, though still in the same repressed voice, was prompt and distinct.

"I ought to know, for I've been saying it over to myself for years, and as much of it to you as I dared—for your sake, William, more than for my own."

"Say it out then now, once for all, and have done with it. The last time you broke out in this way, I told you that once more would end it, and now we've got there. As sure as we are living now, one or both of us will be dead before there's another chance."

"I knew it," said the woman; "I knew it wasn't only because I wanted you to give up living here, and kept telling you that your plans about it would never end well, that you looked so black and spoke as you did."

"Any man would look black," returned her husband, "who had such a dead drag on him as you have been since we first set foot on this place."

"I would have dragged you back if I could when you took the first step to come here. I knew before we started we were coming for no good."

"Why did you come then? I told you to stay behind till I sent for you, but you would come."

"So you did; and your sister wanted me to stay. But you knew I couldn't live with her, and you wanted all the money. And as God hears me, I would come because I was your wife, for worse as well as for better; and I believed the worse was at hand. I meant it should not be the very worst, if I could help it."

"This was all for my sake, was it?" said Dempton, with a sneer, yet in a tone of inquiry that seemed designed to lead his wife on.

"It was for your sake, William, and my own, too; for when I married you I meant to keep my promise, God helping me, to the end. He knows I did not look for this; but He knew that this was to be, and that this was my part, and I mean to be faithful to Him as well as to you."

"Oh, yes, yes!" he exclaimed, impatiently; "I know all that. We've lived a hell on earth, because you were too good to let it be anything else. See here, Jane"—and as he spoke he laid his hand on her arm, which shook in his grasp as though the passion he suppressed in his voice was quivering through his nerves—"let's have it all out now in plain terms. What I understand about your meaning is this. You think I've wanted to kill you rather than stand your croaking about the way we live here, and not going back to respectability and the old home, and your prophesying evil to come of it. Keeping that sort of talk up and nothing else for years is enough to make a man think of killing himself or somebody. If I have let such thoughts out sometimes, it's you and your doleful ways that have made me. But I begin to think that you mean more, and that is just what I want to understand. What is it, woman? What did you mean by saying there was murder in the old subject? Speak out! I'm not afraid to hear it you aint to tell."

She met his stern gaze with a steady eye, and answered still in the same distinct, subdued tones; but there was a huskiness in her voice that indicated the agitation within.

"I hoped you would understand me, William, without any plainer words. There shall be no doubt about them now. The time has come when there's nothing left but to speak out. What I am going to say came to my own eyes and ears—no one helped me to it. When father died and left the old homestead and all his securities to brother James, because he was feeble in mind and body both, and couldn't make his way as you could, I saw the change that came over you. Every one saw it, but not as I did—for you were always grave, and no one wondered that you were cut down at getting only the money in the bank and the little house and acre lot we lived in. You were never bitter or sullen to me till then. I had learned before to be afraid of offending you, but I never thought you were a dark man who could have any deadly secret. When you married me, William, you said you liked me because I was quiet but quick." As she said this, she caught her under lip between her teeth, and a movement in her throat showed her effort to keep down her emotion. The man never moved, and continued to regard her with the same fixed look.

"The six months after father's death made me quieter than ever, and quicker to notice all that was going on. I knew then you felt one way about Jim and talked to him another. People thought it good of you after the first disappointment was over, to be pleasanter with him than you ever were with any one else. I soon began to feel that it was bad. I saw you were playing a game, and don't mind saying that I set myself to watch you. Not as your enemy, William"—she said this quickly, breaking out of the low tones she had used, for a grim expression passed over the steely countenance into which she was gazing—"not as your enemy, but as your faithful wife, who would no more let you do harm if she could help it, than she would let harm come to you. I couldn't tell you now, if there were any use in it, all that happened to make me sure I was right, and to show me what you were about. It came to me by little and little; one thing after another. It turned my heart cold, and I went about as if I had drawn a thick veil round me to keep people from seing what was in my thoughts."

All this while Dempton's hand was on his wife's arm. He had relaxed his hold, but not abandoned it, as if by some magnetic influence of his touch he could dominate her spirit. But at this moment the passion he had so long repressed was too much for him. Tightening his grasp, he raised her arm and shook it violently between his face and hers, which he had brought near together, and then, with "Curse your cunning," flung her hand back upon herself. It struck her across the eyes. The lids instinctively closed with the suddenness and violence of the blow. She kept them so a moment, and then raised them—her eyes undarkened by a shadow of fear, but dilated with an expression of horror and sorrow combined that had its effect even upon the man before her. She muttered: "The first blow! the first blow!" and with the other hand pressing back the hair from her forehead, looked at him as if his eyes had a dreadful fascination. There was no confusion in his, but somewhat less of intentness as he said quickly: "Go on, Jane; I'm sorry. Go on; there's no stopping now."

"No," she said, repeating his words with a long-drawn breath, "there's no stopping now. Better get to the end as quick as I can. The end is, William Dempton, that I made up my mind you were coming here, not because you could get more land and make your little money go farther—there were less out-of-the-way places for that than here—but because you had talked James into the idea of one day following you, pretending the climate would be good for him, and a large plantation down here would be a good investment. You meant to get his money somehow, I was sure. How, I could not think, but you would find a way—there was no good way to such an end. I got a glimpse of it at last, just before we left. Do you remember that evening when the lawyer came who managed the purchase of our house and lot, and you told him about father's will, and why you sold out and were coming down here? I wondered at your being so free to talk with him. It was not natural in you; and when you raised your voice so that every word could be heard as you went with him to the gate, I knew you meant that those people passing by might hear how good-humoredly you made light of his asking why you did not break the will. I had followed you out on the stoop, and had stepped down on the path behind you. As you came back with a slow and heavy tread—I couldn't but notice it—you said to yourself, bringing each word out in the same slow, firm manner: "There's a surer way than that." It was pitch-dark, and you went by without seeing me. There was no light in the entry, except what came through the door of the room where we had been sitting. It fell on you as you turned to go in, and then I saw for the first time that dreadful look that struck my heart as you struck my face just now. Had it been my way to scream as some women do, I should have cried out "murder" then. But the idea of it and the fear of it sank deeper into my mind. It's the word that has been ringing in my brain ever since. I went quickly round to the back door, and perhaps you thought that I had been up stairs, for when I came into the room you said nothing. The black look had nearly passed away, but my eyes met yours, and I was willing they should speak for me. You never asked, and I didn't say anything. But I tell you now, William, that from that hour I have had but one purpose in living—to be what you called me, but not as you meant it—a drag upon you. I have meant to hold you back from doing what it was you had planned or thought of doing, and from going any way toward it. It was not to make you unhappy. I believe that you know well why it was, and that you believe me when I say it was only for your sake. Not for anything that might happen to me or to James, but to keep you from murder—murder—murder."

Her voice sank with each repetition of the word, and her lips moved once when no sound issued; as if, now the dreadful thought and fear were uttered that had so long been brooded over, there was a dismal necessity to repeat it. Her brave spirit had struggled on so far. She had borne up under the two-fold horror—that while trying to impede her husband's advance toward the crime he meditated in the distance, she might possibly provoke its commission sooner and in a still more fearful way. She had reached the end. She could say, and do, and bear, no more. The one word, in the utterance of which her worn-out spirit exhausted itself, was simply the token of the strife within. The pale face grew more pallid; the quivering lips became rigid and bloodless; the keen expression of an anguished soul died out of her eyes, and she fell to the floor in a swoon.

No further words passed between her husband and herself on the subject that had so powerfully agitated her. He raised and not ungently laid her on the bed by the side of which they had been sitting. Such simple means of restoring her as were at hand he promptly used. Not even a look was exchanged as she recovered. "Will you lie still for a while?" he asked; to which a faint "yes" was the only reply, when he left her.

A day in February was drawing to its cloudy end as she moved about the house again; more feebly than her resolute spirit would have allowed, had there not been an unusual reaction from the scene through which she had just passed. The subdued air with which she usually appeared would not, to a close observer, have had the effect of weakness. It was that of one who spoke unmistakably rather than was crushed. But now an utterly broken spirit was evident in her countenance and every movement. She had made her last effort—with what result?

Somewhat later than usual the preparations for their evening meal were completed. Dempton had once come in, but finding the delay, had gone out again among the outhouses. When he returned, the table was ready, the candle shedding its dim light; but no other sign of life appeared. He called her name; there was no answer. He opened the door, calling again and peering round in the last glimmering of the twilight. He waited a few moments and called once more. He looked for her bonnet and shawl; they hung upon the nail as usual. He took the candle and went up to the story above; the whole unfinished space was bare and empty. His eye glanced round the few articles in ordinary use. Where was the water-pail? He caught up the lantern—and there was an unwonted tremulousness in his manner as he hastened to light the candle within. Going round to the rear of the house, the outline of the footpath that led down to the river was dimly visible. After taking a few steps, he opened the door of the lanteru, and let its light fall ful on the path. It was sott and sloppy with the rain that had fallen during the day, so that the latest footprint was well defined. There could be but two sorts—hers and his; and there could be no doubt whose was the fresh mark of the narrower sole and smaller heel. Striding quickly onward till he reached the bank, he paused at the top of the steep descent, and, supporting himself by a tree as he leaned forward, he said in a tone that, unconsciously to himself, was low and hushed, "Jane, are you there?" Unconsciously to himself, also, the idea that was growing more solemnly distinct before his mind gave a gentleness to his voice which, if her ear had caught, would it not have brought her back from the very gate of death? As he listened intently, the rush of the river swollen by the rains was all that he heard. It needed all the courage of that resolute man to descend the bank, trying to distinguish the forms of objects amid the darkness, and at last to stand upon the log that was put there for convenience in dipping up the water. The stream was higher, the current stronger than he expected, and swept close up to the log with bitter force. He turned the light on either side. He raised it above his head to cast its rays far out upon the stream—as if there could be any use in that! If anything had happened there only a moment before, no trace of it remained. It happened in the utter loneliness and darkness, and vanished into the night.

He needed no evidence in sight or sound. Only in this way could her absence be explained. While waiting for his return she had noticed that water would be needed, and as she was accustomed, went for it herself. It came to him, now, that of late she had never asked him to do this for her, and he had never once offered. His bosom heaved—wretched as he was, there was something of manhood's best in him still—as he thought of her in her feebleness going out into the dark, for he had taken the lantern with him. Still, perhaps, somewhat light-headed, she had been over the stream, and the first grasp of the pail by the current had drawn her in. Once off her feet, the curve of the bank would project her into the full force of the river, which would bear her far down before any thing could arrest her course till life was extinct.

So it proved to be. The next day her remains were found amid some driftwood on the opposite side of the river, and a long way down, her hand still clutching the pail. Her countenance, scarce more pallid than before, had a placid expression it had not worn for years.

III.

How William Dempton met his neighbors, and went through the scenes that followed the death of his wife, need not be told. Though, as I have said, not surly, he was repellent in manner, so that as few words were exchanged as circumstances permitted. Whether or not the idea crossed his mind that he was the object of suspicion, it made no perceptible difference in his conduct. He stated the facts as they had occurred, in immediate connection with the accident, and left them to make their impression, apparently careless of the result.

Yet he felt what had happened as his sturdy frame might have felt a blow dealt him by some powerful hand. Not overthrown, nor even staggered, he was intensely conscious that it was a blow, and a hard one.

The reader will have gathered from the conversation detailed above the principal facts with which we are concerned. His wife had truly read his heart, and it was this disclosure of the keen discernment of the woman who, notwithstanding her occasional expostulations, had gone along in the main so quietly by his side, that provoked his unusual outburst of passion. The emotion it expressed still stirred his inmost soul. He well knew that her meekness was not weakness; that she was resolute to do whatever she thought was her duty, and that her conduct toward him had been governed by this principle. Though not prepared to learn, as she did, from her own lips, how soon she had detected the purpose which he kept in the background of his own mind, he had counted on her knowledge of his character as one means by which he would keep her silent; he had never supposed that he could bend her to participate in his plans. On this account he had exaggerated his natural sternness of manner, and though never abusive or violent, had affected a roughness of speech. She would take refuge in silence rather than keep up contention. Perhaps, just glancing at the future, he counted on her sense of a wife's duty as a shield when it might be needed. Thus he had explained to himself their manner of living for the three or four years past, and his own object in keeping it up.

The blow, then, which was given him by her death, following so suddenly on their last interview, was received by him mainly in his conscience. Though utterly without religious principle, he had religious ideas that were as unquestioned by him as the sunlight. If he had wanted to do anything the sun must not shine on he would not attempt to deny the sunshine, but would simply wait for the night. So in matters of conscience. God and another world and a day of judgment were undisputed facts. But he acted as if there were a moral night-time; not for him to hide in—that would have implied activity in getting out of the way of objects keenly discerned and felt—but to wait for and be passively enveloped by it. Then he would do what he pleased, unseen—a state of mind by no means singular, for it explains many a man's conduct.

At the point where he now stood, however, a ray of light darted through the gloom of William Dempton's mind.

If all that while his wife had believed that his plans were tending toward the commission of a deadly crime, what held her back from speaking out as she had done that last day? There had been many an opportunity as good. He had encouraged her idea that he might meditate personal violence against herself; it helped him to govern her more easily. But when he saw that she had not been trembling merely at this imagination of her own, but was overpowered by her apprehension of the very truth that never till now had seemed so vast an object to his own mind, he sought for an explanation. That he did not shrink from doing so was characteristic of the man. There were certain objects that were troublesome to look at. If darkness covered them from his sight, he was satisfied. But he was no coward; and if he must see, would look with all his eyes.

She, then, that shrewd, discerning woman, who he knew was his friend as well as his wife, had judged him to be one who could neither be persuaded nor driven from his set purpose. Intense as her desire was to arrest it, she thought the attempt would be hopeless, except through the workings of his own mind. He could supply the very phrase with which she would support her own spirit under that long trial. She would pray God to work in his heart through the few words which only she could wisely utter. Perhaps he had overheard some such prayer, or something that had fallen from her lips in conversation had suggested the idea. She had done all that she could without lessening her chance of success, and left him to his own conscience and to God. What an idea of him she must have had, if, being the woman she was, she would not attempt more than this!

Then, for the first time in his life, William Dempton understood what it was to be left to his own conscience. During the first hours of his pondering over it, conscience was not an idea only, but a reality. He felt that his wife had more influence over him in her death than in all her life before.

Had this occurred at a time when there was a pause in the course of events which he had started—when some fresh impulse was required to continue it—it is probable that no such effort would have been made. But when such affairs as his are in progress, they gather momentum which renders it hourly more difficult to stop. He would have to be tentold more in earnest to do it now than a year ago. Yet at this very moment there was a special motive for him to be active in the way.

Happy nor herself in the time of her death, his wife was ignorant that he had received information only the day before of the success of his long-laid plan. The post, that arrived in that remote region only once a week, had brought him word of his brother-in-law's final resolve to join him, and that he was on the very eve of carrying it out. All the communications between the two families passed through Dempton's hands. His wife knew only what he thought fit to impart. Her own letters he faithfully delivered, but they were few and brief, and the correspondence was mainly his. He neutralized the effect of her representations, partly by admitting their truth, partly by toning down her strong language; but mainly by his own plausible statements as to the prospects which that region opened to a new-comer. Let James Elsey come and see for himself. Let him bring the money to pay down, which, in the unbusiness-like ways of the people, would make the sum seem twice as large as if he only promised to pay, and he might suit himself as to land on his own terms. In that case Jane would be content to be together again. They would both have a better chance in that climate to live long, and they would all have an opportunity to rise in the world such as Dempton by himself could never hope for.

Such were the ideas suggested, with variations, from time to time, that prevailed with a lonely man, somewhat feeble in health, and shrinking from society, to convert his property into ready money, and join the sister who was his only intimate, and her husband, who, besides showing a generous and friendly spirit, had some claims on the score of his disappointment. As often happens, the resolve that had so long been pondered was taken suddenly at the last, and acted upon promptly. The letter Dempton had received announced the writer's immediate departure. He would be some days on the road; nor had Dempton been so inclined, was there any way of arresting his journey by the news of his sister's death.

Here, then, the crisis in the fate of those three persons came almost in one day, and suddenly.

Men who meditate crime seldom study it out in all its detail. The dark result is in the future—known to be there, but not actually seen. The first step, and the next, and the following, are evident and easy; after that, the general course it will is hardly distinct. There is an indefinite interval yet to be passed over before the result. Few spirits are so hardened, as not to receive a shock when, all at once, there appears but one step more before the irreversible event.

This was what befell William Dempton. All that had as yet distinctly occupied his thoughts was to persuade Elsey to make the move. There was no reason as yet to look beyond that point. It had been uncertain if he should ever get even so far. Thus matters stood only a few hours before, while he yet held that unopened letter in his hand. The news it brought startled him with its significance, and he had purposely let a day go by without speaking of it to his wife. With the event of that day, however, the final issue of his whole scheme advanced upon him at one stride. For James Elsey to come while his sister was living, creating all the stir of such an arrival with its preparations for the routine of their new life, was one thing—and seemed progress quite fast enough for the steady-moving spirit of a man like Dempton. Just because he was so deliberate, it took as near as anything could to take his breath away, that things suddenly assumed a shape so imminent. What effect would his sister's death have upon Elsey? Would he still be inclined to remain? Would he not attract more observers into their little circle than Dempton cared to have? Obviously there was less margin for opportunities than the latter had counted on. There was a necessity to do promptly whatever he decided on doing.

And why should he not be prompt? If he seriously held to his purpose, why delay to carry it out? Why not grasp the opportunity so suddenly within his reach, and that might not remain there?

For this once only, he looked in the face that truth which his wife's words, aided by the impression of her death, brought before his mind—only long enough fairly to see it, and make his rejection of its promptings deliberate and wilful. Should he and Elsey meet and mingle condolences as the afflicted widower and the sorrowing brother, and he himself take his chances for bettering his condition that way? Where everything had so unexpectedly proved favorable to his purpose, should he give it up because of what had happened on that one day?

A coarse ruffian would have broken out into an oath, and sworn to have his own way in defiance of heaven and hell.

William Dempton only paused in his walk up and down that path which his wife had last trod between the house and the river, and raising both hands tightly clenched above his head, as though he were about to deal a double blow, brought them forcibly down again by his side. It was the only sign of emotion that escaped him—except the measured heavy tread which, like his slow, determined utterance, had always been noted by his wife as indicating the immobility of his spirit.

The die had been cast—Satan had won.

IV.

A day or two passed by when Dempton had occasion to drive to "Spicer's Store," as it was termed—the centre of business and gossip to the whole neighborhood.

No one would have thought from his appearance and manner that anything unusual had happened, or that he had anything but the tenor of his ordinary life before him. He returned the greetings of the few persons whom he met, and then went through the process which had been the unfailing astonishment of the lookers-on ever since he first came among them. He had a few purchases to make, and he made them at once and was done with it. Any one else would have drawn them out into half a day's bargaining. What a waste of opportunity!

In one respect he departed from his usual manner. He mentioned that he was preparing to receive his wife's brother—which, as he had never volunteered before a statement about his own affairs, made a marked impression. Not much was said, indeed; simply that Mr. Elsey was coming with a view to "settle" in the neighborhood; but what he would do when he learned what had happened, Dempton could not foresee.

This was all that was made known of the circumstances of Elsey's coming, except what the neighbors saw with their own eyes. Dempton drove just one day, having with him a slight-built, delicate-looking man, respectably attired, whose dejected air was fully accounted for by the dreadful news he had so lately heard. Those easy-going people took their excitements mildly, but Mrs. Dempton's sudden death had roused them to a keener interest than usual in all that pertained to her husband's affairs. On the day of her funeral, when his house was necessarily thrown open, much speculation had been started by the unfinished condition of the upper part. It was now concluded across the counter of Spicer's store that, with the articles he had lately bought, Dempton would fit up a sleeping-place for the "stranger" up-stairs, and probably, if the latter remained, would finish off a room, for which, it had been noticed, there was abundance of unused materials. This conjecture received confirmation not long afterward, when sounds of hammering came over to the public road, and the figures of the two men were seen as if busily at work. With which incident the record up to this period in the history ends.

A month more went by. The Spring opened slowly. There were frequent rains, and the roads were bad. Dempton had been seen now and then in his wagon with Elsey, and once they attended the nearest place of worship, exchanging a few words with the neighbors as they went in and out. There was nothing in this to excite comment, as the one was a stranger, and the other an unsocial man; and they might both be reasonably credited with a special reserve, in view of the late painful accident.

But one day Dempton appeared, with horse and wagon, at the store, unaccompanied by Elsey. Less sparing of his words than usual, he took occasion to say that his visitor had left. He had wished to go up into Virginia, and had started before daylight the day but one before, so as to catch a conveyance on a road at some distance to the north.

One Dick Pender, who happened to be present, here struck in with—

"Why, that was you, then, Squire, comin' across the creek t'other side of my house just after sunrise. I was wonderin' what brought you there so early."

"Yes," said Dempton, "we started soon after 3 o'clock, the roads were so deep; but I made the distance over to the Corners in pretty good time, and came across a man there who belonged over toward Wilkesville, and he was on his way home. He agreed to carry Mr. Elsey right on to Wilkesville, and as that saved a good deal in distance, Elsey got in with him, and I turned back. I got to the creek, as you say, Mr. Pender, after sunrise, but it was a good while after; and I remember thinking you had overslept yourself, from the way in which you shaded your eyes, as if the light had taken you by surprise."

This was not only more than any one had ever heard Dempton say before, but the only instance in which he had been known to attempt a pleasantry. A laugh went round at Pender's expense, who, under the circumstances, felt rather flattered by it; indeed, it figured largely in the account he afterward gave of his share in this history. At the same time, every one noticed, and it seems natural to show an interest in it."

"Did you make his acquaintance, Sir, when he was here?" asked Dempton.

"Not exactly, Squire; I only spoke to him once, and was rather taken by his pleasant voice and looks, and should be glad to learn when he is coming back."

"That is to say, Mr. Atkins, you knew him just as much as you know me. I believe we have been named once to each ether."

This brought Atkins to his feet, with a sense of being called upon to show his ideas of propriety and self-respect.

"Very true, Mr. Dempton, and I think once was enough to make my question a proper one. I hope you don't dispute it, Sir?"

"I have no wish to dispute with you or any one," said Dempton, "but I have a right to my way," which is to come and go, asking and being asked no questions. It's not your question, Mr. Atkins, but your asking it, that surprises me; and between neighbors who want to live quietly the quicker such a thing is understood the better."

In saying this Dempton's manner was so quietly resolute as to produce the effect which he intended of making every one feel that he took the position of one who had been interfered with. The more trivial the interference, the stronger such a position. Only a weighty reason can justify interference at all, especially in the eyes of a people jealous as they were of personal rights. Atkins felt this instantly, and had sense enough to treat it in the only manly way.

Dropping his tone of self-assertion, he said: "I ask your pardon, Squire, for seeming meddlesome, which I didn't mean to be. If a gentleman speaks civilly when he meets a neighbor, and don't choose to do more, it's nobody's business but his own. But I must say, Squire, for myself and the rest of us here, that all we know of Mr. Elsey was what you told us yourself, and that's the reason, perhaps, why I was readier to ask about him."

Dempton saw that Atkins had drawn back, and was too shrewd not to concede something himself. Neither party could have had more than a general notion what was in the mind of the other. Each was intensely conscious of his own motive that gave importance to an incident in itself utterly trivial.

"That is true, Mr. Atkins," Dempton replied; had I thought of it, your stopping me on my way out might have struck me as it did. I don't like to be stopped; and to show you that I minded that more than your question, I'll give you an answer to it when I have read this letter, which, I think, has something to do with it."

So saying, he walked out to where his horse and wagon stood, while the party in-doors awaited his return in silence. The contrast between what appeared upon the surface and what was underneath imposed restraint upon them all. Dempton presently returned, and holding the open letter in his hand he said, with perfect naturalness of manner—

"Gentlemen, this is very grave business indeed, and, as it turns out, I am not sorry for what has passed between us this morning. This letter informs me that Mr. Elsey has never reached his former home, and that no communication has been received from him. I have been anxious about him for some time. When he left, it was understood between us that if he were detained by the way he would write, but otherwise I should not hear from him until he completed his journey. Not hearing, I thought little of it at first, supposing that when the letter came it would explain the delay. But, growing uneasy, after a while I wrote to the person with whom he left what business he had, and this is my answer. They are as much in the dark as I am; and I must admit that I am seriously troubled."

As he ceased Dempton glanced round, as expecting the remarks that would naturally follow. Looks were exchanged, but no words. The utter silence and grave faces of the group were marked. Dempton's compressed lip and darkening countenance showed how he felt it. He half turned toward the door, when Atkins interrupted him with, "It does look very bad, indeed." Deliberately folding up the letter, and keeping his eyes fixed upon it, Dempton replied:

"It looks very serious, Mr. Atkins, and I should expect my neighbors to show some interest in it. My friend may have fallen ill on his journey; he may even have died suddenly. But——" and as he said this, he looked full at Atkins—"I was not prepared for your feeling it so much."

Here again what he said was so reasonable, his manner so in keeping with his recognized character, as to render it difficult even to hint at the suspicions that were entertained by every one present. Atkins again showed himself the readiest man among them.

"It seems to me, Squire, that if Mr. Elsey had been taken sick among Christian people, or died in a Christian way, word would have been sent to you, or to his other friends. I suppose he had something about him to show who he was?"

"That's plain enough to be thought of," replied Dempton, "and makes it more of a trouble to me. It is possible that Elsey has come to a bad end—if that's what you meant. But I think you meant more; and the rule I have gone by all my life is to hold my tongue altogether, or speak out all my mind. I am no fool, Sir, not to understand when a thing like this happens, and a man's neighbors meet him, as I've been met here to-day, that there's something underneath had better be brought on top. I wish to know what it is, if there's any one here man enough to tell me."

This bold challenge took every one by surprise. Here was the very man himself opening a way to the secret which they had taken for granted would be wrung from him only when he could hold it no longer. He could not have roused them up more thoroughly than by the taunt contained in his last words—yet they rather liked him for it. The stir that showed a half-dozen of them eager to take his words up, referred more to this taunt than to their suspicions. Atkins promptly interposed a milder and more judicious answer than the others would have been likely to give:

"Well Squire, I must say that's frank and fair; and none of us is going to resent a hard word at such a time—not I, for one. You mustn't think hard of me if I answer you just as plainly as you've asked. But you know, Squire, why none of us is very ready to begin talk with you—which, I must say, has gone against you in this matter pretty bad."

And then Atkins went on in his blunt way, but not unkindly, to tell what the suspicions were, and how they had been excited. Nep's adventure and Pender's inspection figured largely, but somewhat to his own surprise, Atkins got to the end of his story sooner than he expected. Those two incidents and the mere fact of Elsey's sudden disappearance, contained the substance of it. He felt unwilling to go back to the circumstances of Mrs. Dempton's death which, in truth, had been the first unnoticed stimulant to suspicion; nor could he very reasonably dwell on the disposition which prevailed to suspect Dempton on account of his manners and mode of life. When he ceased speaking, the cork was drawn but the fluid was flat; the pent-up excitement of the past weeks suffered a collapse. In his simplicity, Atkins felt half ashamed of himself, and provoked at his neighbors as if they had got him into a scrape. He was too sincere and manly, however, not to give Dempton distinctly to understand that there was something to be explained, if it less than fully justified the suspicions that had been entertained.

The singular vigor of Dempton's mind and character now showed itself. Whatever the likelihood beforehand of some such occurrence, its dullest-minded in the group to whom Pender had told his story felt that it was not a subject for tattle. And it must give some elevation of spirit even to the dullest man when he sets a guard upon his thoughts and words about a possible criminal, in respect for their common manhood.

At any rate, the seriousness that pervaded that whole community, from that day onward, had something dignified in it—rudely as it was sometimes indicated.

V.

It was Dempton's habit, as it was that of many others, to come to the store once a week and on the same day, both on the chance of a letter arriving and to make what purchases might be required.

When the time next came round the company was larger than usual, and contained more persons of consideration. As on his asking for letters, one was handed him, it seemed to be a sort of signal to the lookers-on. No sooner was it in his hand than one of the persons present said:

"Squire Dempton"—so he had been called from the first by a tacit recognition of his superiority—"will you allow me to ask if you have lately heard from Mr. Elsey?"

"No, Sir; I have not," was the prompt response, on which Dempton fixed upon the speaker a somewhat surprised look.

The pause that followed indicated the common feeling that some good reason must be forthcoming for asking this question at this time. Yet ordinarily it might have passed for a mere expression of friendly interest.

"Well, Squire," said Atkins, the man who had spoken, "we all heard that Mr. Elsey was coming back; and it has been talked round a good deal that he was going to settle among us, and it seems natural to show an interest in it."

"Did you make his acquaintance, Sir, when he was here?" asked Dempton.

"Not exactly, Squire; I only spoke to him once, and was rather taken by his pleasant voice and looks, and should be glad to learn when he is coming back."

"That is to say, Mr. Atkins, you knew him just as much as you know me. I believe we have been named once to each ether."

This brought Atkins to his feet, with a sense of being called upon to show his ideas of propriety and self-respect.

"Very true, Mr. Dempton, and I think once was enough to make my question a proper one. I hope you don't dispute it, Sir?"

"I have no wish to dispute with you or any one," said Dempton, "but I have a right to my way," which is to come and go, asking and being asked no questions. It's not your question, Mr. Atkins, but your asking it, that surprises me; and between neighbors who want to live quietly the quicker such a thing is understood the better."

In saying this Dempton's manner was so quietly resolute as to produce the effect which he intended of making every one feel that he took the position of one who had been interfered with. The more trivial the interference, the stronger such a position. Only a weighty reason can justify interference at all, especially in the eyes of a people jealous as they were of personal rights. Atkins felt this instantly, and had sense enough to treat it in the only manly way.

Dropping his tone of self-assertion, he said: "I ask your pardon, Squire, for seeming meddlesome, which I didn't mean to be. If a gentleman speaks civilly when he meets a neighbor, and don't choose to do more, it's nobody's business but his own. But I must say, Squire, for myself and the rest of us here, that all we know of Mr. Elsey was what you told us yourself, and that's the reason, perhaps, why I was readier to ask about him."

Dempton saw that Atkins had drawn back, and was too shrewd not to concede something himself. Neither party could have had more than a general notion what was in the mind of the other. Each was intensely conscious of his own motive that gave importance to an incident in itself utterly trivial.

"That is true, Mr. Atkins," Dempton replied; had I thought of it, your stopping me on my way out might have struck me as it did. I don't like to be stopped; and to show you that I minded that more than your question, I'll give you an answer to it when I have read this letter, which, I think, has something to do with it."

So saying, he walked out to where his horse and wagon stood, while the party in-doors awaited his return in silence. The contrast between what appeared upon the surface and what was underneath imposed restraint upon them all. Dempton presently returned, and holding the open letter in his hand he said, with perfect naturalness of manner—

"Gentlemen, this is very grave business indeed, and, as it turns out, I am not sorry for what has passed between us this morning. This letter informs me that Mr. Elsey has never reached his former home, and that no communication has been received from him. I have been anxious about him for some time. When he left, it was understood between us that if he were detained by the way he would write, but otherwise I should not hear from him until he completed his journey. Not hearing, I thought little of it at first, supposing that when the letter came it would explain the delay. But, growing uneasy, after a while I wrote to the person with whom he left what business he had, and this is my answer. They are as much in the dark as I am; and I must admit that I am seriously troubled."

As he ceased Dempton glanced round, as expecting the remarks that would naturally follow. Looks were exchanged, but no words. The utter silence and grave faces of the group were marked. Dempton's compressed lip and darkening countenance showed how he felt it. He half turned toward the door, when Atkins interrupted him with, "It does look very bad, indeed." Deliberately folding up the letter, and keeping his eyes fixed upon it, Dempton replied:

"It looks very serious, Mr. Atkins, and I should expect my neighbors to show some interest in it. My friend may have fallen ill on his journey; he may even have died suddenly. But——" and as he said this, he looked full at Atkins—"I was not prepared for your feeling it so much."

Here again what he said was so reasonable, his manner so in keeping with his recognized character, as to render it difficult even to hint at the suspicions that were entertained by every one present. Atkins again showed himself the readiest man among them.

"It seems to me, Squire, that if Mr. Elsey had been taken sick among Christian people, or died in a Christian way, word would have been sent to you, or to his other friends. I suppose he had something about him to show who he was?"

"That's plain enough to be thought of," replied Dempton, "and makes it more of a trouble to me. It is possible that Elsey has come to a bad end—if that's what you meant. But I think you meant more; and the rule I have gone by all my life is to hold my tongue altogether, or sis, and that he would there communicate its result.

When four weeks went by, quite a lively expectation showed itself that the fifth would bring word from Dempton. At the sixth, the whole neighborhood was confident, and looked blank when the post-bag produced nothing. Here the part Dempton had played so well told powerfully. Caught badly once in yielding over readily to suspicion, their minds were slow to turn that way again. Every squeal of Dempton's pig, and mooing of his cow, was an appeal in his favor. The key of his house would have burned Atkins' fingers had he handled it suspectingly.

Still, it was generosity, not stupidity, that was enlisted on his side. All at once the idea awoke in almost every mind that such a mystery could not be left to sleep out its third month, while they waited for what some of them began to think might never come. Where people act under such circumstances they are apt to make up for lost time by an exaggeration of vigor. Their patience swung over to the opposite extreme. Their quietness became clamor. The stir throughout the community was unparalleled. A demonstration of some kind was inevitable. A spark would have kindled it, and a very live coal was suddenly thrown into the inflammable heap.

The Postmaster had remembered that the letter mentioned already as having been received by Dempton was in answer to one of his own addressed to "Sprage Tompkins, Esq.," in the town to which he told Atkins he was going. To this person Atkins had written, stating the circumstances of Dempton's departure, and inquiring about his movements. The reply disclaimed all knowledge on the subject, and sharply added, that by asloweness which seemed to the writer extraordinary, they had probably given a crafty criminal who counted upon it, ample time to escape. There was a large gathering at the store, in expectation of news, when this letter arrived; and the moment it was read aloud, as it was called for, the whole thing seemed as clear as day. They were made very mad by such a snubbing from a "Yankee lawyer;" but the deeper feeling was of indignation at being the dupes of Dempton. In two or three hours' time, the whole community had risen en masse, and lighted down on Dempton's place—ransacking it to the very inside of an old tin kettle.

The negroes, of course, were there, but trod gingerly, and hunted in groups. Even if it were broad daylight, not a "chile" among them was going to catch, or be caught by, a "spook" unawares. They peered, with Nep, nostrils dilated and specially intent, over the bank beneath which he sniffed the first suspicion of this new excited history. Nep himself, with a companion or two, ventured into the house and up stairs. "What you gwine, Nep?" said one of them as he led the way. "Why you go up dar fur?" But Nep persisted, with a shake of his head, as if he had at last made up his mind; and up they went, relieved to find they were not alone. Spicer, the storekeeper, Atkins, and another respectable planter were in one of the back rooms, engaged in earnest conversation over the affair. "Well, boys!" said one of them, "there's nothing to be seen here; you'd better go down again." "Yes, mas'r," replied Nep, but still protruding his head through the doorway, and staring round with a peculiar expression that struck the three observers. "Why, you fool," said Spicer, "the walls aren't going to jump at you; what are you looking for?" Nep fairly caught his breath as he anwered: "I—I—I don't see it, mas'r." "See what? what did you expect to see?" "Only a door, mas'r; I tought there was a door by'ar."

"Nep," said Atkins, quietly, "come in here." Nep obeyed, his skin getting a grayish tinge, and his eyes glancing round rapidly. A tremendous scuttling on the stairway told what had become of his companions.

"Now, Nep," said Atkins, "you've got something to tell, and don't be scared about it. Were you ever in here before?" "Nebber, mas'r, so help me"——"There," interrupted Atkins, "you needn't take your oath just yet. Only tell us the truth, and all you know about it. If you were never here before, what made you think there was a door here?"

I could not do justice to Nep's reply without so large an infusion of that irresistibly comic element which marks the unsophisticated negro in his most serious moments—and the more so on account of his seriousness—as would hardly agree with the tragic interest of the facts involved.

Nep's part therein was, in itself, very trifling—but on what trifles do the gravest events sometimes depend!

He told a straightforward story, helped occasionally by Atkins' considerate questions, to this effect:

Some months before, about the time of Elsey's disappearance, Nep had been caught at nightfall on the opposite side of the river. He had crossed in his skiff, and remembered it as the first time he had been able successfully to stem the current after the unusual floods which had prevailed. Having to go some distance back into the country, he was belated on his return, and struck the river a good way above the spot where he had fastened his skiff. To reach it he had to follow the curve of the shore opposite the point on which was Dempton's house. He admitted that he did not like being there in the dark; and, according to his own account, must have been stumbling along at a great rate among the roots and bushes on the bank, when, all at once, he could not help crying out, "O, Lord! what's dat! for sure's you lib, I see'd a light 'cross de ribber, right 'bove de place whar Miss Dempton must a come down de night she got drowned." He was afraid to move at first, and started at the light, expecting—he did not know what. There was no stir, however, and he soon saw that it was higher up and further back than the top of the bank, and came from the house itself. His childish alarm changed to a child's curiosity, and he stood for some minutes watching the shadow of the person who was holding the candle. At last it seemed to be set down on the floor, and the person who had it—apparently Dempton himself—crossed the window, and opened what Nep was certain was a door, for he saw its dark substance come before the light, and noticed also the edge of its shadow drawn up and down the window. Dempton presently came back, closing the door behind him, and bringing his own shadow full against the window as he stooped to take the candle up. All this must have been noted by Nep with a simple pleasure at the idea of seeing so much of what Dempton was doing when he thought himself unobserved. "I see to myself—guess Mas'r Dempton would a blowed out light out if he tought I see 'um." Nep then thought no more about it, but made his way to the skiff, and crossed the stream.

"Did you never speak of it?" asked Atkins.

"Oh yes, mas'r—told de old woman when I got home, and some ob de boys de nex' day; but dar wasn't nuffin in it and I soon forgot all about it, till I came by'ar dis mornin'."

"Well, what scared you so to-day when you came in here?" It was not strange, for such obtuseness occasionally happens to us at critical moments. But not one of his hearers seemed to catch as yet the point of his story, of which the negro himself had only a dim idea.

"Dunno, mas'r; made me feel mighty queer to come by'ar whar I seed Mas'r Dempton all by hisself. It kind a cum back to me, and I 'membered de candle on the floor, and de shadow of de door; and when I didn't see no door 'tall, seemed as if de debbil must 'a been at work."

"I don't see that this nig's story goes for much," said Spicer; there's a closet in the next room with a door to it—I suppose it's there Dempton was."

"So there is," replied Atkins; "I noticed it when Dempton showed his wife's clothes hanging there. Now I think of it," continued Atkins, half to himself, as if studying out the point, "I noticed, too, in what a clumsy way the door was hung, so that it opened right back against the window, and shut it up. Spicer! that door would have shut in all the light of the candle, and not let Nep see half of it."

The three men stared at each other for a moment in silence.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the planter, who had hitherto said nothing; "so you suppose he could have hid the body THERE," pointing to where the door, by the negro's account, should have been, "and then walled it up?"

Spicer was leaning with his hands behind him against the very spot, and shot from it with a convulsive spring. Atkins raised his hands and eyes to heaven. Conviction came like a flash with the words just spoken. Nep disappeared, with how much or little of noise no one of them noticed till a loud cry rose out of doors, and, as those who saw him said, the negro went tearing down the path like a crazy creature, crying, "Dey's foun' de body! dey's foun' de body!" and then suddenly the poor fellow fell down in a fit.

The excitement created was fearful. Women screamed. Shouts of men were presently mingled with deep oaths. A rush from all sides was made for the house. The three men in the fatal room above had scarce time to recover from their first shock, when their silence was broken by the tramping and struggling of the excited throng. So unseemly a thing could not have happened but for the fact that the nervous tension to which they had all been subjected had become nearly unbearable, and nature itself demanded some physical outlet. Atkins now gave proof of that sturdiness of spirit of which indications have already appeared. He met the first who reached the upper floor, looking almost like madmen, with an uplifted hand, and a manner so collected and solemn that its calming effect was instantly felt.

"For God's sake," he cried, in a strong, earnest tone, "keep cool! Don't act in this wild way. It's all too soon. Nothing's found out yet. Let us behave like men who have a most solemn duty to perform."

They were crowding him more and more into the doorway from the larger into the smaller room, those behind still pressing up in the fierce excitement of the moment. He raised his voice to its full pitch, with the authority such exigence gives.

"Friends! neighbors! listen to me. Some of you back there, stop that rush and help me to keep order. What are you after? There's nothing here that we've seen yet but an empty room. If there's anything to be found, we've got to find it. Let's go about it as orderly men should. Keep quiet, and I'll tell you all that has happened."

Such words, so spoken, had full effect. Indeed their passion had spent itself in its own outburst. Order was soon obtained, and then in a few clear words Atkins explained what the clue was which the negro had so unexpectedly put into their hands. By this time the front room, which was equal in size to the two smaller ones at the back that opened into it, was literally packed full—an idea of something proving powerful enough to keep them from passing through the door at which Atkins stood, except a little way under the great pressure from behind. No one stepped in of his own accord. To their credit it must be said, that as soon as the necessity for greater freedom to move about appeared, most of their number voluntarily descended and awaited the result below.

Of the three rooms, one, as already stated, ran across the front of the house. The two at the back opened from it, and were made of unequal size by a rough stairway up into the loft, under the peak of the roof, constructed against the partition that divided the rooms. The space underneath this was fashioned into the closet which Atkins had observed. All three rooms had been roughly plastered by Dempton himself at the time when he had professed to be preparing for Elsey's return.

The first step taken was to examine the closet. With their attention thus directed to it, its depth, which should have been equal to the width of the stairway into the loft, seemed considerably less: on measurement, it proved to be so. They listened at the inner partition of the closet while a strong rapping was made upon the wall of the next room. It was evident that there was a space between that deadened the sound. Thus the presumption of a secret there to be disclosed increased. Why need they approach it so gradually when a few blows of the axe would penetrate the concealed space—it it were there? Men naturally shrink from breaking violently in upon the dark silence of such a spot. They move about it till grown somewhat familiar with it. But at last there was nothing else to be done. Dempton's own store of tools supplied what was wanted. All the rest stood back while one vigorous arm knocked away the plaster and lath till there was made—a ghastly hole indeed! Who wanted to look at it? The recoil was general; and the expectant throng below, so eagerly awaiting the issue of the sounds they heard above, felt as if the horror were descending to them when they saw one strong man after another come almost tottering down the stairway, white as a sheet, and without uttering a word.

This was the first effect. At the immediate spot measures were soon taken to bring the whole secret to light. And a marvel of contrivance it was for such a purpose. A space some eighteen inches wide was carefully and closely plastered all round, except a concealed passage to the outer air at the upper part. A layer of stones, also thickly plastered, composed its floor. On this bed—a bed of death, truly—were stretched the remains of a human form—rightly so termed, for the means taken to consume them had left but little. There was nothing to tell whose form it was, but of that there could be no doubt.

To the few who had gone through that house before, and to whom that iron-nerved man had offered to take down the sister's clothing from the very partition that concealed the brother's fearful tomb, how strange it seemed that they could have been so blind, when now the story of his proceedings could be so plainly read in almost every step.

Dempton's first care, having slain Elsey, was to conceal his body; how he did it is sufficiently indicated above without entering into detail. The closet under the stairway to the loft was an afterthought. The rooms had originally communicated though the door which the negro had so strangely seen; and when he had completed his plan, Dempton had taken the door down and carried the side-wall of the room smoothly over.

But what a head and heart, and what nerves, that could plan and execute all this, and, when done, endure to be with it day and night for months! There were some tokens, indeed, that Dempton had spent a portion of his time in and around the small barn; but they were so slight as not to carry conviction. One would like to believe it. Not that the actual difference between being under the same roof and only a little way off was so great; but it would indicate that the man had not stifled all his humanity.

It was afterward ascertained that Elsey had taken with him to Carolina a large sum of money—the proceeds of his whole property. It was for this that Dempton had planned craftily, sinned ruthlessly, and succeeded. For he was heard of no more. There was no one to press inquiry and pursuit. He had gained a start, at any rate, that probably would have rendered pursuit useless. It was a half century ago, when telegraphs were unknown, railways scarce beginning, and the policeman not yet evolved out of the constable. Dempton was content to renounce utterly what little property he left behind for what he carried with him.

He succeeded—that is, he was not pursued, brought back, and hung; without which palpable demonstration that justice overtakes the criminal, it seems to some minds as if the moral government of the world were not vindicated.

Nor am I able to tell that the money that was so ill-got brought a curse with it in the shape of vicious indulgence, and entanglement in other snares of sin, from the immediate consequences of which there was no second escape.

But I have failed in giving an idea of this man, if they who have followed this history must have ocular proof of his punishment. It was no shallow nature that had so yielded to the tempter—no nature to be enervated by bad success. Money could purchase no sensual indulgence that he would care for, to stupefy that vigorous mind. But strong natures, vigorous minds, and purposes that are not only bad, but base, often go together in this world. For years he had trained himself to think and act for such a purpose. That training invigorated him, not only to attain his end, but what he did not think of, to be punished afterward. Neither in meditating nor in consummating that crime had he joined himself to the criminal class, to live their life henceforth. Their excitements and pleasures were not for him. Let him go where he might, and apply himself to any occupation that suited a spirit like his, the characteristic qualities he could bring to it were stamped with the mark of those years of dreadful training. He could but coin fresh tokens of the past in every act and hour of his future course, which—shall we call it successful, because it did not end on the gallows? Though no record of him remains, one saddens at the idea of the gloom in which such a life must have been passed, and ended.
—Blackwood's Magazine.

ST. ISAAC'S CHURCH, ST. PETERSBURG.—By all means mount St. Isaac's, even if you have to stay in all day afterward, for in no other way can you form an adequate notion either of the prodigious audacity which planned a vast city on a wet bog, and at the mercy both of river and sea, or the extent, and symmetry, and picturesqueness of a city which the Moscow people, sneer at it as they may, find only too successful a rival as the residence of the Court and the seat of Government. This St. Isaac's Church, built on piles forced deep down into a yielding morass, and continually requiring repairs, from an awkward habit of slipping, has already cost three millions sterling, and to an impartial mind is hardly worth the money. It is a four-square building, approached on each side by a grand flight of steps, and supported by a magnificent peristyle of columns sixty feet high, granite monoliths from Finland. There is a central cupola, richly gilt and supported by 30 granite pillars, the whole surmounted by a golden cross 360 feet from the ground. The capitals of the columns are in bronze, and there is much metal ornamentation on the exterior in the shape of bas-reliefs, statues, and busts, a mingling of materials which, to me, seemed infelicitous. Imposing, however, as the exterior undoubtedly is, the interior is yet more striking to an eye accustomed to the austere simplicity of Protestant churches. The walls are of polished marble covered with pictures, many of which are in exquisite mosaic. The roof is painted in fresco. The iconostas, or screen, which in Greek churches separates the body of the church from the sanctuary, is adorned with columns of malachite and lapis lazuli, and gilding everywhere gives a rich and splendid effect. Roughly described, St. Isaac's is a sort of dwarfed St. Paul's without nave or choir, and the decoration Committee might do worse than study the decoration of St. Isaac's as a possible model for their own cathedral.—Good Words.

UNDER THE STARS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN."

O youth, rose-crowned, yet full of strife,
Craving uncomprehended joys,
Hearing the desperate fight of life
But as a far-off pleasant noise,
Come, ere on thy bold way thou start,
While not a cloud thy future mars,
And still that wildly-beating heart
Under the stars.

O heavy time of brows discrowned,
And hanging hands, and feeble knees,
With piteous pale ghosts haunted round,
And longings for impossible ease;
Nay, beat no more, like wounded bird
Against fate's iron prison bars;
When all sounds cease, God's voice is heard
Under the stars.

O stormy prime, so beautiful
With fierce delight, ecstatic pain;
Spending and being spent; no lull;
No rest; no count of loss or gain;
Ere with tired feet thou come to thread
The bloodstained field of ended wars;
Pause—bow the glories of thy head
Under the stars.

Soon, soon will come the supreme hour
When like a painted show life seems,
Or perfume of remembered flower,
Or dear dead faces seen in dreams.
Clasp hands beneath the silent night
That hushes all these mortal jars;
God, thou alone art Love—and Light—
Beyond the stars!
—Good Words.

GERMAN UNIVERSITIES.—Contrast with these limited views of University life the larger conceptions of German universities. In Germany the bureaucracy, as well as all the professions, must pass through a course of university training. Even Roman Catholic priests must take their general education within a university. The essential idea of German universities is that they are not only teaching institutions, but also repositories of human knowledge, from which the life of the nation should be fed and sustained. The German universities always aim at the fulfillment of three conditions of existence. They contend that a university should give the fullest representation of existing learning in its academic staff; that it should widely diffuse that learning through its teachers; and that it should widen the boundaries of learning by the researches of its professors, fellows, and graduates. This high and full conception of university life is not much more than half a century old in Germany, but it has already produced a marvelous development of culture among the people. Though no German university would be considered complete unless its professional faculties were in as full activity as its philosophical faculties, still the separation of university education from the State license to practice diminishes the tendency to Brodstudien, and induces students to master the sciences as thoroughly as the technics of their professions. Study for knowledge and not for examination distinguishes the German from the English universities. The highest culture which the nation possesses is given through university training, but the culture is a true one, for it is not merely disciplinary, but is a preparation of the mind for an intelligent and scientific pursuit of a life's occupation. The German university degrees are altogether subordinate to the system of education, and often are not taken at all. The degree which corresponds to our B. A. is passed on leaving the school, and is a simple Maturitätszeugniss, while the doctorate in philosophy of the university corresponds to our honors, and is essentially special in character. It resembles the restricted selection of our modern schools and triposes. A German university degree, therefore, represents a profound knowledge of one or two subjects. This leads to a specialty in the subject of professional professions, and has laid the foundation for that amazing advance in literature and science which the Germans have made in the last half-century. Under this system of fitting the study to the future work of the student, young men go through their academic courses without gold being strewed on every path of entrance and exit, as it is by the scholarships and fellowships of Oxford and Cambridge.—Macmillan's Magazine.

WILLIAM BLAKE.—It is to be observed in the first place that he was by profession neither designer, painter, nor poet, but an engraver; and that, by the admission of his warmest admirers, his skill in this capacity was inferior to that of the Schiavonettis and others, whose style, as less stiff and "old-fashioned," was better suited to the public taste. Though his professional emoluments were consequently small, he was never without employment, and might have readily increased this scarce means of subsistence had he not voluntarily laid it aside for prophetic tasks which he knew to be unremunerative, but which his belief in his mission impelled him to fulfill. That in his moments of cool sense he blamed himself for yielding to a "want of steady perseverance" and an "abstract folly" which often brought him and his wife to the verge of starvation, appears from one of his letters. Mrs. Blake's tactics, after the manner of a moss-trooper's wife, to induce him to work at his legitimate calling, are amusingly described by Mr. Gilchrist. Such works as he chose to send to the Academy exhibitions appear to have been always accepted, but he only exhibited on five occasions. For the most part, his works, whether of design or color, poetry or prophecy, were unpublished and unannounced, printed and colored by the hands of himself or his wife, and circulated among his professional and private acquaintances. In the few instances in which his designs were duly published and advertised they obtained the suffrages of distinguished artists, and as much public approbation as the standard of artistic culture then reached in this country entitled him to expect. For his water-color and tempera pictures he had two or three steady patrons at successive stages of his career—Butts, Hayley, Aders, and Mr. Linnell—who purchased them at the prices which he himself fixed. Besides patrons, he had a few devoted friends, especially Flaxman, Fuseli, and Varley, who heartily appreciated his power, and did their best to make it known to the world. That he did not retain the patronage and friendship of some members even of this small circle was owing, so far as we can judge, to no fault of theirs, but to certain mental flaws and moral failings of his own, for which his advocates have made most inadequate allowance. Into the vexed question of his insanity we need not enter, but that he was eccentric to a degree which induced a belief in it among men such as Flaxman, who knew him intimately, and still more among those who knew him only by his writings or general report, cannot be denied; and the fact would of itself account for the limited success which attended the efforts or his friends to enlarge his list of patrons. It may be admitted without reserve that his artistic aims were high and his advocacy of them earnest; that though poor, he was honorable and unworldly, just and generous. But it is equally incontestable that he was excessively suspicious and irritable in temper, inordinately vain, and intolerably opinionated; jealous, if not envious, of the estimation in which the public held those either among his predecessors or contemporaries whose ability he deemed interior or whose theories of art were opposed to his own; and intemperate, to the point of being virulently abusive, in the expression of either artistic or personal antipathies. Almost every friend or patron with whom he came in close contact for a sufficient length of time had to suffer in turn from his bitter reproaches of injustice or ungenerosity. Flaxman, who proved himself for years his warm ally and admirer, and for whom no language of praise and affection was too strong while their friendship lasted, he subsequently denounced as "a blockhead" and an "ass," and accused of having "blasted" his artistic character at the very time that he was gratuitously designing one of the first monuments by which the sculptor came into notice. Fuseli, whose friendship had been scarcely less devoted, was eventually held up to odium as having given him "a dark, black rock and a gloomy grave;" a vague charge, which resolved itself into that of having conspired with the publisher Johnson to drive him from London by a threat that if he did not confine himself to drudgery "he should not live." Hayley, whose lusty dilettantism and kindly disposition were of the utmost service to Blake at a critical stage, and who, after a coolness had grown between them, came forward at much personal sacrifice to exonerate him from the charge of sedition preferred by the soldier Schofield was rewarded by a shower of scurrilous epigrams, one of which imputed that he had "lured" the accuser. Stothard, a friend of many years' standing, Blake suddenly charged, on grounds which Mr. Gilchrist admits to have been imaginary, with having stolen his design for the "Canterbury Pilgrimage," and proceeded to vilify as an ignorant blunderer who owed everything to him except a "heart of iron," a "head of wood," and a "face of brass." This coarse abuse of his friends might be excused as the language of passion, but in the invective which he employed against his compeers and antagonists it is difficult to avoid seeing a deliberate animus. Sir Joshua Reynolds and Gainsborough were stigmatized as rival blotters and blurrers, whose popularity was a national disgrace. Of the former, especially, Blake entertained a fanatical hatred, alike as artist, critic, and man. His copy of the "Discourses on Art" is annotated with such comments as these upon the opinions with which he disagreed—"villainy;" "a lie;" "damned fool;" "a liar, he never was abashed in his life and never felt his ignorance;" "a pitiful and pitiable imbecility;" "the simulation of the hypocrite who smiles particularly when he means to betray;" "such artists as Reynolds are at all times hired by the Satans for the depression of art; a pretence of art, to destroy art." Elsewhere he accuses his successful contemporary of having hired "a gang of cunning ruffians" to oppress his genius and prevent it from obtaining recognition.—Contemporary Review.

THE SOUTH POLE.—The greatest point of difference between the Arctic and Antarctic regions lies in the fact that the former is dotted over with numerous islands, peninsulas, and isthmuses; whereas the latter is exposed to the dash of a vast and deep ocean. Ross experienced, from sweeping currents and winds, more than ever has to be borne by northern explorers. On one occasion, when he was becalmed for a few hours, the dead set of the ocean waves drifted the ships toward a range of huge icebergs, against which the sea broke with appalling violence. "Every eye was transfixed with the tremendous spectacle, and destruction appeared inevitable." The ships were thus driven on for eight hours, until within half a mile of the gigantic icebergs, when a gentle air began to stir; the ships yielded to the influence or the puff of wind, which gradually freshened into a gale; and before dark, to the heartfelt satisfaction of all on board, the ships emerged from their peril, and got out into the wide ocean. Ross had good means of knowing how thoroughly Wilkes had been deceived concerning the appearance of land at a particular spot, for he spent three days in searching for land which Wilkes had laid down on a chart; but six hundred fathoms' depth of water was found, in the very centre of the position assigned to the land on the chart. Ross arrived at an opinion that the American commander had been deceived either by ice islands or fog banks. We need not go into much further detail concerning this expedition; but a few words may be quoted to show what kind of weather had to be borne in the very middle of the Antarctic Summer, and in no higher latitude than sixty-six degrees. For nine days the crews were alternately drifting, hauling, making fast, mending snapped hawsers, and making efforts to stem opposing currents. On the tenth day, during a thick fog, a gale came on from the north. "The sea quickly rose to a fearful height, breaking over the loftiest icebergs; we were unable any longer to hold our ground, but were driven into the heavy pack under our lee. Soon after midnight our ships were involved in an ocean of floating fragments of ice, hard as floating blocks of granite, which were dashed against them by the waves with so much violence, that their masts quivered as if they would fall at every successive blow and the destruction of the ships seemed inevitable from the tremendous shocks they received. By backing and filling the sails, we endeavored to avoid collision with the larger masses; but this was not always possible. In the early part of the storm the rudder of the Erebus was so much damaged as to be no longer of any use; and about the same time I was informed by signal that the ferror's was completely destroyed, and nearly torn away from the stern-post. Hour passed away after hour without the least mitigation of these awful circumstances in which we were placed. Indeed, there seemed to be but little probability of our ships holding together much longer, so frequent and violent were the shocks they sustained. The loud, crashing noise of the straining and working of the timbers and decks, as she was driven against some of the heavier pieces, which all the activity and exertions of our people could not prevent, was sufficient to fill the stoutest heart—that was not supported by trust in Him who controls all events—with dismay." Whenever the gallant commander got south of sixty degrees or so, then the battling with ice began again and again. He once touched, as we have said, the seventy-eighth parallel of latitude, and in all probability no human being has ever made a nearer approach to the South Pole—less by three or four hundred miles than the approach which has been recently made to the North Pole. What we know of the South Pole, then, is simply this—that nobody has got within seven or eight hundred miles of it; that icy barriers are met with quite eclipsing anything known in the North Frigid Zone; that mountains have been seen (one shooting forth volcanic flames) loftier than any discovered by our northern explorers; that all the land is covered with snow at all seasons; that no human being has been met with beyond fifty-six degrees of latitude; that no vegetable growth, except lichens, has been seen beyond fifty-eight degrees of latitude; and that no land quadruped is known to exist beyond sixty-six degrees of latitude.—All The Year Round.

DR. RICHARDSON'S CITY OF HEALTH.—Here is how Dr. Richardson would build his houses for the future, so that we might be healthy, wealthy, and wise: He would build a house on a basement of three arches, which should be thoroughly ventilated and applied to various purposes, but which should have no direct communication with the house. His staircase he would have in a separate shaft at the back, each floor communicating with it by a door, so that the floors would be what might be called flats, and each of them could be ventilated independently. On the third floor he would place the kitchen at the front, and the servants' dormitories at the back; and from a pipe in the kitchen hot water could be conveyed to every floor, which would have its separate sink and dust shaft, so that there would be no going up and down stairs with pails and dust boxes. At the top of the house he would have, on a firm, almost level, asphalted roof, a brick and glass-covered garden, equal in extent to the area of the house. Into this the stair-shaft would finally enter, and any emanations from the lower part of the house would be eaten up wholesomely by the living vegetation. Heated readily from the kitchen, the garden might have at all times a Summer temperature; the children could engage in luxurious and healthful play; the ladies would find occupation in the cultivation of flowers and evergreens, and in it the sterner sex might spend those hours which are now found so unspeakably dull owing to the monotony of one or two rooms. Capital; just the sort of house one would like to live in; but how about the rent?—Once a Week.

THE TURKOMANS.—The Turkomans are by profession thieves and slave-dealers. To steal and sell human beings is, they say, justifiable not only by immemorial custom, but sanctioned by the laws of God. A Turkoman, devout in his way, having been asked how he could reconcile it to his faith to sell his fellow-believer into slavery, replied, "The Koran is a divine book, yet it may be bought for a few crowns; and Joseph, the son of Jacob, was a prophet, yet he was sold; but was he in any way the worse off for that?" These are the men of whom it has been said that they would sell their own prophet if he were to reappear in the flesh and visit them. As horsemen, they are unequaled in Asia, and they are the lineal descendants of those tribes which, subjected to an iron discipline, and inspired by enthusiastic devotion to their great leaders, constituted that "whirlwind of cavalry" which once swept over a prostrate world. They are the only people from which the Russian troops, in their progress to Khiva, encountered even a temporary check, for in a well-planned night attack they nearly succeeded in inflicting upon Gen. Golovatchoff a very serious defeat. It was only by the steadiness of the infantry, hurriedly formed and deployed, the rolling fire of the breechloaders, and repeated rounds of grape from the Russian guns, that the Turkomans, who at one time had completely surrounded the camp, were beaten back and discomfited. The Turkomans are a community—or rather an aggregation of communities—numbering 450,000 men capable of bearing arms, and are scattered over nearly the whole country between the Oxus and the Caspian, as far east as the frontier of Afghanistan, and as far south as the frontier of Persia. The Turkomans themselves use no slaves, and they have hitherto carried on their infamous traffic for the supply of their more civilized neighbors of Khiva, Bokhara, Khokan, and Samarcand. These markets being now closed, these people will have to turn their hands to some more reputable employment. With steam discipline and modern training they might be converted into as efficient a body of light cavalry as any General could desire.—New Quarterly Magazine.

FOUR DAYS.

I.

Now are the moments brief and rare,
When nature warms with subtle bliss,
Like some chaste maiden, shy of air,
Who gives her lover the first kiss!

The willows o'er the flashing brook
Bow lissom, with fresh-mantled stem,
Like graceful ladies when they look
To find their mirrors praising them.

The orchard-aisles, that blooms array
In odorous mimicry of snow,
Are thrilled through every happy spray
With song's mellifluous overflow!

And all the world, with greens that shine,
With breaking buds and wings that flit,
Seems one expectancy divine
Of something God has promised it!

II.

White fleeces load the deep-blue day;
Long fitful breezes haunt its calm,
Like sweet thieves flying in dismay
From far Hesperides of balm!

The giddy bee, with murmur keen,
Reels o'er the garden's brightest reach;
The sly wasp hovers, black and lean,
Above the pink luxurious peach!

No gaudy currants drape their bough,
Erewhile with luscious crimson twined,
But here large velvet leaves o'erbrow
The yellowing melon's figured rind.

And here a pumpkin's lazy gold
Has slowly greatened more and more,
Till now its heart might almost hold
Cinderella's fairy coach-and-four!

III.

This ample wood, in whose brown ways,
Damp with late frost, I stroll and muse,
To winds of rapid vigor sways,
One halcyon tanglement of hues!

Yet I can never walk an hour
Where all these hollow grandeurs gleam,
And watch the land's great passion-flower
Of beauteous anguish, but I dream

How lofty lives have played their parts,
Feigning in splendor false content;
How gorgeous robes o'er broken hearts
Have made despair magnificent!

Or how, at Borgia's feast long since,
Where lavish pomp spread costly signs,
Death, the dark slave of priest and prince,
Waited in those voluptuous wines!

IV.

Last night the air was dense for sleet,
And now I watch, with smothered sigh,
The pale blank meadows lapse to meet
A leaden monotone of sky.

Oh, colorless and glacial gloom!
Oh, earthly torpor, bleak and stern!
Have the blithe charms of bird or bloom
Gone forth to nevermore return?

What dreary mood has fancy found?
Heal up, dear love, and break the spell!—
Her lightsome footsteps faintly sound—
You come, dear love, and all is well!

For now your blushes look to me
Like June's first roses, freshly gay,
And in your deep eyes one can see
The violets tarrying till May!

EDGAR FAWCETT.

SOME UNCOMMON PETS.—Proud Wolsey, it will be recollected, was on familiar terms with a venerable carp; Cowper doffed his melancholy to play with his hares, and Clive owned a pet tortoise. Less noted folk have taken kindly to snakes, frogs, lizards, hedgehogs, and other animals, not usually included in the category of domestic pets. The driver of a London hansom was wont to carry a little cub fox on the top of his cab, to their mutual enjoyment, until, returning from the Downs one Derby-day, the cab overset, and the cabman and his odd companion were both killed. Mr. G. F. Berkeley made a household pet of a young stoat, rendered motherless by his gun. Totie soon accommodated himself to circumstances, and would leave his cage to wash himself in a finger-glass on the dinner-table, trotting back again as soon as his ablutions were performed, taking a piece of sponge-cake with him. Sir John Lubbock contrived to win the affection of a Syrian wasp; but the game was hardly worth the candle, or sufficiently entertaining to encourage others to follow suit; although it is said that, strong in the new feminine faith that what man does woman can do, three maiden sisters sought to relieve the tedium of single-blessedness by devoting their leisure to the domestication of English-born wasps. Before a week was out, one fair experimentalist wore a large blue patch over her left eye, another carried her right arm in a sling, the third was altogether lost to the sight of anxious friends, and all had come to the conclusion that wasp-taming was not their forte. Better taste and greater discretion were shown by the lady, who, becoming possessed of two butterflies of different species in a chrysalis state, resolved to try how far they would be amenable to kindness, and placed them for security in a glazed cabinet in her well-warmed bedroom. A few days before Christmas she was delighted by the appearance of a little yellow butterfly, but was puzzled how to cater for the delicate little creature. Taking a fairy-rose then in bloom, she dropped a little honey and rose-water in a blossom, and put the plant in the cabinet, and soon had the satisfaction of seeing the butterfly take its first meal. In a fortnight it would leave the rose to settle on her hand when she called it by its name Psyche. By and by a peacock butterfly emerged into active life from the other chrysalis. The newcomer accepted the sensation of active life at once, and like its companion, delighted in being talked and sung to, both especially enjoying being waved in the air and danced up and down while quietly resting upon the hand of their mistress. Upon the coming of Summer the cabinet was moved close to the window, and its doors thrown open. For some days neither of its tenants cared to venture beyond the window-sill, but one bright afternoon their protectress, "with many bitter tears," beheld them take wing and join some wild companions in the garden; at night, however, they returned to their lodgings. Next day they took the air again and were not seen until September. One afternoon there came a heavy thunderstorm, and when it was over, a yellow butterfly was found dead on the window-sill—which the lady, with some warrant, lamented over as her own particular one; the "peacock," too, would seem to have met a like fate, for it was never seen again. The butterfly tamer had an eye for beauty, but ugliness is no bar to a lady's favor, so far as animal pets are concerned. It would be hard to find a more repulsive-looking reptile than the iguana, nevertheless the society of one afforded much pleasure to an American lady residing in Brazil. Pedro, as he was called, was well provided with raw meat, bananas, and milk; allowed to bask in his mistress' room in the day time, and to make himself cosy between the mattresses of her bed when the sun went down, he cheerfully accepted the novel situation, like a wise iguana. His loving lady was wont to carry him abroad in her arms—a practice that kept acquaintances at a respectful distance—for, however they might pretend to admire Pedro's bead-like spots of black and white, his bright jeweled eyes, and elegant claws, they were careful not to make any near approaches. Nothing pleased Madame so much as to drop her pet without warning at the feet of unsuspecting gentlemen, and elicit from naval officers symptoms of terror such as would not have been drawn forth by an enemy's broadside or a lee-shore. Of course Pedro came to grief. Rambling one day unattended, he came across "a marauding Frenchman," his owner's maid arriving only in time to rescue his lifeless body. It was sent, wrapped in black crape, to a neighbor with a weakness for imported lizard: but having seen this special one fondled and caressed, he could not find the appetite to eat it; and so Pedro was consigned to the earth instead of the pot. De Candolle tells of a fair Switzer who, unmindful of Red Riding Hood's sad fate, made a companion of a young wolf, and had the melancholy satisfaction of seeing the fond beast fall dead at her feet in a paroxysm of joy at her return home after a long absence. But although one wolf was faithful found, it does not follow that the fair sex are justified in going to the forest or jungle for pets. The proprietress of a loving leopard that came regularly to her chamber door in the dead of the night, and howled loudly enough to wake the Seven Sleepers, until its mistress turned out of bed and quieted her disturber with an offering of warm milk, might well doubt if she had bestowed her affection wisely. Such favorites, however kindly they take to domestication, are very undesirable additions to an orderly establishment. When Capt. Burton was domiciled in Syria, the famous traveler left the management of of his live stock to his wife, and under her fostering care that department assumed formidable proportions. Not content with horses and goats, a camel, turkeys, geese, ducks, fowls, and pigeons, Mrs. Burton must have her own especial pets—a white donkey, a young St. Bernard dog, four English terriers, a Kurdish puppy, a snow-white Persian cat, a lamb, and a leopard. The last-named, according to the lady's account, became the pet of the household; which it deserved to be, if the household abhorred a quiet life, for the leopard behaved much after the manner of the gazelle whose owner sang:

He riled the dog, annoyed the cat,
And scared the goldfinch into fits;
He butted through my newest hat,
And tore my manuscript to bits!

Mrs. Burton, with pretty good grace, confesses her husband had fair cause for saying his happy family reminded him of the house that Jack built; for the fowls and pigeons ate the seeds and destroyed the flowers; the cat fed upon the pigeons, the dog worried the cat; while the idol of the household harried the goats until one of them drowned itself in sheer disgust, and frightened the donkey and camel by jumping upon their backs, and indulging in a shrieking solo, horrible enough to scare any animal of a well-regulated mind into madness.
—Chambers's Journal.

THE RUSSIANS IN CENTRAL ASIA.—The territory now possessed by the Russians in Central Asia amounts to 400,000 square miles, an area as large as Germany, the Austrian Empire, and Belgium together. But the population of this vast territory does not exceed 2,500,000, or less than that of Switzerland. The whole amount of exports and imports amounts barely to three million and a half sterling a year. Such a country can never repay Russia what its acquisition has already cost, still less for the rapidly increasing cost of its administration. Had Russia known, fifteen years ago, as much about the countries of Central Asia as she now does, Mr. Schuyler says there can hardly be a doubt that she would have made no movement in that direction, but it seems now to be her inevitable destiny to advance until Kashgar, Bokhara, and the Turkoman country are either annexed or reduced to a condition of real and not merely nominal vassalage. Tashkend, the Russian seat of Government, is the centre from which will probably radiate the future civilization of Central Asia. This city, with its 140,000 inhabitants, including the Russian garrison and civilians, is situated on the upper Jaxartes, and was taken in 1865, after a very obstinate resistance. It is placed in the hands of Russia the most important lines of communication, as well as the whole commerce of Khiva and Bokhara, and it will probably ultimately become the emporium of Central Asia. There are already congregated many merchants and commercial agents from Europe and India. The width of the streets, the boulevards with their avenues, the white houses, many of hewn stone, give to the Russian quarter quite a European aspect. The oasis, in the midst of which the city has been built, is a forest of fruit trees, intersected with numerous streams, which supply the city with an abundance of good water. Its general appearance is described as resembling an immense tea-garden, and as houses in Summer are only required to sleep in, the people at that season lead an open-air life, and dreamily smoke their long narguilehs and sip their sherbet soothed by the sound of rippling waters and the gentle rustling of leaves. Gardens spring up with magical r

TALES OF MY GRANDFATHER

VANDERBILT FIFTY YEARS AGO.

THE COMMODORE AT THE HELM—THE COLLISION—THE HOTEL AT BRUNSWICK—A SETTLEMENT WITH THE COMMODORE—WHIST AT SARATOGA—THE KIND OF GAME HE PLAYED—REMINISCENCES OF FORMER TIMES.

"My first acquaintance with Vanderbilt dated from about 1826. Steam-boating never was in my line, though I had no objection to taking a venture in a sailing craft. It might have been in 1825 that Stephen Girard, of Philadelphia, had an old brig for sale, which some four or five of us bought. She was of teak, and might have been fifty years old when we purchased her. We owned her for 29 years, then sold her for more than we paid for her, and I remember to have followed her up in the papers with a certain amount of interest, and if my memory serves me rightly, I think I read she came to grief some time in 1856, in the China seas. We were in the habit of sending the old brig to Madeira, and she brought back wine on ship's account, and did quite well. She was so slow that the wine acquired, generally, age on the voyage. Some of you may remember a particular pale Madeira. No you don't? Dear me! I am forgetting myself. If you boys never had a chance at it, very certainly your fathers punished it severely. It was a remarkably sound wine, and such as you can't buy to-day. About from $1 50 to $2 a gallon would buy the choicest Madeira in those times. Our best market was in Charleston and Savannah, and the consumption was so large that we would occasionally send a part of a cargo there direct, and bring back rice. Southern planters in those days must have bathed in Madeira."

"But, grandfather, what about Commodore Vanderbilt?"

"Oh! I am coming to it straight. You all know that Vanderbilt ran steamers from New-York to Amboy. One Spring morning, when there was something of a fog, our brig was coming in from Madeira. When just beyond Fort Hamilton one of the steamers ran into the brig, and a precious lot of damage was done to our vessel. We brought suit against the boat, depositions were taken, and we were prepared to go into court. I never was litigious, and did not want to fight the case, but was overruled by the other owners. One day I had to go to Philadelphia, and took the steam-boat route. Just as we were passing the Kills, I saw an oyster-boat in the way of the steamer. I was looking over the side, thinking that we would be pretty certain to touch her, when I heard a commotion near me. A rather spare thin man, not over well dressed, but with the eye of a hawk, had with a run and a jump mounted to the upper deck, and was in the pilot's cabin. I was able to hear a few hot words which passed between the man and the pilot. It ended by the pilot being summarily turned out of his position, and the new-comer took the wheel, and we just barely shaved by the oyster-boat. I noticed that the pilot seemed in high indigeon, and was sullen and cross. When we landed, the new man at the wheel left the cabin, and walked leisurely on the wharf. We were to have taken the stage-coach to Brunswick, but it was not quite ready. Presently the pilot got off too, and evidently seeking a quarrel, called the man some opprobrious name. Quick as lightning the hawk-eyed man turned and gave the pilot, who was a big, burly fellow, a blow between the eyes, which knocked him flat. The passengers made a ring, for a good bout at fisticuffs was not considered out of order in our time. But the Captain of the boat interfered, as did some of the agents of the line. I heard the hawk-eyed man say: 'Captain, I hold you responsible for not informing me that this scoundrel here was as often drunk as not. This time last year this pilot ran into a brig, and it may take $1,000 to pay damages. Discharge him. Now look sharp yourself, or you will have to go, too. I won't have the safety of boats and the reputation of the line injured, or I will turn out every mother's son of you as sure as my name is Vanderbilt!' I give it to you pretty much as Vanderbilt said it, only there was much more pith to it."

"Pith! what do you mean by pith, grandfather?" one of us asked.

"Well, I am talking about things which happened as much as fifty years ago. In after-times, when the Commodore had attained rank and station, he didn't indulge as often, perhaps, as in his younger days, and was less given to ripping it out."

"He swore some then, grandfather?"

"Swore! Well, he was emphatic—quite so. That evening we got safely enough to Brunswick, where Vanderbilt kept a hotel. It was not much of a house, nor was it well kept. A man may have all the cardinal virtues, and be a railway king and so on, but I insist that that hotel at Brunswick was a second-class concern, even in those days, though Vanderbilt did keep it. I know it well enough, for in after-times I told the Commodore so once at Saratoga, and he owned it. At the supper table I took a corner away off from the rest of the travelers, and who should sit opposite to me but Vanderbilt himself. I hadn't forgotten, you may be sure, about the drunken pilot, and thought of the collision with our brig. I made up my mind I would talk to Vanderbilt at once while the matter was fresh on my mind. I had to call him by name two or three times before he answered me, which I did not like.

'What is it, Sir?' he asked gruffly at last.

'This is an awful tough beefsteak,' I said.

'Well, then don't eat it,' was the reply.

'Mr. Vanderbilt,' said I, 'if you hadn't taken the wheel in hand we would have run into that oyster smack.'

'Quite likely.'

'Drunken pilot.'

'I don't admit it.'

'You must, because you said so yourself.'

'Then I was a —— fool.'

'You even made reference to that very pilot in connection with a collision last Spring.'

'There was a thick fog then. I have looked into the matter, and there was no one to blame. Are you a lawyer?'

'No; I am not, but part owner of the brig your boat ran into. If you employ incapable people, which I can prove by your own words, you will be sure to lose your case. I can bring every passenger here to affirm your statement. I have three or four acquaintances among them.'

'You haven't said a word to them? You ain't a lawyer? Now, you show me plainly who you are. Come into my office, and we will talk it over. The sooner the passengers may have to wait ten minutes.'

I went into a sanded office, when Vanderbilt gave me a cigar. I showed him some letters on my person, which answered for an identification. He was polite enough now. Mr. Vanderbilt pulled out an old greasy wallet, and appeared to refer to some notes. 'The damage done us by that collision cost the boat $300. Now, what did it cost you to repair the brig?'

'I have not the exact amount. We have laid our damage at $2,000.'

'Well, you never could get half of that.'

'Yes, we could. The repairs cost $1,500, and the time lost in getting the brig ready we put down at $500 more.'

'That ain't so. She was fixed up on the wharf where she was discharging cargo. Now I will make you an offer—set off our loss against your own bills for repairs and I will settle on that.'

'Well,' said I, 'I know I am not far out of the way when I say $1,500.'

'Good. I will pay for our people $700 in quit of all claims. Here, you make out an agreement to that effect, and sign it for yourself and owners, and that will be the end of it. I will send you a check for the money. If you are not willing, say so, and I will fight the case for the next ten years. That is my way.' I considered for a moment. As the lawyers' expenses and the annoyance would have been considerable, I accepted the proposition. Two or three days afterward came the check, and with it a pass over the road to Philadelphia for the year, which pass I returned, for I never have been nor ever will be what you boys call 'dead-headed.' We sent, however, to Vanderbilt, on the part of the owners of the brig, a cask of choice Madeira, and so the matter ended.

It might have been in 1865 when I met the Commodore at Saratoga. I am fond of whist; so was the Commodore. There used to be, 10 or 15 years ago, a set of players in Philadelphia who were the best whist players in the United States. I have seen some famous games in the English club-houses, played by leading whist-players, but think the Philadelphia game was quite as good. I remember that one of these Philadelphia players, for mischief's sake, was in the habit of rattling about all kinds of things during the game, against all the rules, but who had such a knowledge of the game, that with good players he could almost invariably name the nine last cards in the other people's hands. At Saratoga the Commodore, who never liked anything better than to tackle with strong opponents, was in the habit of playing his rubber with these gentlemen from Philadelphia. Now, the Commodore never was a strong player, and never got beyond an apprentice game. I don't mean to advance the idea that now I am equal to cope with those Philadelphia whist-players—but they do say that in my time I could hold my own with the best of them. I don't think any of you or your fathers will ever play whist decently. None of you have the genius of the game. I never lose my temper at whist—"

"Oh, grandfather!"

"Except when people are dreadfully stupid and wanting in the simplest principles of the game. The Commodore was my partner often, and his luck more than his play used to carry us through. If he had stuck to whist entirely, he might have done pretty well, but playing Boston spoiled his game. Well, once we were playing together, and every game it seemed to me I might have saved the Commodore lost by his bad play. When we were through—I think we must have lost some five games straight, the Philadelphians winning—and the Commodore and I were at the table alone, I said: 'Commodore, you can't play whist with these gentlemen; they are too strong for you. You can't play cards, Sir, better than you kept a hotel.' I said it pleasantly, and the Commodore did not take it amiss.

'How not better than a hotel?' asked the Commodore.

'That was a mighty poor house of entertainment you used to keep at Brunswick just fifty years ago?'

'How poor?'

'The toughest beef-steaks!'

'Wasn't the fare good? The beds were clean, though; I am positive about that. See here, didn't we have a settlement once about some confounded collision? I remember all about it now. It taught me a lesson. I suppose I have got in a thousand passions since then, and learned, even when my temper was hottest, to hold my tongue. But if the house at Brunswick was so bad, why didn't you go somewhere else?'

'Because it was the only one there, almost. You had the monopoly, as usual.'

'That was my way. But, really, was it now so very, very bad?'

'Yes, it was.'

'Well, honestly, it was the only venture of that kind that I never did carry through to my perfect satisfaction. Perhaps if Mrs. Vanderbilt in those times had been allowed full control, she would have managed matters better. Those days were the pleasant ones—the happiest of my life. I could work then twenty hours on a stretch, and never tire. Ha! here are enough gentlemen to cut in again. I would like another rubber before my drive. Come, will you cut in? I am not too old to learn whist yet.'"

"Did he lose that rubber, too, grandfather?"

"Of course he did, for I was his partner. He blundered more than ever, and seemed to enjoy losing. Vanderbilt really was a remarkable man, but he never could acquire the first principles of whist."

JUDGE DAVIS IN INDIANAPOLIS.

The Indianapolis Sentinel of the 7th inst. contains the following: "Judge David Davis, of the Supreme Bench of the United States and Senator-elect from Illinois, arrived in this city Monday evening, and is the guest of Gen. W. Q. Gresham. A Sentinel reporter visited Gen. Gresham's residence last evening for the purpose of interviewing Mr. Davis. When ushered into the sitting-room, the reporter found Judge Davis, ex-Gov. Hendricks, Judge Drummond, and Gen. Gresham seated about the room. When the reporter made known his business, Judge Davis stated positively, but good-naturedly, that he would answer no questions. 'I am a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, and cannot make any remarks for the newspapers,' said the Judge. He went on to state, however, that he was on his way home on private business, and would return to Washington as soon as that was settled up. He had stopped over here simply to consult Judge Drummond on matters pertaining to the Federal Courts.

Reporter—Will you authorize us to state that you do not intend to resign your judicial position until you are assured that Judge Drummond will be appointed as your successor?

Judge Davis—None at all. It is mere speculation, and the wildest kind of speculation. I have made no such statement, and will make none. If I were not holding the position I do, I would be pleased to give you any information I could.

The Judge refused to say anything about his opinion of the Electoral Commission, or the propriety of referring the matter to the Commission. Judge Davis is a large man. He stands fully six feet, and is very corpulent, and probably weighs fully 300 pounds. His hair and whiskers are gray, and the latter are only worn under the chin. He leaves for Illinois this morning."

SAM HOUSTON AS AN AMATEUR ACTOR.

Mr. N. M. Ludlow, now in his eightieth year, who was actor and manager in St. Louis, New-Orleans, Mobile, and other places, half a century ago, has been writing for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat reminiscences of his early adventures, from which we extract the following, the scene being Nashville and the time about 1818:

"From New-Orleans and Natchez Mr. Ludlow went back to Nashville, where for a time he abandoned the stage. 'They stuck Blackstone's Commentaries into my hand,' said he, 'and tried to persuade me that I was to study law; but it was slow work after Shakspeare.' In the intervals of his legal studies, which, to be candid, were long and frequent, he took part in training a lot of amateurs for a private representation of 'Douglass,' Home's celebrated tragedy. This representation of the tragedy was much more noted for the subsequent illustriousness of the actors than for the excellence of their acting. The part of Glenalvon was assumed by Gen. Sam Houston, who subsequently cut such a figure in Texas; Norval was played by William Felton, afterward Governor and United States Senator of Arkansas; Lord Randolph was played by M. H. Foster, afterward Senator from Tennessee; the character of Old Norval was filled by N. M. Ludlow himself, and that of Lady Randolph by Mrs. N. M. Ludlow. Sam Houston did not succeed very well as Glenalvon, but had been cast as a drunken porter in a subsequent farce, a part he could not refuse, since all the actors had promised to submit to the opinion and decision of Mr. Ludlow, the manager. Houston accepted the drunken porter part very reluctantly, saying, 'All right, Sir; very good, Sir; but if they hiss me off the stage, I'll shoot you, sure.' Houston played the part remarkably well."

TWO YOUNG MEN OF PEORIA.

A telegram from Peoria, Ill., to the Chicago Tribune, dated 7th inst., says: "The code of honor is being revived in Illinois at least. Oscar Leach, a young German drug clerk, has been doing what he could to restore the old custom. Feeling offended at some slight he had received from another German—his rival in a love affair—he forthwith challenged that gentleman to mortal combat. The challenge was accepted and pistols selected as the weapons. The other day the parties proceeded, with seconds, a surgeon, and the usual accompaniments, to a retired spot on the bluff. Everything was arranged in good style, according to duelling rules, and the young fellows were about to shoot at each other when one of the seconds urged a settlement. A consultation was had. Leach's wounded honor was healed, and no blood was shed. The affair has been kept very quiet—so quiet, in fact, that no names are known except Leach's."

SADLY AFFLICTED.

A telegram from Loudonville, Ohio, 7th inst. says: "A family named Reichart, living a few miles south of this place, has suffered the terrible loss of six of their children within a few days, from diphtheria. The parents are now in a very critical condition from the same disease. Members of several families who visited the Reichart family are also down with it, and two or three have since died."

OPEN ON SUNDAYS.

The Boston Journal says that the Directors of the Boston Art Museum have unanimously voted to open their beautiful rooms free to the public on Sunday afternoons, from March 1 to Nov. 1, from 1 to 5 o'clock P. M.

MANAGEMENT OF THE CHILDREN'S FOLD.

Rev. Edward Cowley, the Superintendent of the Children's Fold, No. 157 East Sixtieth street, was formally relieved from his duties in that institution last Tuesday. He still retains his position as a member of the Board of Trustees, however, and calls daily at the institution. Yesterday afternoon he conducted prayers in the Fold, but the management has been transferred to the Board of Trustees. The board met on Friday, and placed the Matron of the Sheltering Arms in charge of the children, where she will remain until a regular Matron can be chosen. Mr. James Pott, one of the Trustees of the Fold, stated yesterday to a TIMES reporter that the principal trouble with Mr. Cowley was that he possessed an ungovernable temper, which led him to exceed the bounds of reason at times. Had he made fewer statements, and acknowledged his fault, the Trustees would have endeavored to hush up the matter, and Mr. Cowley could have left the institution without achieving so great a notoriety. As it was, Mr. Pott said that the stories of Mr. Cowley's cruelty had been greatly exaggerated, and even the acts attributed to him had taken place several years ago. Mr. Pott said that the Board of Trustees intended to secure a competent lady as Matron of the institution as early as possible. Rev. Mr. Cowley had no statement to make yesterday, but said he should endeavor to clear his reputation of the unjust imputations which had been cast upon it in a short time.

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

GRAND BALL GIVEN BY PRESIDENT MACMAHON.

THE FIRST OF THE ANNUAL BALLS—CHARMING GRACE OF THE DUCHESS OF MAGENTA—THE DIFFICULTY OF PLEASING EVERYBODY—A LARGE CROWD PRESENT—THE PRESIDENT'S RECEPTION—MUSIC BY HERR STRAUSS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Wednesday, Jan. 24, 1877.

The first of the balls which President MacMahon gives annually at the Elysée Palace came off last night, and it is no exaggeration to say that it was the most brilliant that we have had under the Septennat. The Duchesse de Magenta did the honors of the soirée with charming grace and with that self-possession which comes from experience in high social positions. On previous years I have noted a certain amount of nervousness and frequent flushes of anxiety as the highest nobility of France crowded into her saloons; not that of a novice, be it understood—since Mme. De MacMahon comes from the noble house of De Castries—but that natural excitement which comes from a desire to please in the midst of a diversified and greatly divided society. American ladies can form but a feeble idea of the obstacles to be surmounted. They can scarcely imagine the care that is required at each of these public gatherings. Mme. De MacMahon has to offer a sort of neutral ground upon which all the different parties can meet, and the exigencies of her high position demand an unflagging attention. Upon her invitation lists there are partisans of Henri V. and Napoleon IV.; the Orleans Princes and their partisans elbow Republicans of various hues; the world of politics and of finance is assimilated with the Army and the nobility, and each party watches with eager and jealous eyes to see which faction or which color has the preference, the lowest bow, the warmest smile, or the most attention. The Duchess has to distribute her attentions with the strictest impartiality, and every piece of forgetfulness on her part gives rise to numberless epigrams and perhaps to insinuations in the partisan journals. If she chances to wear a white robe, she is accused of paying a compliment to the Legitimists. If she has a bunch of violets in her hair, she shows a preference for the Bonapartists. Red roses on her dress mark a leaning toward Orleanism, and a preponderance of red would surely be taken as an indication of her desire to conciliate the Republicans. Fancy the thought required to prepare a costume which shall embrace all the colors and give preference to none. And in her personal bearing she has to be equally careful. If she talks aside with the noble dowagers of her own race and lineage, she is supposed to be hatching Legitimist plots, and any special attentions to the Orleanists are immediately noted and remarked. In the midst of all these difficulties, Mme. De MacMahon acquits herself extremely well, and this year better than ever. If she had any special attentions, it was for the diplomatic corps, and I witnessed one little scene on entering, that was charming in its grace and simplicity. Just before me was a young man in a rich Hussar uniform, and upon his arm a young lady of extreme beauty. She was barely 20, with clear-cut patrician features, and the flush of youth upon her cheek. She had a tiara of diamonds upon her head, and her white shoulders were covered with one of the richest ermine cloaks that I ever saw. The Duchess rushed forward to greet this brilliant beauty with a look which expressed her admiration, and with a regard which comes from feminine curiosity, which every lady will understand; she raised the superb cloak with her own hand, and looked intently at the beautiful picture before her. It would have been—it would be—impossible to put in words the high compliment embraced in this act, which was yet naïve and childlike in its simplicity.

The cards of invitation, in the name of President MacMahon and Mme. La Duchesse De Magenta, were printed upon blue Bristol board this year, and stated that the reception would begin at 9 o'clock. The privileged and those in the secret go early, knowing that it is next to impossible to get in after a certain hour, and in order to see the President one must arrive before 12. He stands beside the door from 9 o'clock until that hour, and his powers of endurance must be severely taxed before midnight. Meanwhile the Police are keeping the carriages back in the Champs Elysées, forcing them to make a long detour, and allowing only a few to go forward every quarter of an hour. The necessity of this measure is obvious. The Elysée palace is very small, and some 6,000 cards of invitation are sent out. If all arrived at the same hour it would be impossible to enter the building. Hence the Police keep the carriages in line, allowing them to approach gradually, and the last are rarely able to get up to the palace before 1 o'clock. Meanwhile, the early comers are departing, and after 11 o'clock there is a constant stream of persons coming and going.

The palace was brilliantly illuminated, the gas jets having been arranged in a way to flood the street with light. On entering, I had to struggle with a crowd of a hundred men, pushing and crowding to the cloak room, and I must confess that a stranger would not have formed a very high idea of the manners of the French nobility had he witnessed this singular scene. The arrangements were faulty, however, and on another occasion some remedy will be found for this evil. On getting out of the crush I came upon the Duc d'Aumale, standing majestically at the foot of the staircase, and talking with Gen. Billot. A small group of respectful admirers formed a circle about his Highness, and he stood there as if master of the palace. Near by was the Duc de Nemours, with Mlle. De Nemours, who has the face of the Naples branch of the Bourbons, but nevertheless has the beauty of youth. Beside her was the Duc d'Alençon, her brother, a splendid young fellow, with a handsome, sympathetic face and manly figure. He and the Duc de Chartres, brother of the Compte de Paris, are the handsomest of the family. Next was seen the broad back of Léon Say, the Minister of Finance, and as he turned his young-looking and rather jovial face, a hand was stretched forward and a voice said: "What, you here! How goes it?" He was addressed in this familiar and off-hand manner by Baron Alphonse de Rothschild. He took the Minister to a corner, where the two conversed for some time. M. Léon Say began his career with the Rothschilds, and was an employe until his fortune was made. Their relations are still of the most friendly nature. After leaving the ante-chamber, one enters the small saloon in which the President and Mme. De MacMahon stand to bow to the guests that pass, and then the human current can turn to the right or left at will. On turning to the left one enters the White Saloon, where the old Legitimist families have their rendezvous; after it comes the saloon where the Orleans Princes hold their court; then the diplomatic saloon, entrance to which is barred by a hussier. There one turns into the annex, tastefully arranged to form a long gallery, at the further end of which is the buffet. On each side are the dancing-rooms, one orchestra being under the direction of Johan Strauss, the other led by Métra. These two eminent musicians appeared but rarely, leaving the baton to their aids for the greater portion of the evening. M. and Mme. Jules Simon were listening attentively to Strauss, and near by was the Duc Decazes, who was ostensibly listening to the music, but also appeared to be in a deep reverie. In this part of the hall uniforms were predominant, the young army officers being the first on the floor at each signal for the dance. The crowd everywhere was immense, uncomfortable even, and Mme. De MacMahon looked greatly fatigued at midnight. Up stairs it was also crowded, but there was less heat; but I went down the grand staircase after a short stay there, and made my exit. This was probably the most successful ball the President has yet given, and it has given rise to one incident only, and that of a petty nature. It seems that one or two journals failed to receive invitations for their editors, and they feel so much hurt by it that they show ill-humor. This, however, was probably a mere oversight.

THE WILES OF A RUSSIAN PRINCESS.

SERIOUS CHARGE AGAINST THE EX-PREMIER OF ENGLAND—A NUMBER OF MR. GLADSTONE'S LETTERS SAID TO BE IN A LADY'S POSSESSION—A SCANDALOUS STORY WHICH WAS RECENTLY CONTRADICTED BY THE ENGLISH STATESMAN.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Jan. 26, 1877.

A story appeared here yesterday in the Républiqus Française, the organ of M. Gambetta and the Republican Left. Its correspondent gives a scandal in which the reputation of Mr. Gladstone is involved, and pretends to account for the position that he has taken in the Eastern difficulty by saying that he is amoureux. The eminent statesman is represented to be in the hands of a Russian Princess of great beauty, who was charged with the delicate task of weaving her toils about a statesman of 60 years. The journal in question states that Mr. Gladstone is now the object of public gossip, the grand dame Russe in question having boasted of her success, and stated that she had a number of compromising letters. It is certain that the lady, who is separated from her husband, an aide de camp of the Grand Duke Nicholas, has been for a year or more past one of the diplomatic agents of Prince Gortschakoff in London. Mr. Gladstone has been extremely assiduous in his attentions to her, and it is now said that it is owing to her influence that he turned against the Turks, after having fought for them in 1854. Between the two there have certainly been frequent exchanges of letters, and the report is that the lady has some which do more honor to his heart than to his prudence. The report first appeared in a journal of Sheffield, and the reply to it was not a little embarrassed, but contained a sort of denial. Whether or not there has been an indiscretion on the part of Mr. Gladstone is more than one can learn from the correspondence. It is insinuated, but not directly affirmed. But now that the story has appeared, the enemies of Mr. Gladstone will continue to believe that he wanted to drive the Turks out of Europe at the instigation of this Russian Circe, and that his remarkable change of policy was due to her sweet influence. Let me say here that the lady is as spirituelle as she is beautiful, and is one of those strange beings who seem born to profit by the weaknesses of men. Aux grands hommes les grandes faiblesses, says Prudhomme, and it is upon this principle that the wily Gortschakoff works when he sends out the most beautiful women of his country as diplomatic agents.

PROGRESS OF THE FRENCH ARMY.

A VISIT TO THE BARRACKS OF A REGIMENT OF INFANTRY—OFFICERS AND MEN INCESSANTLY AT WORK—HOW FOREIGN SOLDIERS ARE EDUCATED—AN EXCELLENT LIBRARY.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Jan. 26, 1877.

Yesterday I had the pleasure of taking breakfast with the officers of the One Hundred and Thirtieth Regiment of Infantry, now garrisoned at Courbevoie, one of the suburban villages of Paris, and had occasion to see for myself what progress the French Army is making. I found both officers and men working incessantly, and hard work will tell in the course of time, and generally in a very short time. The difference between these troops and those we saw just after the war was really remarkable. The caserne of Courbevoie is a vast and commodious collection of buildings which were erected during the Empire for a regiment of cavalry. The imperial eagle, carved in stone, still stands above the door. Everything within is comfortable as well as useful. The married officers of the regiment are allowed to take their meals with their families, but the unmarried have formed a regular mess, like the officers of the English Army. There are four dining-rooms for the officers of different grades, a café where all meet to take their coffee after the repast, a billiard-room with two tables, furnished by the Government, and an excellent library. On looking through it I found all the standard military and historical works, and 2,000 or 3,000 volumes of light literature. Dante, Schiller, Goethe, Shakespeare, and Walter Scott were all represented, and a portion of the library was set aside for geographical works and military maps. The men are all comfortably lodged upon the second floor, and are provided with everything that is really required. Accompanied by Capt. D'Harcourt, son of the Duke now Ambassador to England, I went through the different rooms, and found the men engaged in serious study. Capt. Serre, who has, perchance, a marshal's baton in his haversack, took us into all the rooms of his company. In one the men were reading; in another the writing-master was occupied in teaching 20 or 30 young fellows the art of calligraphy, and on glancing at their copy-books I found my own pothooks thrown into the shade. Many of the young men wrote elegant hands, and all showed an interest in their task. In another room higher studies were being pursued, and in another the soldiers were engaged in cleaning up their arms. I saw for the first time the new fusil Gras, a great improvement upon the Chassepôt, and was greatly struck by its simplicity. After firing it is not necessary to half-cock the gun in order to get out the cartridge case, and this gets rid of one of the sources of numberless accidents. The gun is patented by Major Gras, of the French Army.

Breakfast came at 10:30 o'clock, but previously the troops had passed two hours at their exercises. When breakfast was over they went out again, and when I left at 3 o'clock they were still engaged upon the parade ground. I mention this to show how the French troops are working at this time. The officers spend their odd moments in studying English and German, and among them I found young men who spoke both languages. The storehouse is in the upper room of the caserne, and there I found an ample supply of everything required for a rapid entry upon a campaign. The officers no longer have to depend upon the worst of a Minister, who may be himself deceived, but each regiment has the material that it requires for a start within 24 hours from the reception of marching orders. Hard work will tell, as I have already remarked, and these young men are working hard. The progress made is certainly immense. But above all, I noted an entire absence of the old spirit of boasting, nor was the word revanche even mentioned. All modestly stated that if war were to come they were prepared to do their duty, but in a year from now they would be better prepared. I came away greatly pleased with my visit, to send a few English books as my contribution to the library; and if any of our publishers have some odd works to spare, I am sure they could not make a better disposition of them than to contribute them to the library of the One Hundred and Thirtieth Regiment at the caserne of Courbevoie.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS DISCUSSED.

THE MEN WHO STAND BY CONKLING.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A Washington correspondent says Senator Conkling "was especially gratified by the following dispatch from a number of his townsmen, all Republicans:

UTICA, Jan. 27,

To Hon. Roscoe Conkling, Washington:

Your townsmen thank God that patriots have found in you a spokesman, and congratulate the country on the triumph of reason in our Republic.

A. B. Johnson, C. M. Dennison, Benjamin Allen, M. J. Everett, J. S. Capron, W. H. Comstock, D. Batchelor, Lewis Lawrence, Lewis H. Lawrence, R. S. Williams, L. Oatley, H. S. Hastings, George Benedict, W. F. Watson, C. J. Everett, Henry D. Pixley, J. Emery Eaton, Charles S. Symonds, C. H. Hopkins, N. A. White, Harrison Gilmore, William K. Gilmore, J. C. P. Kincaid, T. R. Proctor, Theodore F. Butterfield, Orville P. Allen, Michael McQuade, D C. Stoddard.

Why the Senator should be "especially gratified" with this nobody here can understand. With, at most, two exceptions, the above names could be obtained to any paper singing the praises of Conkling. There are several letter-carriers whose names could have been secured to swell the list, and the wonder is they were omitted. The town was scoured Saturday to get signatures to the dispatch, and a list of those who refused to sign would be much longer than the one printed. A brief glance at the names given is all that is necessary to show the character of the "patriots" who "thank God," and their "spokesman." A. B. Johnson is a brother of Hon. A. S. Johnson, whom Mr. Conkling nominated for United States Circuit Judge. He was one of the delegates who misrepresented this district at Cincinnati. C. M. Dennison was the other delegate at Cincinnati, and is Mr. Conkling's United States Commissioner for this district. W. H. Comstock is United States Register in Bankruptcy. J. C. P. Kincaid is Collector of Internal Revenue. C. H. Hopkins is Postmaster. Each of these holds his office at the Senator's pleasure. C. J. Everett is a small lawyer, partner of Dennison before mentioned, and son of M. J. Everett. W. H. Watson is Mr. Conkling's candidate for Regent of the University. Lewis Lawrence is a gentleman of wealth, and was Mr. Conkling's candidate first for State Senator, (beaten in convention by Mr. Sayre,) and second, for Congress (beaten in convention by W. J. Bacon.) L. H. Lawrence is the son of the much-beaten candidate. H. S. Hastings has a small office under the Government and Conkling. George Benedict is ex-Sheriff of Oneida County, who peddled eel-skins for Scott Lord in 1874, and did what he could for his re-election in 1876. He has a record as Sheriff not to be proud of. D. C. Stoddard was the Conkling District Attorney last term, and candidate of the same faction for renomination, and was President of the famous Conkling Club of Utica last Summer. Charles S. Symonds is the Conkling-Cornell member of the Republican State Committee for this district, who holds his place by grace of the anti-Conkling weaklings of the Saratoga Convention. The two Gilmores are not Republicans but Prohibitionists, Harrison having been the candidate of that party for Assemblyman last Fall. D. Batchelor is well known as the "learned barber," whom the Conkling faction keep in place by hinting that the State Senate is the place for him. Mr. Allen is a builder, and for anything I know, a conscientious Conkling man. Ditto Mr. Oatley. Mr. Butterfield is a brother of Gen. Dan Butterfield, and has a grievance in that he thinks the anti-Conkling Republicans defeated him in the contests for Mayor last Spring. Michael McQuade is the father of Gen. James McQuade, Tilden Elector and office-holder under Govs. Hoffman and Tilden. N. A. White is under obligations to the Conkling wing for a seat in the Assembly some years ago. Mr. Proctor is not understood to belong to either faction of the party here. His is one unbiased name, perhaps. The only real mighty name on the list is that of R. S. Williams, Cashier of the Oneida Bank, and brother of Dr. S. Wells Williams, of Chinese fame. No imputations can be urged against Mr. Williams' signature. The only cause for wonder is that a man of such usually good sense should add his name to such a list. It must have caused Mr. Conkling "especial gratification." Mr. Pixley is a merchant who feels under obligations to Mr. Conkling for winning a suit at law for him. Of the other three names it is enough to say they are those of gentlemen whose opinions on constitutional matters are not usually sought.

The dispatch represents the sentiments generally of Conkling's place-men. It does not speak for the Republicans of Utica or Oneida County. INO.

UTICA, Monday, Jan. 29, 1877.

POPPENHUSEN'S LATEST.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The peculiar abilities of the Long Island Railroad and branches to inflict severe and universal punishment on the traveling public are well known. An entirely original and most economical torture has recently been discovered, and was applied this morning with great success to the long suffering passengers on the "Early Hempstead train." The cars were stopped at a place remote from any slow or rapid transit, by a farm-house being partly across the tracks; some half dozen (more or less able-bodied) men were seeking to move said house up a steep hill. Here was a full stop for Poppenhusen's victims. So men and women wended their weary way to a point where Poppenhusen thinks frequent trains are essential. All the sufferers held contracts with the Long Island Railroad and its branches, that in consideration of good money duly paid, they were entitled to be carried in a car, propelled by steam, from certain stated points to certain other stated points, within a given time, "said time having been published by said Long Island Railroad Company and its branches."

This new means of torture is surely unique, and deserving the highest praise; to make a man with an important business engagement at an early hour take a pedestrian tour, is bad enough, but to compel ladies to walk a mile or two on a rough road seems almost like the last blow on the "Spanish boot." Cannot the company have at convenient distances between prominent stations a few barns, wood-piles, or even pig-sties, which can be pushed, pulled, or even rolled, on the tracks? By this simple and, perhaps, inexpensive method, victims could be compelled to walk over the greater part of the miles they pay to ride. Trains could, under this theory, be run so slowly and so lightly freighted that running expenses would be "nix." Again, a liberal arrangement might be made with that "cab company" started some months ago in New-York, that when any accident occurred during wet weather, for instance, from barns, wood-piles, or pig-sties, a judicious use of these mysterious vehicles would enable the Long Island Railroad and its branches to declare most exceptional dividends.

HEMPSTEAD.

ANOTHER WAIL FROM LONG ISLAND.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Many travelers on the East River Ferry Company's boats running between James slip and Hunter's Point have been sadly inconvenienced of late by the ferry company's discontinuing the 6:30 P. M. boat from James slip. This took place during the hard weather this Winter, when much ice was in the river, but there can be no excuse for not running the boat now. Various persons have inquired how soon the boat will be put on again, but no satisfaction can be obtained. The last train over the Southern Railroad leaves at 7 P. M., and the 6:30 boat used to land passengers in time for it. If the boat does not soon recommence running, the railroad company, with its usual liberality (!) will discontinue the 7 P. M. train. As it is, if any one wants to catch the last train he must go across the Roosevelt Street Ferry and take the cars to Bushwick, running the chances of a failure to connect. The wretched management of Poppenhusen's railroad, supplemented by the niggardliness of the ferry company, tends to the depopulation of Long Island. The inhabitants of the south end are longing for the appearance of the new railway (Corbin's Narrow-gauge Road) and its accompanying ferry to aid them in their difficulties and render the island habitable. The ferry (the high-priced ferry) should be placed in the hands of those who would give some heed to the public convenience, and should not be controlled by these penurious penny-makers.

H. O. Y.

GLENDALE, Long Island, Thursday, Feb. 8, 1877.

AN IMPUDENT PETITION.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

That anybody should contemplate the abolishment of the Marine Court of this City seems very sad to the Justices of the court and a friend of theirs named Jackson. So somebody has prepared for Jackson a petition setting forth the respect which the members of the Bar have for the high character, profound learning, and exhaustive integrity of the Judges, and also the grave evils which would result immediately on their removal from office. This petition has been presented by Jackson to the lawyers practicing in the Marine Court, with a request to sign it, and the further remark that he [Jackson] was preparing a little list of the gentlemen who refused to sign, which he proposed to lay before the Justices of the court! This kind intention on his part needs a little publicity in THE TIMES, I think, and will be of interest to the members of the Bar who desire the court abolished, and to the Legislature. Whether the court is abolished or not, please help me to abolish Jackson and his petition.

AN ANCIENT MARINER.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Feb. 9, 1877.

AN UNDERGROUND RAILROAD.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The following facts, most of which have just come to hand from London, ought to satisfy his Honor Mayor Ely of the practicability of an underground railway:

The last report of the Metropolitan Underground Company, up to Jan. 1 of this year, shows a net income of 61 per cent., and operating expenses 39 per cent. of the gross receipts.

There was earned net on its eight and one-half miles 4½ per cent. on a capital of about $41,000,000, nearly two-thirds of which, as the expenditures of the company show, were paid for land or right of way. This is 9 per cent. on $20,000,000 and 18 per cent. on $10,000,000.

Let us now apply these facts here. It is also 20 per cent. on $9,000,000, a sum which will construct and complete an underground railway from the Battery to the Harlem River, on a route where the right of way, with the exception of a few rods, has been given, and has remained unused for nearly eight years.

Sir Charles Fox, his two sons, both eminent engineers; Mr. Cooper, Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Johnson, the chief assistants of Mr. Fowler in making the underground railway, of London; Sir Edward Watkin, and many other English railway men and engineers who have been here, all express astonishment at the enormous movement of passengers on this island. They all say it surpasses that in London, on similar areas, and they see the cause in the fact of our being shut in by water on each side, while London has no such restraints crowding travel in one direction. They have seen our long, straight streets and avenues, the like of which cannot be found in London. Every one of the persons above named has repeatedly said is was entirely practicable to make an underground railway under those streets, and that, inasmuch as we will not be required to buy the right of way, as in London, they must necessarily return a very large income to the capital invested.

Are not these facts enough to satisfy the public, especially when they understand, as they are now beginning to do, the causes that have delayed and defeated the construction of an underground railway for eight years, that it is not only entirely practicable, but will be greatly profitable to make one here?

O. VANDENBURGH.

THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Allow me to call the attention of the proper authorities, through your most agreeable columns, to the means of exit in the Lyceum Theatre. Several unimportant improvements have been made since the Brooklyn fire, but the most important one seems to have been neglected. I refer to the staircase running down from the top gallery, and passing across a large window in the front of the building. There is no railing whatever on the side of the window, and in case of a panic hundreds of people would be pushed off the staircase in the rush, and would fall through the glass and after being terribly mangled, fall down on the portico 20 feet below. It is doubtful whether there is as dangerous an exit to any of our other theatres in this City.

J. G. BRILL, Post Office Box No. 1880.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Feb. 8, 1877.

THE AMERICAN LIBRARY IN PARIS.

AN INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE OF WORKS OF SCIEN

The New York Times

TRIPLE SHEET.

NEW-YORK, SUNDAY, FEB. 11, 1877.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES is the best family paper published; it contains the latest news and correspondence. It is free from all objectionable advertisements and reports, and may be safely admitted to every domestic circle. The disgraceful announcements of quacks and medical pretenders, which pollute so many newspapers of the day, are not admitted into the columns of THE TIMES on any terms.

Terms cash in advance.

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS.

Postage will be prepaid by the Publishers on all Editions of THE TIMES sent to Subscribers in the United States.

The DAILY TIMES, per annum, including the Sunday Edition	$12 00
The DAILY TIMES, per annum, exclusive of the Sunday Edition	10 00
The Sunday Edition, per annum	2 00
The SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES, per annum	3 00
The WEEKLY TIMES, per annum	1 20

These prices are invariable. We have no traveling agents. Remit in drafts on New-York or Post Office Money Orders, if possible, and where neither of these can be procured send the money in a registered letter.

Address THE NEW-YORK TIMES,
New-York City

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

This morning THE DAILY TIMES consists of TWELVE PAGES. Every news-dealer is bound to deliver the paper in its complete form, and any failure to do so should be reported at the publication office.

Instead of moderating the heat of partisan discord, the first decision of the Compromise Commission appears to have fanned it into flame. Since it cannot be trusted to count in TILDEN; the Democrats seem resolved to break up the so-called Tribunal and evade the provisions of the law under which it was created. There is nothing very surprising in all this, unless it be to those trustful persons who supposed that the same men who conducted a campaign replete with violence, fraud, and corruption could be induced to canvass its results in a spirit of fairness and common honesty. The morals of the gambling sharp that have characterized the Tilden managers from the beginning will characterize them to the end, and the elevation of DAVID DUDLEY FIELD to a leading place in their councils will certainly not tend to improve either their principles or their methods.

It is to be hoped that yesterday's exhibition of partisan spite and trickery in the House of Representatives, and all the vague alarms and threats which are its reported sequel, will have the effect of brushing away a good many illusions which have recently interfered with the united action of Republicans. The timid and temporizing members of the party in both houses are probably beginning to see that their opponents have mistaken their spirit of compromise for weakness, and their hesitation for cowardice. Even those who have not been unwilling to further their personal ends by playing into the hands of the Democrats can hardly fail to see how hopelessly deficient in either tact or statesmanship is the party which takes the earliest possible opportunity to put itself in a position no less contemptible than ludicrous. There is at the bottom of yesterday's performance in the House an arrogant challenge to the Republicans to sustain the right if they dare. It is to be hoped that there is manhood enough left among the representatives of the party in Congress to meet that arrogance with somewhat of the old pride and decision with which much graver perils have been confronted and overcome.

Another somewhat farcical "conference" took place at the Mayor's office yesterday between certain eminent citizens and the heads of the various City departments. As usual, the eminent citizens came but indifferently prepared to discuss the questions brought before the meeting, while the officeholders were ready to show by facts and figures that the City was never so economically and efficiently managed as it is to-day. It would probably be an advantage to the cause of reform if the excellent and well-meaning gentlemen who constitute Mr. BOOTH'S committee would either master the details of the subject which they have taken in hand, or leave these conferences for the uninterrupted exchange of compliments between the Mayor and the heads of departments. It appears from the report that the Citizens' Committee concurred in adopting Controller KELLY'S resolution "that the members of the Legislature from this City be requested not to vote for any measure affecting its interests before consulting with the Mayor." If the committee fell into this very neat trap, they are obviously not sharp enough for the persons with whom they undertake to "confer," and unless they desire to emulate the fame of the Citizens' Committee of Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS, it would be well for them to obtain a clearer idea of what they want, and how they are to secure it.

To Senator MORRISSEY must be awarded the credit of imparting some vigorous common sense into yesterday's Municipal conference. Exception may be taken to the breadth of some of his statements, but their general spirit and purport were alike excellent. Mr. MORRISSEY made the somewhat pertinent inquiry, "Is there any gentleman present that knows anything about the bills affecting this City now before the Legislature?" but failed to elicit a reply. By way of enlightening the ignorance which is undoubtedly not confined to the Municipal conferees, we present in another column a pretty full synopsis of the measures in question. It will be observed that quite a large proportion of them have been introduced for the purpose of extending the powers and increasing the revenues of our grossly mismanaged Police Department. This is surely a subject not beneath the attention of the Municipal Society, and yesterday's conference might have done some good if Gen. SMITH had been interrogated by some one qualified to discuss the subject as to what use the board had made of its existing powers, and what it proposed to do with the new ones.

To outside observers one of the most puzzling phases of the Eastern question is to be found in the independent negotiations for peace which are proceeding between Servia and Turkey in presence of the near probability of war between Turkey and Servia's recent supporter and virtual ally. The issue of the conference unquestionably leaves the insurgent provinces and vassals of Turkey in a position which compels them to make the best terms they can with their suzerain, and the Ministers of the Sultan are by no means disposed to make too hard a bargain with communities whose enmity would prove very troublesome in presence of a foreign foe. So it happens that the conditions of peace between Turkey and Servia are advancing rather more rapidly than the preliminaries of war between Russia and Turkey, though the fact is doubtless present to the minds of both parties to the new treaty that it would be worth very little with a Russian Army on the right bank of the Danube.

THE DEMOCRATS AND THE COMMISSION.

The Democratic majority in the House hardly deign to conceal their ulterior purpose. Unable to repress their chagrin at the decision of the Electoral Commission in the Florida case, they have begun a policy of delay which may frustrate the object of the Commission and produce embarrassments more perilous than those which it it was intended to avert. Time is of the essence of the Commission. It must finish its work with all possible haste, or everything done will be of no effect. This admitted necessity for dispatch was the plea upon which the measure was hurried through Congress, and its provisions are all framed with the view of preventing factious resistance to the progress of the count. The rules adopted by the Commission for limiting the legal arguments and otherwise excluding irrelevant issues, are in harmony with this general idea. The same intention is apparent in the provisions of the law respecting the action of the two chambers upon the decisions of the Commission as from time to time reported. When a vote or report is brought to the notice of the Senate and House, they meet jointly; the statement of an objection to the vote on the part of members of either is followed by the separation of the two houses; the speeches in either house are confined to ten minutes each, and the whole debate must not go beyond two hours. Then the main question must be put without more ado, and the decision of the Commission stands, unless the two houses concur in opposition to it. Each part of the plan is a sequence to that preceding it, and the obvious design of Congress in enacting the law was that less than three hours should suffice for all that is reserved to be said or done in ratifying or rejecting the vote of the Commission. At this rate of progress, Florida would to-day have been finally disposed of, and to-morrow would have brought the Louisiana case before the Commission.

But the Democrats are not ready for Louisiana. Their lawyers are nonplussed. Their confidence is gone. Their version of the Florida case had elements of strength to which they can lay no claim in the contest for Louisiana; and an adverse decision of the Commission on every essential point leaves them without heart or hope in the struggle they have undertaken. They have, therefore, two motives to delay. That which is publicly assigned is a desire to afford their counsel before the Commission an opportunity of reconsidering their steps and maturing their procedure when Louisiana shall be reached. This would be bad enough, since it implies a readiness to break through the prescribed methods of the law for the mere sake of partisan convenience. The second purpose—which can only be inferred from the threats of prominent Democratic members and from the scope of the Speaker's ruling on the question of a recess till Monday—is ominous of more serious mischief. The clear intent of the law is that the action shall be continuous from the moment of the assembling of the two houses until their vote, separately or harmoniously, is recorded. The Speaker decides that this construction may be overridden by a vote of the House, and by a strict party vote a recess until Monday was carried. If it is competent for the House to disregard the purpose of the law by postponing a decision two days, it is equally competent for the same majority then to order another recess, and so on day after day till the 4th of March. Mr. RANDALL'S ruling opens the door to this policy of indefinite delay, and his party in the House are as ready as himself to take advantage of an interpretation, which violates the plain provisions of the law, and jeopardizes its declared object.

A more scandalous exhibition of partisan malignity and recklessness has never been witnessed. The whole scheme of the Commission, its organization, its powers, its duties, received the cordial support of the Democratic Party in Congress. But one Democrat voted against it in the Senate. The opposition in the House was composed almost altogether of Republicans. Had not the Democrats been united in support of the measure, it could not have become law. Their orators extolled it as a wise means of escaping impending difficulties. Their newspapers, with few silent exceptions, applauded it as sagacious, just, and expedient. When THE TIMES and other Republican journals ventured to suggest that the decisions of the Commission, whatever they might be, could not possibly please both parties, and that the Democrats, if disappointed, would impugn the impartiality of the Tribunal, the World, the Express, and the entire horde of Democratic newspapers resented what they considered an imputation upon the patriotism of their party. We were told that the reserve force of patriotism throughout the country hailed the Commission as a deliverance from danger, and would sustain its verdict heartily. The ink which recorded these avowals of Democratic magnanimity and good faith is not yet dry, and the Democratic House of Representatives treats them as of no account—gives them the lie, in fact, and adopts the very tactics which they solemnly disclaimed.

The infamy is not lessened by the equivocation which is employed to hide it. The Democrats cannot, indeed, fall back upon an objection as to the constitutionality of the Commission, for on that point they have been its loudest defenders. Congress had absolute power in the premises, they said, and might delegate its power to the Commission. They cannot affect zeal for the untarnished name of the Judiciary, for of all the apologists for the introduction of Judges into the Commission, none have been louder than the Democrats. If, then, they have made up their minds to falsify their declarations in behalf of the Commission, and, after all, to render its labors nugatory on the ground that the results are favorable to the Republicans, why not say so manfully? Could not Mr. SPRINGER muster courage enough to substitute for his dilatory motion a declaration that the decision of the Commission does not come up to Mr. TILDEN'S expectations? That would at least be honest. But both Mr. RANDALL and Mr. SPRINGER know what the effect of such an avowal would be upon the country. They know that the storm of indignation which would follow would be more than they could withstand—that it would cover with indelible infamy the men who advised and the men who carried out a programme so treacherous and bad. They have made a mistake in supposing that the country can be hoodwinked by the adoption of a policy of indefinite delay instead of a policy of open hostility. One has quite as much significance as the other. The construction put by Mr. RANDALL upon the power of the House enabled the Democrats to defer the vote which must be had before the Commission can resume its work; and in this fact we have the key to the position which has been claimed for the House—that, namely, of preventing, in one way or another, a formal election before the 4th of March.

Will the Democratic House dare thus to prevent a settlement of the Presidential question? Will it accept the suggestions of Mr. TILDEN, and resort to the most desperate and dishonorable measures to keep the question open? Will the Democratic Commissioners act upon the advice of Mr. FIELD, and precipitate the Commission into inextricable confusion by resigning, on the ground that the decisions rendered are partisan? There is nothing in the character of Mr. TILDEN or Mr. FIELD to hinder them from proposing and directing the base plans imputed to them; and certainly, judging by the proceedings of the House yesterday, there is among its members no lack of material for any use which the combined wits of TILDEN and FIELD may devise. But all the Democrats are not fools, and only fools can suppose that a party which adopts the methods shadowed forth from Washington can venture again to appeal to the country for support. If the only consideration just now to be thought of was how best to blacken the name and blight the fortunes of the Democracy, we might hope that the counsels of Mr. TILDEN would be followed literally, and that the obstructive policy, begun yesterday, would be pushed to the bitter end.

THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

At no time since the downfall of TWEED and his fellows have the people been so earnest in their endeavors to obtain an insight in the methods by which from $31,000,000 to $35,000,000 in the shape of taxes are annually wrung from the labor, industry, and capital of this City by our Municipal rulers, their friends, relatives, and political retainers. On the occasion of the recent conference at the Mayor's office between certain prominent citizens and certain high City officials, Controller KELLY said "he knew of no sinecures under the City Government, nor was he an advocate of reducing salaries, but the City should not have too many employes, and those whom it did employ should give a fair equivalent for the money paid them." Has Mr. KELLY read with care the departmental estimate of the amount required to pay the expenses of conducting the business of the Police Department for the year 1877? This document is of vital interest to the tax-payer. Its perusal from beginning to end suggests enormous possibilities of economy.

There are four Commissioners; one of whom, the President, receives per annum $8,000, the three others receive each $6,000, making for Commissioners' salaries alone $26,000. One Commissioner at $5,000 per annum would amply suffice to manage this department. Our largest banks do not require more than one head and one President. The Superintendent of Police receives $6,000; $4,000 would be ample. Four Inspectors of Police at $3,500 each are rather luxuries than necessities—two at $2,500 can readily perform the duties which sit so lightly on the present incumbents. Nineteen Surgeons cost the City $29,000 per annum. They could be reduced to ten at $1,000 each without detriment to the public health. Thirty-five Captains receive each $2,000. For $1,200 they could be duplicated in forty-eight hours by men of equal energy, experience, and ability. One hundred and forty Sergeants at $1,600 is more than they are worth in these times; $1,000 would be ample pay.

And now we come to 2,261 Patrolmen at $1,200 each, amounting to the startling sum of $2,713,200. It would be utterly impossible for those 2,261 men, at this present writing, to earn, at the very outside, more than $600 per annum on an average, in any occupation, pursuit, or employment they can command. There are any number of men in this City, physically, mentally, and otherwise their equals, men of good character and respectable antecedents, who would gratefully accept the position of Patrolman at $600 per annum, and be thankful of the opportunity. We are not prepared to say to what extent the force could, without detriment to the Police service, be reduced, but it is notorious that there are quite a number of Patrolmen who do not come up to Controller Kelly's high standard of merit. But, leaving them at their present number, their pay should be reduced exactly one-half, making a saving on this one item of salaries of $1,356,600. Seventy-eight doormen at $900 each seems rather "steep" in these times, when we consider the simple duties connected with their employment. Many of our large down-town firms pay much less to trustworthy and confidential porters, who not only work from an early hour in the morning till after sundown, but have constantly under their care and charge valuable goods and considerable sums of money. We think $500 per annum would procure at a moment's notice seventy-eight or any other required number of doormen. As a final item, we have for salaries of clerks, deputies, stenographers, superintendent of telegraph, telegraph operator, messengers, cleaners, steam-boat and other employes the round sum of $50,000.

The vagueness of these different employments, and the ignorance in which we stand of how many employes divide up this $50,000, and what share falls to each particular individual, precludes us from intelligent criticism. In a word, the final estimate of the amount required to pay the expenses of conducting the business of the Police Department for the year 1877, as allowed by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, forms a grand total of $3,202,400. The reductions we have suggested and which we believe perfectly practicable, amount to $1,550,800.

In addition to the sums above mentioned, the Police Department receive $725,000—or say, roughly, $2,000 per day—for street-cleaning purposes. How shamefully they have neglected to perform the duties connected with the Street-cleaning Bureau has been of late a subject of general and indignant remark among the people and in the press of this City. There are some choice berths in the Bureau of Street Cleaning. The salaries run from as low as $480 up to $2,000. The Chief Clerk, if we are not mistaken, gets $3,000. The Police Department have the spending during the present year of the enormous sum of $4,030,175, being half a million more than falls to the share of the Board of Education, which ranks next in order with the sum of $3,553,000.

If we go back to the estimates of the Department of Police for the years 1873-'4-'5-'6, we find ourselves confronted with the same melancholy array of Commissioners, Superintendent, Inspectors, Surgeons, Captains, Sergeants, patrolmen, doormen, &c., each with substantially the same salary as at present. During the past three or four years, values of all kinds have greatly declined—many who were rich have become poor—those in comfortable circumstances are straitened to a painful degree—while the laboring man and the artisan cannot find employment even at a reduction of one-half from previous rates of labor. Bank presidents, cashiers, clerks, and salaried officers of all kinds have had their salaries reduced, while others seek vainly for employment at almost any price. Property holders have become in many cases impoverished to that degree that they find it impossible to pay their taxes, except by a sale of property. There are at this moment $12,000,000 of unpaid real estate taxes; $11,700,000 of unpaid assessments, and several millions of unpaid personal taxes, the greater portion of which latter will never be paid. The funded debt increases steadily month by month, and yet, under this lamentable state of affairs, with impending financial ruin staring us in the eyes, our Commissioners of Police, and the horde of employes in the pay of the Police Department, draw, with great regularity, salaries out of all proportion to the services rendered, measured by the standard value of similar services in open market. Rents have fallen, all the necessaries of life have declined, and yet these City employes receive the same pay which they drew before the decline in values. How long can this system last? How much longer will the laboring man consent to want for bread while his so-called friends and champions feed at his expense on the spoils of the City?

THE DEVELOPMENT OF A NEW EXPORT.

From time to time spasmodic efforts have been made to supplement the home supply of fresh meat for the British market, but up to a very recent period without any considerable success. Some twenty years ago when "times were hard and men were pinched," an enterprising friend of humanity conceived the idea of importing into the British market dried Montevidean beef, which was to be sold for not more than three pence, or six cents, per pound. Visions of accumulating savings "against a rainy day" floated before the mind of the British pater familias, and unlimited supply of steaks and beef in every form seemed at last to be within the reach of the rising generation. The sensation caused by this project, more particularly in the rural districts of Scotland, where beef was at that time almost unknown, was extraordinary, but the great scheme collapsed by reason of the perverse nature of the Montevedean "beef." It had a forbidding look, and it literally defied mastication. The beef had all the appearance of compressed slices of tanned buffalo hides; all the substance was squeezed out of it, and, whether roasted, broiled, or stewed with an unlimited quantity of savory onions and spices, it was pronounced hopeless. Large "cooking depot companies" which had sprung up in the great cities to supply the horny-fisted working man with nourishing Montevidean soup at about two cents per bowl, came to grief, and a few months after the introduction of the vile stuff the large flakes of "hide" were utilized as door mats, for which purpose they were admirably suited.

The next great step in this line was the supply of canned meat from Australia. At first this proved a failure, but success rewarded perseverance and scientific skill. At the present day the trade in canned meats and soups with the English market is enormous, and even epicures have pronounced some of the dishes, when carefully cooked, good. The only sauce required is the "universal sausage improver"—unlimited confidence. This trade has increased in consequence of the restrictions which the Privy Council has found it necessary to place on the importation into the English market of live stock for fear of the dreaded rinderpest. At last, however, the true solution of the great "meat supply difficulty" is apparently solved. The genuine article, fresh and firm and juicy, is now being imported across the Atlantic in vast quantities, and there is every prospect of this developing into one of the most remunerative and vast enterprises. There is in Great Britain a market for an enormous supply of good meat. In this country and Canada the supply is simply inexhaustible, and now that the secret as to how it can be transported in good condition has been discovered, the trade must develop rapidly.

The originators of the scheme were the Messrs. BELL, of Glasgow, and they are now shipping from this port and Canadian ports thousands of pounds of dead meat and carcases of hogs weekly. When it is considered that in order to supply the home demand there was imported into Great Britain last year not less than 3,437,068 cwts. of beef, mutton, &c., some idea as to the extent of the trade may be formed. The price of the fresh beef thus imported averages about 12 cents per pound to the wholesale dealer, and the consumer can purchase it for about 16 cents; while the home-fed beef, no better in quality, cannot be purchased for less than 25 and 30 cents.

The effect which this trade may have on the home labor market, is not to be despised, while there are already indications that it will revolutionize the whole system of agriculture in England. The unrestricted importation of fresh meat, like the unrestricted importation of grain, may produce temporary embarrassment among farmers; but England has experienced too well and appreciates too highly the benefits of free trade, and the regulating effect of the action of great economic laws, to dream of interfering with this trade. If the farmers find it impracticable to compete in the open market for the sale of fresh meat, they will turn their grazing land into arable land whenever practicable. If even this step fails to bring them a fair reward for their labor, and return for invested capital, then rents must come down, labor will become cheaper, as the cost of living diminishes, and solid "bottom" will be found sooner or later. In Canada we hear of many farms being transformed into pasture land. In the Province of Ontario this is pre-eminently the case, and now we hear of renewed efforts in the direction of the breeding of stock being made in the great West. Whether the breed of sheep can be brought to such perfection in this country, so as to enable the importers of mutton to compete in the British market with the delicious mutton of the little Welsh hill sheep, the Southdowns, or Cheviots, is an open question, which a few years' experience may decide. Certainly, such an enterprise as the one referred to must tend to encourage additional efforts in that direction.

A NEW KANSAS QUESTION.

Probably the most dissatisfied women now living are the strong-minded women of Kansas. As a rule, the strong-minded woman always is dissatisfied. She is forever scorning the things which she has, and reaching out for the rights and trousers of others. Dr. MARY WALKER has achieved trousers, but they have not satisfied her. While yet unattained, they seemed to her the perfection of earthly bliss, but now that she can wear them where she will, she finds them hollow and stuffed with sawdust, so to speak. She is still pining for a dress coat, and the right to sit with her feet on the window-ledge of a club-house; and were she to be granted these privileges, there would be something else wanting to make her a satisfied man or woman, as the case may be.

Not many months ago the strong-minded women of Kansas, exasperated at the tyrannical conduct of men who refuse to perform the duties of mothers and housekeepers, and selfishly monopolize occupations from which women are debarred, determined to secure for their sex a share in the legislation of the State. As there was a trifling constitutional difficulty in the way of electing themselves members of the Legislature, they magnanimously refrained from becoming Senators and Representatives, but they demanded that women should be permitted to exercise the duties of legislative pages. They urged that the office of page was one to which any woman was constitutionally eligible, and that female pages would be vastly more useful and ornamental than the usual small boys, who have hitherto monopolized the office. They pointed out that the boy pages are in the habit of slyly appropriating the tobacco of careless legislators; that they are frequently found playing leap-frog in the lobby at the very time when their services are needed, and that they cannot be induced to keep their hands clean and their hair neatly brushed. Female pages, it was claimed, would be free from these vices, and would exercise a purifying and refining influence upon the rude members of the Legislature. In short, it was so clearly demonstrated that the appointment of female pages would be an inestimable benefit to the legislators and a grateful recognition of the rights of woman, that the Kansas Senators and Representatives yielded and appointed a dozen or so young ladies to the coveted offices.

When this was done the Kansas women felt the joy of victory. Their sex had been granted the right to hold the office of page and the privilege of exercising a civilizing influence upon the legislators. Husbands who were about to take their seats in the upper or lower house were triumphantly told that henceforth no surreptitious bottles and no "language" would be used by any gentleman in the presence of young ladies, and it was firmly believed that the way to the purification of politics by the presence of women was at last opened. Precisely how long the Kansas women remained in this satisfied frame of mind we are not told, but long before the first fortnight of the session was over no man ventured to mention the word "page" to a Kansas wife, without first making sure that there was no stove-lid within reach, and that his line of retreat was open and safe.

To a certain extent the innovation has had the predicted effect of refining the manners of the legislators. A general tendency to wear clean collars and new coats has developed itself among them, but, strange to say, this very fact dissatisfies the Kansas women. They might, perhaps, have been made to believe that legislators were compelled to buy vast quantities of gay ribbons wherewith to tie up their papers, but the presence of packages of small-sized gloves and lace collars in their coat pockets could not be plausibly accounted for in any such way. Simultaneously with the discovery of articles of this description in the coat pockets of legislators on their way to the Capitol, bits of suspiciously long hair began to be found on the coat sleeves of those who returned home from the prolonged debates. It was in vain that astute members pretended that they had passed through that part of the market where butter is sold on their way home. The excuse was not accepted, and scores of indignant wives heroically resolved to spend every day in the galleries of the legislative halls, where they could keep their eyes on "those hussies." The very women who had advocated the appointment of female pages, on the ground that it would improve the manners of legislators, were among the first to say to their husbands, "O, yes, that's the third clean collar you've put on this week; you needn't think I don't see through it;" and many a legislative husband who ordered a new coat was told by his sobbing wife that "he did not care if she hadn't a rag to put on, so long as he could squander his money in fine clothes for a parcel of hussies to stare at." It was not shown that the female pages had been guilty of the slightest indiscretion, but the married women of Kansas made up their minds that nothing more shameful than the turning of honest boys out of employment, to make room for brazen baggages that ought to be at home working in the kitchen, had ever been perpetrated by any legislative body.

The worst of it is that, while the women freely express this opinion among themselves, they will not allow any man the same liberty. If the cautious legislative husband remarks that he is bitterly opposed to female pages, he is crushed with the answer: "Of course you are; you men are too mean to let any woman earn an honest living except by slaving in the kitchen;" while, if he takes the opposite ground, and asserts that the female pages are much to be preferred to boys, he is told, with a burst of tears, that he is little better than a heartless brute. The only possible way in which peace can be restored to legislative households is the adoption of a joint rule forbidding the appointment of any female page under 50 years of age, and requiring every page to wear a uniform consisting of a black alpaca dress, a blue cotton umbrella, large, old-fashioned overshoes, and green spectacles. Meanwhile, the careful legislator wears his oldest clothes, and never returns home without examining his coat-collar with a magnifying glass. And it was for this that brave men, from the North and South, fought and died in bleeding Kansas!

JEWELL'S QUEST.

For years American tanners have tried in vain to manufacture genuine "Russia leather." They could make leather which at first glance looked and smelled like Russia leather, but its gloss and perfume were extremely short-lived. The true Russia leather porte-monnaie, which can be carried in the pocket for years without loss of its lustre, and which will perfume a large woman or an average-sized man thoroughly and permanently, has never been successfully imitated. Our leather manufacturers have had to confess their inferiority to the foreign manufacturers of despotic Russia, and the confession has naturally saddened and humiliated them. Now, however, the days of their mourning are ended. Mr. JEWELL, who not very long ago was our Ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburg, remembered, even in the gay scenes of the Russian capital, the woes of American leather manufacturers, and devoted himself to the task of discovering the secret of Russia leather. He succeeded, and in every American tannery he is now regarded as the ablest diplomatist and noblest patriot our country has ever produced.

It is not usually a part of an Ambassador's duty to learn the secrets of the tanning industry, and most men in Mr. JEWELL'S place would have been at a loss to know precisely how to begin the work of investigation. Mr. JEWELL has not described, in his official dispatches, the exact manner in which he made his discovery, but the general belief in tanning circles is that he proved himself a master of detective strategy. It is quite possible that he has never told the whole story to any one, but we may safely assume that there is more or less foundation for the narrative of JEWELL'S quest, which is current among the tanners of the forest and the merchants of the Swamp.

Of course, Mr. JEWELL knew that to boldly ask the Czar or any other of his Russian acquaintances how to make Russia leather would be to invite a false or frivolous reply. He therefore concealed his purpose under the pretext of a longing for a pair of Russia leather boots. One day, when discussing a bunch of delicate candles in company with the Czar, he casually remarked: "By the bye, Czar, who's your bootmaker?" His affable Majesty, after wiping his mustache, briefly replied, mentioning the name of the boot-maker in question, and adding: "He can make you a good pair of boots if he wants to, but I don't believe he cares to take a large contract just at present. However, you just tell him I sent you, and he'll probably rig you out if he has leather enough." Now, as it is notorious that the Czar wears Russia leather boots, this information, so astutely gained, was of inestimable importance to Mr. JEWELL, since it would enable him to visit a Russia leather shop and to examine its contents.

As soon as lunch was over, Mr. JEWELL withdrew from the imperial presence, and flung himself into a "suwarrow," or cab, ordering the "diebitsch," or driver, to gallop his horses, and stimulating him with the promise of an extra "staresti" in addition to his legal fare, the eager minister soon reached the shoe-maker's door. At first, the shoe-maker, after a desponding glance at Mr. JEWELL, said that his last army contract had nearly ruined him, and that he could not enter into a second large enterprise. When, however, Mr. JEWELL airily remarked that his friend, the Czar, had sent him to the shop, the shoe-maker heaved a sigh and replied, "In that case there is no help for it, and you shall have the boots, if I have leather enough on hand."

For the next hour the indefatigable Minister searched through the premises of the shoe-maker, ostensibly trying to find leather that would suit him. There was not a bottle or a box that he did not open when the shoe-maker was looking the other way, or a smell of any kind that he did not carefully investigate, in the hope of finding a trace of the genuine Russia leather perfume. His efforts were fruitless, until at last, just as he was about to give up the search, he noticed a barrel standing in the back yard. He had scarcely lifted the lid, in order to inspect its contents, when the impatient shoe-maker cried out that it held nothing but birch-bark tar, and that he wished some people would quit rummaging through other people's things, and go about their business. But he could not disturb the joyous and contented JEWELL. The latter had recognized in the birch-bark tar the identical perfume of Russia leather. The problem was solved at last, and the secret of making genuine Russia leather was in the possession of the American Minister.

Mr. JEWELL changed his mind about those boots, and informed the shoe-maker that he would not make a contract for them until leather should become more plentiful. In the meantime he would buy a little birch-bark tar and rub his Connecticut boots with it. So he ordered ten barrels of the tar at ten dollars each, shipped them to New-York, resigned his mission, and hurried home to spread the glad tidings of his discovery among the delighted tanners of his native land. As has already been said, this story cannot be substantiated in all its details but it nevertheless bears every appearance of truth. Mr. JEWELL has redeemed our diplomatic corps from the reproach of uselessness, and has shown that an ambassador with a substantial intellect and a trained and accomplished nose can do something more than attend balls and write dispatches to the Secretary of State. The American tanners should at once unite their resources and make Mr. JEWELL a pair of Russia leather boots as a testimonial of their gratitude and admiration, and it might not be amiss to have a bronze medal struck commemorating the ambassador's brilliant achievement, and ornamented with a bas-relief representing him in the very act of opening the shoe-maker's barrel and bringing into action his able and henceforth historic nose.

OBITUARY.

REAR ADMIRAL THEODORUS BAILEY.

Rear Admiral Theodorus Bailey, of the United States Navy, died in Washington, yesterday, at the age of 72 years. He is the third Rear Admiral on the retired list who has died since Sunday last. Admiral Bailey was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., in the year 1805. While living at his birth-place he witnessed the terrible naval conflict on Lake Champlain which resulted in a decisive victory for the American flag. Impressed with what he had seen, he accepted as his pet hero Commodore Macdonough, the American commander in the battle, and his mind became fixed upon making the Navy the theatre of his life. In the year 1818, when he was only 13 years old, an appointment as Midshipman in the Navy was procured for him, and he immediately entered upon his duties. After nine years of service he was commissioned a Lieutenant. For two years thereafter he was on duty on the receiving-ship at the Brooklyn Navy-yard. A period of shore service, lasting several years, intervened before he was ordered to the sloop-of-war Vincennes, in which vessel he made a two years' cruise in the Pacific. From 1837 to 1843, his employments were various, and not of a nature to bring his name before the public. In the latter year he was ordered to the frigate Constellation, and made a cruise in East Indian waters, lasting three years. On returning to this country, after a short period of shore duty at the Brooklyn Navy-yard, he was given the command of the store-ship Lexington. At the outbreak of the Mexican war he was ordered, with the Lexington, to join the Pacific Squadron. The Mexican ports of California were then points of attack, and the Lexington took to the Pacific Coast several officers who were to join Fremont, when the gallant Pathfinder and his little force should finish their long and toilsome journey across the continent. Among those officers were Gens. William T. Sherman and Henry W. Halleck. On the way to San Francisco Lieut. Bailey put into the port of San Blas and captured the town. He afterward made his head-quarters at San Francisco, but frequently left there at the head of expeditions against places held by the Mexicans. All his enterprises were successful, and he was several times commended for his gallant and prudent conduct. While at San Francisco he assisted to establish there, and in other places, our form of civil government instead of the Mexican system. When returning to the Atlantic coast in the Lexington, Lieut. Bailey visited Panama, and suppressed the riots which occurred there when the Darien Railway was completed. His actions while attached to the Pacific Squadron led to his promotion to be a Commander on March 6, 1849. After several years of shore duty he was commissioned as a Captain on Dec. 15, 1855. During the years 1856 and 1857 he commanded the sloop-of-war St. Mary's. From the time of that service until the outbreak of the rebellion Capt. Bailey was not actively employed. He was then given the command of the frigate Colorado, and assigned to the Western Gulf Blockading Squadron. Capt. Bailey's first service against the rebels was in the bombardment of the Confederate fortifications near Pensacola, Florida. In this engagement he displayed gallantry and much skill in the management of his vessel and her armament. He afterward blockaded the mouth of the Mississippi, and when Farragut's expedition arrived there, previous to the capture of New-Orleans, he volunteered to take part in the conflict. His services were accepted, and he became second in command to Farragut. The Colorado drew too much water to cross the bar, so he went aboard the Cayuga, and, in her, led the right of the attacking force, composed of the first division of gun-boats and the second division of ships, past Forts St. Philip and Jackson, sustaining and returning with interest their heavy fire. Having passed the forts, the Cayuga got into the midst of the rebel fleet of rams and gun-boats. She was far in advance of the other Union vessels, and it seemed as if she must be sunk or captured. This situation called for the display of all Capt. Bailey's courage and skill in the management of his vessel. He met the demand, and proved victorious in the face of tremendous odds. He beat off most of the gun-boats and captured several, and by skillful steering he prevented the rams from running his vessel down. After fighting an unequal battle for a long time, he was relieved by the arrival of supporting vessels. A few hours later Capt. Bailey anchored the Cayuga in front of the camp of a rebel regiment, and after firing grapeshot and canister for a time, compelled the entire force to surrender to him, with all their equipments. It was to Capt. Bailey that New-Orleans was surrendered. He went ashore, accompanied only by a Midshipman, and passed directly to the City Hall, where he met Gen. Mansfield Lovell, the rebel commander, who surrendered his sword to him. Capt. Bailey then ordered the Stars and Stripes to be hoisted over the City Hall and other buildings, and on his way back to his ship had the pleasure of seeing the national banner again floating over the Crescent City. His bravery and professional skill evoked the highest praise from Admiral Farragut, who made him carry to Washington the dispatches announcing the capture of New-Orleans, which stated in glowing words the honorable part Capt. Bailey took in the conflicts and their culmination. Capt. Bailey was, accordingly, made a Commodore on July 16, 1862. Although he was in poor health, he asked for active duty, and in the Fall of the same year was assigned to the command of the Eastern Gulf Blockading Squadron. In this position, by his great energy and persistence, he stopped the running of the blockade on the Florida coast which had previously been indulged in almost with impunity by the operators from Nassau, N. P. When the war closed Commodore Bailey became commandant of the Portsmouth Navy-yard, where he remained until 1867. While there, on July 25, 1866, he was commissioned a Rear Admiral. Three months later he retired from active service, having been on duty for 48 years and 10 months. Since his retirement he has resided in Washington, and has several times performed special duty there.

THE MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MURDERER.

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 10.—The exceptions taken to the rulings of the court in the trial of John D. Lee, the Mountain Meadows murderer, and to his sentence, were overruled by the Supreme Court of the Territory to-day, and the Second District Court was ordered to fix another day for Lee's execution. It is probable that an appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

AN AMERICAN CAPTAIN'S REWARD.

OTTOWA, Canada, Feb. 10.—The Department of Marine and Fisheries have procured a valuable gold watch for presentation to Capt. Osborne, of the American bark C. E. Jayne, for rescuing the crew of the wrecked British ship Bethlehem.

ALBANY.

PROPOSED CITY LEGISLATION.

THE BILLS INTRODUCED IN THE ASSEMBLY—EVERY DEPARTMENT OF THE CITY GOVERNMENT AFFECTED—REVIEW OF THE BILLS RELATING TO THE POLICE DEPARTMENT—ENORMOUS EXTENT OF THE POWERS PURPOSED TO BE VESTED IN IT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Saturday, Feb. 10, 1877.

Examination of the Assembly books shows that up to this date 77 bills directly affecting the City of New-York, or institutions in it, have been introduced in the lower branch of the State Legislature. Nine of these bills are to extend or amend the charters of City corporations; six were bills for the relief of certain District Court Clerks, and have been merged in one general bill; the others are for every possible and impossible purpose in connection with the City Government, in whole or in part. Relating to the various courts, we have Mr. Langbein's bill for a commission to revise and codify the laws governing the District Courts; Mr. Strahan's two bills giving the Judges of these courts the right to appoint their own Clerks, and also the appointment of eight Marshals to each court; Mr. Corsa's bill to give the Marine Court power to appoint the same number of Marshals; Mr. Strahan's bill to abolish the Marine Court and substitute for it a City Court, being the same bill Mr. Bixby has introduced in the Senate; and lastly, there is Mr. Langbein's proposed constitutional amendment, which was in the Legislature last year, abolishing several of the lower courts and transferring their powers to the Superior Court.

Of bills affecting departments, we have bills to abolish the Park Department, to abolish the Dock Department, and to abolish the new Court-House Commission, the powers and duties of each to be vested in the Department of Public Works; other bills to merge the Department of Buildings in the Fire Department; Mr. O'Hare has yet another to abolish the Board of Health; and there is the comprehensive bill, in its present form mainly affecting the financial administration of the City, which was in the Legislature last session under the name of the "Woodin Charter."

Relating to parks, there are three bills. One gives the Department of Public Works power to complete Morningside Park; another to repeal the Parade Ground act; another to provide for taking a triangular piece of ground in the upper part of the City for a park, the area of it being about three City lots.

Mr. Langbein and Mr. Dimond have each introduced a bill extending the time for paying assessments for improvements, and reducing the rate of interest upon the arrearages.

Bissell, of Niagara, and Gallagher, of Erie, have bills reducing the rates of wharfage for canal-boats, both being measures of much interest to wharf-owners. Bradley, of Kings, has his old bill to give the South Ferry Company another slip for their boats, and another bill to compel the State to pay one-fourth the cost of the East River Bridge. A bill to reduce the rates for pilotage comes from a Long Island member.

There are four bills relating to the Croton Department. One, introduced by Ecclesine, simply proposes for an alteration in a gate-house, or its removal, in the upper part of the City; Dr. Hayes has one ordering the Department of Public Works to sell the contract for the sale of Croton water to steam-ship companies, &c., to the highest bidder; Mr. Fish has another, relating to the water supply of the City, and the bill introduced by Mr. Strahan, which was prepared by the Corporation Counsel, perfects the law of 1871 relative to taking water from the natural lakes in Putnam County. To the passage of this bill the whole of Putnam County is opposed, since if it passes the hopes of a large number of speculative property-owners there, who wish to compel the City to purchase their lands, will be dashed to the ground. It mluckily happens that the Chairman of the Committee on Cities, to which the bill has gone, is the Putnam County representative; but despite of this, it is not likely that Mr. Fish can prevent the passage of the bill, though it is likely he will fight it to the last.

Of City railroad bills, there was the bill to reduce the fare on the Elevated Road, which is killed; and the bill to extend the charter of the Beach Pneumatic Company, which is as good as dead—as it ought to be.

The City armories are the subject of two bills, one in the Senate, the other in the House; but on this topic something further may be said another time.

Of other bills which do not need more than passing mention, there is the bill for the completion of the Third District Court-house, which has been passed; the bill regulating the storage of combustible materials; Mr. Cowdin's bill relating to the protection of theatres against fire; Fiecke's bill authorizing the Department of Public Works to forthwith repave all streets below Fourteenth street; Mr. Mitchell's bill amending the law relating to the Presidency of the Board of Health; and some others.

The important matter of a reduction of salaries is treated in Mr. Langbein's bill on the subject, and a hearing on this, on the Parade Ground Repeal bill, and on the "Woodin Charter" bill will be had by the Committee on Cities next Tuesday afternoon. It is very certain that the Salary bill will have to be remodeled before it can be put on its passage. There are certain legal objections to it in its present form which are believed to be fatal. It is not unlikely that another bill, prepared especially to cure the legal defects of the present bill, will be substituted for it in the committee.

A large number of the bills above referred to are of little importance, for the reason that they have no chance whatever of becoming laws. They are introduced, sent to a committee, and never heard of again.

The bills which derive importance from the strength of the influences exerted in their favor, as well as from their own character, are those affecting the Police Department. These bills are numerous, and all will bear close watching. First on the list comes the bill entitled "An act to make further provision for the Police Department." This is emphatically the Commissioner's bill. It was drawn up by them, it was sent to the Legislature by them, it was introduced at their request, and Commissioner Erhardt appeared before the Committee on Cities to advocate it. As it originally stood it required the Mayor to fill any vacancy in the Police Board by some person belonging to the same political party as the Commissioner whose place was filled, a clumsy way of requiring that the board be non-partisan. It gave the Commissioners power of summary dismissal over the whole force; it created a special force of detectives, under a Superintendent, at a salary of $6,000; the salaries of the members of the force to be from $1,500 to $2,500; it created a contingent fund of $25,000, which was to be expended by the Commissioners without check or supervision of any kind; it gave the board the right to issue subpœnas to witnesses for Police trials; and it prohibited the issuance of an injunction on the board, or any review of its proceedings by the courts. At the hearing before the committee, Mr. Dorman B. Eaton appeared in opposition to the bill, not as a whole, but to some of its more objectionable features. The committee finally referred the bill to Mr. Eaton and Commissioner Erhardt for correction and amendment. These gentlemen have returned it to the committee, but in what shape cannot yet be known.

The next bill of the series is that introduced by Mr. Cowdin, relative to street cleaning, and which, with some amendments, was yesterday reported favorably to the House by the committee. It provides that the street cleaning shall be done by contract, under the control and supervision of the Police Board. The clause transferring to the board the contract for the removal of offal was struck out in committee. The contracts are to be let for cleaning areas of the City not exceeding in size a police precinct. All the powers of inspection and correction over the work are lodged in the board. The Democratic minority of the committee dissented from the report, on the ground that the letting of the contracts and the work of inspection should not be placed in the same hands. When the bill comes up for discussion an amendment will probably be offered, to constitute the Mayor, Commissioner of Public Works, Controller, and President of the Board of Health a board for the letting of these contracts.

The next bill is one for the creation of a Police Pension Fund. It would allow the Commissioners to place on the fund any member of the force who had served for 15 years continuously; and any member who for 10 years had contributed $2 per month to the fund. Moneys derived from fines were to go to the fund, and a certain proportion of the moneys derived from the sale of liquor licenses. This bill also [illegible] from the Police Board, and was drawn up by the counsel to the department.

Next we have two bills, which may be very briefly summarized. One of these abolishes the Excise Commission and transfers all its powers to the Police Department. Though necessarily somewhat long, its object and intent might be thus expressed: On and after the passage of this act, the Excise Commission is abolished, and all its powers, duties, and obligations shall be vested in and exercised by the Board of Police. This bill was introduced by Dr. Hayes, on request. Mr. O'Hare introduced a bill quite as sweeping in its charater, which proposes to abolish the Board of Health, and transfer its duties to the Police Department. It creates a Health Board to consist of certain City officers, acting with the Police officials; but, for all practical purposes, the Police Board was the controlling power. This bill, however, is already buried, its introducer acknowledging he sees no hope for it.

The last bill on the list is the extra one also relative to street cleaning, which would vest in the Police Board authority to contract with owners of property below high-water line, to build crib-work around it, inside of which the refuse swept from the street should be dumped, until the whole was filled up to the level of the surrounding streets, the made ground being nicely covered over and graded with at least two feet of fine, clear sand. This remarkable bill is supposed by some people here to be a product of the fertile genius of Mr. George W. Blunt. If it is not, the gentleman will gladly embrace this opportunity to write to THE TIMES and disclaim the bill.

From a review of the above measures it will be seen that if all of them become laws the Police Commissioners would be clothed with powers so extensive as to make them the autocrats of New-York. They would have absolute and unchecked control over the whole force of more than 2,000 policemen of all grades; would exercise all the powers of inspection, correction, and control over the whole City now exercised by the Health Board; would grant or revoke every license to sell liquor within the City limits; would have the entire work of cleaning the streets and the care of other sanitary matters in their hands; and, lastly, would be authorized to go into the business of contracting to fill sunken lots all round the City boundaries. To complete and round off the whole, by the provisions of the bill which the Commissioners have drawn up for themselves none of their acts could be brought under review of the courts. Of course, it is wildly improbable that all the bills referred to will become laws, but there is no certainty as to what portions of them may, and the necessity for vigilance in respect to all is obvious.

In conclusion, two important bills not referred to above should be mentioned, as they will probably both become laws. One forbids employes of the City acting as referees; the other abolishes the requirement of confirmation by the Board of Aldermen of the Mayor's appointments.

The city bills which have come out of committee with a favorable report, and appear on the printed files of the House, are eight in number. One is a private bill relating to the distribution of an estate; two affect charitable institutions in the city; the bill for the relief of the District Court Clerks has passed, and so has that for the completion of the Third District Court-house. Mr. Langbein's bill for the revision of the laws affecting the district courts has been ordered to a third reading; Mr. Cozan's bill, regulating the practice in the Surrogate's Court, is on the general order calendar; and there also is Mr. Cowdin's bill, requiring the Mayor to call an advisory council on Municipal affairs, which is not at all likely to become a law.

A PENNSYLVANIA BANK SUSPENDS.

FAILURE OF THE MOUNTAIN CITY BANK OF POTTSVILLE, PENN.—THE EFFECT OF THE HARD TIMES IN THE COAL REGIONS—WHAT THE MANAGERS SAY OF THE FAILURE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POTTSVILLE, Feb. 10.—The hard times which the slack state of last season's coal business brought upon this community, which is essentially dependent on the mines for its prosperity, are showing themselves now in the breaking down or withdrawal of the business of one banking institution after another. Last August THE TIMES reported the failure of the Miners' Trust Company's Bank, with a loss to depositors of a million and a quarter of dollars. Two weeks ago the Merchants' Exchange Bank, another State institution, incorporated under State laws, gave up the struggle of existence, declined to receive deposits, and notified depositors to bring in their books for settlement. It is now paying off its liabilities in full. This action created no sensation, but it was with much amazement and no little consternation that the community learned this morning that the Mountain City Bank has closed its doors. This, though a young concern, was one of the foremost banking houses in Pottsville. It was incorporated in 1871, under the State laws, and was owned principally by a few wealthy citizens of the neighboring borough of St. Clair. It was prosperous from the start. Founded with a capital of $100,000, only $6,000 of which was paid in, it made money rapidly, and last Summer invested $75,000 of its surplus funds in a handsome new building, which is now one of the "lions" of the town. In August, when the Miners' Trust Bank suspended, its deposits aggregated $205,000, and it was in the full tide of prosperity. But the hard times came, depositors drew out their savings to buy necessaries, money loaned was slow in coming back, and this morning the following notice was tacked on the door:

"In consequence of large withdrawals of deposits during the past few months the Directors of this bank deem it their duty to suspend. They feel confident that there will be no loss to depositors, time only being required to convert the assets. Signed by order of the Board."

According to a statement drawn up by the Directors the assets amount to $190,000, not included in which are guarantee bonds for the $40,000 of unpaid capital which is pledged for the payment of depositors. Among the assets are $98,800 of bills discounted, selected as good of a total of $120,395. The liabilities are set down at $164,400, only $82,000 of which is due depositors, against $205,000 six months ago. The Directors announce their intention to convert the assets into cash, pay off all liabilities, and retire from business. Comparatively few poor people will suffer from this suspension, and most of that class of depositors had already withdrawn their accounts, and the loss will fall principally on men who had big sums in bank. The managers express confidence in their ability to pay depositors in full, and say that they suspended not because they were compelled to, but because it was not profitable to continue their business, and they were afraid of a total failure if they kept on. The principal officers of the suspended bank are H. C. Russell, President; John Dawson, Vice President; C. H. Dengler, Secretary and Cashier.

ARREST OF BANK OFFICERS.

THE AFFAIRS OF THE FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' NATIONAL BANK OF HARTFORD—SERIOUS DISCLOSURES MADE—THE PRESIDENT AND CASHIER ARRESTED.

HARTFORD, Feb. 10.—The examination of Bank Examiner Mygatt into the affairs of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank in this city has caused developments which led this afternoon to the arrest by the United Marshal of the President, John C. Tracy, and the Cashier, J. L. Chapman, the former for misdemeanor in falsifying accounts so that large deficiencies from overdrafts and poor loans, without the knowledge of the Directors, were covered up, and the Cashier for embezzlement of $7,500. Both officers were brought before the United States Commissioner and gave bonds for their appearance before the United States Court. The total amount of loss by the bank from the overdrafts and loans on poor securities sanctioned by the President is now thought to be about $600,000. On this there will be some salvage, and the net loss will not probably be over $500,000. The bank has a surplus of $300,000 and individual profits of $90,000. The loss will, therefore, wipe out the surplus, and probably impair the capital of $1,105,000 about 10 per cent, as telegraphed on Wednesday night last. The disclosure causes much sorrow as well as great astonishment in all circles here, as the President and Cashier have borne excellent characters and been held in the highest estimation by all. The motive of Mr. Tracy in loaning such large amounts on insufficient security is not clear, as it does not yet appear that he has personally profited by the loans.

The deficiency has been very adroitly concealed from the Bank Examiner and the Directors. The bank is able to meet all its liabilities, and will continue business under the charge of Mr. Henry Dewey, the leading stockholder, Director, and Vice President.

A FATHER'S LOVE FOR HIS SON.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 10.—Judge Logwood, of the Criminal Court, this morning fined ex-Mayor John Logwood $50 and sentenced him to jail until he will answer for refusing to testify against his son Robert, charged with forging his father's name to an order for a small amount on Messrs. Barrhus & May. Mr. Logwood refused on the ground that his testimony would disgrace his son.

NEW-YORK POLITICIANS ABROAD.

WORKING IN THE INTEREST OF CERTAIN PERSONS WHO WANT OFFICE — THE UNITED STATES MARSHALSHIP — HOW THE PRESENT INCUMBENTS ARE TO BE PROVIDED FOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10. — Postmaster Smyth, of Albany, State Senator Tobey, and Assemblymen Clapp and Waddell, together with Rodney Daniels, Collector of the Port of Buffalo, A. B. Cornell, of New-York, and other lesser lights, are now in Washington. They are very reticent as to the object of their visit, but it is understood that they are here in the interest of certain gentlemen who want to be appointed to Federal office in New-York State. Among others, there is to be a change in the office of United States Marshal of both the Southern and Northern Districts of New-York. Marshal Quimby, of the Northern District, is a personal friend of Gen. Grant, and he is to have a place in the pay department of the Army, and, according to the present programme Gen. MacDougall, member of Congress from the Auburn district, is to have the position made vacant by his resignation. This office Gen. MacDougall will not refuse to accept. The visiting gentlemen named hope to have a number of important offices filled by Gen. Grant before his term of office expires, believing that the incoming President will not interfere with appointments made by his predecessor.

THE TURKISH COMPLICATIONS.

A BASIS OF PEACE BETWEEN TURKEY AND SERVIA AGREED UPON—RUSSIA AND THE TREATY OF 1856.

BELGRADE, Feb. 10.—Minister Ristics and the Turkish delegate, Perteff Effendi, in three conferences, have entirely agreed on the formal points of the Turkish bases of peace, namely: Saluting the Turkish flag, the conservation of the Servian fortresses, and the prevention of armed bands crossing the frontier. Perteff Effendi has asked the Porte for instructions on other points. When the preliminaries are settled M. Christies will proceed to Constantinople to definitively negotiate terms of peace.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 10.—Le Nord, the Russian organ in this city, says: "If Europe renounces its right of action under the treaty of 1856, Russia will be justified in again assuming the attitude she held before that treaty, which will thus become a dead letter."

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

THE LONDON STOCK MARKET INACTIVE—THE ERIE REORGANIZATION SCHEME—THE MINCING LANE MARKETS.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—At the Stock Exchange during the week business has been very inactive. There has been a better demand for discount, both at the bank and in the open market. Canadian railways are unchanged. Foreign Governments have nearly all slightly lowered, the heaviest decline being in Turkish. American Governments were strong. Anglo-American and Direct Telegraphs are ¾ to 1 lower. Erie descriptions are heavy in consequence of an announcement at a meeting of stockholders this week that the necessary number of stock and bond holders had not adhered to the reorganization scheme, but the Times, in its financial column to-day, says it learns that the meeting had a good effect, and nearly £500,000, in bonds, have been sent in since, and that but little more is required to give the scheme the necessary support. The silver market has been quiet, and the price has found the level of Indian exchanges. Yesterday's purchases are understood to have been for America. The market is now almost bare of supplies.

Business in the Mincing lane markets during the week has continued inanimate, and prices have varied little. Low sugars were again dearer. Other kinds attracted more attention, and yesterday there was an export demand for floating cargoes. Refined closes rather better. The Glasgow sugar market is steady, with a fair business doing. There has been a decline since Saturday of 6d. on yellow and 9d. to 1s. on medium sorts. The finest crystals are unchanged. Plantation Ceylon coffee has gone at irregular and sometimes lower rates. A few cargoes of new Rangoon rice sold at previous rates on a slight reduction, but cargoes off the coast and on the spot kept relatively high. Indian teas met a ready sale. The market for China was unimproved. Some low Congous by auction met with more competition at the recent decline. All kinds of spice were dull and quotations tending down ward. Saltpetre was in limited demand.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.

FAVORABLE NEWS FROM PERU—A LARGE FIRE IN GUATEMALA—THE NICARAGUAN CANAL SCHEME—THE COFFEE CROP IN COSTA RICA—ARRIVAL OF MEXICAN REFUGEES AT PANAMA.

The following correspondence of the New-York Associated Press was received by the steamer Colon, which arrived here yesterday from Aspinwall:

PANAMA, Feb. 2.—Everything is quiet on the north and south coasts. The news from Peru continues favorable. A delay had occurred in carrying out the new law passed by Congress which gave Mr. Henry Meiggs control of the Cerro de Pasco Mines, on account of the Government wishing to impose certain conditions which Mr. Meiggs could not accept; but it was expected that the difficulty would be overcome and the work proceeded with at an early day.

The news from Central America is unimportant. A large fire at Champinco, Guatemala, on the 18th of January, destroyed about $15,000 worth of property, and came near destroying about 3,000 quintals of coffee stored upon the premises of Messrs. Magee, Montis & Co. The latest general news, received by the steamer Honduras and published in the Star and Herald of Feb. 1, is as follows: The Department of Public Instruction has been detached from that of Foreign Affairs, and Senor Montufar appointed at the head of it.

The Sovereign Legislative body of Salvador opened on the 15th ult. amid great rejoicing. The President's message is a very able document, and was read before the Assembly.

The press of the Nicaraguan Republic is full of articles extolling the merits of the Nicaraguan Canal scheme. A new project, proposed by Mr. Bianchez, is mentioned, which differs somewhat from the Lull route, and the estimated cost of which is placed at about $38,000,000.

There is no improvement whatever in the news from Costa Rica. Politically, matters seem to be daily going from bad to worse, and the country continues in a very unsettled condition, with a total want of public confidence. The coffee crop has fairly commenced coming in and will be a fair average. Railroad matters continue in a most unsatisfactory condition. The merchants of Limone had visited the capital in order, if possible, to get a settlement with the Government for amounts due on railroad account. After much trouble they succeeded in setting most of their claims by receiving bonds at nine, 10, 11, and 12 months. To turn these into cash they had to lose very heavily.

Colombian affairs still remain in a most unsatisfactory condition. From the interior it is impossible to learn how matters stand, except that there have been, and still continue to be, guerrilla skirmishes and wholesale assassinations whenever the opportunity is offered on either side. From the data thus far at hand, there is no telling when the struggle will be ended or how it will terminate. Until recently the Isthmus has been comparatively quiet, but the wave of revolution threatens to sweep over Panama as well as the interior States. There is a feeling of insecurity and dread here lest any day or night there will be an outbreak.

Ex-President of Mexico Lerdo de Tejada and Staff, consisting of Señores Mariano Escobedo, Romero Robledo, J. J. Baz, G. Ruiz, and M. Mourey, have arrived at Panama, en route for New-York. They were conveyed in a small boat from a point about 12 miles above Acapulco to that harbor, when they went on board the steamer Salvador, and remained there until the Colima arrived. Manzanilla and Mazatlan had pronounced for Diaz, and Acapulco for Iglesias. Telegraphic instructions have been received by Admiral Murray, from Washington, to remain with the flag-ship Pensacola at Panama during the present unsettled state of political affairs in this country.

AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

GENERAL MENTION.

The fact that a "bladder-nosed" seal has joined the tenants of the Aquarium is made public.

The last nights of "The Happy Moke" are announced at the San Francisco Minstrels' Broadway Opera-house.

Mr. Heller's third programme is to be interpreted nightly, this week, at the Wonder Theatre, matinée performances also occurring on Wednesday and Saturday.

Gilmore's Garden may be visited on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings of this week. Races and athletic sports still constitute the regular entertainment.

A concert complimentary to Mr. Carl Alves has been tendered to that gentleman by his pupils. It will take place at Steinway Hall, on Thursday evening of this week.

The season of English opera at the Academy of Music terminated yesterday afternoon, when Miss Kellogg sang in "Faust." The audience was, as usual, large and appreciative.

A concert of English glees will be given at Chickering Hall, on Thursday evening next, Misses Beebe and Finch, Mrs. Hills, and Messrs. Ellard, Nilsen, Baird, and Aiken, being the artists.

"Lemons" continues the attraction—and a potent one—at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. The comedy appears likely to have as prolonged a run as any of Mr. Daly's more substantial achievements.

The successful comedy called "Our Boys," will be acted at the New Broadway Theatre on tomorrow evening week. Announcement is made that it will be represented by a company of unusual strength.

"Our Boarding House" still attracts overflowing audiences to the Park Theatre. The merriment which the numerous droll scenes of the piece elicit gives promise that the comedy will have a protracted career.

"Around the World" still gathers large audiences at Niblo's, and, hence, no speedy change of programme need be looked for. "A Trip to the Moon" will be produced after the present attraction shall have lost its potency.

A concert, in which a company of jubilee singers will supply the music, may be attended at the Grand Opera-house this evening. During the week, "Monsieur Alphonse" will be the dramatic attraction at the same theatre.

A cantata by F. O. S. Darley, Esq., called "Malchus" will be made known at Chickering Hall on Thursday evening next. It will be interpreted, as to the vocal music, by the New-York Choral Union, and the orchestra will be under the direction of Mr. P. S. Gilmore.

It should not be forgotten that Mme. Essipoff will, this week, give three concerts at Steinway Hall. These interesting events will take place, respectively, on the evenings of Tuesday and Friday, and on the afternoon of Saturday. Thursday Mme. Essipoff is to play in Brooklyn.

"La Petite Mariée" is to have but three additional representations at the Earle Theatre. It will be sung there Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, and will then make way for a new version of "La Péricholе;" or, to speak with greater precision, for a revised and augmented edition of that well-known work.

"The Danicheffs" will be represented at the Union Square Theatre until further notice. The splendor of the mise en scène of the drama will in itself repay attendance at the performance, even if the curious phases of life which the piece unfolds are not generally deemed of sufficient variety and theatrical impressiveness for exhibition upon the stage.

Mr. Rowe's new drama called "Fifth Avenue," will be represented at Booth's Theatre throughout this week. Liberal excisions have made the play more compact than when it was first acted, and the variety and picturesqueness of its incidents have lost none of their effectiveness by the nightly repetition of the piece, to large audiences, since Monday.

The West Side Association for the Relief of the Poor have arranged with "Slavin's Georgia Cabin Singers" to give a series of concerts in aid of the "poor of all classes," and of the "Sea-side Sanitarium." The first of these entertainments, the object of which appears to us worthy of hearty encouragement, will occur at Chickering Hall, on Wednesday evening of this week.

"Wild Oats" will be acted at Wallack's Theatre to-morrow evening and during the week. Mr. Wallack will represent Rover, and the distribution of roles will further enlist the services of Messrs. Gilbert, Beckett, Arnott, and Stevenson, and those of Misses Rose Wood and Effie Germon. A revival of O'Keefe's famous comedy with so powerful a cast ought to be greeted with lively satisfaction.

The matinée concert at Chickering Hall in which Miss Abbott took part, yesterday, was very numerously attended, and the applause was bounteous. The lady's approaching début in opera, at the Academy of Music, is now announced. She will sing in "La Fiella del Regimento," two representations of Donizetti's opera being announced to occur, respectively, on Feb. 23 and 24.

Mr. Daly's successful "spectacular local folly," called "Round the Clock," will be revived at the Olympic Theatre to-morrow evening with a powerful distribution of parts, and a mise en scène of suitable variety and realism. Messrs. Owen Fawcett, Leclercq, Lamb, and Davidge, and Misses Drew and Mary Wells, are to fill the principal rôles in the play proper, and the impressiveness of the scenes accessory to the drama will be heightened by the performances of sundry athletes, gymnasts, and vocalists.

A formal announcement of the approaching "Wagner Festival," to be given under the direction of Mr. Fryer, at the Academy of Music, may be read elsewhere. The production of "Die Walküre" is promised definitely, and representations of "Lohengrin," "Der Fliegende Holländer," and "Tannhäuser" are also to take place, the first performance of the series being set down for the evening of Monday, March 12. We append the complete list of artists who, under the baton of Mr. Neuendorff, will take part in the festival. Engagements have been made with the following: Mmes. Pappenheim, Canissa, Listner, and Clara Perl, and Messrs. Bischoff, Fritsch, Preusser, Blum, Sullivan, Formes, Steinbuch, and Lenoir. A suitable array of comprimarii and comprimarie has also been secured, and the orchestra, we are assured, will be of unusual proficiency and numerical strength.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11—1 A. M.—For the Middle and Eastern States south-west winds, stationary or rising barometer and temperature, clear or partly cloudy weather.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

At 6.30 last evening a fire occurred on the third floor of the St. Germain Hotel, at the corner of Broadway and Twenty-second street, caused by a defective flue. The fire was very promptly extinguished. Mr. W. G. Tompkins, the proprietor, estimates his loss on furniture at $1,500. The building is owned by H. W. Field, and is damaged to the extent of $500.

At an early hour yesterday morning a fire destroyed the large frame structure on the corner of Twelfth and Lumber streets, in Chicago, occupied as a planing mill by W. R. Robbins & Co., as a furniture factory by Joseph Schuebert, and as a sash, door, and blind factory by Fallin & Co. No business was being done in the building at the time. The loss is $25,000; insurance very light.

The pattern shop of Jossely's foundry, on Ruggles street, Boston, took fire from the engine-room last evening, and was damaged to the extent of $3,000; insured.

Weeks' paper mill at Skaneateles, N. Y., was burned at 9 o'clock Friday night. The fire caught in the rag-room. The loss is $15,000.

A. J. Sherbourn's stable, at Pittsfield, N. H., was burned Friday night. The loss is $4,000; insured.

A STEAM-SHIP BURNED AT SEA.

PORT ROYAL, S. C., Feb. 10.—The steamer Bavaria, bound from New-Orleans to Liverpool, was burned at sea Feb. 6 at 9:30 P. M. The ship was on fire fore and aft, but the passengers all escaped in the ship's boats, and were picked up by the bark Dorothy Thompson in a north-east gale 19 hours after, and landed at Beaufort, S. C. They lost all their effects.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 10.—The steam-ship Bavaria, which was burned at sea on the 6th inst., sailed from New-Orleans Jan. 26 with a cargo of 4,325 bales of cotton, 50 bags of seed-cotton, and 1,000 barrels of resin. The vessel and cargo were valued at $500,000.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—Hon. Charles A. Eldridge, ex-member from Wisconsin, was before the Real Estate Pool Committee, (Mr. Glover, of Missouri, Chairman,) to-day. He testified that the members of the pool were Hon. Pierce M. B. Young, ex-member from Georgia, ex-Commissioner of Indian Affairs Parker, Secretary Belknap, Jay Cooke & Co., W. S. Huntington, and himself. Kilbourn and Latta acted as Trustees only, and had no pecuniary interest in the matter until they became Assignees for the purpose of making a settlement with Jay Cooke & Co., who had gone into bankruptcy. Mr. Eldridge also stated that no member of the pool was aware where the property in which he, as a member of the pool, was interested was located. He also says, in addition to the above, that he was attorney for a number of contractors under the Board of Public Works, but declined to give their names, inasmuch as this, he maintained, was his private business as an attorney.

The Treasurer now holds $339,611,450, in United States bonds to secure national bank circulation, and $19,199,000 to secure public deposits. Amount of United States bonds deposited for circulation during the week ending to-day, $1,398,000. Amount of United States bonds held for circulation withdrawn during the week ending to-day, $908,500. National bank circulation outstanding—Currency notes, $318,236,266; gold notes, $1,428,940.

Receipts of national bank notes for redemption for the week ending to-day, as compared with the corresponding week last year:

	1876.	1877.
New-York	$1,616,000	$1,155,000
Boston	1,209,000	1,512,000
Philadelphia	211,000	181,000
Miscellaneous	1,202,000	1,384,800
Total	$4,238,000	$4,212,800

Receipts for to-day, $764,000.

Secretary Morrill has continued to improve throughout the day and evening, and at midnight was much better. He is regaining his appetite and his friends are greatly encouraged.

The balances in the Treasury at the close of business to-day were: Currency, $11,461,034; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $35,815,000; coin, including $54,690,900 in coin certificates, $67,825,485; outstanding legal tenders, $364,984,813.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens' physician reports that Mr. Stephens has suffered from an attack of pneumonia, followed by an acute bronchitis. He is rapidly improving.

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

THE SIEGE OF MATAMOROS—DIAZ'S GOVERNMENT SUPPORTED.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Feb. 10.—The Mexican steamer Mauricio, with Vera Cruz dates to the 8th inst., reached the mouth of the Rio Grande this morning, having on board Gen. Miguel Blanco, who has been appointed by President Diaz military commander of this frontier. Gen. Blanco was Minister of War at one time under President Juarez, and is an official of experience and ability. He reached this city with his staff about dusk, and was accompanied to Matamoras by Gen. Placido de Vega, who has been a refugee in Texas for some months past.

The Collector of customs appointed at Matamoros last Spring by Gen. Diaz, entered upon the discharge of his duties to-day, as did the Federal Judges and several civil officers, and the siege of the city has been raised. When the Mauricio left Vera Cruz, Gen. Diaz was expected to return to the City of Mexico in a few days. The entire Republic supports Diaz, and the country is quiet.

RELEASE OF CUBAN PRISONERS.

HAVANA, Feb. 10.—A decree has been issued by Captain General Jovellar, in which, after setting forth in a preamble that the war against the insurgents is resulting very advantageously to the Spaniards, he pardons all political prisoners confined on the Isles of Pines, who are natives or residents of that portion of the Island of Cuba lying west of the Trocha, provided said prisoners are only confined by order of the authorities and not by sentence of any court.

ENGLISH FISHING VESSELS WRECKED.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—Forty Yarmouth and Lowestoft fishing vessels, having over 200 men and boys on board, are missing. The Government has dispatched two vessels in search of them.

"EPH" HOLLAND HELD IN BAIL.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 10.—Ephraim Holland was to-day held in the sum of $1,000 bail to answer a charge of being implicated in fraudulent voting in the October elections.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Ex-Assessor Levi Rosener died yesterday at San Francisco.

Henry J. Tomlinson, of Memphis, Tenn., died at Ashtabula, Ohio, yesterday of injuries received in the recent railroad disaster at that place.

Rev. E. J. Carpenter, of Swanzey, N. H., was thrown from his sleigh yesterday afternoon, and died soon after from the injuries he received.

UNIVERSAL TESTIMONY.

The famous "Automatic" is fast superseding the noisy, hard-running, troublesome, two-thread sewing-machines of the past, and produces, even in the hands of an inexperienced operator, more beautiful and much more durable work. Call and examine, or write for full particulars, No. 658 Broadway, corner Bond street, New-York.—Exchange.

TO THE GENTLEMEN of New-York.—We respectfully announce having this day REDUCED the price of our widely popular SILK HATS to $8, and our DERBY HATS to $5. With this announcement we note a recent reduction in cost of labor as enabling us in a measure to meet the exigencies of the times, and assure you that, in emulation of the character and reputation of our fabrics in the past, we shall produce the AMIDON HAT of the future. F. H. AMIDON'S SON, No. 220 5th av. New-York, Feb. 10.—Advertisement.

White Wheat Gluten

Cures Constipation. Send for circulars. HEALTH FOOD CO., No. 137 5th st.—Advertisement.

LELAND'S Sturtevant House, New-York. Reduced to $3 and $3 50 per day, with board. Rooms, European plan, $1 per day and upward.—Advertisement.

Fifty Per Cent. Saved

By using HIGGINS' GERMAN LAUNDRY SOAP.—Advertisement.

Isaac Smith's Superior Umbrellas.

GINGHAM, any size	$1 00
GUANACO, patented	2 50
SILK, paragon frame	3 50

FINE SILK UMBRELLAS in great variety. UMBRELLAS and PARASOLS to order and repaired. No. 405 BROADWAY, near CANAL ST. No. 1,203 BROADWAY, corner 29TH ST., N. Y. Established 1802.

No business house can afford to be without the electric protection of Holmes' burglar Alarm telegraph Company, No. 571 Broadway, by their Central Office system. It is the best protection from burglars in the City of New-York, as the houses of H. B. Claflin, J. Thorton, and Bacon & Eaton can testify, where burglars have been caught. Beware of imitators, who get a few cents by doing what they see others do, and declare they have a better protection for half the money. They have an exceedingly poor record. We jingle no bells at our door.

From a well-known Dunkard Preacher.

HARTLETON, Union County, Penn., Dec. 24, 1874.

Messrs. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston.

Gentlemen: Having received decided benefit from the use of PERUVIAN SYRUP for Dyspepsia and General Debility of the system, I can recommend it heartily in all cases as being a very effective and pleasant preparation. It gives almost universal satisfaction. Respectfully yours, ADAM BEAVER.

Sold by all druggists.

Ollffe's Tasteless Cod-Liver Oil, Lime, and WILD CHERRY.—The advantage of this compound over the plain oil is that the nauseating taste of the oil is entirely removed. The offensive taste of the oil has long acted as a permanent objection to its use, but in this form the trouble is entirely obviated. It is regularly prescribed by the medical profession. Sold by druggists. Depot, No. 6 Bowery.

St. Mark's Life Insurance Company, one of the most reliable in the City, have in their service a surveyor, Mr. Charles Ross. He suffered with inflammatory Rheumatism in its worst form; every joint in his body was swollen; agony intense. Dr. GILES' LINIMENT, used externally and internally, effected a rapid cure. Depot No. 451 6th av.

Skin and Scalp Diseases. Dr. B. C. Perry, No. 49 Bond st., New-York, cures falling, loss of, and PREMATURE gray hair, REDNESS of the nose, untimely WRINKLES, moth and LIVER-COLORED blotches, PIMPLES, black-heads, MOTH patches, FRECKLES, and all eruptive and other skin diseases.

Pomeroy's Trusses—By far the Best in Use. Ask your physician. POMEROY TRUSS CO., 746 B'way.

MARRIED.

SHERWOOD—VAN ZANDT.—On Saturday, the 10th inst., by Rev. Wheelock H. Parmly, WARNER SHERWOOD to ELISABETH K. VAN ZANDT.

WILLIAMS—MUNROE.—On Wednesday, Jan. 31, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. Frederick B. Savage, assisted by Rev. Nelson Millard, D. D., DAVID SAGE WILLIAMS, of Flushing, Long Island, to MARY LOUISE, daughter of Hon. Allen Munroe, of Syracuse, N. Y.

DIED.

BARRETTO.—In this City, on Friday, Feb. 9, HENRY CORREA, son of the late Francis Barretto.

The relatives and friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend his funeral from St. Andrew's Church, 127th st. and 4th av., on Monday, 12th inst., at 12 o'clock. Train leaves Grand Central Depot at 11:30 A. M.

COMSTOCK.—Feb. 10, 1877, of diphtheria, ARTHUR BURNETT, only son of George W. and Clara L. Comstock, aged 4 years 1 month and 26 days.

Funeral will be attended from the residence of the parents, No. 250 West 14th st., on Monday, Feb. 12, 1877, at 11 A. M.

GREGORY.—On Saturday morning, Feb. 10, 1877, MELVINA ADELE GREGORY, aged 2 years and 4 months.

Funeral from her late home, No. 516 Henry st., Brooklyn, on Monday, 12th inst., at 2 P. M. The relatives and friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend.

HAWK.—On Fri

THE KINGDOM OF ITALY.

RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS IN AND ABOUT THE VATICAN.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT—MATTERS OF STATE AND CHURCH UNDER DISCUSSION—PENALTIES FOR ABUSES COMMITTED BY THE CLERGY—A DISTINGUISHED EVENT IN THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CALENDAR—THE RETURN OF THE POPE FROM AVIGNON FIVE CENTURIES AGO—THE CARNIVAL.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Thursday, Jan. 18, 1877.

Parliament came together at the beginning of the present week, after a vacation of nearly a month. Not enough Deputies presented themselves on the first and second days to go on with regular business, and the opportunity was used by one of the members for an interrogation addressed to Signor Nicotera, the Minister of the Interior, with the intention of getting, if possible, that member of the King's Cabinet into chancery. I do not know when I have witnessed a livelier scene than that presented in the Chamber during the discussion. But the Minister came out triumphant from the contest, and the Deputy Corte withdrew his motion. In various ways effort has been made to damage the credit of the Baron Nicotera, yet the Minister holds firm, and seems to be in a way to leave his enemies defeated, sorrow-stricken, and prostrate on the ground which they have chosen for their warfare. It has repeatedly been asserted that a division exists in the Cabinet, and that it cannot long stand. But from all trustworthy evidence we are led to believe that the Ministry is acting in harmony, and has as good a chance of continued life as the one which preceded it, which clung so tenaciously to power. The party defeated in the recent elections makes in Parliament but a meagre show. The benches of the Right are thinly filled, and until the wind blows from another point of the compass the Opposition does not promise to carry a rich freight of party successes into port. An effort has already been made to break the powerful majority into two sections, but so far without any apparent happy luck. The bill fixing penalties for abuses committed by the clergy is now under discussion in the Chamber. The project encounters in the outset more opposition than was expected. The argument is used that special legislation is not needed, and that laws at present existing are sufficient to correct the evils complained of as cases arise. It is suggested that a new general law, defining with more distinctness the relations and rights of the Church and the State, is needed; one by which more protection and independence shall be guaranteed to the lower clergy, with the object in view of binding them more closely to society and the nation. To my own knowledge there are priests waiting and longing for the increase of the personal influence or power contemplated in the projected legislation.

One of the abuses which the proposed law has in view to correct is that of the conduct of the priests at the final moment of confession, absolution, and extreme unction. If an Italian with Catholic baptism has taken part by political action in any manner by which the Church has been despoiled, either by the voting of laws, or the purchase of confiscated ecclesiastical property, the priest has the power, and it is his duty under the vows by which he holds his office, to refuse the sacraments, without an acknowledgment of error committed in the manner above indicated and such reparation as it is in the power of the dying man to make. Not a few cases of the kind have occurred, and some have yielded, and some have held firm under the pressure exercised upon the conscience at the last trying moment. Language has been used in Parliament during this discussion which, if it could all be quoted, would surprise many among us who still believe Italy to be a Roman Catholic country. The Deputy Trinchera, who, in his speech opposed the bill, said religion is not a social fact; it is a thing wholly individual, and the State has nothing whatever to do with it. Let us leave full liberty to the Church, and in a few years it will either reform or ruin itself. Religious beliefs are a sign of weakness, and for the same reason people go into a church as they go into an asylum of lunatics. The Deputy Marziale declared himself in favor not of punishing the priests, but of attacking the masters in the Vatican, where the head of the evil lies. Until the law of guarantees to the Pope is revoked our position is not logical; and much of the language used by the other speakers was in the same strain.

Yesterday, the 17th of January, was a day which has a distinguished mark in the calendar of the Roman Catholic Church. On that day, just five centuries ago, the Popes of Rome, who had been in exile for 72 years, at Avignon, were once more re-established in this ancient seat. This period of residence in the south of France is commonly called by Catholic writers the Captivity of Babylon of the Pontiffs. A centenary of so much importance, as might be supposed, was not left without due observance here in Rome. Were the Pope in the actual enjoyment of the temporal power, we cannot doubt that the celebration would have had greater éclat, and means would have been used to draw large numbers here to do honor to the occasion. But as the fact stands, the ceremony of commemoration was confined to the most part to the Minerva Church. Under the high altar in that sanctuary is kept the body of St. Catharine, of Sienna, to whose influence, more than to that of any other agent, is given the glory of bringing back to the Vatican the residence of the Pontifical See. The triduo in the Minerva Church at the hour of the Ave Maria was very brilliant with the illumination of the thousands of candles that had been put up, and the part taken by St. Catharine in the Pope's restoration was signalized by an inscription affixed to the walls. According to the story, Catharine, if she did not go in person to Avignon, by her miracles influenced Gregory XI. to remove the chair of Peter to Rome. Of the eight Popes who resided at Avignon, seven were Frenchmen, and not less than three of them from the single City of Limoges—a larger proportion of those not born in Italy than the Pontificate has known in the whole course of its history. To-day, in St. Peter's, the function was ordered with reference to this centenary, and mass was said in the tribune in the presence of the Chapter of the Basilica and a few hundred spectators, of whom most were foreigners. Cardinal Borromeo conducted the office with his usual slightly affected and fat-witted dignity. The music was fine, and well repaid the journey across the city to hear it. Candles were lit on the shrine containing what is said to be St. Peter's chair, but hardly any other sign was given that the occasion was any other than one of ordinary recurrence. The Pope is about to add nearly a dozen new Cardinals to the present diminished list. I do not hear that any vacant hat is to be taken to America, although it seems to be nearly time that the southern portion of the continent had one flung in its direction. Dom Pedro is now in Italy, and is soon expected in Rome. His intimacy with Victor Emmanuel is too close to enable him to find great favor with Pio Nono. The Emperor has so much frankness and independence of spirit that we should not be surprised if he should once more remind the Holy Father that it would not be less graceful than just on his part to meet the King half way, and bring to an end the old differences which have so much soured the temper of the hierarchy.

In my letter from Monte Cassino, trusting to memory, I fell into the error of saying that St. Benedict was born at Subiaco, when it should have been Norcia, near Spoleto, 50 miles or more to the north. The error is not a serious one, but each locality is jealous of the glory of its own great man, and Benedict was one of those moral heroes of whom the world produces but few. Sienna is as proud of St. Catharine as Padua is as the birth-place of the historian Livy, or Velletri as the place where the Octavian family had its origin.

Those who live upon amusements are snuffing the air to get the first scent of carnival, the beginning of which is now not a great way off. The last week of carnival, or the brief season of wild riot, does not promise to be one of even usual animation; but at the last moment an extra effort may be made to save the populace from the inconsolable loss which a complete fasting out of this amusement would certainly be. The immediate sensation the Romans are promising themselves is that connected with the arrival of Capt. Paul Boyton with his life-saving apparatus. He is to come down the Tiber on Sunday next from Orte, 40 miles above. He has already given, in the northern cities, exhibitions of his ingenious invention and his own daring, to the great gratification of tens of thousands of the population, and he is the hero of the hour.

REV. MR. TOOTH IN PRISON.

THE HATCHAM RITUALIST IN HORSEMONGER LANE JAIL—THE REVEREND GENTLEMAN'S ACCOMMODATIONS.

Rev. Arthur Tooth, Vicar of St. James' Church, Hatcham, who has been creating such a sensation in England by his refusal to obey the order of the Court of Arches, directing him to discontinue his extreme ritualistic performances, recently surrendered to the Sheriff's Officer, and is now in Horsemonger Lane Jail. A London newspaper says:

"Some misconception exists as to the treatment to which Mr. Tooth is entitled at Horsemonger Lane Jail, in which he is now confined. It has been believed that the reverend gentleman would receive the same attention to comfort as attended the incarceration of Mr. Valentine Baker. The difference is that Mr. Baker was sentenced as what is technically known in prison official parlance as a 'criminal' who was relegated to the custody of the Governor, Mr. Keene, by the Judge, as 'a first-class misdemeanant,' whereas Mr. Tooth is committed for contempt of court, and prisoners for contempt—whether they are imprisoned by order of the superior courts, of a County Court Judge, or of a magistrate for non-payment of taxes or loan society debts for neglecting to send children to school or for non-payment of sustenance for illegitimate children—are, according to the rules in force at the Surrey County Prison, treated in precisely the same manner. This treatment differs from that of a 'first-class misdemeanant' considerably. The latter may supply his own food, always subject to the supervision of the prison authorities to see that it is not too luxurious; he may furnish the room allotted to him and see his friends daily, but, being a criminal, he is denied the luxury of smoking—an indulgence freely permitted to prisoners for contempt. Mr. Tooth is confined in the department of the jail inhabited by such prisoners, and, except so far as the rules will allow the Governor to mitigate the régime by allowing him the best possible room to be found there, is subjected in all respects to the treatment meted out to his humbler neighbors. The portion of the prison allocated to the use of such offenders is a block of buildings directly opposite the entrance. It stands at one side of a paved yard environed by tall and spiked iron railings. Within the building are small rooms of about the same size as the ordinary prison cell, some of them a little larger, and, instead of the ordinary stone flooring, boarded. In those rooms is an iron frame attached to the wall, and connected with the frame is a kind of canvas stretcher, on which is laid a humble mattress, with coarse sheets and an equally coarse coverlet. This apparatus is the only sleeping accommodation. But Mr. Tooth, or any other prisoner in the same category, may provide his own bedding. No washing apparatus is provided in the apartment, and the only other accommodation is a small wooden table and a chair. Mr. Tooth cannot provide anything for himself outside the dietaet down in the regulations for his class unless specially permitted and ordered by the doctor. The routine of his life is oppressively monotonous. He must rise in the morning, have his bed made up, be washed and dressed by breakfast-time, 8 o'clock. At this hour, within the 'cage,' or iron-bound pavement, but outside the building, a warder sets down a tray containing tin pannikins of ordinary but very substantial 'skilly' and loaves of bread. The name of each prisoner is called out, and, unless some other prisoner, who may be employed as a servitor, receives it for him, he is expected to appear and carry it away himself. No spoon is provided for taking the compound called 'skilly,' nor is any knife supplied for cutting the bread. After breakfast he is at liberty to walk about until church time, always within the iron cage. At 9:30 the 'contempt' and other prisoners of the class are called for 'church,' and marshaled to the prison chapel in single file under the charge of warders. Unless a prisoner choose to register himself as not belonging to the Church of England, or be by illness incapacitated, he must attend 'church.' The service is characterised by an entire absence of ritual. It consists of simple morning prayers, the Psalms being read. A warder acts as clerk, and a few hymns are sung, generally by the officials, with the vocal assistance of the religiously disposed 'contempt' prisoners. Then they are marched back again to the iron inclosure, where, or in their rooms, they may pass the time as they best can. A newsvendor comes in, and they may buy the morning papers; they may play at 'marbles,' or they may smoke and walk about or remain in their own rooms reading or writing, there being no limit to the number of letters to be received or to be written, and the epistles are not submitted to any kind of supervision. At this time of the year the prisoners must be within doors by 5 o'clock, and then the heavy iron door is locked upon them. If they want more exercise, they may perambulate the stone corridors, or they may adjourn to an apartment known as the 'kitchen,' and sit round a deal table on wooden forms, and amuse themselves by the science of their lives. Once a week the prisoner is supposed to wash out his room; but he need not do it, for it is permissible for the 'contempt' prisoners to form a social community of their own. The poorest prisoner generally undertakes the duties of the 'charwoman,' and is allowed a small sum from each of his fellows for the trouble. Three times a week only can Mr. Tooth receive a few of his friends, and then only within certain hours. This is the life he must lead till he purges his contempt."

FOUND AFTER THIRTY YEARS.

The Kingston Freeman of Monday contains the following account of a wife's discovery of her recreant husband after over 30 years' absence: "Nearly 34 years ago a young woman named Martha Lane, living with her widowed mother on a farm near the then village of Elmira, married a farmer named Coleman Stevens. Miss Lane owned real estate worth about $1,000. Stevens was from Orange County. The young people married with the intention of removing to Michigan, and Mrs. Stevens disposed of her property for $800. This money she gave to her husband. Two or three days after their marriage Stevens went to Orange County to bid his parents good-bye. He was to be back on a certain day. He did not come. After waiting several days his wife started for Orange county to look him up. There was no railroad here at that day, and the journey was a tedious stage ride. Mrs. Stevens found her husband at his father's, in the town of Monroe. Her existence had not been made known to her husband's people, and her appearance was a surprise, and an unwelcome one. She insisted upon her husband fulfilling his promise to go to Michigan, and next morning they started. He deserted her at Chester, and she never saw or heard of him until a week or so since. She returned to Chemung County, and has since earned her living by hard work. Her mother died of grief at the loss of Stevens. She subsequently removed a few miles south, across the Pennsylvania line, where she has since lived. Her daughter, now about 33 years old, lives with her. Two or three months ago a gentleman who lived in the neighborhood was visiting in California. While in San Francisco he met the long-missing Coleman Stevens face to face. Stevens said he supposed his first wife had been dead for over 25 years, having been so informed by his mother. He was married again and had a family. He denied that he deserted his wife, declaring that they separated by mutual consent. In 1849 he left Michigan, and was a member of one of the first parties that reached the gold diggings. He had made a fortune of $100,000. The gentleman returned East a few weeks ago, and has acquainted Mrs. Stevens with his discovery. She intends to call the courts to her aid, and to compel her runaway husband to provide for his lawful wife and daughter."

DEATH OF A CALIFORNIAN.

The San Francisco Call of the 1st inst. says: "Gen. John Wilson, the senior member of the San Francisco Bar, died at Suisun on Tuesday evening of congestion of the lungs. Gen. Wilson was born near Knoxville, Tenn., Feb. 27, 1790, and was educated in Virginia, where he was thrown into constant communication with and became a protegé of Thomas Jefferson. In early life he removed to Howard County, Mo., where he became a leader of the Whig Party, and from that time on was closely associated with the prominent politicans of that faction, numbering many of them as his warm personal friends. In 1849 he came across the Plains as Commissioner to Utah, and in 1850 he reached California, having been appointed Naval Agent for this coast by his relative, President Taylor. Ever since that time he has been identified with most of the public interests of the State. He was a man of marked ability, of unuring energy, and of sterling worth; religious without bigotry, generous in giving and in thought, and, all in all, a bright example of the true worth of cultured manhood. His every faculty was clear and strong up to the hour of his death; and although so near his eighty-seventh birthday, he died as he had lived—in the harness. Gen. Wilson leaves behind him an aged widow, a son and a daughter, and a host of mourning friends."

WELL-DIGGERS BURNED.

John Morgan, James Downey, and Patrick Maloney, well-diggers, while engaged in boring a well on the farm of Judge Scott, near Bloomington, Ill., on Monday, met with a remarkable accident. The well was dug 40 feet and then bored 40. When the anger was pulled out it was followed by an eruption of water and mud and then by a volume of gas which had expelled it, and which continued to flow with great pressure and accompanied by a roar like thunder. As gas wells are no novelty in the region, nothing was thought of this. A fire was lighted by the men near the opening of the well, sparks from which blown across the gas-jet caused its combustion, and an explosion followed which was heard for miles around. Maloney and Downey, standing near, were scorched, hair, eyebrows, and whiskers being consumed, and their faces burned black as by gunpowder. Maloney fell in the fire, and there received additional burns. Morgan was stunned but not much injured.

LAW REPORTS.

COURT NOTES.

William Neibohr, who was convicted in the United States Circuit Court about 10 days ago of running an illicit distillery in Harlem, was sentenced by Judge Benedict yesterday to 12 months in the Kings County Penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $1,000.

Charles Newman, a young man, was committed for trial in default of bail, by Justice Otterbourg yesterday, charged with having forced an entrance into the residence of Mrs. Lizzie Bruce, No. 307 West Fourteenth street, and stole therefrom wearing apparel valued at $90.

John Hanlon, a youth of 17, attempted to pass a counterfeit $10 note on Mary Flynn, of No. 85 Charlton street, some days ago, and for this offense was arrested and arraigned before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday. He was committed to Ludlow Street Jail in default of $1,000 bail.

Judge Robinson, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday ordered a reference in the suit of Henry O. Clauss against Mary Clauss. The action is brought for an absolute divorce on the ground of defendant's adultery. The parties were married on May 10, 1868, and have one child, a boy 6 years old.

John Brady, aged 18, of No. 325 West Twenty-fifth street, was charged by William H. Mackintosh, of No. 110 West Twenty-third street, with having attempted to pick a lady's pocket as she was passing through Twenty-second street near Sixth avenue, yesterday. He was committed for trial in default of bail by Justice Otterbourg.

The report of the Receiver of the Erie Railway Company for December, 1876, was filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday. From this it appears that the balance of cash on hand Dec. 1 was $583,578 06, and this amount added to the receipts made a total of $2,522,261 72. The disbursements were $2,279,358 35, leaving a balance of cash on hand Dec. 31 of $242,903 37.

Charles Leser, a German, aged 65, who was arrested on Friday evening for intoxication, attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself to the door of his cell in Essex Market Prison. He was cut down by the Warden, and when taken before Justice Murray yesterday morning stated that the disgrace attending his arrest had preyed to such an extent upon his mind that he resolved to kill himself before leaving prison.

The case of William H. Spark, the Postmaster of Pelham Station, on the New-York and New-Haven Railroad, against his deputy, Charles Merritt, for the refusal to deliver up 198 postal cards, has been before Commissioner Osborn nearly four weeks, and was finally disposed of yesterday by Merritt being discharged on condition that he surrender the cards to the Postmaster. Mr. Sparks, it seems, removed Merritt from office, and as there was a small balance due the latter for his services, he claimed the right to retain the property in question.

John Allen, the colored man who was arrested for robbing Josephine Johnson, of No. 75 Minetta lane, of jewelry and clothing valued at $75, was arraigned before Justice Otterbourg, at the Washington Place Police Court, yesterday, and held for trial in default of bail. The charge that Mrs. Johnson made against the accused on Friday night, to the effect that he had robbed and murdered a colored man in Charleston, S. C., was retracted by the woman yesterday, and she now asserts that he was concerned in a robbery in Georgia, and fled from that State to avoid punishment.

THE MAXWELL FORGERY TRIAL.

The examination of George L. Maxwell, the broker charged with negotiating the alleged forged check for $64,295, was resumed yesterday in the Tombs Police Court. Horace E. Browne testified that he saw the alleged forged check in Maxwell's hands when Maxwell received it, and that he then believed it to be genuine; he had never given Maxwell any reason to suppose that the check was not genuine; witness thought it was genuine, and presumed Maxwell did also; it was necessary to have the check certified by the Union Trust Company in order to negotiate it; L. A. Brown and Chadwick were the ones who originated the plan and witness was the one who communicated with Maxwell; Chadwick asked witness if he knew a broker who was in the habit of handling large checks, as he said he knew an institution in which some of the officers wanted to have such checks negotiated by some broker so that they could have depreciated securities, instead of good ones, as assets, and divide the difference between their value and the amount of the checks; witness said he knew of such a broker, meaning Maxwell, and the result was the arrangement made with Maxwell which culminated in the negotiation of the alleged forged check and the division of its proceeds. A very important point of difference between the testimony given by Maxwell and Browne was, that the former testified that he gave $60,000 in gold certificates to messengers whom he supposed came from the New-York Life Insurance Company, while the latter testified that Maxwell gave him one of those gold certificates, of the amount of $5,000, which he got cashed at the Sub-Treasury. Justice Duffy was anxious to have the case closed yesterday, saying that he had devoted all the time necessary to its hearing to form a judgment as to what his decision ought to be. Mr. Seward said it would be impossible for him to close the defense, as he wanted to continue for some time the cross-examination of Browne, who was the most important witness against Maxwell, and also wanted to introduce several witnesses for the defense on important points. It was finally arranged to adjourn the case to 10:30 A. M. on Monday, the 15th inst.

BELGIAN FORGERS WANTED AT HOME.

Jean Baptiste Henri Vandervelpen and his wife, the Belgian forgers who were brought here from Indiana some days ago preparatory to being extradited, were taken before United States Commissioner White yesterday afternoon for examination. The counsel for the Belgian Government offered in evidence the documentary proof of the guilt of the defendants, and claimed their extradition under the treaty of 1874 between this Government and that of Belgium. The forgery alleged to have been committed by the defendants was that of the signature of a distinguished Baron to a note for 500,000 francs, which was done in 1862, since which time the Baron died, and in 1872 the defendants presented the note to the executors of the establishment of the deceased nobleman. The case came on in the Belgian courts, but was postponed from time to time until 1876, when the suit was vigorously pressed. About that time it became known that the note was a forgery, whereupon Vandervelpen and his wife fled to this country. The defense set up by the counsel for the prisoners in their examination before Commissioner White is that the alleged offense was committed prior to the ratifications of the extradition treaty between the two Governments. Counsel for the Belgian authorities, however, claim that as the suit to recover the money called for by the forged document was pressed in 1876, this constitutes, in law, an utterance of the forged note since the ratification of the treaty. Upon this point the Commissioner will pass to-morrow.

AN INSPECTION OF LETTERS REFUSED.

Judge Robinson, in the Court of Common Pleas, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision on a motion in the suit of Mary E. Jobes against John H. Parsons. It appears that Parsons was the plaintiff's counsel in a suit, and recovered a judgment. She now seeks to recover from him a portion of the money. His defense is that, by special agreement, he was to have one-half of the amount recovered. He made a motion for an inspection of letters written by him to her, on the ground that they are material to him in preparing for trial. He failed, however, to show their materiality, or to specify exactly what letters he desired to inspect. Judge Robinson, in his opinion, in speaking of the subject, says: "It is not enough that he believes, or is advised, that the paper contains material evidence. The fact must be shown to the satisfaction of the court by some statement of the contents, and such facts and circumstances as satisfy the court of the materiality of the evidence. The defendant seeking the discovery has no right to have a general inquisitorial examination of all letters he has written the plaintiff, to discover something that perchance may possibly aid him in the avoidance of possible statements on the trial inconsistent with what might be contained in his letters. He has no right to a discovery of matters relating exclusively to plaintiff's case. I do not regard the application as meritorious, and, therefore, deny it, with $10 costs, to abide the event.

CUMULATIVE REMEDIES OF CREDITORS.

In the case of Morris Poliak against Merrick Meyer, application was made to Judge McAdam in Marine Court, Chambers, yesterday for judgment upon the answer, which merely pleaded the pendency of another action as a defense. Judge McAdam held the rule to be, that where the cause of action is not the same in both suits, the pendency of the first will not abate the second, and that such a case is not within the reason or even the terms of the general rule. Hence, in debt on a note secured by a chattel mortgage, the pendency of a prior action of trover for the conversion of the mortgaged property, is no ground for the abatement of the action afterward commenced on the note itself. Creditors may pursue all the auxiliary remedies of the law to enforce their rights, but are entitled to but one satisfaction. Judgment was accordingly given for the plaintiff, with costs.

KINGS COUNTY SURROGATE'S COURT.

The following is a record of the business transacted during the past week in the Kings County Surrogate's Court, Hon. W. L. Livingston, Surrogate: Wills Proved—Rev. Eugene Cassidy, Patrick Lynagh, Thomas J. Doyle, Curtis Noble, Mary Amelia Clerc, Margaretta Bliss, Isabella Tammany, James Cody, Ann Carroll, Peter Oberg, Christian H. Steen, Johanna H. Schroeder, and Dallas Bulkley, all of the City of Brooklyn. Letters of administration were granted in the estates of the following deceased persons, viz.: Susan C. Smith, John Moran, William Martin Johnson, John Flanagan, Adeline L. Page, Ann Gray, Thomas H. Chichester, Line Tum, Melvina F. Seward, and G. H. August Kaster, all of the City of Brooklyn. Letters of guardianship of the persons and estates of John A. Lewis were granted to Henry M. Lewis; of John Walsh, Martin Walsh, and James Walsh, to Mary Hamilton; of Emily Dreeke, John Dreeke, Otto Dreeke, Bertha Dreeke, Mary Dreeke, William Dreeke, and Julia Dreeke, to Mary Dreeke, all of the City of Brooklyn.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Barrett.

In the matter of O'Hara.—I think the amounts to be withdrawn should be specifically limited to the bills and necessary expenses proved.

Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents vs. Mater.—Order for leave to contest dismissed and the plaintiff can take an attachment to bring the defendant before the court.

Percy vs. Chase.—As far as I can ascertain from these somewhat illegible and confused papers, the plaintiff has not made out a case for the relief asked. It would seem as though the plaintiff intended to state that on Feb. 7, 1877, he had served no papers for the first Monday of January, 1877. The affidavit of service is otherwise insufficient and the whole proceeding is crude, and the papers not such as should be presented to a court.

Goldman vs. Goldman.—I have no desire to impose any unnecessary labor or expense upon the plaintiff, and if the Referee will furnish a certificate in accordance with the suggestions of counsel in the note to me (this is as to the right of taking the testimony,) I will confirm the report.

Lieberman vs. Golden.—Complaint dismissed, with costs.

In the matter of Dickie.—Motion granted; Referee appointed.

Mallory vs. France.—Order settled.

Motions Granted.—Wheeler vs. Rowe; Otto vs. Fackner.

By Judge Donohue.

Orders Granted.—Amory vs. Kelby; Jameson vs. Jameson.

Granted.—Matter of Aldrich; Victory Webb Company vs. Beecher.

Opinion.—Matter of Reynolds.

Carr vs. Fradley.—Motion denied.

Memorandums.—McNeil vs. Bissell; Foley vs. Rathbone.

Matter of Roberts et al.—Motion denied. Memorandum.

Harlem Bank vs. O'Neil.—Settled. See amendments.

Bamberger vs. Hyams.—Motion granted. Memorandum.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Van Vorst.

Findings signed.—Bernheimer et al. vs. Willis et al.

Pike vs. Setter et al.—Findings and decree signed.

MARINE COURT—CHAMBERS.

Held by McAdam, J.

Opinions Filed.—Loomis vs. David; Brown vs. Godfrey; Irving National Bank vs. Fersenheim.

Lesane vs. Wilcox.—Proceedings dismissed. (7 Abb. n. s. 212, 20 Howard, pr. 97.)

Motions Granted.—Raymond vs. Moore; Daily vs. Mouthur; Alberti vs. Trask; Hopkins vs. Wemple; Kayton vs. Davies; McCaffrey vs. Bennett; Pitney vs. Maney; Bartels vs. Moore; Emeus vs. Bereus; Howland vs. Heffman.

Gansen vs. Burchard.—Complaint dismissed.

Lohman vs. Albrecht.—Defendant discharged from imprisonment under Fourteen Day act.

Solomon vs. Kleman.—Judgment for plaintiff $250

Abrens vs. Davis.—Motion for judgment granted.

Gouiby vs. Conner.—Motion for new trial denied, with leave to renew.

Boorum vs. Gassin.—Judgment debtor required to execute deed to Receiver.

Matter vs. Young, President, &c.—Complaint dismissed.

Wehendorfer vs. Gumbrecht.—James McNulty, Esq., Receiver.

Livingston vs. Stern.—Arrest vacated conditionally.

Barth vs. Menard.—Discontinuance allowed on payment of $10 costs. (See Appendix to Marine Court Practice, p. 44.)

Schwartz vs. Oppold.—Order settled.

Wooley vs. Kober.—James McNulty, Esq., appointed Receiver.

Russo vs. Maurlani.—Decision indorsed on papers.

Defaults Noted.—Wood vs. Durrie; Fountain vs. Pooley; McGrath vs. O'Donnell; Dewey vs. Burke.

Connolly vs. McKeown.—Lis pendens canceled.

VIGOROUS OLD MEN.

The New-London (Conn.) Telegram remarks: "It may well be doubted whether the constitutional provision by which Judges are compelled to retire at the age of 70 is a wise one in such a healthy climate as that of Connecticut. We read in the Hartford papers that Hon. Loren P. Waldo, formerly a Judge of the Superior Court, celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday only a few days since, a large party of friends assembling at his residence on that occasion. Judge Waldo is at the head of the well-known law firm of Waldo, Hubbard & Hyde, and has probably done more work during the past five years than falls to the lot of the majority of Judges in our State. Hon. Charles J. McCurdy, who, if we remember aright, is fully as old as Judge Waldo, is still vigorous in mind and body. He was an excellent Judge, and the State could not well afford to lose his services at 70, when he was as young as an ordinary man at 50. Hon. Origen S. Seymour, who was Chief Justice at the time of his retirement, is still a Judge to all intents and purposes, for he is constantly engaged in the trial of cases as arbitrator or committee appointed by the Superior Court. He shows no signs of mental or bodily decay that would unfit him for judicial duties. Hon. Lafayette S. Foster, who has but just retired from the Supreme Court Bench, is by no means a fit subject for the retired list. We understand that he contemplates returning to the practice of his profession to a certain extent indeed, he recently appeared as senior counsel in a case tried in his city and involving about $50,000. We doubt whether there are four Judges on the Bench of the Superior or Supreme Court to-day who can endure more, physically, than the four gentlemen above named who have been sent out to grass in compliance with a constitutional provision, simply because they have lived to be 70 years of age."

DRY GOODS.

LACES

OF THE LATE

Empress Eugenie.

WE WILL EXHIBIT IN

OUR LACE DEPARTMENT

THESE EXTRAORDINARY LACES,

MADE EXPRESSLY for the

EMPRESS EUGENIE

By the

MOST SKILLED WORKERS OF THE PRESENT AGE.

WE INVITE the ATTENTION

Of our FRIENDS to THESE

Lace Treasures,

EXCELLING in QUALITY

ANYTHING HERETOFORE PRODUCED

By the ART of LACE-MAKING.

In CONNECTION WITH THEM,

WE will EXHIBIT an EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT

OF

LACES in EVERY GRADE and QUALITY,

Presenting altogether

An EXHIBITION of THIS CLASS of GOODS

UNEQUALED in VALUE, TEXTURE and PRICE.

A. T. STEWART & CO.,

BROADWAY, 4TH AV., 9TH AND 10TH STREETS.

KEEP'S English Socks—$3 a doz; 25c. a pair; Keep's Linen Handkerchiefs for gents, very fine, 6 for $1 50, with fey box. KEEP'S SHIRTS, 671 B'way.

INSTRUCTION.

Collegiate Institute,

No. 40 WASHINGTON SQUARE, NEW-YORK CITY.

GEO. W. CLARKE, Ph. D., Principal.

Prepares pupils of all ages for business or college.

THOROUGH INSTRUCTION IN GERMAN language, literature, and history. Private classes at reduced rates; best references. Address PROFESSOR, Box No. 274 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

MODERN GREEK.—A NATIVE OF GREECE, OF the highest respectability, will give lessons of modern Greek at pupils' residence; will furnish the necessary books. Address HELLENIC, Box No. 167, Post Office.

CHARLIER INSTITUTE,
CENTRAL PARK, NEW-YORK.
Boarding and Day School for boys from seven to twenty years old.

MRS. PARKS' BOARDING AND DAY School for young ladies, New-Brunswick, N. J., opens its next session Feb. 5. Circulars sent if desired. Terms moderate.

DEAN COLLEGE AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC for young ladies, Binghamton, N. Y.; $200 per year; harp extra. Rev. R. A. PATERSON, A. M., President.

PIANO AND SINGING INSTRUCTION AT moderate terms; is going to Harlem once a week. Address A. SMITH, No. 141 East 74th st.

PORT CHESTER INSTITUTE.—Port Chester, N. Y.; limited to 25 boys. O. Winthrop Starr, A. M.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HARRIS & ROY,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL COMMISSION DEALERS in Country Produce, Poultry, Game, Eggs, Butter, Cheese, Lard, Potatoes, Apples, NO. 223 FULTON ST., near Greenwich st.

EPPS' COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING: each packet is labelled JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, No. 48 Threadneedle st. and No. 170 Piccadilly, London, England. New-York Depot, SMITH & VANDERBEEK, Park place.

CURE GUARANTEED.

Skin Diseases. Pimples, flesh worms, blackheads, white Skin Diseases. itchy and scaly tetter of the scalp, crusty Skin Diseases, and scaly leprosy, and all skin diseases Skin Diseases, cured by Dr. VAN DIAN, 6 West 16th st.

WANTED—ABOUT FIFTY FEET OF OFFICE counter and railing, in hard wood and good order. Address C. L. G., Post Office Box No. 817, New-York City.

BILLIARDS.

AMERICAN STANDARD BILLIARD TABLES, with Delaney's wire cushions; also Russian bowling, tripolite, bagatelle, and parlor billiard tables at prices to suit the times; all billiard materials, such as cloth, balls, cues, &c. Extra inducements now offered. W. H. GRIFFITH & CO., No. 40 Vesey st.

DRY GOODS.

James McCreery & Co.,

Broadway and 11th st.,

Will offer on MONDAY, Feb. 12, a fresh stock of

HOUSEKEEPING LINENS

At 25 per cent. under former prices, including some of the finest makes of Irish, Scotch, and French MANUFACTURE.

SPECIAL BARGAINS IN TOWELS, NAPKINS, PILLOW LINEN, AND LINEN SHEETING. TABLE LINEN MARKED DOWN FROM $1 TO 75 CENTS PER YARD.

Also a full line of NAINSOOK, ORGANDIES, SWISS, and PIQUES at unusually LOW PRICES.

All the best brands of

SHEETINGS AND SHIRTINGS

Under manufacturers' prices.

UPHOLSTERY DEPARTMENT,

A new and elegant assortment of NOTTINGHAM, GUIPURE and REAL LACE CURTAINS, CRETONNES, SATEENS, &c., at LOW PRICES,

ARE NOW OPEN FOR INSPECTION.

ESTABLISHED 1856.

WE BEG TO ANNOUNCE TO THE PUBLIC WHO HAVE SO LIBERALLY PATRONIZED US DURING THE PAST

Twenty-one Years,

THAT WE ARE OFFERING THE LARGEST AND MOST ELEGANT ASSORTMENT OF GOODS SUITED TO THE TASTE OF THOSE REQUIRING MOURNING, AND THAT THIS IS THE

ONLY ESTABLISHMENT

DEVOTED TO THIS LINE OF BUSINESS IN NEW-YORK. ALL TEXTURES IN DESIRABLE BLACK GOODS CAN BE OBTAINED AT THE MOST REASONABLE PRICES.

SPECIAL ATTENTION IS CALLED TO OUR

BLACK SILKS AND ENGLISH CRAPES.

JACKSON'S MOURNING STORE,

NO. 777 BROADWAY, OPPOSITE STEWART'S.

KEEP SELLS the Best and Cheapest Shirts in the world; also Collars, elegant styles, best quality, $1 50 per doz.; six for 75c. No. 671 Broadway.

DWELLINGS TO LET.

AT A. T. STEWART'S GARDEN CITY, L.I.

TO LET, SEVERAL ELEGANT and CONVENIENT DWELLINGS, fitted for Winter and Summer residences, with all the modern improvements, including gas and water from Public Works, Gardens, &c.

RENTS from $250 to $1,000 per annum, according to size and quality of house and grounds.

TRAINS BY Flushing, North Shore and Central Railroad, via Long Island City or Hunter's Point, at 9:03 A. M. and 12:32, 2:05, 3:32, 4:03, 5:03, 6:05, and 7:05 P. M. Returning, 6:56, 7:27, 8:38, and 10:27 A. M.; 2:20, 4:58, 6:29, and 9:40 P. M. week days.

SUNDAY TRAINS: 9:15 A. M. and 4:33 P. M., returning 8:22 A. M. and 4:41 P. M. Boats connect with train from foot of 34th st., leaving 15 minutes previously. Splendid cars, beautiful ride, and unsurpassed hotel and restaurant near the station.

APPLY to W. R. HINSDALE, Manager, at office adjacent to railroad station.

ANY ONE DESIRING A SMALL FURNISHED house at Englewood, N. J., for a year, more or less, would do well to communicate with subscriber; house almost new, nicely furnished, and conveniently located. C. C. MUNROE, No. 14 Warren st., New-York, or at Englewood.

TO LET—AT TENAFLY, N. J., A COMFORTABLE well-finished house, 10 minutes' walk to depot, lodge, barn, ice-house (filled), cow, and poultry; within an hour of City; nominal rent to good parties. Address A., Box No. 124 Times Office.

FIRE-PROOF APARTMENTS.—THE ROCKingham, Broadway and 58th st.; elevator, steam heat, nine rooms, with heat and service; rents $100 to $140 per month. Inquire on the premises.

A BEAUTIFUL, UNFURNISHED HOUSE to let, 35th st., near 6th av.; three-story brown-stone, high stoop; complete order; rent low to private family. OGDEN & CLARK, Broadway, corner 17th st.

FOR RENTAL VERY LOW—A FIRST-CLASS medium-sized hotel; unsurpassed location; possessing exclusive advantages. Only responsible parties need address D. F., Box No. 137 Times Office.

TO RENT FROM MAY 1—THREE-STORY house, in 33d st., between Broadway and 5th av. Apply to L. ODELL, No. 48 West 33d st.

A NUMBER OF CHOICELY-LOCATED furnished and unfurnished dwellings to rent low. V. K. STEVENSON, Jr., 4 Pine st., or Union square.

NO. 18 EAST 33D ST.—TO RENT, UNFURNISHED or furnished. Apply to E. H. LUDLOW & CO., No. 3 Pine st.

AN ELEGANT HIGH-STOOP HOUSE ON Lexington av., near 38th st., to rent, furnished or unfurnished. E. H. LUDLOW & CO., No. 3 Pine st.

A FULL-SIZE FOUR-STORY HIGH-STOOP House on Madison av., near 40th st., to rent unfurnished

THE HOUSEHOLD.

MARKET PRICES FOR STAPLES.

The butchers are not driving a very active business just now, and bargains may be had in the meat departments of the markets. Porter-house steaks can be bought at 25 cents to 28 cents per pound, sirloin steaks at 18 cents to 22 cents, good roasting pieces at 16 cents to 20 cents, ordinary cuts at 10 cents to 16 cents, and pieces for stewing at 8 cents. Mutton chops sell at 12 cents to 16 cents per pound; nice bits of the same kind of meat for roasting at 12 cents to 16 cents, and good cuts for ordinary use at 8 cents to 10 cents. Lamb is very scarce, there being in fact no "young lamb" in the markets. It will begin to arrive about the latter part of this month. Veal of prime quality sells at 16 cents to 20 cents per pound for pieces for roasting; inferior meat at 8 cents to 10 cents, and veal cutlets at 25 cents to 30 cents. Pork for roasting sells at 12 cents per pound, and chops at the same price. Ham, sugar cured, sells in Washington Market at 16 cents per pound, bacon at 16 cents, prime shoulders at 11 cents, City-made sausages at 14 cents, and country at 16 cents. Corned beef sells at 8 cents to 12 cents, and corned pork at 13 cents. Butter ranges in price from 18 cents to 40 cents per pound, according to quality, something good enough for general family uses selling at 35 cents. Good cheese cannot be bought for less than 17 cents to 18 cents per pound. Eggs are lower and prices are declining. Poultry is selling at reasonable rates; prime turkeys and chickens sold yesterday in Washington Market at 16 cents per pound, and pretty good-looking ones at 12 cents to 14 cents. A few cents more were asked for ducks and a few cents less for geese. There is a good supply and large variety of game in the markets, and prices are not high. Among the principal kinds are mallard ducks, wild pigeons, grouse, quail, partridges, hares, and rabbits.

Fish is abundant. Among the different kinds are pickerel, at 15 cents per pound; shad, from Georgia waters, at 50 cents to 75 cents each; cod, at 8 cents; smelts, from New-England waters, at 12 cents to 15 cents; flounders, at 8 cents; fresh halibut, at 15 cents; perch, at 10 cents; white fish, at 18 cents; haddock, at 8 cents; Nova Scotia herrings, at 8 cents; and lobsters, (which are now rather scarce,) at 10 cents. Frozen Kennebec salmon at 30 cents per pound, and blue fish and mackerel, preserved in refrigerators, can also be found. Oysters of fair quality are very plentiful, but really good-flavored ones are not abundant. They sell in Washington Market at 75 cents to $1 50 per 100.

Choice apples of the Baldwin, Spy, Roxbury, Russet, Greening, and other fancy varieties are higher. Prices for cranberries are unchanged. Grapes are dearer, and oranges sell cheaply.

Vegetables of all kinds are abundant. Good Irish potatoes are pretty dear, $4 to $4 50 per barrel being the price asked for the best kinds. New Bermuda potatoes, still high-priced, are becoming more plentiful, and so are Bermuda tomatoes. Among the fresh and novel things for this season in vegetables, are kale and spinach from the South, water-cresses, celery, and lettuce, mushrooms and cucumbers, reared in hot houses.

RECEIPTS FOR THE TABLE.

HINTS FOR ECONOMY.—Purchase provisions at a reliable market, not at a grocery. A little experience will enable one to select good articles at less price than is usually paid. For breakfast, if meat is desired, an upper-cut sirloin steak, broiled, fried liver, corn-beef hash, or hashed meats of any description, furnish the substantial part of a breakfast. A wonderful quick and delicious, fried corn-cake, when eggs are not too expensive, corn-meal griddles, flour griddles, mixed in part with dry bread crumbs, Graham mush, oat-meal mush, will go far toward completing a breakfast, and with many families prove a sufficient variety with the aid of coffee.

For hearty noon meal I would recommend among other things, lamb shank stew. For this, take a few little shanks, boiled till perfectly tender, about four hours. At the proper time add sliced potatoes, turnips, parsnips, and carrots, if relished, nicely sliced; half of a red pepper, cut very fine; tomatoes improve it; or, in their season, use in place of the vegetables named, add a pint of Lima beans, the same of sweet corn, cut from the ear, with two or three tomatoes. A pot of baked beans, cooked in the most approved New-England style, will furnish a substantial meal at any time, especially if you add a good leaf of steamed brown bread.

For tea, if meat is required, chipped beef, either dry or frizzled, and occasionally a lobster, will add relish. A plate of soup made of soup-bones or bits of meat left from the roasts or steaks, or clam stew; bread toasted or fresh. Always have on the table a dish of oat-meal mush, to be served with sugar and milk, according to the taste of each individual. This dish furnishes every want required by the waste of the system. Apple sauce or baked apples, either with syrup or without, afford a relish, and will complete a repast sufficiently hearty and nutritious to afford good sleep and pleasant dreams.

For desserts, plain boiled rice, or what is better still, "poor man's pudding," made of boiled rice; "corn starch pudding," "cottage pudding," "apple pudding." The latter is made by filling a pudding-dish nearly full of apples, sliced, sweetened, salted, and flavored as for a pie. Place on top of range and cook till about half done. One and a half hours before eating cover with a good crust, made like biscuit; cover so closely that no steam can escape; place again on top of range, when the paste should puff very light in the top of the dish. Send hot to the table and serve with a liquid sauce made of molasses and sugar, equal parts, a little butter and flour added, and boil 10 minutes. Keep a careful list of expenditures, computing the amount month by month, comparing the expense of one month with the others, and when six months are passed furnish "The Household" the result of your experiment.—PAULINE.

HEALTHFUL, NOT FANCY FOOD.—"E. P. W." calls attention to the fact that Vienna bread is especially a dinner-bread, of little value for family use: the second day it is dry, tasteless, and chippy, owing to the degree to which all bakers carry the ferment. Good home-made bread, he continues, is easily obtained if ordinary care is used in its manufacture, but the trouble is that American housewives are not careful, and therefore fail in this respect. Probably most people will agree with him that making bread is by no means an occasion to be slighted or handed over to incompetent servants; it requires all the intelligence one can give it, and then many things will be observed that are confusing in the process. American housewives are exceedingly careful, however, as the Household column abundantly proves, in the matter of sweet cakes and such things. One reads there the choicest receipts for making sweet-cakes and mince-pies with fear and trembling. One receipt for mince-pies calls for two quarts of wine and brandy in about 12 pounds of mince! Is the woman serious? No spirit of any sort is ever needed in mince-meat. It makes its own. Mince-meat is best if we use under a month from the time it is first mixed, and in that time the fermentation of the molasses, sugar, and spice has supplied the alcoholic strength contained in two quarts of wine and brandy of the usual cooking quality. E. P. W. wants receipts without soda for the ordinary things of the table.

CLEAR SOUP.—Put in a large saucepan four ounces of butter, and when melted place in it three pounds of lean, fresh beef and three pounds of veal, cut in pieces, with the bones broken; cover the pan tightly and set over a quick fire; when the meat begins to stick to the pan, turn it, and when a brown glaze begins to form cover the meat just evenly with cold water; watch carefully; when it is just coming to a boil, pour in one pint of water and skim; then add another pint of water and skim again, but be careful not to stir up the soup. Then put in the soup, cut in small pieces, four large white onions, two large turnips, two good-sized carrots, three head of celery, add two quarts of water, place it where it will simmer steadily for four hours, and then strain through a linen bag. Do not put the meat and vegetables in, nor stir it, as this would cause it to be muddy. If it should not be quite clear, beat up the whites of two fresh eggs, and stir into it, returning it to the fire until it just comes to a boil, then strain again.—AUNT ADDIE.

POTATO DUMPLINGS.—(According to a German receipt.)—Boil five or six good-sized potatoes; let them get cold, then peel and grate into a large dish; do not crush or mash them together, but keep them light and flaky; then peel about the same quantity of raw potatoes, grate, and put into a cloth, press out all the water, and put the potatoes in a dish; cut up an onion very fine, put in two or three eggs, and a small handful of salt; cut some stale bread into small squares and fry in hot lard or butter until they are brown and crisp; thoroughly mix the raw potatoes, onions, eggs, and salt; put in the bread, and lastly the boiled potatoes, handling as little as possible; roll the mixture into balls, and put them in a pot of boiling water, into which you have thrown a handful of salt; after they have been in about 20 minutes take out one and try it.—EMILIA.

SARATOGA POTATOES.—If they are to be eaten at breakfast they should be peeled the evening before and shaved into slices the thickness of an old-fashioned wafer, and left in water over night; in the morning drain them perfectly dry from the water, and have ready a kettle of boiling lard, into which drop a few pieces at a time; when nicely browned on one side turn them, and when both sides are brown take them out with a skimmer and send them to the table hot.—W. P.

PICKLETTE.—Chop a head of cabbage very fine, and a number of onions according to the size of the cabbage; put them in a stone jar with salt stirred through them; let stand over night, when drain all the water off them; take cider vinegar sufficient to cover them, and boil, adding to one quart of vinegar one pound brown sugar, one tablespoonful ground mustard, two tablespoonfuls black pepper, two tablespoonfuls ground cinnamon, two tablespoonfuls celery-seed, one tablespoonful allspice, one tablespoonful mace, one tablespoonful pulverized alum, and two tablespoonfuls horse-radish; pour boiling over the cabbage and onions; let stand over night, when strain the vinegar off and scald again, pouring over as before; repeat this three mornings, and on the fourth boil all together—cabbage, onions, vinegar, and spice; when cold pack in small jars. This is fit for use at once, but will keep quite a time.—AUNT ADDIE.

OYSTERS A L'AMERICAINE.—Four dozen oysters to one quart cracker crumbs; bake in a 12-inch dish, yellow-ware is best; blanch the oysters and drain them; place a layer of oysters in bottom of dish, cover them with crumbs; add one ounce table butter, a pinch of salt, and mixed pepper, (two kinds black, one kind red,) next a layer of oysters and cover with crumbs; in equal portion with the first layer repeat until dish is filled, adding butter, &c., to each layer of crumbs; to the liquor add the juice of half a lemon, two cloves, one ounce butter; simmer and add to the dish; bake 15 minutes in a moderate oven; if too dry add a little hot water. Should a portion remain after lunch prepare it for supper by adding half ounce of butter melted in hot water; bake five minutes and serve.—MURREY.

TO FRY BEEFSTEAK.—Pound but do not "hack it;" have your pan very hot; put a small piece of butter in it, and let it brown; season the steak on both sides with salt and pepper; place in the pan, and turn constantly, letting it cook quickly; when done and nicely browned, turn a plate over it and stand where it will cook slowly a few minutes; a spoonful of mushroom or tomato catsup added to the gravy is a good addition.—AUNT ADDIE.

BROILING STEAK.—Beefsteak may be covered while broiling, but should never be hacked while cooking, nor pounded before cooking; simply lay it upon the gridiron, and turn but once, as at every turning you lose the juice of the meat; when done, lay upon the dish it is to be served in, sprinkle over it a little salt and spread over it some good sweet butter, and let stand five minutes in the oven.—NEW-ENGLAND HOUSEKEEPER.

RAISIN DRESSING FOR SOUP BEEF.—Take two cupfuls clear broth, without thickening, out of the soup-pot; put it in a saucepan, add one cupful boiling water, half a cupful vinegar, one teaspoonful salt, one bay-leaf, five grains of allspice, one tablespoonful sugar, and a quarter pound each of raisins and currants. Twenty minutes before serving, take the beef out of the soup-pot, put it into this gravy, turn once, allowing 10 minutes' cooking for each side; then take it out and thicken the gravy with brown flour, and rub to a paste with butter. Serve hot. Round of beef is best for this dish.

MOCK CHICKEN LIVER.—Take a liver and boil several hours until quite soft, with a teaspoonful of sugar and spice, if desired; then cut up and stew with a chicken, or alone and dip in batter, and fry.—CORNELIA.

OAT-MEAL FOOD.—The steam-cooked oats and wheat have hours of boiling and avoid all trouble, as the directions how to cook them in every style are on the packages.—THRIFT.

BREAKFAST OAT-MEAL.—It may be very palatably cooked in water, with a little salt added. The water must be boiling hard when the meal is put in, and as soon as it sets or thickens the water it must be set back where it will still boil, but not scorch. Much stirring spoils it. Boil one hour or more.—AUNT ADDIE.

OAT-MEAL AND INDIAN-MEAL.—These are seldom boiled sufficiently and consequently are not good or wholesome. A cup and a half of oat-meal in three quarts of boiling water; stir frequently at first; boil two hours and a half with the lid on the first hour and a half; the lid off the rest of the time. A pint of Indian prepared the same way when needed.—LIZZIE.

TO SAVE WASTE IN COOKING.—To cook oat-meal or cracked wheat without any waste, butter a basin and fill it two-thirds full of water, and when it boils stir in the oat-meal or wheat; be sure to have it thick enough, as you can easily thin with boiling water. Set your basin in a steamer. Rice, &c., should be steamed in same way.—H. H. H.

TO COOK WHEATEN GRITS.—In one quart of milk or water of tepid heat stir five heaping tablespoonfuls of grits and one teaspoonful salt; put in a farina kettle and place in the boiling water in the under kettle. Place on the fire where it will keep boiling, adding water as it boils away. Boil one hour, then turn out in an earthen baking dish, and cover with a plate that covers the dish tightly; put in a rather moderate oven and leave a half hour. If it should boil very stiff it must be thinned by adding a little milk or water.—AUNT ADDIE.

PUDDING UNDER MEAT.—When roasting a piece of beef, three-quarters of an hour before it is done take it out of the oven and pour the drippings out of the pan for gravy; have ready six or seven nice apples, pared, cored, and halved, and lay them in the bottom of the pan; then make a batter of two cupfuls of flour, with a teaspoonful of baking powder sifted in dry, one pint of milk, three eggs, and one tablespoonful sugar; pour this over the apples; then lay the meat on sticks in the baking-pan, so that the juice from it will drop into the pan below. Send to table in a side-dish with the meat.

GERMAN PUFFS.—One cupful flour, two cupfuls milk, three eggs, one-half teaspoonful baking powder, a pinch of salt; divide into six baking custard cups, and bake in a quick oven; turn them out and serve. For sauce, beat the yolks of one eggs and a quarter of a pound of powdered sugar together quite light, grate the rind of a lemon in it, and add gradually to this a glass of sherry wine; stir up very quickly until it becomes frothy; must be placed on the fire, but where the heat is not strong; stir all the time.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO PRESERVE PARSLEY THROUGH THE WINTER.—Use freshly gathered parsley; put it into boiling water; add a little salt; boil three minutes and drain; lay it on a sieve before the fire and dry as soon as possible; store it away in bottles; when wanted pour over it a little warm water and let it stand five minutes.—MURREY.

LEMON SYRUP.—To every quart of lemon-juice add six pounds of lost sugar; rub off the yellow rind of the lemons with lumps of sugar; put in a porcelain kettle; heat the whites of two eggs very light, and mix gradually with one quart of water, which put in the lemon-juice and sugar. Boil ten minutes, being sure to skim off all the scum. Place in new bottles, cork tightly, and seal the tops with melted rosin and wax.—ADDIE.

AMMONIA CAKE.—One cupful butter, two of sugar, three of flour, half pint of cream, a piece of ammonia the size of a small hickory nut, one pound of fruit, three eggs, reserving the white of one. This cake should not be cut for two weeks; it will keep a long time.

USEFUL FAMILY HINTS.

TO KEEP LEMONS.—Lemons can be kept a long time in silver sand perfectly dried. Place the stem end of the lemon down and have them three inches apart; keep in a cool place.—AUNT ADDIE.

WASHING.—The following suggestions are recommended by a correspondent who has tested them: For ordinary washing, use a tablespoonful of borax to every five gallons of water, and two ounces of soap; soak the clothes in this over night; give them a thorough boiling without wringing. When the colors are very much soiled, see that the water is made soft with borax. Clothes thus washed will not turn yellow. In washing flannels, use one tablespoonful of borax to five gallons of water, without soap. It will not shrink them.

For starching linen, use one teaspoonful of borax to one pint of boiling starch.

For washing and bleaching laces, put one teaspoonful of borax to one pint of boiling water, leave your articles to soak in the solution for 24 hours, then wash with a little soap.

For cleansing black cashmeres, wash in hot suds with a little borax in the water; rinse in bluing water—very blue, and iron on the wrong side while damp.—HOUSEKEEPER.

WASHING FLANNELS.—Cut very finely about a quarter of a pound of best yellow soap, pour on it hot water, and let it dissolve; add sufficient for your use, and when luke-warm stir in a tablespoonful of liquid ammonia; then soak in the flannels and let them remain half an hour; then wash them well and rinse them in a second luke-warm water, with another spoonful of ammonia; if a third be used the ammonia must be repeated. LIZZIE.

WASHING DIRECTIONS.—If the directions accompanying the washing machine are followed the clothes will come out all that can be desired. White clothes will look "nice and white" boiled before they are rubbed.—AUNT ADDIE.

GLOSS ON SHIRT BOSOMS.—Take two ounces of fine white gum-arabic powder, put in a pitcher and pour on it one pint of boiling water, cover it and let stand all night. In the morning pour it carefully from the dregs into a bottle; use one tablespoonful to a pint of starch, made in the usual manner; use a polishing iron also.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO HELP A CALLA LILY TO BLOOM.—Be sure it has a good rich soil; water with very warm water, with a little ammonia or bone dust added once in a week or two. Every morning pour boiling water in the saucer of the pot the lily is in, and give it plenty of heat and sunshine. I have two pots of lilies, and have two flowers on one and one flower and two buds on the other.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO PRESERVE A RABBIT SKIN.—Tack the skin quite as tightly as you can stretch it on a board without tearing it, and wash it with a solution of alum and water. Of course the fur side is tacked next the board, and the solution used on the other side.—AUNT ADDIE.

PREPARING COMPRESSED YEAST.—Dissolve the compressed yeast in a half teacupful of tepid water, and stir in the mixture the last thing. The rolls should be light in two hours, if covered well and set in a warm place.—AUNT ADDIE.

INFORMATION WANTED.

How to fry apples and pork.

A receipt for rice croquettes.

A receipt for lady fingers.

How to make frozen Roman punch?

How oyster chowder should be made?

The proper way to make hermit cake?

How oyster patties are made?

A receipt for "potted fish" such as herring, mackerel, or any other kind.

How much ground coffee to each quart or pint of water does "Aunt Addie" allow?

How oat-meal can be made into a bread that will be neither hard nor sticky, but about like ordinary wheat bread.

How to relieve a canary with asthma.

How to make and use shellac varnish for kitchen floors?

How to remove cod-liver oil stains from white goods.

Should black silk be brushed in the direction of the grain?

How golden curls can be made a shade darker, to match natural hair.

Will "Ridgewood" say if the method for "skeletonizing leaves" will answer for all leaves alike; for thin tender leaves as well as for tougher like Magnolia, &c.? Also when they should be gathered—when young, at maturity, or just about turning time?

MILITARY GOSSIP.

A buzzar regiment is being organized for the National Guard of New-Jersey, at Jersey City.

Mr. John W. Yale was elected Colonel of the Fifty-first Regiment, Syracuse, last Thursday evening.

The Eighth Regiment, Col. George D. Scott commanding, will drill at the State Arsenal next Friday Evening.

The Eleventh Regiment, Col. Frederick Unbekant commanding, will give a ball at its armory on Thursday, Feb. 22.

Company G, Ninth Regiment, will hold an election for Second Lieutenant at thee rgimental armory next Friday evening.

The Ninth Regiment, Col. James R. Hutchcock commanding, will hold a reception at its armory on Tuesday evening, Feb. 20.

Capt. John H. Horsfall, of Company F, Twenty-second Regiment, was elected Major of that command last Friday evening, vice McGrath resigned.

The Rochester Express states that Maior Gen. Brinker, commanding the Seventh Division, has resigned. Gen. Brinker was formerly a resident of this City.

Col. David E. Austen, commanding the Forty-seventh Regiment, Brooklyn, has appointed Harrison B. Moore Quartermaster on his staff, vice David P. Watkins, resigned.

The Forty-seventh Regiment, Brooklyn, will parade for drill by wings as follows: Right wing, on Tuesday, Feb. 13; left wing, on Thursday, Feb. 15. A drill in street firing will take place at the armory, corner of North Second and Fourth streets, Brooklyn, on Friday, March 2.

The books and records of the several regiments in the First Brigade, Brig. Gen. W. G. Ward commanding, will be inspected by Major Robert Lenox Beiknap, Brigade Inspector, as follows: Twenty-second Regiment, Tuesday evening, Feb. 20; Twelfth Regiment, Friday evening, Feb. 23, and Fifth Regiment, Tuesday evening, Feb. 27.

The Eleventh Regiment, Col. Frederick Unbekant commanding, will drill by wings at its armory, in fatigue uniform, as follows: Companies D, A, B, E, and K, on Mondays, Feb. 12 and 19; left wing, Companies C, F, G, H, and I, on Tuesdays, Feb. 13 and 20. Line will be formed at 8 P. M. on each occasion. Company R gave a ball at Germania Assembly Rooms last night.

Major Louis Finkelmeyer, of the Thirty-second Regiment, Brooklyn, was lately Captain of Company C, of that command. He took formal leave of his former Company last Tuesday evening, and received as a memento of the occasion, and as a testimonial for the valuable services he had rendered to his company, an elegantly mounted dress sword, suitably inscribed.

Col. James Cavanagh, commanding the Sixty-ninth Regiment, has issued an order directing his command to parade in full-dress uniform next Tuesday, at 10 A. M., to escort the remains of Col. John O'Mahony to the steamer which is to convey them to Ireland. Out of respect to the memory of the late Col. O'Mahony, the orders calling for a battalion drill of this command on the same evening have been countermanded. Commandants of companies have been directed in orders to detail four files each for guard duty to-day at 9 A. M. Capt. James Plunkett has been detailed Officer of the Day, and First Lieut. James Carroll Officer of the Guard.

The Gatling Battery Artillery, Brooklyn, Capt. John A. Edwards commanding, is under orders to assemble in full fatigue uniform at No. 470 Pacific street, next Friday, at 8 P. M., for instruction in horsemanship. The several sections of this command will assemble at the armory for drill and instruction as follows: Sections 1 and 3, on Wednesday, Feb. 21; Sections 2 and 4, on Wednesday, Feb. 28; and the entire personnel of the battery on Wednesday, March 7. First Lieut. P. I. Hoffman will assume command on the 21st and 28th inst. An election was held for Second Lieutenant and non-commissioned officers in this command last evening.

The armory of the Fourteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, has been closed for alterations and repairs, and Col. McLeer has issued orders to his command to assemble at its temporary armory, No. 386 Atlantic avenue, for drill and instruction as follows: Companies D and K, on Mondays; Companies B and H, Tuesdays; E and I, Wednesdays; A and G, Thursdays, and C and F, on Fridays. Roll will be called on each occasion at 8 P. M. To insure proficiency among the men, Col. McLeer suggests that the companies be sub-divided into two classes, by which tne men as they advance may be promoted from a lower to a higher grade. The third annual ball of the Non-Commissioned Officers Association of this command will take place at Gallatin Hall, No. 522 Fulton street, on Thursday evening, Feb. 22.

The invitations are out for a grand dress parade, review, and reception by the Seventy-first Regiment, to be given on Thursday evening, Feb. 22, but the place where this entertainment is to be held is yet uncertain. Gilmore's Garden was promised to the Music Committee of the regiment, but the management of the Hippodrome is now considering the advisability of laying a floor over the arena. The old floor which was formerly used has been sold, and a new one will be necessary. If a decision is not reached by to-morrow, it is proposed to execute the military evolutions at the State Arsenal, and subsequently to give a promenade concert and hop, at the regimental armory. The right wing of this command will drill under command of Lieut. Col. Chaddock, at the State Arsenal, to-morrow evening. An entertainment will be given under the auspices of Drum Major Nat Jenks, and the regimental drum corps, at the Lexington Avenue Opera-house, on Wednesday, Feb. 28.

At First Division Head-quarters, the acceptance of the resignations of the following officers has been received: First Lieut. James L. Cook, Eighth Regiment; Surgeon Bache McE. Emmett, Twelfth Regiment; Commissary Henry W. Schmidt, Capt. Herman H. Fleidermann, First Lieut. Frederick Freudenthal, Second Lieut. Diedrich Berghe, and Second Lieut. William Miller, Third Regiment Cavalry. Commissions have been received for Surgeon Arthur T. Hill, Twelfth Regiment; Adjutant C. Graham Bacon, and Capt. Henry J. Hayden, Seventh Regiment. Special orders from General Head-quarters at Albany provide for the vacation of the commission of Second Lieut. Samuel E. Perry, of the Seventy-first Regiment, and order an election to fill the vacancy. Lieut. Col. Jacob Beyer, of the Third Regiment Cavalry, has been appointed on the Division Board of Examination, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Major George W. Sauer.

The left wing of the Fifth Regiment, Col. Charles S. Spencer, commanding, held a drill at the State Arsenal last Monday evening, being equalized in four companies of 16 front. After Col. Spencer had manœuvred the men for an hour, Lieut. Col. Krueger assumed command, and completed the instruction for the evening. The entire regiment will drill at the State Arsenal on Thursday evening, March 22, and Tuesday evening, April 24. The following officers in this command have tendered their resignations: Surgeon Charles E. Leland, Quartermaster; Major Horace R. Williams, Surgeon; and First Lieut. Fritz Bergener. Lieut. Col. Peter Krueger tenudered his resignation some time ago, but has thus far been unable to induce Col. Spencer to accept it. Col. Spencer is wise in endeavoring to retain the services of so efficient a drill-master, but Col. Krueger has served much longer than his regular term, and desires to retire to civil life.

At a meeting of the Board of Alderman last Thursday, Alderman Howland's resolution directing the Commissioner of Public Works to remove the furniture and fixtures of the Separate Troop Cavalry from its late armory, corner of Broadway and Forty-fifth street, to its new quarters at Nos. 7, 9, and 11, West Thirteenth street, was passed, and Major Karl Klein has issued an order for the commencement of his drill season. The troop will assemble for dismounted drill as follows: Wednesdays, Feb. 14 and 28; March 14 and 28; April 11 and 25. Mounted drills will be held on the following dates: Wednesdays, Feb. 21; March 7, and 21; April 4 and 18, and May 2. The last one will be the closing drill, and the members will wear full-dress uniforms instead of fatigue dresses on that occasion. A meeting of the troop was held last Wednesday evening, at which it was decided to have a "house-warming" in its new armory, as soon as it has been thoroughly renovated and placed in proper order. At the same meeting seven new recruits were elected to membership.

A correspondent in Jersey City desires us to publish in this column the size of targets and system of marking at Creedmoor, at 100, 200, and 500 yards. We do so, and would suggest that any further details of this sort which he may desire can be found in the annual report of the National Rifle Association, which he may obtain, free of charge, upon addressing the Secretary, Mr. G. S. Schermerhorn, No. 23 Park row, New-York. The targets used at 300 yards, and under that distance, are 6 feet long and 4 feet wide. The "bull's-eye" is round, and 8 inches in diameter; the "centre" is circumscribed by a line encircling the "bull's-eye," leaving a diameter of 26 inches; the "inner" is the space, 46 inches in diameter, inclosed by a circle surrounding the centre line; the "outer" is the remainder of the target. In marking the shots, the "bull's-eye" is signaled by the use of a white disk; the "centre" by a red disk; the "inner" by a black and white disk; and the "outer" by a black disk. The "bull's-eye" counts five: the "centre" four: "inner" three, and "outer" two. The same signals are in use at the targets used at all distances from 500 to 600 yards. These targets are six feet square; the "bull's-eye" is 22 inches in diameter; "centre" 38 inches; "inner" 54 inches, and "outer" 70 inches Shots striking either of the four corners outside the line of the "outer" are not recorded.

Col. Josiah Porter, commanding the Twenty-second Regiment, has issued an order directing his command to assemble at its armory, by wings, in fatigue uniform, for drill, as follows: Right wing—Companies D, B, C, H, and I, on Friday evenings, Feb. 16, and March 2. Left wing—Companies F, A, K, E, and G, Friday evenings, Feb. 23, and March 9; assembly on each occasion at 8 o'clock. In compliance with brigade orders, the officers of this command have been directed to assemble at the Board of Officers room in the armory for instruction in the principles of rifle practice, on Friday evening, Feb. 16 and 23, at 9 P. M. Commandants of companies are directed to occupy three drill nights between now and April 30 in the instruction of their men in rifle practice. Capt. John H. Horsfall has been relieved from duty on the regimental Board of Examination at his own request, with the thanks of the commander, and Capt. Samuel Moore Smith has been appointed to fill the vacancy. Corporals Millard F. Rust, of Company A, and John J. Downs, of Company I, have been reduced to the ranks for general neglect of duty.

The annual report of the comparative efficiency in rifle practice of the several regiments in the National Guard has just been issued from General Head-quarters at Albany. The figure of merit made by the several infantry organizations is as follows: Twelfth Regiment, 62.72 per cent.; Eighth, 38.87; Twenty-second, 34.25; Seventy-first, 34.16; Seventh, 31.99; Fourteenth, Brooklyn, 31.81; Twenty-third, Brooklyn, 31.56; Sixteenth Battalion, Westchester, 31.25; Thirteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, 29.67; Twenty-eighth, Brooklyn, 27.16; Sixty-ninth, 27.14; Fifth, 26.85; Seventy-fourth, Buffalo, 25.39; Ninth, 25.39; Fifteenth, Brooklyn, 24.05; Thirty-second, Brooklyn, 22.40; Eleventh, 21.95; Sixty-fifth, Buffalo, 20.74; Fifty-fourth, Rochester, 15.73; Twenty-seventh, Westchester, 15 23. No returns were made by the other regiments of the State. The cavalry and artillery figure of merit was as follows: Washington Gray, 70.95; Gatling Battery, Brooklyn, 36.95; Separate Troop, Fifth Brigade, Brooklyn, 31.50; Third Regiment, 22 91; Separate Troop, Eleventh Brigade, Brooklyn, 16.47.

The Board of Examination of the Twelfth Regiment has passed the following non-commissioned officers, to whom warrants have been granted: Robert E. Malloy, Sergeant Major, 100 per cent.; Corporal Henry Radjuisky, Company I, 75 per cent., and Corporal William Macdonald, Company I, 88 per cent. Sergt. Major Malloy is a graduate of Company D, of the late Seventy-ninth Regiment, where he was First Sergeant, and has recently been a member of Company I, Twelfth Regiment. He is considered one of the best First Sergeants in the National Guard. Col. Ward has issued orders for evening drills in this command, as follows: Right wing—Companies A, B, F, and K, on Monday evening, Feb. 19. Left wing—Companies E, G, H, and I, on Tuesday evening, Feb. 20. Assembly on each occasion at 8 P. M. Companies B and F will furnish guard details at those drills. This command held a battalion drill at the State Arsenal last Wednesday evening. Line was formed with eight companies, of 16 files front. The assembly was 12 minutes behind time, and it was 8:35 o'clock before the command was turned over to Col. Ward. A series of simple battalion movements were then executed without any particular error being committed, and the marching was very good. After a drill of half an hour the company frontage was reduced to 12 files, thus dismissing the recruits, and the command's "advance and retreat in line of battle" were given and well executed. Forming in a column of fours, the battalion marched around the room and wheeled into line in very good shape. Close column on first division, right in front, with accompanying deployments, followed, and the regiment then marched in retreat, and wheeling, advanced in line of battle, from which a double column of fours was formed during the marching. The movement was very well done, although the third and sixth companies in line were under the command of junior Lieutenants. A multiplicity of movements followed, and the drill terminated with a dress parade. The manual of arms showed but a slight improvement over the previous drills, and requires more attention from company commanders.

The several companies in the Seventh Regiment, Col. Emmons Clark commanding, will assemble in fatigue uniform, with white belts, at the regimental armory for drill in the "School of the Battalion," as follows: Companies B and I, Thursday, Feb. 15; Companies D and G Monday, Feb. 19; Companies C and K Wednesday, Feb. 21; Companies A and H Friday, Feb. 23, and Companies E and F on Tuesday, Feb. 27. Lieut. Col. Louis Fitzgerald has been charged with the duty of supervising drills in the School of the Company, with the special object of securing uniformity and strict compliance with the prescribed tactics. He will also act as Chairman of the Board of Examination to consider and decide upon the qualifications of all members elected as non-commissioned officers. The following non-commissioned officers have passed the Board of Examination and have received their warrants: First Sergeants—W. E. Hadfield, J. E. Ware, G. W. Gibson, W. Storer, E. B. Bensel, W. Kobbe. Sergeants—E. J. Selover, J. V. Freeman, J. H. B. Edgar, W. H. Lane, F. Pawling, B. J. Smith, W. A. Hampton, Jr., E. H. Sanford, W. E. Starr, W. H. Lane, W. Robinson, H. C. Tucker, and J. E. Schermerhorn. Corporals—V. W. Voorhees, S. S. Vanderhoef, Jr., J. Chalmers, M. W. Scriven, J. J. McKenna, A. G. Hamilton, Jr., W. G. Schuyler, J. W. Wenman, E. McCoy, M. F. Plant, H. P. Carrington, J. Gilles, L. B. Bell, C. R. Willetts, G. G. Cowl, G. W. Munson, C. E. Perkins, C. Major, E. H. Crosby, C. A. Weber, E. W. Ketcham, W. B. Leonard, R. Olyphant, S. C. Martine, E. S. Lentilhon, J. W. Gardiner, K. B. Lane, L. S. Allien, L. King, and G. B. De Forest. The Board of Examination of Non-commissioned Officers will hereafter meet on the second Monday in January, April, and October in each year, at 8 o'clock P. M., for the examination of all persons elected to the offices of First Sergeant and Sergeant, and on the Wednesday after the second Monday in the same months, at the same hour, for the examination of persons elected to the offices of Corporal. All non-commissioned officers elect are under orders to be present at the first meeting of the Board following the date of their election. First Sergeants who have passed an examination as Sergeants will not be required to appear for examination. The attention of commandants is called to orders as to the importance of thoroughly instructing the non-commissioned officers elect of their respective companies previous to their examination. Col. Clark concludes his order as follows: "The attention of officers and members of this regiment is called to section 254 of the Military Code, as recently amended, by which any member is entitled to apply for his discharge at the expiration of the term of his enlistment, and which provides that the commandant of the regiment shall grant him a full discharge from the service at the expiration of three months from the date of the application. Officers and members are liable and are held to duty until honorably discharged." Privates John L. Davis, of Company D, and Henry Yung, of Company E, have been expelled from the regiment.

FOREIGN MARKETS.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—12:30 P. M.—Consols, 95 13-16 for both money and the account. Erie Railway shares, 8⅜. New-York Central, 95. The rate of discount for three months' bills in the open market is 1⅛ ₱ cent., which is ⅛ ₱ cent. below the Bank of England rate.

1 P. M.—Consols, 95 15-16 for both money and the account.

2 P. M.—Erie Railway shares, 8½. New-York Central, 93½.

3:30 P. M.—The amount of bullion withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day is £30,000.

5 P. M.—Paris advices quote 5 ₱ cent. Rentes at 105f. 30c. for the account.

BERLIN, Feb. 10.—The statement of the Imperial Bank of Germany shows an increase of 2,622,000 marks.

PARIS, Feb. 10.—Exchange on London 25f. 14c. for short sight.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 10.—Pork—Eastern firmer at 80s.; Western dull at 68s. Bacon steady; Cumberland Cut at 39s.; Short Rib at 42s.; Long Clear at 42s.; Short Clear at 43s. Hams dull; Long Cut at 46s. Shoulders dull at 33s. Beef dull; India Mess at 99s. Lard—Western at 106s.; Prime Mess at 80s. Lard—Prime Western dull at 55s. Tallow—Prime City dull at 42s. Turpentine—Spirits dull at 32s. Resin dull; common at 6s.; fine at 10s. 6d. Cheese—American choice firmer at 72s. Lard-oil—None in the market. Flour—Extra State dull at 25s. 6d. Wheat dull; No. 1 spring at 10s. 5d.; No. 2 spring at 1 a. 4d.; Winter Southern, none in the market; other Western dull at 10s. 8d. Corn—Mixed soft dull at 25s. 3d. for old, and 24s. 9d. for new.

12 M.—Cotton—The receipts to-day were 7,000 bales, including 4,100 bales American. Futures opened weaker with free sellers at last night's prices, but have since become steadier. Uplands, Low Middling clause, February and March delivery, 6 5-8d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, March and April delivery, 6¾d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, April and May delivery, 6⅞d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, May and June delivery, 6 13-16d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, June and July delivery, 7 1-32d.

12:30 P. M.—Cotton—The market is active and firm. Middling Uplands 6 11-16d.; Middling Orleans, 6⅞d.; sales 16,000 bales, including 3,000 bales for speculation and export; additional sales yesterday, after the regular closing, 3,000 bales. Uplands, Low Middling clause, March and April delivery, 6 23-32d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, April and May delivery, 6 29-32d.

1 P. M.—Cotton—Uplands, Low Middling clause, March and April delivery, 6 13-16d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, May and June delivery, 6 31-32d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, June and July delivery, 7 1-32d.

2 P. M.—Cotton—Of the sales to-day 10,500 bales were American. Produce—Tallow, 41s. 9d. ₱ cwt.

2:30 P. M.—Cotton—Futures firm: Uplands, Low Middling clause, April and May delivery, 6 15-16d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, June and July delivery, 7 1-16d.

3 P. M.—Cotton—Uplands, Low Middling clause, May and June delivery, 7d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, July and August delivery, 7⅛d.; Uplands, Low Middling clause, shipped February and March, sail, 6 15-16d.

LONDON, Feb. 10—5 P. M.—Produce—Spirits of Turpentine, 30s. 6d. @31s. ₱ cwt.

ANTWERP, Feb. 10.—Petroleum—45f. for fine Pale American.

HAVANA, Feb. 9.—Spanish Gold, 221¼@221⅝. Exchange unchanged. Sugar unchanged.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

UNIVERSITY SERMONS.

HOURS OF THOUGHT ON SACRED THINGS. By JAMES MARTINEAU, LL. D., D. D. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 16mo, pp. 352. 1876.

SERMONS. Preached before the University of Oxford and on various occasions. By J. S. MOZLEY, D. D. Second edition. New-York: E. P. DUTTON & Co. 12mo, pp. 316. 1876.

REASON, FAITH, AND DUTY. Sermons preached chiefly in the College Chapel. By JAMES WALKER, D. D., LL. D. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 16mo, pp. 470.

A large portion of the religious public is interested in first-class printed sermons; not those which are published weekly as bids for larger favor or influence by distinguished preachers among ourselves, but those into which divines have put their best thinking and that still higher element truly called the soul in thought. These sermons belong to this class, and appeal to that portion of this class who can relish culture in religion, who shun the cheap excitements of revivalists, and who look to see religion not only the supreme element in life, but a controlling influence in society. They appeal to the educated spiritual life; they are, in fact, university sermons. Dr. Walker and Dr. Mozley distinctly anticipated their audiences in this respect; and Dr. Martineau has lately spoken to persons who are upon the same plane of thought and feeling. They are therefore, in a certain sense, representative discourses, as truly reflecting the sentiments of educated Christian believers as Matthew Arnold's writings represent the unrestful literary class to which he belongs. They show in England and in this country what the ethical part of religion is. They discuss the questions which arise in minds trained to logical thought and reflective habits. They dwell chiefly upon the margin or outer border, where conduct is shaped by religion, and yet do not shun any of its radical or fundamental questions. They thus cover the subjects which practically interest the largest number of thoughtful people and which have most to do in connecting religion with actual life. There is always room for such volumes. Whether they come from Dr. Newman, or Archbishop Manning, or Dr. Martineau, or Canon Liddon, or Dr. John Hall, or Dr. Bellows, or Dr. Mozley, they are always sure of select and appreciative audiences, and they mark the highest reaches of practical religious thought in our own time. These sermons almost belong to the class of religious essays, and, except that they have somewhat of the spoken style, they are not many shades removed from the remarkable Theological Essays of Richard Holt Hutton, the editor of the Spectator, and perform a service as literature which gives them prominence in thought and life. Indeed, this literary service, when you consider the great number of preachers in these days, and the chaotic ideas of religion which they frequently put forth, is of the greatest importance. It is not as copies for other men to follow, but as fresh and inspiring words which invigorate and renew minds which otherwise fall into ecclesiastical ruts, that these sermons have their special value.

Dr. Martineau gives us in his new volume a sequel to his Endeavors After the Christian Life, published 30 years ago. As discourses intended to quicken the conscience and lead to action, the sermons are not successful. They are rather meditations than sermons. Essentially the same view of life, the same conception of the order of the world, the same interpretation of the Christian mind, reappears in this later volume, and Dr. Martineau believes that, while "the new lights of historical criticism certainly change in no slight degree our picture of the origin and growth of the Christian religion, every larger comprehension of the universe only invests the principles of that religion with sublimer truth." His topics are of the suggestive kind—"The Tides of the Spirit," "The Moral Quality of Faith," "The Sorrows of the Messiah," "The Unknown Paths," "Time, to Nature, God, and the Soul," "The Discipline of Darkness," "Rest in the Lord," "The Powers of Love," and the like. You think over such a book with your fingers between the leaves, and are not less impressed by the beauty than by the freshness and force and far-reachingness of the thoughts. The point is not that you shall be fully satisfied with your author—for he professedly holds an ecclesiastical position which compels him to minimize what the larger part of the Christian world considers to be vital truth—but that he shall enter into the substance of things and speak the truth as he sees it. Dr. Martineau is intellectually honest, and the usefulness of his sermons is in their interpretation of the religious thoughts of persons who adopt Tennyson's words:

"There lives more faith in honest doubt,
Believe me, than in half the creeds."

He reconciles the religious difficulties of the soul as others reconcile the difficulties of Scripture. He gathers up, through sympathetic feeling, the convictions of the spiritual consciousness, and, while the sermon, as a whole, does not set your heart on fire, it leaves an impression upon the mind which deepens into later conviction and is unforgetable. This was characteristic of Dr. Martineau's earlier discourses, and the fact that they are more true to the present time than they were to the generation for which they were written shows that the author held his ear very closely to the throbbings of hearts, and his mind in close sympathy with other minds around him, when he wrote them. His sermons are not simply ethical, nor entirely meditative, nor very spiritual, but they touch upon the hidden, almost unconscious, thought of the soul, and help to reveal one to himself. They give the human side of religion, and especially the aspirations which culminate in a more positive religion than Dr. Martineau teaches. They lead thoughtful minds very tenderly up to its mysteries, and even to its practical duties, and give the glow of beauty to healthy sentiments, so that Dr. Martineau may, perhaps, justly be called the Thomas à Kempis of the human side of Christ. They say what we all think so exactly as we think it that the sermons find their readers, and the volume at once justifies its place beside the author's previous book as, on the whole, the most precious work which liberal Christianity has given to the world in recent years. The spiritual tenderness and thoughtful pathos of Dr. Martineau can hardly be found elsewhere in the same degree, and his capacity to hint in spiritual things at more than he says has always been his best claim to public recognition. Even his distinguished service as a Christian apologist who fully understands the key-note of modern thought, as is seen in his Materialism and Theology, recently published by the Putnams, is less welcome in this age than his power to touch the hidden life of sensitive and awakened souls. Take any one of the sermons in this volume, and you find this capacity to speak tenderly and wisely. In the sermon on "The Moral Quality of Faith" there is a passage which illustrates what we mean, and there is hardly a page in the volume which does not repeat the same characteristic:

"Nothing so marks the degradation of our modern Christianity as the notion that faith is only opinion—that a man may have it or not without affecting his moral worth—that it is the result of intellectual accident or opportunity, for which God will never call him to account. It is, on the contrary, beyond all comparison, the most complete and distinct exponent of a man's character; and it only we can get to know it, he is revealed to us more clearly than if the whole catalogue of his actions were given us to read. Matters of historical theology, no doubt—critical questions about the authorship of books and the authority of councils—may be differently judged by inquirers of the same spiritual grade. But it is not so with the deep essence of religion; and the view which we may take of our moral relations, of the life here and hereafter of the ruling laws of the universe, of the being and character of God, is the direct product of the radical affections of our nature, and will be false or true simply as these affections are mean or noble. Our devout beliefs are not built as we suppose upon the dry strand of reason, but ride upon the flood of our affections, safe and joyous, bounding over its waves when its surface only plays with the sweet breeze of heaven; but engulfed when it rages in the storm of passion, or fixed in stiff death when its flow is stopped by the Winter of an Arctic intellect. We do not simply learn from experience what we are to think, but we carry into experience feelings and preconceptions by which we read and interpret experience."

But admirable as these sermons are for what most discourses lack, the interpretation of the spiritual side of thought and life, they fail to satisfy those who look for the full expression of spiritual truth. They reach up to a certain point, and never go beyond it. The real Thomas à Kempis surprises you with his grasp of the unseen side of spiritual truth, at the same time that he weaves these truths into his reflections upon the ordinary religious life; but Dr. Martineau stops short where the intellect has its limitations, and is wanting in that grasp of unseen mysteries which is such a conspicuous feature in Tauler, in Newman, in Liddon, in Lacordaire. While we gladly commend the book for what it is—and it is one of the few books which no religious people can afford to pass by—we miss the positive faith which lights up a man from within and dispels the glooms of doubt as the sun scatters the mists of a Spring morning. It would seem as if Dr. Martineau himself, in the last sermon in the book, "Rest in the Lord," had indicated the very quality which all his writing leads up to, but which practically eludes his grasp, and is a thing wished for and not possessed. Compare any one of these discourses with those on similar subjects by Dr. Newman, and while the literary merit is the same, the bracing atmosphere of Dr. Newman's thought lifts you up to a higher plane than any which Dr. Martineau reaches.

Dr. Walker was a remarkable man, but unfortunately one whose work seldom, if ever, fully expressed all that was in him. He did at Harvard, in some respects, what Dr. Arnold did at Rugby. There was somewhat in him which touched men and controlled their lives, somewhat in his sermons at the university which awed and thrilled and changed the men who heard them, somewhat in his personal intercourse which gave peace and rest to those who needed both, and yet, if judged by the two volumes of his sermons, one of which is the volume under review, he was not more than many other men of equal culture and mental vigor. As sermons for a listening audience they are models in construction, definition, and logical power. They are the furthest removed from Dr. Martineau's, or even Dr. Mozley's, in point of effectiveness to an audience, but they are inferior in their ability to interest the reader, and Dr. Walker was undoubtedly right, out of regard to a reputation whose limitations he was wise enough to know, in committing his manuscripts to the flames, which is almost the only defense which a really eminent man can make against the too often reckless judgment of those who come after him. We do not, by this, wish to depreciate these sermons. They have certain qualities which are as precious as they are rare. They are singularly clear discussions of ethical truths, exact in the definitions of each subject, honest and forcible in their statements of practical duty, wise in their judgments of men, always enforcements of great principles of life, precisely the discourses which have the greatest influence in shaping character, coming up to the full idea of what a university sermon should always be. Dr. Walker's favorite discourse in this final volume is "On the Sin of Being Led Astray," and it is that which many Harvard graduates dwell upon as the one sermon of their lives; but the best or most characteristic sermons are "The Philosophy of Man's Spiritual Nature," "Our Duty in Respect to Other Men's Consciences," "On Keeping the Promises We Make to Ourselves," "Means of Strengthening an Infirm Faith," and "Religion not a Science, but a Want." These show how Dr. Walker produced his strong impressions upon the students under his charge, and they are admirable specimens of practical religious teaching. The volume contains an excellent portrait of Dr. Walker, and a statement, all too short, of the chief incidents in his life.

Canon Mozley's sermons have already won their way to the front rank, and were the most notable discourses published during the past year. Not adapted, or in fact intended, for parochial use, nor within the limits or reach of ordinary audiences, they yet contain nothing which is abstruse or misty, or out of range with the common thought of mankind. In fact, it has been considered not a little remarkable that an Oxford Professor and Bampton lecturer should so readily adapt himself to the common language of men, and express himself in English sentences which are as clear and strong as their words are bright, pure, and flexible. No sermons since Newman's have shown such power in stating what is obvious to any one the moment it is stated, in language which, like the poet's rhythm, all can appreciate and very few can imitate. Canon Liddon has a very great mastery of literary expression, but you do not forget the orator in the reading of his sermons. Dr. Mozley has this genius in style to such a degree that, take any page in his volume and analyze the style and you find it exactly what was wanted, and yet practically inimitable. It is almost the language of conversation, but without any of its colloquialisms. It seems to be the spontaneous expression of the man's thought. It is so exact that not a word can be changed without injury to the idea, and yet so free, that every man thinks that he could say the same thing equally well himself. And this is the charm of all writing, whether of prose or poetry, that it shall somehow give the music as well as the thought of a man's brain. But if Dr. Mozley is like Addison, whose Saturday Spectators led his readers away from his moral precepts to the admirable language in which they were couched, he is also like him in the substantial quality of his thought, in his capacity to think through his subject to substantial results. We have no space for quotations which show either Dr. Mozley's genius for style, or his incisiveness and grasp of thought, but they are the qualities which have been constantly remarked by all readers, and which have already sold nearly two editions of his sermons.

In some respects these discourses remind you of Bishop Butler's famous sermons. They take a similar range of subjects, and treat them in much the same way, as pointedly, as briefly, with the same swiftness of logic, the same many-sidedness, but with an immensely superior style. It would be hard to find discourses anywhere which are fresher in thought or more exhaustive in treatment than "The Reversal of Human Judgment," "The Work of the Spirit on the Natural Man," "Our Duty to Equals," "The Unspoken Judgment of Mankind," "The Strength of Wishes." There is no evidence that the author had gone to the full limits of his thought, and yet the amount of suggestive thinking, lighted up with that glow which religious genius gives to every subject it touches, in these discourses, is almost beyond belief. How the Oxford undergraduates were able to digest one of these sermons as it was delivered is a puzzle which only a Philadelphia lawyer can make clear, but, in the reading, the charm, delight, surprise is so great that you do not know where to stop, and sentences and thoughts linger in your memory like the remembered music of a dream. His discourses, like Dr. Martineau's and Dr. Walker's, are chiefly ethical, as university sermons are apt to be, but they are much different. The atmosphere of doubt in the one, the cool clearness of the moral sense in the other, is met in Dr. Mozley's writing by a bright, clear, positive faith, which informs and vitalizes his thought, and enables him to deal with religious doubt as the physician gives medicine to his patients, and still keep clearly before you the inward light of a pure conscience. Bishop Temple in his Rugby sermons, displays many of the qualities which are found in such happy combination in these discourses, and Dr. Jowett, whose university fame and influence are, perhaps, greater than Dr. Mozley's, is still the man who treads very closely in his footsteps in that venerable university which is the fountain-head of British religious belief.

A CITY OF THE DEAD.

THE NECROPOLIS OF PRÆNESTE.

FROM ROME TO PALESTRINA—THE ANCIENT LAND-MARKS—AN ARCHÆOLOGICAL EXCURSION—DISCOVERY OF THE CISTÆ—THEIR CONTENTS—THE STORY OF A NECKLACE—DESIGNS ON THE CISTÆ—ETRUSCAN AND ETRURIAN ART.

Prænesté! How many remembrances cluster around this name! The bare mention of this old town awakens an honest curiosity in the imagination of those who love to dwell on the history of times which have long passed away. Prænesté! Here are still those Pelasgic walls which point backward to the first dawn of Italy, there the monuments of Etruscan times, together with those massive quadrilateral structures built by Scylla in the last days of the Republic. You can find in Prænesté the opera laterisa (brick work) which dates from the later period of Imperial Rome. Prænesté contains, too, in its midst the remains of gloomy edifices due to the Middle Ages, which Cola di Rienzi swept away, and lastly, in the town, there is the palace of Urban VIII. where that celebrated mosaic is preserved, the deciphering of which is still an enigma for the archæologist. During 30 centuries of existence what magnificences and what misfortunes have not the venerable monuments of Prænesté witnessed!

The route which leads from Rome to Prænesté, (the Palestrina of our day,) called the Via Labicana, is one which delights the traveler. There is a certain peculiar and inexplicable charm which always accompanies any one who journeys over the vast and desert Campagna, with its far distant horizons. These plains have certain savage beauties of their own which seem to recall with pride their former grandeur. Here and there stand ruins, and at every step remembrances start up as if by enchantment. If, on a pleasant Autumn morning, leaving Rome by the Porta Maggiore, bent on the greatest of all pleasures, an archæological excursion, you give yourself up to the monotonous swaying of your carriage, your eyes are delighted with the soft, tender blue of the skies, and you are dazzled by the brilliancy of the sun as it glints here and there and flashes on some old arch of a ruined aqueduct. All is still and quiet, and there is just that deep silence which the nymphs loved to hear," scarce interrupted save by the song of the lark or by the far distant tinkling of the cattle bells. You are overcome by an all-pervading sense of happiness and are steeped in enchanting reveries.

By degrees the road becomes more distinct, for now at each station the stories and legends of the olden time awaken thought. Here is the Tor Pignattara, the tomb of the Empress Helen, the mother of Constantine. The name Pignattara is derived from the Pignatte, or terra-cotta amphoræ with which the Romans often constructed the vaults of their buildings in order to give them lightness with acoustic principles. Here is Torre Nuova, where the gigantic pines, with their umbrella tops, trace their black silhouettes against the blue of the heavens. Now we approach Castiglione, the old Gabii, where the famous Diana, one of the treasures of the Museum of the Louvre, was discovered. Further on, away to the right, can be seen the source of the Aqua Felice and of Lake Regulus. The ascent is now more rapid until you reach the Osteria della Colonna, from whence, perched on its volcanic summit, one catches in profile a view of old Labicum. It is about 10 miles further on from here to Prænesté. Just here the road sinks into a fertile valley which stretches to the right and left. Suddenly this valley narrows, and you see cut in the tuffo a few Roman tombs, while away off in the distance appear the elegant domes of Zagarolo. You are now in the domain of the Barbarini family, and you pass under the shade of long rows of gloomy trees. You cannot fail observing that you are approaching some ancient city, because your road is an old Roman way, and paved with large irregular stones. You are on the route which united old Prænesté with Labicum and Tusculum. In a few minutes more you reach the Porta del Sole, and now you are in the midst of the pretty houses of Palestrina, coquettishly poised on a rocky amphitheatre, and above them towers the fortress the Colonna built. Just here, in this very place, was erected that most famous temple dedicated to Fortune, whose foundation is lost in the dark night of ages long gone past. This shrine was so built that it overlooked all Latium, even as far as Rome. No matter where the patient laborer might stand toiling over his fields, in the immensity of the plain, he could always see the temple. As the poor hind wiped the sweat from his brow, he might find consolation, even forget his toils, as he muttered a prayer to the goddess Volubile. This Temple of Fortune was of such untold magnificence that it astonished the ancient world. It was an Athenian philosopher who declared "that he never cast eyes on so fortunate a Fortune as the one at Prænesté." Who can tell what were the riches amassed in the sanctuaries, hidden away by the priests attached to the worship of the deity? Those ex voti due to the superstition of the age must have been showered down upon the goddess. There might have been found there, the modest terra cotta figure, the offering of the poor, with the more sumptuous gifts of the opulent. The rich, who never could have been contented, ever wanting more, lavished on the goddess scarabs, engraved by the greatest artists, or jewels, or vases, or purest gold, wonderfully decorated. All clamored to Fortune of Fortune.

"Quest' è colei che è tanto posta in croce
Pur da color che le dovrian dar lode,
Dandole biasmo a torto e mala voce."
—Dante, Inferno, Canto VII.

When Caius Marius killed himself within the walls of Prænesté, Scylla's legions laid violent hands on the shrine, and the treasures of the Temple of Fortune were cast to the winds. What a pillage that must have been! Superstitious Scylla, however, rebuilt the temple, embellished it, and did his best to court the fickle favor of the goddess.

Augustus, Tiberius, Nero, Domitian, all made Prænesté one of their favorite resorts. To-day on the outskirts may be seen what was once a sumptuous villa of Adrian. Horace sang of the beauty of Prænesté. During the ninth century Prænesté took its modern name of Palestrina. The town then entered into those terrible struggles which raged between the Papacy and the Empire. We must, however, pass over in silence this most interesting epoch in the history of the Middle Ages, and enter at once into the City of the Dead.

The Necropolis of Prænesté is situated at the foot of the mountain. It occupies a vast extent of ground, and the tombs of many periods superposed one on top of the other, seem as if, by their position, to be mute guardians pointing out the various epochs of its history. The middle of the tumulus is evidently the oldest portion, and around it are vast circles of tombs, which were constructed as the City of the Dead ever increased in size. The Roman remains occupy the largest circumference. Always excepting the discovery made of the famous Ficoroni cista, preserved in the Collegio Romano, in the greater number of old explorations these tombs yielded objects attributable to the later periods of the Roman Empire. It is only within the last twenty years that the true sepulchres of ancient Prænesté, those of the Italo-Grecian period, have been brought to light.

A peasant working on the Barbarini property, in the act of planting a vineyard, struck with his pick a certain hard body which resisted his efforts. The man dug a trench, sought for the obstruction, and discovered a sarcophagus. This sarcophagus yielded a number of ornaments fashioned in amber and bronze, which were novelin form and character. There were collarets, fibulæ in amber, combined with gold and silver, and ornaments in bronze fashioned in a most primitive style. This discovery was the commencement of a series of careful explorations, which gave even more satisfactory returns. In the Barbarini library at Rome, belonging to Prince Barbarini, may be seen some very choice bronze cistæ, with specimens of gold ornaments, and instruments in ivory, of archaic form. Apropos of this jewelry, I recall a pleasing incident. One day, in opening a tomb at Prænesté, a necklace of pure gold was found. It was a chain made of delicate strands of gold, about the circumference of the little finger. It was a real work of Arachnée, and terminated with two hooks arranged as a clasp. The whole was conceived in the chastest style. From the chain there hung a bulla representing the head of Archelous, with his beard and horns, exactly the same type as is preserved in the Capuan terra cotta, and may be seen on the coins due to Neapolis. This necklace, brought to Rome, was presented to the Princess Barbarini just when she had completed her toilet, tire lady going to a ball that night. The necklace was so beautiful, the color of the gold so pure, its preservation so perfect, that the Princess took off the traditional diamonds of the Barbarini family and clasped around her fair neck the newly-acquired treasure. The lady was the goddess of the fête, and for many a day afterward Rome talked of this necklace, which, wrested one fine morning from the mystery of the tomb, on the same evening had excited the envy of all that was most beautiful of the Roman aristocracy.

Incited by the successful explorations of Prince Barbarini, all those who owned land in the neighborhood commenced researches, and most important finds were made. Twelve cistæ of bronze were discovered, all containing those curious objects belonging to the toilet, such as engraved mirrors and ivory work, and I was fortunate enough to become the possessor of these treasures, which now form a portion of my collection.

These cistæ, what was their use? At first it was thought that cistæ were certain receptacles appertaining to the mystical Eleusinian rights. Archæologists of the eighteenth century called the single one found at Ficoroni, "Mistica." The engraving on this particular cista, represents, on one portion of it, a gladiator bearing a cista. The figure is in a boat, which is just reaching the shore of a river. Can this river be the Styx? On the other side of the cista is a scene where Amycus is bound to a tree by Pollux, in the presence of the assembled Argonauts.

To-day every doubt in regard to the character of these cistæ is cleared up. My own discoveries at Prænesté have certainly solved the question. We have every reason to suppose that these cistæ were caskets which contained all the necessary articles for the bath. We even found cistæ in which had been kept sponges, which were in perfect preservation, together with combs, rouge, strigils, mirrors, hair-pins, alabastrons, (perfume vases,) and even little wooden sandals. How were we to have served those thousand other nothings so indispensable for a woman, such as needles, spools, stilets for writing on wax tablets, and even dice, possibly to amuse the ladies of that day, and relieve, as Lord Byron has it, "the sad labor of the toilet." These cistæ, usually cylindrical in form, rarely oval, are about a foot or a little more in diameter. They always have a cover to them, and stand either on winged sphynxes, or chimæras, or on the feet of clawed animals of mythological form, in the highest degree of relief. The single handle to the cover is very characteristic. Placed in the middle, this handle is invariably composed of human figures. Sometimes it is a woman in the position of an acrobat, or a drunken menad supported by a satyr. It may be two athletes wrestling, or two figures, male and female, with outstretched arms, supported on each other's shoulders, the man holding a fetich, the woman an alabastron. Two cistæ in my collection are of wood and bronze. The handles are formed by grouping two athletes, who carry the body of a third man. On the surface of the lid and around the cistæ are found graffiti engravings made with a graving tool. Around the edge of the cover, and the top and bottom of the sides, are two circles of ornamentation, which are in the Greek style. Sometimes the cistæ bear inscriptions in early Latin. It seems quite evident that the handles and feet were cast by Etruscan metal-founders, who took their models after old traditional forms, while the engraved work shows the direct influence of an art undoubtedly derived from Grecian mythology. Sometimes these outlines are as pure as the most beautiful conceptions traced on Greek vases. Occasionally there is a certain affectation of style and that peculiar mannerism which belong more particularly to Etruscan mirrors and to Campanian vases. These cistæ date from a period of from 300 to 200 years before the birth of Christ. It was about this time that Greek forms exercised their influence on the artists of Campania. This peculiar style, found at Prænesté, shows certain differences in architectural details and ornamentation which mark that curious period of transition between the Greco-Etruscan and what is properly called early Roman art.

On examining my catalogue of antiques, notices on the various subjects engraved on the cistæ may be consulted. I am desirous, however, of calling, more particularly, attention to the No. 1 of my catalogue. This cista is oval in form, and bears an engraving of amazing delicacy. This casket has a peculiar archæological value. Many erudite archæologists have written that, in the Æneid, all those legends relative to the founding of Rome and the origin of the Latin race were attributable to Virgil, who was desirous of flattering the natural pride of the Roman. Strange to say, this cista, which must have been fashioned fully two centuries before Virgil was born, has for its leading subject the alliance between Latinus and Æneas. In the composition, the old King bears the crown, while he tramples under foot the warlike arms, indicating a time of peace. He stretches out his right hand to Æneas. The Trojan hero points to the dead body of Turnus, borne off by the soldiers, and is apparently clamorous for the reward of his triumph, which is Lavinia. Lavinia, in a pose full of grace and timidity, seems disposed to accept Æneas for her spouse. To complete the scene, on the left, Lavinia's step-mother is in the act of flight. In front there are the recumbent figures of the River Minutius and his nymph, both personified. Virgil repeated, then, nothing more than an old popular legend.

One cista (No. 4 of the catalogue) represents Atlanta speeding in the race. She is equipped with a sword, and seems to be just about distancing Milanion, and is ready to kill him, but her suitor, guarded by Aphrodite, Minerva, and other divinities, is in the act of throwing in her path the golden apples, which Venus has given him, so that Atlanta, dazzled by their splendor, shall lose the race, as she stoops to pick them up. This subject and its treatment is among the very rarest. It contains numerous figures, and the study of the whole affords ample research for the archæological taste. I would like to call attention to the peculiar monument which forms the starting point of the race. The decoration is composed of columns of Ionian order. These columns bear on their upper portions bas-reliefs, with figures and ornamentations, which recall, in a striking manner, those columns belonging to the temple at Ephesus now preserved in the British Museum. The rest of the cistæ are either ornamented with scenes evidently taken from the private life of the people of antiquity, or bear figures of divinities derived from Grecian mythology. Some bear Latin inscriptions. There is one cista, having on it a Venus caressing a dove, which is conceived with singular grace and purity.

Such engraved mirrors as are found in these cistæ also bear figures, with Latin and Etruscan inscriptions. These mirrors might furnish me the material alone for an extended article. The No. 32 of the catalogue is a bronze mirror case ornamented in bas-relief, representing Ganymede carried away by Jupiter in the form of an eagle, in presence of his affrighted brothers and sisters. This mirror case is one of the very rarest examples of ancient repoussé work.

All these various objects, aside from their archæological value, are of the greatest artistic merit. The lessons they ought to impart I am certain will not be lost by those who in this great country are desirous of solving the question how to blend applied art with American industry. For the jewelers or silversmiths in the United States whose beautiful work I have so much admired, and who already show such a predilection to classical forms, the study of these cistæ would furnish models of great value. Should any of these most skillful artists reproduce in silver these cistæ, with their feet, their covers, their handles, with their pendant chains hung in graceful festoons, by using different shades of metal, by burnishing or oxidation, the most harmonious effects could be produced and a work of the highest artistic merit could be recreated.

I am at present inclined to think that these cistæ are only to be found at Prænesté, since none have been discovered in other localities. The number now known is quite limited. The British Museum exhibits three cistæ, the Berlin Museum three, the Louvre four, two of which are of very small size.

Before concluding this necessarily rapid description of the treasures found at Prænesté, it is but fitting that I should express the deep gratification I have felt for the interest the people of the United States have taken in my collections. These collections I have left in the Metropolitan Museum of Art of New-York, which the Trustees have in the most liberal and hospitable manner opened to me. I am, then, only too happy to see them placed side by side with the Cesnola treasures. This Cesnola collection I like to call "the book of grammar of Greek art." Together in one grand assemblage, these various collections offer an unbroken chain in the history of art, beginning with its earliest manifestations some 2,000 years before the birth of Christ, and concluding with the seventeenth century of our own era.

ALESSANDRO CASTELLANI.

A QUEER DUEL.

The Cumberland, (Md.) News of the 5th inst. says: "Yesterday afternoon a pigeon and a full grown goose, feeding on the premises of Mr. W. H. Forster, North Cumberland, got into a quarrel, presumably over the division of their dinner, and organized a very lively battle. The pigeon flew angrily about the goose's head, putting in a little peck whenever he could, but finally it received a blow from the goose's bill and fled, true to its habits, aiming at the roof of the house. The goose, thoroughly mad, followed, watching the pigeon until it became necessary to concentrate its attention on its efforts to fly so high, when, in its blind fury, it dashed against the wall and fell to the ground, dead. When it was picked up its neck was found to be broken."

A TROPICAL HOTEL.

LIFE AT A BRAZILIAN RESORT.

THE PLEASURES OF A RENOWNED SOUTH AMERICAN HOSTELRY—MINE HOST AND HIS GOOD CHEER—MOUNTAIN SCENERY IN THE TROPICS—FERDINAND AND THE MONKEYS.

Bennett's, at Tijuca, is, or was, a hostelry of much renown among South Americans. It is not far from Rio. A couple of hours, sheer up the mountain, shooting your donkey through zones of thunder-cloud and belts of rain, as if he were a rocket or a witch's broomstick, and you find yourself at its welcoming porch. Very likely the Senhor is there in person to greet you, white-haired, rosy, and rotund, with the air of a Bishop and the soft palm of a Duchess. You may travel far without seeing an inn-keeper whose presence betokens such mild and venerable distinction. He would not seem out of place under the cobalt ensign of the Garter. Properly wigged, he would look like the Lord Chancellor, even at the bagatelle table, with a cheroot in his mouth. A scholar would say that he might have translated an eclogue of Virgil or wrestled with the obstinacies and obscurities of the Greek particle. I should not have been at all surprised to have seen the parchment of a university, inscribed with his name, hanging upon the wall of the little room in which he composed his admirable ménus, and made out his exceedingly moderate bills. It was a privilege to be admitted to that arcanum of hospitality. There were long cigars in a wicker basket; there was a wondrous flask of port, which mysteriously renewed its ebbing ruby wave. It never ran dry. There were the latest illustrated periodicals from London. Above the door hung a hunting whip and horn. He had hunted in his youth, and over Yorkshire and Sussex downs heard the hounds, crook-kneed and dewlapped like Thessalian bulls, their ears sweeping away the morning dew, and their mouths matched like bells, each under each. Since then his girdle had lengthened in prosperous years of exile, but he yet spoke, and with ardor, of the merry November tumult in which his youth had shared. In the window was a jar containing a serpent's head preserved in spirits. It was large as a pomegranate, and with fangs like toothpicks. Poisonous? Certainly; a scratch from one of them, and you are dead in ten minutes. No antidote known. So affirmed the Senhor, poising the jar against the light and shutting one eye as he contemplated the object within it with an interest which was almost affectionate. He had slain and beheaded the reptile with his own hand. By the window-side were shelves with books. Sometimes a monkey, with a countenance of discouragement, clung at its ledge, dragging with him at each remove an unlengthening fragment of chain.

The beautiful spot in which the Senhor had fixed his abode drew his attention while it was yet a wild—a place of bamboos, of humming birds, of epiphytes, of the purple quaresma. He was a merchant in those days, and rich. So, aided by the sorceries of opulence, he smote his staff into the earth and a Fazenda arose. It was a hospitable mansion from the beginning. The echo of a guest's footstep was the "open sesame" of its gates since they were first balanced upon their hinges. How it befell that, little by little, in the course of years it lapsed from the condition of a gentleman's private Summer mansion to that of an inn, I have heard, but have somehow half forgotten. Nor is it of any import. Nothing about it was changed except that the guests had the privilege of paying a moderate sum for their entertainment, and might at will prolong their sojourn without fear that they were outstaying their welcome.

All round it the mountains rose, climbing the sky with their massy burden of foliage like a queen's robe wrought over with flowers. Narrow paths, just wide enough for equestrians to meet and pass each other, ran zig-zag up their slopes. Sometimes, following the afternoon rain, cascades shot from lofty, distant ledges, trailed and wavered in the misty air for a space, and then faded away like ribbons of mist. In one direction the summits broke asunder, leaving a wide gorge, through which the sunset poured its tremendous and blinding flame. In other seasons of the day, looking thitherward you might see the square, gray buttress of the Gavia, its wall marked with gigantic and unknown hieroglyphs. In the sunset hours it was but a fire image, unregarded amid burning immensities, drowned in sidereal deluges of light. Through the gorge shot a crystal brook, with the bright speed of Oxus leaping from its high mountain cradle of Pamere—a stream of foam and waterfalls. On its way thither it ran through the gardens of the fazenda. From my arm-chair on the veranda I could throw a pebble into the midst of its bright, whirling tumult. Perhaps I could have thrown the monkey so far if the obstinate simian would have co-operated. But he was of an illiberal temper. Ferdinand, the young negro page, one day sought to immerse him in its waters, losing considerable wool in the transaction. Even with that sacrifice, he completely failed to saturate his monkey.

Ferdinand! A host of memories come thronging back with the mention of his name. He was about three feet long, with eyes like beads, and a smile which at a superficial glance seemed to run all round his head. He had a basis of good nature, but no morality or sense of obligation. He would postpone urgent duties for the purpose of assuming acrobatic attitudes, choosing for these exploits occasions on which there seemed neither local incentive nor any sufficient cause. He had a habit of standing suddenly on his head, without rhyme or reason, and exposing the soles of his feet, which were of a pale amber color and plantigrade formation, to the vertical rays of the sun. In the seasons when his services were most desirable he would withdraw from observation to perform that singular rite. He could and did scuttle up trees with as much agility as the monkeys which he fed and tended, and with which he was habitually at feud. There was a cage full of them across the open space in front of the veranda, and his minstration to them excited much interest among the guests. From mere perversity he was always skirting the edges of peril, and his ears were pulled by the larger monkeys with great frequency and violence.

The duties assigned to him were various, but in performing them he was careful to introduce no embarrassing precedents of promptitude or attention to orders. When he came he came in a casual manner, not in any way connected as to time with the signal which had summoned him. Apprehensions were not wanting that he investigated the savor of dishes on their way to the table with sly inquisitive forefinger. An intaglio impression of his thumb was a not infrequent ornament of the pots of marmalade. In the evening, when the dining-room was cleared for quadrilles, he was accustomed to engage in private break-downs in corners, and when intrusted with the lemonade tray at the refectionary stage of the entertainment, upset the same with a regularity resembling that of a natural law.

Anything in a bottle was his spoil. He "sampled" flasks of bay rum, caraffes of aromatic vinegar, Jockey Club, collodion, solutions of borax, anything, with a subsequent result of colic, which was always promptly and vigorously antagonized by the administration of copious doses of tar water. Senhor Bennett's confidence in that balsamic elixir equaled that of Bishop Berkeley, and he gave it indifferently to his negroes, mules, and monkeys whenever any of them seemed "out of sorts." Of tar water Ferdinand was reputed to have taken no end—barrels. But it seemed to have had little effect either on his morals or his constitution.

In a shady corner of the veranda, looking out upon the garden, used to sit the Dona Isabel in a little low chair, with her wicker work-basket on the one hand and a small book-stand on the other. In the former were sprays and sprigs of embroidery, bright wools, and many thimbles; upon the latter a French novel, the Revis des Deux Mondes, a book of verses, a slim crystal vase with a single flower. The Dona was fond of literature, though she never read anything through of embroidery, though no more than Penelope did she ever finish the tapestry on which she wrought; of conversation, though she invariably forgot what she set out to say, and ended with something else in a surprising and irrelevant, though not unamusing, manner. She had two daughters in pinafores, whom, each morning, she taught religious lessons out of a long black book with a cross on it, and a black-eyed son, a dozen years old, who united with Ferdinand in experiments upon the Senhor's mules. Was it torbearance or bad kicking on the part of the animals that young master and young bondman were not sent flying over the stables? The Dona possessed a calm confidence in Providence which forbade anxiety, and a spectacle of her son rocking upon the summit of a squealing hybrid, its ears horizontal with rage, gave her no agitating concern.

The Dona was of rank. Her husband was a magistrate, and had held a Government portfolio. She was handsome, after a droway fashion. Moreover, she had a sort of unexpected accidental wit, the flashes of which seemed to inspire her with an emotion of mild surprise, as if she wondered where such clever things came from. In default of a sovereign of more imposing sort, it befell that a little court clustered about her. After dinner her chair was always the centre of a pleasant, vivacious group. There was Mme. Laura, with her dark Lusitanian eyes and delicate laces of Alencon? Venice? Valenciennes? I know not—they were very rare and ethereal—and her carcanet of rubies, and her hand of pearl veined with pale turquoise—lucky the man to whom she had given it, one would think. He didn't seem to be oppressed with the reflection, but sat aloof and smoked his cigar, paying little attention to the feminine prattle. There was Mme. Marie likewise, whose husband looked like Vela's Napoleon, and who was herself like Mme. Recamier. She said not much, but the flush came and went on her cheek like fire on opal, and was more eloquent than speech. There was the coffee planter's wife likewise, with her diamonds and her three pale pink daughters, shy but buxom; Samuels, the Jew banker, who seemed to be composed of contradiction and hair-oil, with a sprinkling of watch-chain and amethysts; young Periegesis, whiskered British swell, blonde and watery, traveling for his health, which seemed equal to that of a Normandy dray horse; Parker, Yankee civil engineer, who had laid out lines of railroads all over the world, and who in this service had been baked to the complexion of a Samian water-pot; Bert, alim handsome Cuban youth, subsequently garroted by the Spanish oppressors of his native isle, who captured him with arms in his hands fighting gallantly for its liberation; the worthy Senhor Bennett himself, and the saffron-colored magistrate—proud of his wife as Mathew Bagnet, though in a less demonstrative way—these and a number more composed the afternoon court of Dona Isabel, on whom she sat, languid, handsome, and mildly colloquial, till the sun had sloped his westering wheel toward heaven's descent, till the dusk came and fire-flies lit the garden, answering in myriad gleams the queen regnant's cigarette. For the Dona smoked. Then came tea, games, waltzes, moonlight discourses of men and women, beneath the watchful stars and the high hovering garden palms. Then the ladies went to bed, and the men drew sociably together, and over goblets of claret cup and regalias chatted of the news and events of the day. Most of them had been to the city, returning at dusk, and bringing with them unto that mountain isolation the echoes of the world. At last they dropped off one after another, leaving the tough old magistrate and the equally hardy civil engineer, who kept it up till daybreak.

And speaking of the fire-flies, the mountain slopes blazed with them from dusk till dawn as if the fairies had hung out in their lamps the light their elfin festivities. As for the garden, its foliage was shot through and through with their glittering beams, and the capitals of the palms, alive with their lustre, spread against the sky like oriental aigrettes. The clusters of bamboo by the brookside were lit like giant Christmas trees—like the branched and towering candelabra of a king's hall of audience. They were larger than their congeners, which bear their modest midsummer torches, lit and extinguished in fitful intermittence, along the darkening meadow lands of the

SITUATIONS WANTED.

FEMALES.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES,

Up-town office of THE TIMES is located at No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts. Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

CHAMBER-MAID.—BY A SCOTCH PROTESTANT girl as chamber-maid, or chamber-maid and waitress. Address M., Box No. 293 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

CHAMBER-MAID.—BY AN AMERICAN GIRL AS chamber-maid, or to assist at cooking, washing, and ironing. Call at No. 158 East 42d st.

CHAR-WOMAN.—BY A RESPECTABLE WOMAN to go out by the day cooking, washing, and ironing, or other work; best City reference. Call at No. 57 West 18th st.; ring bell.

COOK — COACHMAN.—BY A FIRST-CLASS French cook, and husband as coachman or waiter; no objection to go alone; best City reference. Address M. S., No. 150 East 42d st.

COOK.—BY A PROTESTANT SCOTCH WOMAN AS first-class cook; English and French baking and pastry; all kinds of sweets; best City reference. Call at No. 235 West 29th st.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS COOK IN A SMALL private family; is fully competent; City and country reference. Call at No. 125 West 24th st., between 6th and 7th avs.; ring bell No. 17.

COOK.—BY A RESPECTABLE FRENCH WOMAN IN a private family; City or country; good reference. Call or address for two days No. 226 West 31st st., basement.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS COOK; UNDERstands French and English cooking in every way; good manager; can do marketing if required. Call at No. 113 West 26th st.

COOK.—BY A FIRST-CLASS COOK IN EVERY respect; is a very good manager; by the week or month. Call at No. 118 West 26th st.

COOK, &c.—BY A GERMAN GIRL FOR COOKING, washing, and ironing in an American family. Call at No. 223 East 42d st., top floor, front.

DRESS-MAKER.—BY AN EXPERIENCED dress-maker; good trimmer, cutter by Taylor's system; makes over-dresses; operates on Wheeler & Wilson's machine; by day or week; terms, $8 per week; country not objected to. Apply at No. 715 6th av., near 44th st.

DRESS-MAKER.—BY AN ENGLISH WOMAN; perfect cutter of family clothing; perfect operator on Wheeler & Wilson's machine; $1 per day; 15 years' reference. Address K., Box No. 274 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

DRESS-MAKER.—BY A PERSON OF EXPERIence the work of some families, either by the day or at her home; cuts, fits, and trims in French style. Address L. E. L., No. 107 East 12th st.

GOVERNESS OR LADY'S COMPANION.—BY a young French widow lady of education, refinement, and unexceptionable references; is used to traveling and good society; salary not so much an object as an agreeable position. Address S. M. S. M., Box No. 120 Times Office.

HOUSEKEEPER.—BY A YOUNG WIDOW OF highest culture, being a thorough housekeeper; would travel as companion to a lady, or anything not menial; salary no object; country preferred; references. Address H. A., Box No. 253 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

HOUSEKEEPER.—OR ANY PLACE OF TRUST, by a respectable energetic young Scotch lady, who is a thorough housekeeper; is not afraid of her hands; is cheerful and sympathetic; is a good dress-maker; invaluable where there are children or in sickness. Address Mrs. Miller, No. 62 Fulton st., Brooklyn.

HOUSEKEEPER.—BY AN INTELLIGENT, ENergetic New-England woman, as housekeeper in family; matron in an institution, or companion to an invalid; is competent and willing to fill any position not menial; references exchanged. Address A., Box No. 288 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, 1,257 BROADWAY.

HOUSE-WORK.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG girl to do house-work, or take care of children; reference. Call on or address present employer, No. 102 West 56th st., basement.

LADY'S MAID.—BY A CAPABLE GIRL; UNDERstands hair-dressing and dress-making; obliging and accustomed to travel; City reference. Apply for two days at No. 471 6th av., in the milliners'; ring first bell.

LADY'S MAID.—BY A YOUNG WOMAN; IS A good dress-maker; understands cutting, fitting, and hair-dressing perfectly; no objections to travel; good reference. Call at No. 150 East 23d st.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A YOUNG COLORED WOMAN, for as chamber-maid in a private family, City or country; best City reference. Call at No. 141 West 30th st.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A FIRST-CLASS LAUNDRESS in a private family; best City reference; no objection to a short distance in the country. Call for two days at No. 253 East 31st st.

LAUNDRESS.—BY A RESPECTABLE COLORED woman as laundress or chamber-maid. Call or address No. 107 West 24th st., top floor.

NURSE.—BY A SCOTCH PROTESTANT WOMAN; is capable of taking full charge of an infant from its birth; very good with bottle baby; no objection to the country; good reference. Call at No. 715 6th av., in millinery store.

NURSE AND SEAMSTRESS.—TAKE THE ENtire charge of a baby or grown children; is neat and obliging; has the best City references. Call at No. 192 West 19th st.

NURSE.—BY A TRAINED NURSE IN A FAMILY or institution; hospital experience; specialty, fits. Address Invalid Nurse, Muhlenourg Shelter, 6th av. and 20th st.

NURSE.—BY A PROTESTANT GIRL AS INFANT'S or growing children's nurse; best of references. Address N. E., No. 562 Broadway.

NURSE.—BY AN EDUCATED, EXPERIENCED young English Protestant girl lately landed; City or country, or would travel. Call at No. 763 6th av.

SEAMSTRESS—NURSE.—BY TWO YOUNG girls; one as seamstress and assist at up-stairs work; the other to mind children and teach them English studies. Call or address Miss M. Cass, No. 337 East 21st st.

WASHING.—FAMILIES' AND GENTLEMEN'S washing by the week or month; prices reasonable; orders properly attended to. Call or address S. J. Turner, No. 151 West 31st st., first floor.

WASHING.—BY A FIRST-CLASS LAUNDRESS TO go out by the day; can do all kinds of fluting, laces, and fine work; best of reference. Call at Mrs. Plunkett's, No. 326 East 36th st.

WASHING.—BY AN EXPERIENCED LAUNDRESS at all kinds of laundry work; plain washing, 75 cents per dozen. Call or address Mrs. Cooper, No. 440 West 25th st., basement.

WASHING.—BY A RESPECTABLE COLORED woman; gentlemen's and families' washing from 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen. Call or address No. 118 West 26th st.

WASHING.—BY A RESPECTABLE WOMAN; family and gentlemen's washing; 75c. a dozen; fluting, puffing, and polishing. Call at Mrs. Sullivan's, No. 420 East 15th st., third floor, back room.

WASHING.—BY A YOUNG COLORED LAUNdress, washing at her own residence; best reference. Call at No. 141 West 30th st.

WASHING.—BY A RESPECTABLE COLORED laundress; in her own residence or either ladies' or gent's. Mrs. Holley, No. 258 West 27th st.

MALES.

A POSITION WANTED IN AN INCORPORATED Company in this City, or charge of estates; reference and security given. Address A. E. Lawrence, Box No. 285 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

COACHMAN.—BY A COMPETENT MARRIED man; no incumbrance; thoroughly understands his business; has a first-class knowledge of the proper care and treatment of horses, carriages, &c.; first-class City reference. Call or address J. D., Brewster & Co.'s, 47th st. and Broadway.

COACHMAN AND GROOM.—BY A RESPECTable young man, German, first-class groom and driver; in City or country; willing and obliging; best of City and country reference. Address Coachman, Box No. 267, TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO 1,257 BROADWAY.

COACHMAN.—BY A SINGLE MAN WHO THOroughly understands the care of horses, carriages, and harness; careful City driver; best City reference; can be seen at present employer's. Call on or address No. 163 West 56th st., private stable.

COACHMAN.—BY A SINGLE SCOTCHMAN; thoroughly experienced with horses, carriages, &c.; good careful driver, and good vegetable gardener; willing and obliging, as references will state, Address J. D., Box No. 233 Times Office.

COACHMAN.—BY A MARRIED MAN; NO FAMILY; first-class references from former employers; no objection to the country. Call or address for two days Coachman, No. 38 West 30th st., two doors east of Broadway.

COACHMAN.—BY AN ENGLISHMAN; THOROughly understands his business; three and a half years' good City reference. Address H. M., No. 347 7th av.

COOK, &c.—BY A FRENCHMAN AS GOOD COOK and pastry in a private family; City reference. Address Jules, No. 160 West 28th st.

FARMER OR GARDENER.—BY AN AMERIcan, with first-class references, as farmer or gardener; one who thoroughly understands the care of stock; engagement desired by the 1st of April. Address M. H., Orange Post Office, New-Jersey.

GARDENER.—BY A GERMAN, 25 YEARS' EXperience in greenhouses, graperies, fruit, vegetables, and landscaping; can use tools and milk; best references as to honesty and capability. Address C. G., Box No. 307 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

GARDENER.—BY AN EXPERIENCED MAN; understands gardening and farming; care of horses a specialty; distinguished references given. Call or address Laditsky, No. 141 West 28th st.

GARDENER.—BY A FIRST-CLASS LANDSCAPE gardener, the complete charge of a place, (vegetable or pleasure grounds;) married, no children; best references. Address C. SCHMELZ, Rahway, N. J.

GARDENER.—BY A FIRST-CLASS FRENCH GARdener, single; competent in all branches; of long experience in this country. Call or address A. S., gardener, No. 136 Bleecker st., New-York.

GARDENER AND FARMER.—BY A YOUNG German as gardener and farmer; best references; address W. J., Williamsbridge Post Office, New-York.

GARDENER.—THOROUGH, PRACTICAL, (ENGlish;) age, 28; married; first-rate reference as to character and ability. Address F. W., No. 67 Nassau st.

HEAD GARDENER.—BY A SINGLE MAN, A German, who thoroughly understands the business in all its branches; best of reference given. Address J. D., care of Roberch & Wilson, Florists, corner 26th st. and Broadway.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

MALES.

USEFUL MAN.—BY A RESPECTABLE PROTestant young man to drive a doctor's wagon; can care and drive horses, or make himself useful around private house; can clean silver, attend all kinds of furnaces, or make himself useful at anything for moderate wages; A 1 references. Address J. W. Aiken, Box No. 236 Times Office.

USEFUL MAN—COOK AND LAUNDRESS.—By a man and wife, lately landed; man as plain gardener, take care of horses, drive, &c., milk, and be generally useful; wife is good plain cook and excellent laundress. Call at No. 338 East 36th st., top floor.

WAITER.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG COLored man in a private family; City reference; obliging and willing to do anything. Address L. W., Box No. 298 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

WAITER.—BY SINGLE COLORED MAN AS waiter in first class private family; has best City and country reference; no objection to the country Call or address Pender, No. 109 West 52d st.

WAITER.—BY A CAPABLE FRENCH WAITER as butler; has great experience in serving the table and taking care of silverware; best City reference from last place. Address N. N., 255 West 35th st.

WAITER.—BY A PROTESTANT ENGLISHMAN as waiter; is thorough in his duties; best reference given. Call or address C. H., No. 152 East 42d st., first floor, front.

WAITER.—BY A YOUNG MAN (SWISS) AS waiter in a private family; best of references given. Address August, No. 157 3d av.

WAITER.—BY A RESPECTABLE YOUNG ENGlishman as waiter. Address W. G., No. 231 West 26th st.

FRENCH ADVERTISEMENTS

UNE SUISSE FRANCAISE—POUVANT ENseigner les enfants et faire toute espèces d'ouvrages à l'aiguille, désire se placer de suite. S'adresser au Rev. Pons, No. 324 West 20th st.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED—A PERSON OF EDUCATION, BEING of from 28 to 35 years of age, who would be willing to care for, and be a companion to, a young man in feeble health. Address X. X., Box No. 321 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

WANTED—THOROUGHLY COMPETENT MAN TO travel with upholstery goods; one acquainted with the Western trade. Address Box No. 729 Post Office, New-York.

WANTED—SILK SALESMAN; one who understands the skein silk and machine twist trade; must have good references. Address P. O. Box 1,477, Boston, Mass.

FINANCIAL.

ELIZABETH CITY 7s,

MATURING 1878 TO 1896,

FOR SALE BY

VERMILYE & CO.,

Nos. 16 and 18 Nassau St.

NEW-YORK CITY 6s,

DUE IN 1879.

OSWEGO CITY 7S,

DUE IN 1888.

ELIZABETH CITY 7S,

DUE IN 1896,

FOR SALE BY

DANIEL A. MORAN,

NO. 40 WALL ST.

THE MARIPOSA LAND AND MINING COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE NOS. 9 AND 11 NASSAU ST., NEW YORK, Feb. 3, 1877.

THE TRUSTEES of this Company have levied an ASSESSMENT of $1 per share on the preferred and common stock, payable at this office on or before Feb. 17. After that date it will be delinquent, and liable to a charge for advertising sale.

COPIES OF REPORT and late news from the mine are published, and may be had at the office, or mailed to address on request.

MORRIS H. SMITH, Assistant Secretary.

CINCINNATI 7 3/10 PER CENT

MUNICIPAL BONDS, DUE 1906. A LIMITED AMOUNT FOR SALE BY

KUHN, LOEB & CO., NO. 31 NASSAU ST.

TO INVESTORS.

BROOKLYN WATER BONDS,

PAYABLE 1899.

For sale by

GEORGE K. SISTARE,

NO. 24 NASSAU ST.

THE GOLD MORTGAGE BONDHOLDERS Committee are now prepared to purchase all or any portion of the outstanding thirty-two Gold Mortgage Bonds of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railway Company, for the sum of $580 68 per bond, which is the amount of the dividend in cash arising from the sale under the foreclosure proceedings. Or if the holders of any of these bonds wish to join the other bondholders and share in the sale made to the new parties, they may do so, provided they notify us by the 15th of February. Apply to W. A. V. POST, Secretary of the Committee, pro tem., at the office of Perkins, Livingston, Post & Co., No. 23 Nassau st.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 27, 1877.

HOTCHKISS & BURNHAM,

(Members New-York Stock Exchange.)

COMMISSION STOCK BROKERS,

NO. 36 BROAD ST., NEW-YORK.

Stocks, Bonds, and Gold bought and sold on margin or for cash. Branch offices in Fifth Avenue and Windsor Hotels. Connected by our private telegraph lines. Accounts solicited.

A. C. BURNHAM, NO. 33 PINE ST., NEW-YORK. Investment securities paying eight to ten per cent. for sale. Western mortgages a specialty for sixteen years. References in New-York, Boston, Hartford, and Philadelphia. Send for lists.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO., NO. 59 WALL ST.,

ISSUE COMMERCIAL and TRAVELERS' CREDITS AVAILABLE in all PARTS of the WORLD.

AT REASONABLE RATES—MONEY ON LIFE and endowment insurance policies and mortgages; same bought; insurances of all kinds effected with best companies. J. J. HABRICH & CO., 119 Broadway.

$150,000 TO LOAN ON BOND AND mortgage on New-York City improved property. Apply to GRANT BROTHERS, No. 2 Exchange court.

KOUNTZE BROTHERS, BANKERS, NO. 12 Wall st., issue letters of credit on the Union Bank of London, available in all parts of the world.

FIRE INSURANCE STOCKS

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

E. S. BAILEY, No. 65 Wall st.

DIVIDENDS.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.

The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts. Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

CHICAGO AND ALTON RAILROAD CO.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, CHICAGO, Feb. 8, 1877.

Notice is hereby given to the Stockholders of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company that a cash dividend of four (4) per cent. has this day been declared upon the Preferred and Common Stock of this Company, payable at the banking-house of the Company's Agents, Messrs. M. K. Jesup, Paton & Co., No. 52 William street, in the City of New-York, on the 1st day of March next, to holders who are registered as such at the close of business hours on the 17th day of February, inst., at which time the transfer books will be closed, and reopened for transfers on the 2d day of March next. W. M. LARRABEE, Secretary.

CLEVELAND AND PITTSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.—Office of Secretary and Treasurer, Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 3, 1877.—The regular guaranteed quarterly dividend of this company, at the rate of Seven per Cent., per annum on the new guaranteed stocks, will be paid on and after the 1st March proximo, at the office of the Farmer's Loan and Trust Company, No. 26 Exchange place, New-York.

The transfer-books will close on the 10th inst. and reopen on the 2d March.

G. A. INGERSOLL, Secretary.

THE ST NICHOLAS NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK, No. 7 Wall st., NEW-YORK, Jan. 30, 1877.

DIVIDEND.—A SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND OF Four per Cent. has been declared by the Directors of this bank, payable on and after the 12th day of February next. The transfer books will be closed from the 1st to 13th proximo.

A. PARKHURST, Cashier.

HOLDERS OF CERTIFICATES FOR THE past due coupons of the First Mortgages on the Main Line of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad Company may present them to the Metropolitan National Bank, and have the interest on the coupons added to the certificate.

BOARDING AND LODGING.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.

The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts. Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

NO. 4 WEST 14TH ST., TWO DOORS FROM 5TH AV.—Newly and handsomely-furnished suites and single rooms to families and gentlemen, with or without breakfast; bath-rooms and running water on each floor; house heated by steam throughout; appointments and location unsurpassed; best references given and required.

A PRIVATE FAMILY OCCUPYING AN elegant house, in close proximity to fashionable restaurants, would accommodate single gentlemen with rooms and service; French breakfast if desired; none but first-class parties treated with. Address X. Y. Z., Box No. 267 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

PRIVATE CLUB, 28TH ST., NEAR BROADway.—Gentleman wanted to join; Breakfast at all hours; table d'hote at 6:30 o'clock; also rooms; terms reasonable. Address "CLUB," Box No. 252 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

NO. 82 IRVING PLACE, TWO DOORS FROM Gramercy Park.—Large, pleasant, desirable rooms on fourth floor; also hall room on second floor, with board; references.

THIRTY-EIGHTH ST., NO. 207 WEST. Second-story front rooms; superior board; every convenience; location central and unexceptionable. OWNER.

NO. 244 EAST 40TH ST.—SQUARE ROOM, suitable for gentleman or lady; nicely kept; bath, hot and cold water same floor; fire evenings; private family; $3 week.

SECOND FLOOR, WITH PRIVATE TABLE, Spacious rooms, en suite, with elegant parlor, bath, &c.; vacated by family going South; references. Call at No. 14 East 32d st., between 5th and Madison ave.

FIFTH AV., NO. 45, BETWEEN 11TH and 12th sts.—Spacious suite of well-furnished rooms on parlor floor, with or without private table.

NO. 42 WEST 19TH ST.—HANDSOME SUITE of apartments, with or without board, in private house; references.

NO. 8 EAST 9TH ST.—DESIRABLE SUITE OF handsomely-furnished rooms; with or without private table; references.

A LARGE, WELL-FURNISHED SECOND-story front and hall room, with board; reference. No. 338 West 23d st.

NO. 21 5TH AV.—PLEASANT THIRD-STORY front room and hall room, with first-class board; reference.

TWENTY-FIFTH ST., EAST, NO. 132.—A private family would let one or two rooms to a married couple or gentleman, with or without meals.

HANDSOMELY-FURNISHED ROOMS TO Rent with board, en suite or singly, at moderate prices; references. No. 108 East 23d st.

NO. 5 EAST 46TH ST., NEAR WINDSOR Hotel.—Second floor, well-furnished, with first-class board; also, a large room on fourth floor.

NO. 18 EAST 32D ST.—ELEGANT ROOMS on second floor; also single rooms; table first-class; reference.

NO. 122 MADISON AV.—DESIRABLE SUITE of rooms; also, single room with board. References exchanged.

NO. 4 EAST 29TH ST., BETWEEN 5TH AND MADISON AVS.—Desirable rooms, first-class board; also, table boarders.

FIFTH AV., NO. 351.—FRONT AND REAR rooms, to gentleman, on fourth floor; excellent table; moderate terms.

NO. 236 WEST 34TH ST.—HANDSOMELY-furnished second floor; also other rooms; with board; references.

NO. 264 WEST 23D ST.—HANDSOMELY-FURnished rooms, with board, to gentleman and wife, or single gentlemen.

SUNNY FRONT SECOND-FLOOR SUITE—Superior board; low price for balance of season. 33 West 33d st.

NO. 20 EAST 22D ST.—WITH BOARD; PARLOR and bed-room first floor; parlor and bed-room third floor; single rooms.

NO. 23 WEST 32D ST.—ROOMS FOR GENtlemen, with excellent table.

A THIRD FLOOR FRONT ROOM, WITH OR without board. No. 127 East 24th st.

NO. 6 WEST 16TH ST.—THREE LARGE rooms, furnished, with board; reference.

NO. 33 WEST 27TH ST.—TWO FRONT ROOMS on second floor at reduced price with board.

NINETEENTH ST., NO. 338 WEST.—A large hall room to let, with board; gas, fire; terms moderate.

NO. 6 EAST 34TH ST.—SINGLE ROOMS WITH board; house newly furnished; terms moderate.

NO. 46 WEST 32D ST.—ELEGANT SECOND floor of three rooms, with board; terms moderate.

PLEASANT ROOMS, WITH BOARD.—REFerences. No. 116 West 45th st.

ROOMS TO LET—WITH BOARD, AT NO. 19 East 46th st.; references exchanged.

BOARD WANTED.

A GENTLEMAN AND WIFE, TIRED OF boarding-house life, want a permanent home in a private family; plesant sitting-room and bed-room adjoining; good, accustantial table a necessity; location 25th to 50th st., between Madison and 7th avs. Address, giving full particulars and terms, which must not exceed $100 per month, Martin M., Box No. 103 Times Office.

N. B.—Boarding-house keepers need not answer.

FURNISHED ROOMS.

TO LET—FURNISHED—TWO ROOMS WITH ALL convenience for housekeeping; also large sleeping room, very pleasant for one or two persons. No. 316 West 27th st.

PARLOR AND BED-ROOM TO LET (FURnished) in the Sherwood Building, 5th av. and 44th st., at reduced prices to May 1. Apply at 531 5th av.

FURNISHED ROOMS FOR GENTLEMEN, without board; references. Call at No. 34 East 20th st.

HOTELS.

THE ROYAL VICTORIA HOTEL, NASSAU, BAHAMA ISLANDS.

For full information apply to

JAMES LIDDERWOOD & CO., No. 753 Broadway, New-York.

BRUEN HOUSE—AT PERTH AMBOY, TO LEASE on favorable terms; the hotel is in good order and convenient for sea-bathing and boating; the station of the Long Branch Railway is near the house. For further information apply to HORACE S. ELY, No. 22 Pine st.

HOTEL BRANTING—MADISON AV. AND 58TH St. We have a few suites more of our pleasant rooms to let; also single rooms; prices moderate. Please call and see.

NEW-ENGLAND HOTEL.—LODGINGS, 50c.; 200 light single rooms for gentlemen only; weekly, $2 to $3. Corner Bowery and Bayard st.

PROPOSALS.

TO QUARRYMEN AND GRANITE DEALERS.

PROPOSALS FOR CUT STONE.

OFFICE OF LIGHT-HOUSE ENGINEER, THIRD DISTRICT, TOMPKINSVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 13, 1877.

Proposals are solicited, and will be received until noon of Feb. 26, 1877, for furnishing the cut stone for the dwelling and tower for Stratford Shoals Light-house, Long Island Sound, New-York.

The stone furnishing to be done according to plans and specifications, which, with any other information desired concerning the work, will be furnished to bidders upon application to the undersigned.

The proposals will state the time will be for which the stone required will be delivered at the harbor of Bridgeport, Conn. The stones are all to be delivered, cut and dressed, ready for setting. The labor of erecting the structure will be done by the United States, and should not be included in the proposals.

The stones are to be delivered in parcels, according to sizes, and the order in which they wil be required for use, commencing the delivery not later than the first of May, 1877, and the entire lot to be delivered within one month thereafter.

Proposals will be in duplicate, with two sureties in an amount equal to the bid attached to each, indorsed by some officer of the Government known to the Treasury Department.

They will be sealed and indorsed "Proposals for cut stone for the Stratford Shoals Light-house," and addressed to the undersigned, who reserves the right to reject any bid for proper cause.

THOS. H. WOODRUFF, Colonel of Engineers, United States Army, Engineer Third Light-house District.

Post Office Box No. 4,032, New-York City.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Sealed proposals will be received by the Board of School Trustees of the Nineteenth Ward, at the hall of the Board of Education, corner of Grand and Elm sts., until TUESDAY, Feb. 13, 1877, and until 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, for furnishing dining doors, &c., in Grammar school house No. 18, on East 51st st., near Lexington av.

Plans and specifications may be seen at the office of the Superintendent of School Buildings, No. 146 Grand st., third floor.

Two responsible and approved sureties, residents of this City, will be required from the successful bidder.

The party submitting a proposal must send the parties proposing to become sureties, must each write his name and place of residence on said proposal.

The Trustees reserve the right to reject any or all of the proposals submitted.

J. O. ALSTON,
F. T. HOPKINS,
H. P. POWERS,
M. THALMESSINGER,
JOHN C. DONNELLY,
Board of School Trustees, Nineteenth Ward.

Dated New-York, Jan. 31, 1877.

PROPOSALS FOR DREDGING AND DIKE.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, CORNER OF PENNSYLVANIA AV. AND 19TH ST., WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 3, 1877.

Sealed proposals for Dredging and the construction of a Dike in Rappahannock River, Va., will be received at this office until noon of WEDNESDAY, March 7, 1877, and opened immediately thereafter.

Specifications and blank forms for proposals can be obtained on application to this office.

S. T. ABERT, U. S. Civil Engineer.

FURNITURE.

A VERY HANDSOME BEDSTEAD AND bureau, made for the Exhibition, is offered at private sale; a bargain. Call at No. 538 Broadway, third loft.

AMUSEMENTS.

DALY'S FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE. THE COMEDY HIT OF 1877. THE PUREST, BRIGHTEST, AND MERRIEST PERFORMANCE IN THE CITY.

LEMONS!

EVERY NIGHT. BEGINS 8. OVER 10:30.

MATINEE SATURDAY. BEGINS 2. OVER 4:30.

ROARS OF LAUGHTER At the squeezing of Lemon No. 6.
ROARS OF LAUGHTER At the watering pot scene!
ROARS OF LAUGHTER At the Major's love-making!
ROARS OF LAUGHTER At Jack and Mary's chess scene!
ROARS OF LAUGHTER At the kissing by proxy!
ROARS OF LAUGHTER At the famous duel affair!
ROARS OF LAUGHTER For two glorious hours!

Miss DAVENPORT, Mr. COGHLAN, Mr. BROUGHAM, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. HARDENBERG, Mr. CRISP, Mrs. GILBERT, SYDNEY COWALL, and EMILY RIGL IN GREAT COMIC CREATIONS.

BOOTH'S THEATRE. SECOND WEEK. "FIFTH AVENUE."

GEORGE FAWCETT ROWE'S GREAT PLAY.

Appearance of the popular actor, MR. GEORGE RIGNOLD.

 The play abounds with illustrations of the peculiar phases, thrilling incidents, and sensational occurrences of LIFE IN THE GREAT METROPOLIS as it was in 1863.

ACT I.
Pictures the SINKING OF AN OCEAN STEAMER on the banks of Newfoundland. Exciting efforts to rescue the passengers. 1862.

ACT II.
Pictures SCENES IN WALL STREET. Stormy meeting of stockholders. 1863.

ACT III.
Pictures the LAUNCHING OF THE MONITOR. 1863.

ACT IV.
Pictures Fifth avenue by night, and the MURDER OF MR. SCHUYLER, the banker. A thrilling scene. 1863.

ACT V.
Pictures the return of the gallant SEVENTH REGIMENT and their conflict with the RIOTERS OF 1863.

PARK THEATRE. OUR BOARDING HOUSE. BROADWAY AND 22D ST. OPEN NIGHTLY.

HENRY E. ABBEY.....Lessee and Manager.
THIRD WEEK.
LEONARD GROVER'S AMERICAN COMEDY.
OUR BOARDING HOUSE.
THE GREAT SUCCESS.
CROWDED HOUSES.
TEARS AND LAUGHTER.
UNEQUALED CAST.
ALL FAVORITES.
NEW-YORK APPROVES THE VERDICT OF CHICAGO.
SAN FRANCISCO and PHILADELPHIA.
SECURE SEATS AHEAD.
Reserved balcony, 50 cents.
Reserved dress circle, $1.
Reserved orchestra, $1 50.
Admission, 50 cents and $1.
EVERY EVENING and SATURDAY MATINEE.
FREE LIST SUSPENDED. (Make no mistake.)

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.

Proprietor.....Mr. SHERIDAN SHOOK
Manager.....Mr. A. M. PALMER

UNEQUIVOCAL SUCCESS

of the most important dramatic work produced in New-York in MANY SEASONS.

The charming romantic drama in 4 acts,

THE DANICHEFFS.

House crowded to the doors every night. SATURDAY at 1:30, second Matinee of DANICHEFFS.

THE GREAT NEW-YORK AQUARIUM. Broadway and 35th st.

Open daily from 9 A. M. till 10 P. M., (Sundays excepted.)

STARTLING SUBAQUEOUS PERFORMANCES. EATING AND DRINKING WHILE UNDER WATER. Miss Vivienne Lubin, the Capt. Quigley, the wonder-water-nymph, unaided by derful submarine diver, any mechanical apparatus, performs all kinds of manoeuvres and drill exercises in the water carpenter work, pletely submerged, remain- joiner work, &c., illustrating 2½ to 3 minutes with- ing the manner of using cut breathing. the dive 'a armor.

MARINE MONSTERS AND WONDERS. BLADDER-NOSE SEAL, ONLY ONE ALIVE IN THIS COUNTRY, AND A GREAT CURIOSITY. 100,000 OTHER MARINE MARVELS. AFTERNOON AND EVENING CONCERTS.

STEINWAY HALL. ANNETTE ESSIPOFF.

THREE GRAND CONCERTS By that illustrious pianiste. TUESDAY and FRIDAY EVENINGS, Feb. 13 and 16, SATURDAY MATINEE, Feb. 17. With the assistance of Miss PALMA and M. VIVIEN. At the concert TUESDAY EVENING, Feb. 13, Mme. ANNETTE ESSIPOFF will play BEETHOVEN—Grand Sonata, opus 110. CHOPIN—Polonaise A flat and Nocturne. CHOPIN—LISZT—Novelette and Sherzino. RUBINSTEIN—Barcarolle. Study on black notes. Admission, $1; reserve seat, $1 50. Sale of seats at Steinway Hall, Schuberth's, and No. 11 Broadway. THURSDAY EVENING, Feb. 15, Church Edifice, Brooklyn.

CHICKERING HALL, MONDAY EVENING, FEB. 19.—Benefit and last appearance in New-York this season of Mr. A. P. BURBANK, elocutionist, assisted by Walter R. Johnson, organist. Programme of extraordinary excellence. Admission, 50 cents. Reserved seats, $1. For sale at Pond's, No. 39 Union square.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS. THE HAPPY MOKE. Last Nights of Offenbach's Latest Opera Bouffe.

BANKRUPT NOTICES.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the District of New-Jersey.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of WALTER M. CONGER, bankrupt.—District of New-Jersey, ss.—A warrant in bankruptcy has been issued by said court against the estate of Walter M. Conger, of the County of Essex, and State of New-Jersey, in said district, who has been duly adjudged bankrupt upon petition of his creditors, and the payment of any debts and the delivery of any property belonging to said bankrupt, to him, or to his use, and the transfer of any property by him, are forbidden by law. A meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt, to prove their debts and choose one or more Assignees of his estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy to be holden at No. 663 Broad st., Newark, in said district, on the 27th day of February, A. D. 1877, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the office of Stasts S. Morris, Esquire, one of the Registers in Bankruptcy of said district.

SAMUEL PLUMMER. United States Marshal for said district. Per JOHN C. BAILEY, Deputy.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE—THAT ON THE 7th day of February, A. D. 1877, a warrant in bankruptcy was issued against the estate of CHARLES HALSTEAD, of Brooklyn, in the County of Kings, and State of New-York, who has carried on business for the six months next immediately preceding the filing of his petition at the City of New-York, who has been adjudged a bankrupt on his own petition; that the payment of any debts and delivery of any property belonging to such bankrupt to him or for his use, and the transfer of any property by him, are forbidden by law; that a meeting of the creditors of the said bankrupt, to prove their debts, and to choose one or more Assignees of his estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at No. 152 Broadway, in the City of New-York, before Mr. Henry Wilder Allen, Register, on the 5th day of March, A. D. 1877, at twelve o'clock M.

OLIVER FISKE, United States Marshal, As Messenger, Southern District of New-York.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the Southern District of New-York.—In the matter of JOSEPH SCHMITT, bankrupt.—In Bankruptcy.—A warrant in Bankruptcy has been issued by said court against the estate of Joseph Schmitt, of the County of New-York, of the State of New-York, in said district, adjudged a bankrupt upon the petition of his creditors, and the payment of any debts and the delivery of any property belonging to said bankrupt to him or to his use, and the transfer of any property by him are forbidden by law. A meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt to prove their debts and choose one or more Assignees of his estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at No. 7 Beekman street, New-York City, in said district, on the 28th day of February, A. D. 1877, at one o'clock P. M., at the office of James F. Dwight, Esq., one of the Registers in Bankruptcy of said Court.

OLIVER FISKE, Marshal.—Messenger.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE—THAT on the 7th day of February, A. D. 1877, a warrant in bankruptcy was issued against the estate of JOHN BOGART, of New-York City, in the County of New-York, and State of New-York, who has been adjudged a bankrupt on his own petition; that the payment of any debts and delivery of any property belonging to such bankrupt to him or for his use, and the transfer of any property by him, are forbidden by law; that a meeting of the creditors of the said bankrupt, to prove their debts and to choose one or more Assignees of his estate, will be held at a Court of Bankruptcy, to be holden at No. 7 Beekman street, in the City of New-York, before Mr. James F. Dwight, Register, on the 28th day of February, A. D. 1877, at twelve o'clock M. OLIVER FISKE, United States Marshal, as Messenger, Southern District of New-York.

BUSINESS CHANCES.

CAPITAL WANTED.—A SMALL AMOUNT on subscription to the capital stock of a scientific and practical newspaper, to be devoted specially to the Shipping Interests, Commerce, Navigation, Underwriting, Shipbuilding, Marine Engineering, the Naval Service, and the pursuits connected with vessels. Address WM. W. BATES, No. 21 Park row, New-York.

A LARGE MILLINERY AND DRESSmaking establishment, doing a first-class business, for sale low for cash; satisfactory reasons for disposing of same. Address B., Box No. 285 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

WANTED—AN ACTIVE YOUNG MAN IN A CASH tea and grocery store already established; must have $5500 to $6500 cash; a good chance for one willing to work. Address, with real name, stating where an interview may be had, GROCER, Box 125 Times Office.

AMUSEMENTS.

MARTHA WASHINGTON RECEPTION AND

GARDEN PARTY,

IN AID OF THE

Poor of New York City

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF

ST. JOHN'S GUILD.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC AND NILSSON HALL, FEB. 22, 1877.

BERNSTEIN'S ORCHESTRA. GRAFULLA AND DOWSING'S BANDS. MENUET DE LA COUR. (Under the direction of Mr. W. B. DE GARMO.) GRAND FLORAL DISPLAY.

Tickets and boxes can be had at the Committee Rooms of St. John's Guild, No. 42 East 14th street, or of any of the managers.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

Hon. Algernon S. Sullivan, Chairman.
Hon.

A NOTABLE CONFERENCE.

TALKING AT THE MAYOR'S OFFICE.

HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS, MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE AND OTHERS DISCUSSING MATTERS AFFECTING THE CITY—NO ROOM FOR FURTHER ECONOMY IN THE PUBLIC OFFICES—A GOOD DEAL OF DISCUSSION WITH NO PRACTICAL RESULT.

When the Board of Aldermen at the instance of its President, Mr. Purroy, passed the resolution providing for monthly conferences on City affairs between the heads of departments and the Mayor, they evidently did not dream that the Citizens' Committee, of which Mr. Booth is Chairman, and the members of the Legislature from this City, would be invited to participate in the proceedings. Their programme of action, however, was amended by the Mayor, who invited the latter bodies to be present. The conference began yesterday at noon. At that hour the public chamber of the Mayor was literally crowded. Merchants, bankers, lawyers, legislators, professional politicians, Commissioners of departments and mere lookers on constituted the audience. Scattered here and there in the room were the members of the Booth Citizens' Committee who have steadfastly complained of the extravagance of the City Government, of excessive taxation, and of a large series of wrongs almost intolerable. Near them were the representatives of every Municipal department, each prepared to make an address showing that his department was all right, and that it was run at the smallest possible expense. Perhaps no meeting has ever been composed of such extraordinary, if not conflicting, elements. Among those in attendance were Messrs. Dorman B. Eaton, Oswald Ottendorfer, John H. Sherwood, Josiah M. Fiske, John Jay, James W. Pinchot, E. C. Cowdin, Gen. Sigel, Sinclair Tousey, Howard Potter, William H. Lee, L. P. Morton, Amos R. Eno, Senators Morrissey, Bixby, and Wagstaff, Gen. Spinola, Luke F. Cozans, J. C. Langbein, Peter Mitchell, and other members of the Legislature from this City; Corporation Counsel Whitney, and nearly all the members of the Board of Aldermen. In the ante-room leading to the chamber were a large number of Tammany politicians who had failed to obtain admission, and who seemed to be very anxious in regard to the proceedings. Mayor Ely having called the meeting to order, Mr. Charles Smith offered a resolution, which was adopted, limiting the time in which each head of a department was to speak to 10 minutes and the speakers in the debate that might follow to three minutes each. Nearly every one of the Commissioners had statistics to present showing how careful his department was of the public moneys.

Controller Kelly said that, as head of the Finance Department, he had made an examination of its outlay and its clerical force, and he believed that neither could be reduced with benefit to the City, because there was a very large amount of work to be done in his office. His department was run economically. Mr. Kelly then referred to the Woodin bill, which, he said, would become an important one for this City if certain amendments were made to it. He had gone over the bill very carefully, and added interlineatons and amendments to it. It was his intention to send it in that form to Mr. Hamilton Fish, Jr. He then spoke of the necessity of having property owners notified by the Assessors when assessments were made against them for public improvements, so as to enable them to have a hearing on the matter. He also referred to a bill allowing persons to bring actions against this City outside its limits for damages to their property from the water works, and remarked that it was a very objectionable bill, because City officials would have to go to courts outside of this County to defend the rights of this City in such cases. There was a bill before the Legislature to abolish the office of the City Chamberlain, who was the Treasurer of this City. That bill was a great mistake. The office was a necessary one. He did not believe that the Controller should have absolute control over the public money.

Mayor Ely followed. In regard to the question of salaries he said, like other people, he did not desire to have his own reduced, but he would cheerfully acquiesce in anything the Legislature might do about the matter. He had two bureaus attached to his office—the Marshal and Permit Bureaus—and each was administered economically.

Corporation Counsel Whitney said that the expenses of the Law Department had been materially reduced from what they were before he assumed office, the reduction amounting to about $100,000. Instead of losing 99 per cent. of the cases litigated, as was the case before he came into office, they won last year 75 per cent. of the cases against the City. His department was the breakwater at which the dead wood of the Ring drifted. He then referred to the Woodin charter, remarking that some sections of it required amendment.

Controller Kelly hoped that the bill would not pass without giving a hearing to the heads of departments.

Mr. E. C. Cowdin thought it would be better to send objections to the bill than to discuss it there. Albany was the proper place in which to make objections. There was a bill before the House providing for a conference of 12 gentlemen with the Mayor, on City affairs. That bill would make the conference legal.

Mayor Ely—"Don't that bill apply to next year?"

Mr. Cowdin—"No; it takes effect immediately after its passage."

Police Commissioner Smith said the standing committee of his board were engaged inquiring whether they could reduce their clerical force, but had not yet reported. He saw no way of economizing in street cleaning, unless the Legislature passed a law dividing the City into small districts. In that case he thought the work could be done more economically and efficiently.

Commissioner Campbell, of the Department of Public Works, was next called by the Mayor. In response he said that he had abolished the day's work and had given out all the work by contract, which was the most economical way. As to the Croton Bureau in his department, he felt bound to say that the works now in progress would prevent a scarcity of water in this City, even if the drought of last Summer should prevail again.

Messrs. Perley, of the Fire Department, Brennan, of the Department of Charities, and Chandler, of the Health Department, were then successively heard in behalf of their departments, which they said were economically conducted. Mr. Chandler stated that the expenses of his department had been materially reduced every year, while additional duties were added to it. He expressed his approval of a bill providing for the abatement of suburban nuisances, and, in this connection, referred to some manufactures on the other side of the East River.

Commissioner Wales argued that the work of improving the City's water-front should be supported by means of Municipal taxation. The Dock Department, he maintained, was too important a branch of the City Government to be stowed away in the corner of some other department, as was proposed. Its powers should rather be enlarged. He thought that West street should be continued on the present plan, so that railways might be laid for the transportation of freight, and that the bulk and pier-head line should be changed along South street. It would be expedient, he contended, for the Legislature to interfere with the sytem by which the head of the department is allowed to decide upon the material to be used in the construction of docks.

Mayor Ely next announced that the conference would have an opportunity of listening to Mr. Martin, President of the Department of Parks. This gentleman then read a dull statement which was chiefly devoted to an explanation of the expense of the department, and the reductions which had been made by the Board of Apportionment. The improvements made by the department, he said, had increased the resources of the City by increasing the value of the unproductive real estate in the upper portions of the City.

President Wheeler, of the Board of Taxes and Assessments, briefly stated the expenses of the board from 1873, when they first began their labors, until the present time. In 1873 the expenses were $264,000, in 1876 but $114,600. They would be even less in the present year.

Alderman Purroy stated on behalf of his colleagues of the Common Council, that they were anxious to co-operate in all measures that would secure economy and good government. In 1871, he said, the expenses of the board were about $299,000, but they had been reduced gradually, until at present they were somewhat less than one-third of that amount. The speaker devoted the remainder of his remarks to opposing the proposed bill providing that hereafter all heads of departments should be appointed by the Mayor without the consent of the Common Council.

President Wood, of the Board of Education, next addressed the conference, and urged that if economy was to be practiced it should be practiced in some other way than by reducing the appropriation for education. The Board of Apportionment had cut off $80,000 from the sum asked for teachers' salaries. The teachers, he said, were now underpaid, and any reduction of their barely living salaries took from them the means of support. Now schools were needed to accommodate the children, for whom no educational accommodation at present existed. The Board of Apportionment had, however, cut off $191,000 from the sum asked for the purchase of sites and the erection of buildings, and had thus rendered it impossible for the board to provide the additional educational facilities that were needed. In concluding, Commissioner Wood read the draft of a proposed bill authorizing the Board of Apportionment to transfer money from one to another of the appropriations of the Board of Education at the request of the latter, and also providing that appropriations made, but not used, in a previous year, might be used to meet the exigencies that might arise in the following year.

President Morton, of the Board of Excise, urged the necessity of some amendment of the present system of enforcing licenses, by which the board would have power to collect the penalties by a civil process, and not, as at present, by the uncertain method of arrest and criminal prosecution. The system of restricting the sale of liquor, he said, also needed some change, but he was not prepared at this time to give the details of such change.

After some debate by a member of the conference on the wisdom and economy of the proposed method of expending the revenues of the Excise Board in paying for charities that the people were now taxed to maintain, the Secretary read a letter from Thomas J. Creamer, in which the writer urged the necessity of the City proceeding at once to recover the taxes out of which it had been defrauded in the past either by the fraud or perjury of individuals. The New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, the writer said, had for the last ten years practiced fraud in the matter of tax-paying that should send some of its members to State Prison. Life Insurance Companies had also eluded taxation by means of bogus returns, and the City officials, until recently, had been able to avoid the payment of taxes rightfully due the City. The writer stated, in conclusion, that fully $1,250,000,000 worth of property in the City never paid any taxes to the City. It would therefore, he argued, be an expedient and an economic thing to take steps toward recovering the revenue rightfully due to the City.

Another communication was received from the Central Organization of Tax-payers in favor of the abolition of all fee offices in this City.

Controller Kelly moved that the members of the Legislature from this City be requested not to vote for any measure affecting its interests before consultation with the Mayor. This was adopted. Mr. Kelly then expressed the hope that the Citizens' Committee would not indorse any bill until they had a conference with the Mayor.

Senator Morrissey here rose and asked if the Citizens' Committee had indorsed the Woodin bills.

Mr. Howard Potter replied that they had not, and added that they were occupied in the effort to have the City debt reduced and the expenses of the City Government materially diminished. He thought that legislation against the interests of this City should be stopped. In referring to Mr. Purroy's remarks, he said that the people of this City were not prepared for a justification of the salaries of the Aldermen because of their election expenses. [Laughter.]

Senator Morrissey then made some remarks which brought down the house. He said that every Commissioner had come forward that day and declared that his department was all right, [laughter,] and that the expenses could not be reduced. Now, one-half the departments could be abolished. [Sensation.] At present the expenses of the departments could be reduced 30 per cent. He proposed to merge the Building Department into the Fire Department, and the Excise Department into the Police Department. The departments at present were kept up by combinations between Republicans and Democrats. Five of them could be abolished. In his opinion, it would be necessary to leave out party feeling altogether, and work for the passage of measures which would be beneficial to the City.

Mr. E. C. Cowdin then made some remarks commending the bill providing for the appointment of citizens by the Mayor to make investigation as to the number of office-holders and their salaries, with a view to retrenchment.

Mr. Dorman B. Eaton also alluded favorably to this bill; and then, in reply to Mr. Morrissey, said that the departments could not be abolished. There were only six or seven of them, and how could five of them be discontinued? Was it proper to create a pool of promiscuous power in one or two departments of the City Government, and abolish all the rest? Did they want to give power to men who had to go before the shambles to buy votes at an election? He did not believe that it would be wise or proper to abolish the departments, as Mr. Morrissey had suggested. As to the appointing power, if the wishes of the people were to be consulted, the Mayor would make appointments without the consent of the Aldermen.

Alderman Purroy said that the gentleman had misrepresented him.

Senator Morrissey then rose and remarked that he was a partisan. He would vote for Tammany when she was right, and against her when she was wrong. Turning to Mr. Eaton, he said, "You made a partisan speech. Such people as you have brought this City into the condition it is now in. Come with me and work, if necessary, against Republicans and Democrats, in the interests of this City." Mr. Morrissey then contended that he was right in his theory about abolishing the departments.

Mr. Eaton replied that he was glad to find that the Senator agreed with him in regard to the interests of the City, but he thought that it would not be wise to merge the Excise in the Police Department.

At this point the audience began to retire, but as they were moving Senator Morrissey exclaimed, "Is there any gentleman present that knows anything about the bills affecting this city now before the Legislature?"

A pause of a few minutes followed, after which the Mayor said, "As no answer has been given, it is to be presumed that the gentlemen can't reply to the question."

The meeting was then formally adjourned, but the Citizens' Committee subsequently had a private conference in the office.

THE CORONER'S OFFICE.

OFFICIAL REPLY TO THE CHARGES MADE AGAINST THE MANAGEMENT OF THE DEPARTMENT.

The charges made against the management of the Coroner's office, at a meeing of the Municipal Society, were considered yesterday at a special meeting of the Coroners, who addressed the following letter, in answer thereto, to Mr. Dorman B. Eaton, President of the Municipal Society:

CORONERS' OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Feb. 10, 1877.

Dorman B. Eaton, Esq.:

SIR: From a report published in THE NEW-YORK TIMES of yesterday of a meeting of the Municipal Society held on the evening of the 8th inst., we learn that the society, of which you are the President, propose to take some action in reference to the Coroners' office, and we beg leave to say that we who at present fill the office of Coroners would be glad to assist the society in instituting such reforms as may tend to further best the interests of justice and good government.

We must object, however, to the circulation of statements and reports which are calculated to throw suspicion and discredit upon an office established by the Constitution, and thereby bring contempt upon a portion of the legal and judicial machinery of the Government. Statements have been made at the meeting in question, if the report is correct, of corrupt practice, which are without the slightest foundation; and a society which has for its aim the correction of abuses ought to be careful not to indulge in general assertions on hearsay evidence, but, in order to win the confidence of the public, it must ascertain the facts before making public charges. It is not our purpose to enter at this time into any discussion as to the merits, the necessity, and the practice of the Coroner's office. We beg to state merely that while many cases are brought within the jurisdiction of the Coroner's office under the strict provisions of the law, which after an investigation was held are established as cases of natural death, the criminal character of other cases which without the legal provision would remain concealed, and a door left open to crime fearful to contemplate, the State pays a vast sum annually for the detection and punishment of crime simply in the interest of justice, the maintenance of which is the highest safeguard of society.

There is now a bill before the German Parliament creating an institution similar to that of the Coroner's office in England and this country. Such an institution is deemed necessary in the interest of hygienic and social science. If reforms are to be beneficial they must be established on the basis of thorough science and a knowledge of all the facts bearing on the case, and we shall gladly co-operate with your society, or any other society, in the performance of such duty. But to that end we must protest against the currency of general and wholesale statements devoid of all facts, which, instead of educating the public mind, create prejudice and distort information. Respectfully,

MORITZ ELLINGER,
RICHARD CROKER,
RICHARD FLANAGAN,
HENRY WOLTMAN.

A DISPUTE ABOUT A CHILD.

Four months ago Annie Beck, a young Italian woman, who at that time resided at No. 66 Grand street, placed an infant which she stated was her own in charge of Mrs. Elizabeth Underhill, at No. 83 Eighth avenue, and agreed to pay $10 per month for the board of the child. Miss Beck was at that time employed at Ehrich's dry goods store on Eighth avenue, and was earning good wages. She paid the child's board regularly for two or three weeks, and afterward very irregularly. Mrs. Underhill became so much attached to the child that she proposed to adopt the infant as her own, but Miss Beck would not agree to this unless the money she had already paid was refunded. Mrs. Underhill declined to return the money. Soon afterward Miss Beck called for the child, telling Mrs. Underhill that she was not its mother, but only the godmother, and as the parents of the child were in Cuba, she wanted to place the waif in the care of the Commissioners of Charities. Mrs. Underhill under those circumstances refused to give up the child until Miss Beck paid what she owed for its board. The matter was brought to the notice of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and an officer of that society, after investigating the circumstances, advised Mrs. Underhill to give up the child to Miss Beck, which Mrs. Underhill did, although she would have greatly preferred to keep the little waif.

THE APPROACHING CARNIVAL.

The arrangements for the carnival, which will take place on April 4, are approaching completion. Mayor Ely and the City authorities have given their consent. A number of merchants and manufacturers have signified their intention of participating in the industrial procession which will precede the grand carnival. Among the many tableaux, (historical and allegorical,) will be "Washington Crossing the Delaware," "Battle of New-Orleans," "Shakespeare and his characters," "Signing of the Declaration of Independence," "America before its Discovery," "Sewing—before and after the Invention of the Sewing-machine," and "King Comus" upon a frame lock-sa, (workad inside by men) drawn by four elephants. To-morrow the Mardi Gras head-quarters will be at the St. James Hotel and a down town office will be opened at the Astor House.

THE INSURANCE COMPLICATIONS.

FURTHER HEARING IN THE CASE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AGAINST THE CONTINENTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—THE CASE OF JOHN O. HOYT—A NEW ORDER REMOVING MR. ANDERSON AS RECEIVER TO BE MADE.

The hearing in the matter of the Attorney General against the Continental Life Insurance Company before Mr. Abram V. DeWitt, the Referee appointed to take proofs touching the application for the dissolution of the company and the removal of John J. Anderson as Receiver, was resumed yesterday at No. 20 Nassau street. The various counsel representing the policy-holders were present, as were also Messrs. L. L. Coudert and John L. Hill on behalf of the new Receiver, Mr. Grace, and Mr. Henry Smith for the Attorney General. Mr. John O. Hoyt, the stockholder at whose suit Mr. Anderson was appointed, was recalled and questioned by Mr. Smith as to what his property consisted of at the time of the purchase of the stock in August last. Mr. Robert Sewell, on behalf of the witness, interposed an objection to the further questioning of the witness by the representative of the Attorney General regarding his private affairs, on the ground that the rules of evidence would not permit it. A class of questions, he said, were now being propounded to him, the purpose of which was to throw suspicion on his evidence given at a prior examination. In other words, said Mr. Sewell, the worthy counsel for the people is endeavoring to impeach his own witness, and that too by his own mouth. Mr. Smith, in replying to the objection, said the witness had no right to appear by counsel, and Mr. Sewell urged that he was a party to the proceedings, having instituted the suit upon which the Receiver was appointed, and having received formal notice of the reference. Mr. Smith then waived the question, and asked, "Did you keep a bank account in New-York in 1876?" to which Mr. Hoyt replied that he kept one in Brooklyn. Upon the quest on being repeated the witness said he was not positive; he kept an account at the City Bank of Brooklyn, to which institution he transferred it from the Chatham National Bank of this City. Counsel then asked the witness if he had not drawn $1,500 from the State Bank of Elizabeth, N. J., at one time, and he responded that he did not remember having done so; if he said at the previous examination that he had, he did not intend to say so; he carried $1,500 in his pocket for three or four days before the purchase of stock above referred to. Mr. Smith next asked the witness how long before the purchase he drew the money from the bank at Elizabeth. This was objected to, and was not answered. At this point the further hearing was adjourned until the 23d inst., in order that the referee might not encounter a collision with that now proceeding before Mr. Butler by order of Justice Pratt.

The case of John O. Hoyt against the Continental Life Insurance Company came up yesterday before Justice Pratt in the Supreme Court of Brooklyn, for a re-settlement of the order, entered some days ago, appointing Mr. William R. Grace Receiver, and suspending from that office Mr. John J. Anderson. Some discussion was had between counsel regarding the proper form of the order, and it was finally agreed that Mr. John L. Hill should prepare it and embody in it the several clauses suggested after a consultation with the representatives of the parties in interest. The order will remove, instead of suspending, John J. Anderson as Receiver of the company, his bond to remain in force until the Referee shall have passed his accounts. It will also provide for an appraisement of the property of the company, and that the Receiver accumulate no moneys over the sum of $5,000 without depositing them at once with the United States Trust Company. The matter will come up for final settlement on Tuesday next.

Mr. John A. Weekes, the Deputy Superintendent of the Insurance Department of this State has, since the appointment of Mr. Grace as Receiver, been examining some of the books of the company, principal among them being the stock and certificate books.

Another fact in connection with the former Receivership and management of the Continental has been brought to light. The Detroit agency of the company, which was under the charge of Mr. G. A. Watkins, is charged on the books with a debt of $88,301 92. Mr. Watkins states that on Jan. 5 last, he settled his account with Mr. G. W. Thomas, a deputy of Mr. Anderson, paying over to that gentleman between $5,000 and $6,000, which balanced the account, and that he received from Mr. Thomas a receipt therefor, together with the bonds given by him to the company.

THE NEW-JERSEY MUTUAL.

EX-GOV. PARKER, THE NEW RECEIVER, TAKES POSSESSION OF THE NEWARK OFFICE—HIS SUBSEQUENT INTERVIEW WITH THE PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

Ex-Gov. Parker, who was appointed Thursday, by Chancellor Runyon, Receiver of the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company of Newark, filed $200,000 bonds, as required by the order appointing him Friday. His sureties are Messrs. Barker Gummere, Benjamin F. Lee, Clerk of the Supreme Court; Gen. William S. Stryker, and Gen. Perrine. The ex-Governor took possession of the office of the company Friday evening, and yesterday morning discharged all but one of the clerks of the company. The one retained is Mr. C. M. Kase, who will continue for the present, at all events, to act as Chief Clerk. The order of his appointment authorized the Receiver to pay the clerks and employes for their term of unrequited service, which has probably been done. The Receiver has appointed Mr. William Gummere Cashier, and Barker Gummere, one of his bondsmen, his Attorney. The number of employes whom he discharged was ten. The office in Newark will be continued for a season for the purpose of receiving premiums. The final report of Mr. Fackler, the Actuary who examined the books of the company for Mr. Kelsey, will be ready to-morrow, and Mr. Kelsey will report his action in the case to the Legislature Tuesday.

Gov. Parker, later in the day, came to the office of the National Capitol Life in this City, to which company the risks and assets of the New-Jersey Mutual were transferred, and there had an interview with the President, Benjamin Noyes, who stated to him that the assets had been handed to him by Mr. Stedwell, sealed. The seals, he averred, had never been broken, and the package would be turned over to him, the Receiver, on demand. Mr. Henry D. Walker, the Treasurer of the National Capitol Company, stated yesterday afternoon that, so far as he knew, no transfer had yet taken place. The matter would be adjusted in a way that would prove satisfactory to all, and so far as he was concerned he was glad the trouble was over. He had always, he added, been opposed to the transfer. All efforts to find J. H. Stedwell, the President of the New-Jersey Mutual, have thus far proved futile, and it certainly looks as though he was endeavoring to keep out of the way. Mr. Noyes said last evening that ex-Gov. Parker had come to this City in response to a letter from him, [Noyes,] and that they had agreed upon a meeting in the early part of this week, when the affair would be amicably settled. Mr. Noyes declined to say what course he intended to pursue.

TEN YEARS IN STATE PRISON.

During the Presidential campaign last Summer a party of men who had been participating in a political parade met in a saloon in Newark, and were drinking and talking, when George Steckert entered. A quarrel arose, and he was put out by the proprietor and the door locked. He was very noisy in his demand for readmission, but finally quieted, and it was thought that he had left. Jacob Masson and two or three others resolved not long afterward to start for home. The door was opened and the men passed out. They had no sooner placed their feet upon the stoop before Steckert, who had evidently been awaiting his opportunity, sprang upon them with an open knife with the quickness and violence of an infuriated tiger. In the confusion which followed three men were stabbed, Masson receiving at the hands of Steckert several wounds which a few days later resulted in his death. Steckert was arrested and tried for murder. The jury mitigated his crime to manslaughter. Yesterday when he was called up for sentence his counsel made an appeal for mercy, but it was unavailing. The court, giving him the full benefit of the law, sentenced him to 10 years' imprisonment at hard labor in the State Prison.

THE FLOOD WIFE MURDER.

Superintendent Walling received information yesterday from a trustworthy source that the real name of James Flood, now in the Tombs, charged with having murdered his wife on last Sunday morning, is McFarland. He first made the acquaintance of his wife in Toledo, Ohio, of which city she was a native. About 10 years ago Flood or McFarland, became engaged in a street grocas about a woman, during which one of the participants in the affray was killed. McFarland, who was suspected of having caused this man's death, fled from Toledo, and, after wandering about the Eastern States, finally settled in Lynn, Mass., where he assumed the name of Flood. Thither the young woman for whose killing he is now awaiting trial followed him, and they were married in Lynn. Subsequently the couple came to this City. The young woman calling herself Miss Lizzie Page, sister of the deceased, is has been ascertained is a married woman, being the wife of a well-known sporting character in the West.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The Police arrested 1,406 persons last week.

Mary Carrol, 18 months of age, of No. 38 Thomas street, swallowed a pin on Friday, and died yesterday.

The annual dinner and ladies' reception of the Blooming Grove Park Association takes place at the Hoffman House on Tuesday evening next.

The Order of United American Mechanics will commemorate Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22, by appropriate exercises in the evening at the Cooper Union.

Mrs. Jane S. Williamson, widow of the late Police Capt. Williamson, was found dead in her bed yesterday morning at her residence, No. 341 East Eighty-third street. Death is supposed to have resulted from heart disease.

There were reported at the Bureau of Vital Statistics, during last week 423 deaths, 484 births, and 156 marriages, showing a decrease of 29 deaths, and 11 births, and an increase of 45 marriages, as compared with the preceding week.

Gilmore's Garden will be open three times next week, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings. The entertainment each evening will consist of three trotting matches, running race, pacing race, ladies' flat race, fat men's foot-race, and athletic sports.

The Customs officials siezed three boxes of fine cigars from the steam-ship Columbus yesterday. They were entered as samples, and were consigned to a private party. It is believed that many persons got their cigars for personal use in this way without payment of duties.

A horse and coal-cart, driven by Henry Conway, of No. 510 West Thirty-ninth street, was run into last evening, at Forty-fifth street and Eleventh avenue, by a locomotive of the Hudson River Railroad. Conway received slight injuries. The coal-horse escaped with some bruises.

The following gentlemen connected with the Spanish Department of the Centennial left this City yesterday on the French steam-ship Labrador, bound for Havre, en route for Madrid: Mr. Lopez Fabra and wife, Mr. Alvaro de la Gandara, Mr. Enrique de Brotons, Mr. Petra, and Mr. Francisco Forzano.

The frigate Franklin, on which William M. Tweed was brought as a prisoner from Vigo, Spain, will probably go out of commission next week. It is not yet known whether she will be laid up in the Brooklyn Navy-yard or at Norfolk. Her machinery needs repairs, some of the pipes being completely worn out.

The investigation into the alleged sugar frauds which is now going on at the Custom-house has been conducted secretly for over two months. The evidence on hand shows the frauds to be of a more extensive character than was at first supposed. The chemical analysis of the coloring matter has not yet been completed.

A meeting to install Rev. G. H. Humphrey as Pastor of the Thirteenth Street Welsh Presbyterian Church, between Second and Third avenues, will be held this evening, and will be participated in by Rev. Dr. Bevan, of the Brick Church; Rev. Dr. Roberts, Elizabeth, N. J., and Rev. Hugh Davies, Middle Granville, N. Y.

Rev. Dr. R. R. Booth will deliver a lecture to-morrow evening before the New-York Sunday-school Association, in St. Paul's M. E. Church, at the corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street. His topic is "Adaptation of the Bible to the Universal Needs of the Soul, and Witness of Christian Men to its Divine Power and Grace."

The frigate Trenton will go into commission on Tuesday next, when Capt. John Lee Davis will formally take command of her. All her officers are now in waiting at the Brooklyn Navy-yard. The Trenton will probably be equipped in time to start for the Mediterranean Station, where she will be the flag-ship of Admiral Warden on March 1st.

A dinner was given by the Lotus Club to Mayor Ely last evening, at which his Honor expressed the wish that the Lotus might gain in strength and beauty for many years and continue to put forth fresh blossoms. Mr. Noah Brooks presided, and addresses were made by R. B. Roosevelt, Chauncey M. Depew, Judge Brady, and others.

Entertainments for the benefit of the St. Stephen Orphan Homo, conducted by the Sisters of Charity, will be given to-morrow and Tuesday evenings in the basement of St. Stephen's Church, in Twenty-eighth street. Prof. H. B. Danforth will perform organ and piano solos, and Miss L. Leslie will give some readings. A troupe of minstrels will also take part in the exercises.

Mr. Bayard Taylor, at the request of many of his friends, has decided to deliver in this City, during the Lenten season, his course of lectures on German Literature. The discourses will be given in Association Hall, and in the day-time, in order to accommodate ladies who otherwise could not attend them. The first, on "The Beginnings of German Literature," will take place on Friday next, at 11 A. M.

Dr. A. B. Crosby lectured last evening before a large audience in the large hall of the Cooper Institute on "The Human Foot," the lecture being illustrated with stereopticon views. The first part of the lecture was devoted to the mechanism of the foot, and the concluding portion to an explanation of how the foot should be properly shod, a very important consideration, upon which the personal comfort of every individual depended.

Mr. Samuel Cantrell, the Fourth avenue shoemaker, who attempted to commit suicide by shooting himself in the head while at the Putnam House, Twenty-sixth street and Fourth avenue, on Thursday, is still alive. He is in a private ward at Bellevue Hospital, under the care of Drs. J. R. Wood and Pell. Although the bullet was lodged in the brain and brain matter is constantly oozing from the wound, he is conscious and able to converse with his relatives. In relation to the attempted suicide his mind is a perfect blank. It is not believed that he can survive.

BROOKLYN.

The Police made 383 arrests during the past week.

There will be religious services at the Good Samaritan, on Willoughby street, from 2 to 3 P. M. to-day, followed by a free lunch for the poor.

The Judges of the City Court have issued an order directing that hereafter on motions for a new trial briefs must be submitted without oral argument.

A committee of the Board of Assessors, composed of Messrs. Norton, Breen, and Wilson, was appointed yesterday to fix the district of assessment for the North Second street improvement.

Mr. W. G. Creamer, of No. 75 Second place, has written a letter to the Mayor asking him to prevent the newsboys from crying their wares at the ferries. The letter was sent to the Police Commissioners and tabled.

Hon. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., will read a paper before the Long Island Historical Society, on Tuesday evening, in the Second Presbyterian Church, at the corner of Clinton and Fulton streets. His topic is "The Maypole of Merrymount."

When the people of the State of New-York brought an action against the Fisk Flagging and Pavement Company, Mr. Hassen H. Wheeler was appointed Receiver. Yesterday Judge Pratt granted Mr. Wheeler leave to sue William M. Tweed, Jr., whom the Receiver believes holds the assets of the company.

The General Term has affirmed the decision granted by Judge Gilbert appointing a Referee to take the testimony of James Buell, President of the United States Life Insurance Company, in the suit of F. B. O'Conor, who alleges a fraudulent design on the part of the managers of the company to transfer its assets.

The twenty-fifth anniversary exercises of the Church Charity Foundation of Long Island take place this evening. Quinquagesima Sunday, in the Church of the Holy Trinity, at the corner of Clinton and Pierrepont streets. Bishop Littlejohn will preach the annual sermon, and Rev. T. S. Pycott will read the annual report.

The will of the late Rev. Eugene Cassidy late Pastor of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Mary's Star of the Sea, was admitted to probate during the past week. The only property left by the deceased was a paid-up policy in the bankrupt Continental Life Insurance Company. The money is willed to some female relatives of the deceased.

Bishop Loughlin has issued a pastoral letter to the priests of the Diocese of Brooklyn, directing them to take up collections, which are to be presented to the Pope on the fiftieth anniversary of his elevation to the Episcopacy. The anniversary will take place on the 31st of next May, and the subscriptions are to be taken up before the 25th of March.

The General Term of the Supreme Court has just decided in the test case of John Dilman, who was prosecuted by the Temperance Brotherhood of Christian Churches, convicted of violating the Sunday Excise law, and sentenced to 30 days in the Penitentiary, to sustain the decision of the lower court. If the case is not taken to the Court of Appeals, Dilman and a number of others will be sentenced during the coming week.

Surrogate Livingston received a letter to-day from the National Bank of the Republic, asking if the will of Robert Jackson, one of the founders of Hempstead, Long Island, in 1644, is recorded in the Surrogate's office. Thompson's History of Long Island states that the will was dated May, 1683. The records of the Surrogate's office only date back as far as 1787. Many of the county records were destroyed during the Revolutionary war.

Paul Hawley, a well-known thief, was committed by Justice Walsh yesterday on a charge of attempting to break into the dry goods store of Mr. L. H. Coley, No. 141 Sands street, on Thursday. The attempt was made in company with three other burglars, who escaped. Hawley was arrested by Mr. Coley, who put a pistol to the thief's head and threatened to shoot him if he resisted. On the person of the prisoner were a number of pawn tickets and some burglars' implements.

During the month of January the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor assisted 3,581 families, numbering in all 14,808 persons. Every case was thoroughly investigated. The association is perhaps the very best charitable organization in the country. It has never publicly appealed for aid, but this year, so great has been the distress among the respectable poor, the Board of Managers must incur debt or ask the help of the charitable. Last month $5,217 20 was paid out by the association.

NEW-JERSEY.

Between 40 and 50 of the saloon-keepers of Newark have been convicted of violations of the liquor license law, and fined $50 each.

Mrs. Elizabeth Dupue, mother of Judge Dupue, of Newark, one of the members of the New-Jersey Supreme Court, died at her home in Belvidere a few days ago.

Information has been received in Newark of the death, in Jacksonville, Fla., whither he went for his health, of Dr. A. Herzog, a well-known German physician of the former city.

Charles Smith, recently convicted in the Essex County Sessions of having forged the name of his father-in-law to two notes, was yesterday sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

William Wray, of New-York, and John Anderson, of Brooklyn, were arrested in Newark yesterday charged with having attempted to swindle jewelry firms in that city by selling spurious nuggets of gold.

Nicholas Murray, residing in Bond street, Elizabeth, leaped from a moving train on the Central Railroad Friday evening, and, falling beneath the wheels, was killed. He was employed in the coal docks at Hoboken, and leaves a large family.

Three new Professors have been added to the Faculty of Princeton College. Prof. C. A. Young, of Dartmouth, has been chosen Professor of Astronomy; Prof. C. G. Rockwood, of Rutgers, of Mathematics, and Prof. S. S. Oris, of Martin College, Ohio, of Greek.

DUNCAN, SHERMAN & CO.'S AFFAIRS.

EXAMINATION OF MR. WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND WILLIAM WATTS SHERMAN—THE MOBILE AND OHIO FIRST MORTGAGE COUPONS — MR. WATTS SHERMAN'S CONNECTION WITH THE BANKRUPT FIRM.

The examination of Mr. William Butler Duncan in relation to the affairs of Duncan, Sherman & Co. was resumed yesterday in Register Ketchum's office, after many adjournments. Mr. Duncan testified at some length in relation to the purchase by the late firm of the coupons of the first mortgage bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. The witness stated that the firm had purchased the coupons to the amount of about $700,000; these were given to Alexander Duncan, and are now in the hands of a committee for the reorganization of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. Their legal possession was in that committee, but they belonged to Alexander Duncan. They were in Mr. Alexander Duncan's possession on July 26, 1875, having been personally delivered to him by the firm. Mr. Alexander Duncan had previously paid something for them, but did not pay anything at the time of their delivery to him. The witness was not able to state exactly when the previous payment was made without reference to memoranda of the transaction, but he should say about six or eight months before their delivery. The entire cost of the coupons was paid by Mr. Alexander Duncan at, or about, the time they were purchased from the original holders. At the time the coupons became due some of them were presented to the banking-house of Duncan, Sherman & Co. for payment. If they were presented and payment asked by any firm, representing any person, payment was refused, but if they were offered for sale they were purchased. The coupons were made payable in the City of Mobile and the City of London. In response to a question as to why, if such were the case, the coupons when due were presented to the banking-house of Duncan, Sherman & Co., in New-York, the witness stated that the reason was that the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co. purchased them. Witness also stated that Alexander Duncan became financially interested in the coupons in May, 1874. The firm purchased them for account of Alexander Duncan, and the latter furnished the firm with the money to pay for them before or at the time of the purchase. The witness thought the money was given to the firm when Mr. Alexander Duncan was in New-York in 1874.

Mr. William Watts Sherman was next called, and testified that he became a member of the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co. in 1875; witness never put any capital into the firm; in 1875 he drew out money for his personal use, but he did not recollect how much; the witness attended to the minor details of the firm's management, such as signing checks, letters, and other papers; he did not recollect of having ever seen a balance sheet showing the assets and liabilities of the firm, but he thought he knew the approximate amounts of assets and liabilities from time to time; he did not know the amount of capital in the firm at the time of his becoming a member of it, nor could he say of his own knowledge that he was received as a member of the firm solely because he bore the name of Watts Sherman; he signed contracts of agreements on behalf of Duncan, Sherman & Co. to erect buildings on various pieces of property owned by them; he could not recollect whether any of the agreements were in existence at the time of the firm's failure in 1875. The witness was asked if he paid any money on account of the contract made by his wife with Messrs. Granville & Richardson to build a house at Newport, with a check or checks of Messrs. Duncan, Sherman & Co., but he stated that he could not answer the question, as he did not understand it. Afterward he stated that his wife's Trustees paid all the money agreed to be paid under the contract, excepting a small sum which he paid himself for preliminary drawings, which payment was made by his own check drawn on Duncan, Sherman & Co. At this point the examination was adjourned until 3 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon next.

THE TRENTON POTTERY STRIKE.

The pottery strike in Trenton, N. J., is still as formidable as ever. There are about 1,500 men who refuse to work at the reduced wages. Meetings are held every afternoon, at which speeches are made. About 40 men are at work at the new rates, and strong efforts are being made to compel them to quit work. On Thursday last a number of the strikers appeared in front of the house of one of those workmen, named Millington, and threatened personal violence. Last night between 200 and 300 strikers assembled in front of the house of another of the men who remain at work, named Fox, and burned him in effigy. They threatened him and finally stoned him. Twelve of the ringleaders were arrested and bound over to appear and answer before the Court of Oyer and Terminer.

AN EXPERT HOTEL THIEF CAPTURED.

A well-dressed man, who gave his name as John Davis, was caught yesterday morning in the act of attempting to unlock the doors of several rooms at the hotel Nos. 694 and 696 Sixth avenue with two pass-keys which he had stolen from the housekeeper's room. He was given in charge of Patrolman Farley, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct. On being arraigned at the Washington Place Police Court, the prisoner was recognized as George Burd, alias Johnson, an expert hotel thief, who has been arrested several times and has served a term of imprisonment at Sing Sing. He was committed for trial in default of $2,000 bail.

The New-York Times.

VOL. XXVI.....NO. 7930. NEW-YORK, MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1877. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

DEMOCRATIC DESPERATION.

PLANS FOR FURTHER OBJECTIONS.

A GREAT FIGHT TO BE MADE OVER THE LOUISIANA CASE—A NEW AND IMPORTANT POINT TO BE PRESENTED—MR. MERRICK'S CONSERVATIVE VIEWS—SENATOR BAYARD CONDEMNS THE ATTACKS ON THE COMMISSION—HEWITT SNUBBED IN HIS OWN HOUSE—INCENDIARY NEWSPAPER UTTERANCES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The Democratic caucusing of last night and to-day is believed to have ended in an arrangement of the policy that is to be followed to-morrow, and until another occasion arises when the Democrats find themselves disappointed. The objections to receiving the decision of the Commission in the case of Florida will be considered and decided, and the counting of the vote will be allowed to proceed without any further attempt to delay at this time. The vote of Florida will, of course, be counted for Hayes, and Louisiana will be speedily reached, unless an objection is made to the counting of the vote of the alleged ineligible Elector in Illinois. It is not certain whether this objection will be raised. It is asserted by some Democrats that it will be, and by some that it will not. The renowned Springer is anxious to object, but there is a difficulty that troubles some of his colleagues. If the objection is raised, and the fact of ineligibility is sustained by proof, it is certain that the Senate will vote against sustaining the objection, on the ground taken by Mr. Evarts, that the provision of the Constitution is not self-executing, and that the votes of ineligible Electors have been repeatedly counted in the various elections. By counting this vote it will be established under the new law that such votes are to be counted, and the case will form a precedent for the Commission. The point against Chaffee, the Illinois Elector, is that he is a United States Commissioner, and has never resigned. It seems that he is an old man, and was once a Commissioner but ceased to act as such many years ago, without any formal vacation of the office. This case is like that alleged against Gov. English, of Connecticut, who was said to have been a Commissioner and to have ceased to act without resigning, but the vote of Gov. English has already been counted. Republicans are hopeful that Springer will succeed in objecting, as the decision of the case will be in accord with what is desired from the Commission in the case of Louisiana.

The Democrats are determined to make a great fight on the Louisiana case. They had announced that they had a sure case against one of the Electors, and it was supposed they meant Levissee, who, they contended, had never vacated his office, but the fact has at last leaked out that the point on which they depend is against Brewster, the land surveyor. The point in his case is a new and important one, and will excite some attention, though it does not go to the extent of disturbing the position on which the Republicans have all along rested their case. The point, however, has not been decided by the Commission. It is this: That under a decision of the Supreme Court on the Tenure of Office act, an officer nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, holds till his successor is appointed and qualified. Brewster was a land surveyor, and resigned his office before he was chosen by the Electoral College, and his resignation was accepted. After the Electoral vote was cast he was reappointed. The claim is, therefore, that he could not vacate the office till his successor was qualified, and as he was appointed to succeed himself, it will be claimed that he has never been out of the office. It is suggested that the answer may be made that the decision depended on was made under the old Tenure of Office act, and that under the modified act the office terminates with a resignation or a removal. If the point is sustained, the question still arises whether the vote of an ineligible Elector can be excluded without a statute for that purpose.

The points in the Louisiana case upon which the Democrats will rely have, with the exception of the foregoing, been already repeatedly published. The statements of Mr. Merrick and Mr. Bayard show the position occupied at present by the most conservative element of the Democracy, and compared with the statement of the revolutionary nonsense of the extremists, indicates a coming conflict in the Democratic ranks which may prove of great political consequence. Mr. R. T. Merrick, of Washington, one of the Democratic counsel, and the only one who really made any reputation before the Commission in the argument of the Florida case, says to-night that they propose to contest the cases yet to come up with as much earnestness as though nothing had been decided. He said the argument and decision of the Florida case were just clearing away the brushwood from the real strength of the Democratic position, and that there were new questions in both the Louisiana and Oregon cases, not yet argued or decided, which they confidently relied upon for a favorable decision from the Commission. "In the Louisiana case," says Mr. Merrick, "we are especially strong, and there are material points which cannot be decided against us unless the tribunal disregards decisions of the Supreme Court, solemnly made and never departed from; and if we go to the Oregon case, that will certainly prove fatal to the Republican cause. There are," said he, "questions relating to the jurisdiction of the Returning Board of Louisiana, and should the tribunal adhere to its decision not to admit evidences of fraud as impairing the returns of the Electoral College, nevertheless there will be evidence presented showing that the Returning Board of Louisiana had no jurisdiction in the matter." He says that every point will be contested and carefully and thoroughly argued, and he expressed himself as having full faith in the ultimate decision of the tribunal, and deprecated the strictures that had been made upon some of its members for their action in the Florida case. He spoke well of all the Judges on the Commission, and said none of them could afford to act otherwise than as Judges of the law and the facts as they were presented. Ex-Senator Trumbull, Matt Carpenter, Mr. Merrick, Mr. Green, and Mr. Campbell will argue the Louisiana case.

Senator Bayard said to-day that if the Electoral bill was to come up now, with all that had thus far been done before him, he would vote for it. He regarded, he said, "The peace and prosperity of the country as above the Presidency," and he condemned the attacks that had been made upon the Commission or some of its members for the action they had taken in the Florida case. He said he had full faith in the justice of all the members of the tribunal, and that these severe comments upon their action, while there were yet the most vital questions in connection with this whole case to be adjudicated, he thought were out of place and unjust. He expressed himself as having no fear as to the final result, and thought that, whatever it should be, the people of the land would accept it in good faith. He took no gloomy view of the future of the country, even if Mr. Hayes should be declared elected, and said that if the decision was in his favor he would cheerfully acquiesce. He thought that the next four years would, under either Hayes or Tilden, settle the Southern question to a great extent and determine the status of parties there.

Mr. Hewitt has been, perhaps, the most distressed man among the Democracy here since the decision of the Florida case. He has had several conferences with his friends at his residence, particularly on last Friday and Saturday evenings, but he gets little consolation from them, and he has blundered so often and seriously that there is a disposition among the Democracy to ignore him hereafter. The meeting of Saturday night at Mr. Hewitt's house was especially notable for the indifference shown to the suggestions of the host as to the future conduct of the Democratic case. There were several of the Democratic counsel present, and what was done and said over the good things set for their entertainment has not been divulged, and it is given out that it was merely a little private dinner party. It is known, however, that while it may be true that there was nothing done, there was a good deal said that was both interesting and important. Mr. Hewitt was, for one thing, given to understand that the lawyers in charge of the Democratic case proposed hereafter to manage it without direction or suggestion from him or those he represented, and it was strongly intimated that it would have been better for their cause had this course been followed from the first. Mr. Hewitt wanted an expression from the counsel as to what course should be pursued in the management of the case in the House, but the lawyers thought if they took care of the legal part of the case it was all they could do. They suggested, however, that there should be as little delay as possible in disposing of the objections made to the decision of the tribunal in the Florida case, and it is said that it was determined to settle the objection the first thing in the morning, and proceed with the count without delay.

The Sunday Capital, Don Piatt's paper, has to-day a double-leaded editorial, which has caused a great deal of comment and some excitement. It is simply an expression of the most revolutionary sentiment of the Democracy, and contains the advice which is said to have originated with David Dudley Field, to show what the sentiment is, when fitly framed into words by those who entertain it. The following extract from the article will prove interesting:

"It is the duty of the Democratic Senators, the members of the House, and the two Judges who have shown a regard for Justice, to at once return to their several places and break up this infamous returning board. We want to get back to an arena where the equities can be considered. We want to get where we can make these bondholders and monopolists, the corrupt officials and infamous conspirators, feel that they are trifling with a dangerous element. This thing is sapping the foundations of self-government, is destroying confidence in the ballot and a faith in our courts. There is no use in asserting that when Louisiana is reached it will be found too offensive for this national returning board of rogues to swallow. As well expect chastity in a brothel, honesty in a den of thieves, or shame from a charlatan. The tribunal from which Garfield can emerge with his mean, weak face aglow with triumph to telegraph to Hayes that fraud has won, or Morton can hobble out as if decay was without pain, is no place to which the honest people can appeal for their rights."

The policy of delay has not been entirely given up by the Democrats. It is deferred only on the ground that the party cannot stand before the country if they break up the Commission the first time it decides against them. The Louisiana case will therefore be presented as though nothing had happened, and if the decision is again unfavorable to Tilden the question will be renewed whether there shall not be fillibustering to prevent a declaration of the election. It is established that the House has the power to do this by taking recesses from day to day, and the plan of David Dudley Field to have the Democratic members resign from the Commission, it is expected would also defeat the operations of the law. It is declared on what passes for good authority in these times of thick rumors that Field has already been seeking to induce his brother, the Justice, and Justice Clifford to leave the Commission, but this action alone would be foolish in the extreme, for it would only secure two more Republican Judges on the Commission. The great difficulty in carrying out any revolutionary scheme is found in the attitude of the Southern members, of whom it is said at least 40 will vote to stand by the result of the law whenever their votes become necessary to prevent its violation. Tilden has, according to Democratic statements, sent a telegram urging the South to stand firm, and indicating a desire to have the party take the responsibility of refusing to stand by what is called the partisan action of the Commission. This is probably exaggerated, but it is undoubted that very long dispatches have been received from him, pointing out the policy he wishes to have pursued.

PRESIDENT GRANT'S VIEWS.

HE REGARDS THE ILLINOIS CASE UNTENABLE, BUT IS DOUBTFUL AS TO THE RESULT IN THE CASE OF LOUISIANA—NO DISTURBANCE APPREHENDED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The President, to-night, in the course of conversation, said it had appeared to him that the Democrats of the House, by abruptly taking a recess yesterday, intended to obstruct the counting of the Electoral vote; but, on his being informed that many prominent Democrats had disavowed any intention to engage in mere dilatory proceedings; that to-morrow they would take action in the Florida case, and that their delay was merely for the purpose of carefully examining all the papers as they appeared this morning in print, he said he was glad to hear it, as nothing could be gained by resisting the regular order of business. In speaking of the intention of the Democrats to make an objection to the counting of the Electoral vote of Illinois on account of the alleged ineligibility of Mr. Chaffee, one of the Electors, he said he did not see how the vote of the State on that account could be rejected, and if the objection was made to Mr. Chaffee only, the Democrats could derive no benefit from it. He thought it was only fair that if a State had voted for either Hayes or Tilden the full vote of such State should be counted according to its political complexion. Although he hoped Hayes and Wheeler would be declared elected, he felt somewhat uncertain as to the result, because he could not foresee what would be done in the case of Louisiana. It would be recollected that four years ago, after his canvass for re-election, the two houses resolved not to count the Electoral vote of that State; although the reasons in the two cases might not be similar, there seemed to be some uncertainty upon the subject. Should the vote be excluded, Hayes and Wheeler would in that case be defeated, and Tilden and Hendricks not elected, the latter not having received a majority of the votes of all the Electors appointed, and therefore the election of a President would be thrown into the House of Representatives, leaving the Senate to elect a Vice President; but be this as it might, he was satisfied there would be no disturbance of the peace, as both parties had committed the determination of disputed points to the tribunal constituted for that purpose.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

THE UNITED STATES MARSHALSHIPS OF NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN NEW-YORK —THE NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—It now seems to be definitely understood that Gen. Clinton MacDougall, member of Congress from the Auburn District, is to be appointed to the position of United States Marshal for the Northern District of New-York. Unless something unforseen happens to change the present programme, his name will be sent to the Senate to-morrow or on Tuesday. Should the appointment be confirmed, as it probably will be, Gen. MacDougall, who will not refuse to accept this position, as he has several others, will make the head-quarters of the Marshalship in Auburn. There is also to be a change in the Marshalship of the Southern District of New-York, and it seems to-night that either Lewis Payne or Charles Blackie, of New-York City, will be appointed to the position. They are the only candidates who are prominently named in connection with the places. It is expected that other changes in the civil service of New-York will shortly be made.

The Naval Appropriation bill which was reported to the House last week provides for an aggregate appropriation of $12,492,952. The various items of the appropriation are made up as follows:

Pay of the Navy	$6,417,000
Bureau of Navigation	163,800
Naval Observatory	21,300
Nautical Almanac	19,500
Bureau of Ordnance	227,500
Yards and docks	460,000
Naval Asylum	52,973
Medicine and surgery	80,000
Provisions and clothing	990,000
Bureau of Construction and Repairs	1,550,000
Bureau of Steam Engineering	800,000
Naval Academy	96,269
Miscellaneous	93,260
Marine Corps	833,330
Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting	740,000
Total	$12,492,952

Frederick Douglass has resigned as a member of the Police Board of Commissioners, President Grant requesting his resignation in order that he might comply with the law which requires the appointment of one member of the board from Georgetown.

The House committee which investigated the South Carolina elections will make their report during the present week. All the points have not been definitely acted upon, though they agree Hayes and Wheeler carried the State by 700 or 800 majority.

Hon. A. H. Stephens to-day completed his 65th year. His condition is so much improved that he acknowledges himself, for the first time since the beginning of his late illness, to be better.

SUPPRESSION OF "HAZING."

ADVERSE REPORT OF THE SENATE NAVAL COMMITTEE OF JOSEPH BEALE'S PETITION TO BE RESTORED TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY—THE LAW AUTHORIZING EXPULSION TO BE SUSTAINED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Senator Sargent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Beale, Jr., to be restored to the Naval Academy, from which he was dismissed by sentence of court-martial, has made the following report:

The petitioner was a member of the naval school; was tried by court-martial and duly convicted of the charge of "hazing," and in accordance with the law was sentenced to be expelled. The proceedings and findings of the court were approved, and the sentence has been carried into effect. The following is the act of June 23, 1874, the law upon this subject at the time of the procedure referred to:

AN ACT to prevent hazing at the Naval Academy.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases when it shall come to the knowledge of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy at Annapolis that any cadet midshipman or cadet engineer has been guilty of the offense commonly known as hazing, it shall be the duty of the said Superintendent to order a court-martial, composed of not less than three commissioned officers, who shall minutely examine into all the facts and circumstances of the case and make a finding thereon, and any cadet midshipman, or cadet engineer found guilty of said offense by said court shall, upon recommendation of said court, be dismissed, and such finding, when approved by said Superintendent, shall be final, and the cadet so dismissed from said Naval Academy shall be forever ineligible to reappointment to said Naval Academy.

The matter of hazing has been a serious injury to schools and colleges wherever practiced, and prevailed to such an extent at the Naval Academy that it was deemed necessary to pass the act quoted, and to have its provisions so strong that the young men who were, and in the future might be, designated for the honors of that institution, would be deterred from violating a law enacted for their own good and necessary for the maintenance of order and discipline. When young men pass their examination and enter the academy, it is intended that they should strictly comply with all its rules and regulations, and at all times show a proper reverence and regard for the laws which govern it. Unless these laws and regulations are enforced according to their letter and spirit, the student, instead of being benefited, will be incapacitated for the great duties and responsibilities of after life. The Board of Visitors of 1872, in their report, referring to the faithful efforts of the Superintendent to suppress immoralities by both counsel and discipline, state:

"It is fit in this connection to speak with special commendation of the decided stand recently taken by the Superintendent against the mischievous and wicked practice of hazing. The action here, sustained as it was by the Secretary of the Navy and the President, commands the thanks of educators in all parts of the country for the support thus rendered them in their endeavors to suppress this evil."

The Board of Visitors of 1874, in their report to the Secretary of the Navy, under the head of discipline, comment as follows: "While commending in the most cordial terms the general discipline of the Academy, the board desires to invite your attention to several points which it deems of vital importance. The attention of the country has been strongly directed of late years to the matter of hazing. The board has no hesitancy in saying there is no difficulty in putting a complete stop to this disgraceful practice, if the proper authority to act be given to the Academy Board. The board recommends the enactment of a law requiring the Secretary of the Navy to dismiss on the recommendation of the Academic Board any student guilty of cruelty to comrades, and that such dismissed person shall be henceforth ineligible to reappointment in the academy."

It may be said the act of young Beale was not a very flagrant violation of law, but having delegated that inquiry to a court, it will not do to reverse the judgment when the proceedings are regular. These were approved by the Superintendent, and if there were any mitigating circumstances they were undoubtedly brought to his attention at that time and fully considered. To grant the relief prayed for, would be, in the opinion of the committee, injurious to the discipline of the naval school. The act of 1876 might as well be repealed, as for Congress to favorably entertain requests of this kind. Good conduct, industrious habits, continued application to study, are a few of the requisites that make a valuable man and efficient officer, and it is hoped these qualities will never be undervalued by Congressional action or influence in the management of the Naval Academy, or the education of those whose good fortune it may be to have their names on the list of students at that honored institution. The committee ask to be discharged from further consideration of this memorial.

THE MONUMENT TO AUBER.

A LONG-NEGLECTED COMPOSER.

HOW THE REMAINS OF THE GREAT MUSICIAN WERE TREATED — FOUR YEARS IN A NAMELESS GRAVE—THE MOVEMENT FOR RAISING A MONUMENT TO HIS MEMORY — THREE THOUSAND FRANCS AND THE CORPSE CONTRIBUTED BY AUBER'S HEIRS—HIS DYING MOMENTS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Jan. 29, 1877.

The notice just given that the Auber monument will soon be raised in the Cemetery of Père la Chaise, brings up again the posthumous adventures of this eminent composer. It is rare, indeed, to find that one of the glories of French art has been neglected by the friends of art. There is a sort of free masonry among them which generally leads to a sort of nameless exaggeration, but rarely to neglect. When Félicien David died, a few weeks ago, all the critics of Paris hastened to present their eulogiums, and tributes to the memory of the author of "Le Désert" were not wanting. Auber died in the presence of a few faithful friends, and was secretly hurried into a hired tomb, where his ashes reposed until the friends of art grew ashamed of their neglect. It must be confessed, however, that there are certain attenuating circumstances. The author of "La Muette de Portici" died in the midst of the Commune, a few days before the troops made their entry into Paris. The first difficulty arose when it became a question of his burial, since it was impossible to admit that Auber should be conducted to his grave by a band of Communards with red flags and red cockades. After a brief consultation his friends resolved to hurry the body into the vaults of the nearest church—La Trinité—where it would be free from profanation, it was supposed. But scarcely had the body been laid in the vaults when the Versailles troops entered Paris, and the Communists began to put their dead into the vaults of La Trinité. Not only was the coffin of Auber surrounded by them, but the stairs were completely covered. The fear was that when these bodies were taken away, as they certainly would be when the city was once more in the hands of the authorities, the persons charged with the work of burial would make no distinction between the bodies, and throw the composer into the common trench. A friend, by the payment of money, obtained permission to watch the coffin. When the church vaults were cleared, Auber was taken to the Montmartre Cemetery and placed in the tomb of an undertaker, who demanded a certain sum per month as rental. And there, beneath a pile of ropes, spades, and other implements of the pompes funèbres, the great composer has since reposed, without a word or a sign to indicate his whereabouts. And the date of his death has not yet been placed beside his bust upon the front of the Opera.

It was with pleasure that I joined in the movement for raising a monument to his memory in Père la Chaise, where Rossini and other great musicians have long reposed. But difficulties had to be encountered at every step, and the professed friends of art will be greatly surprised one of these days when some biographer recounts the posthumous adventures of Auber. The first difficulty to overcome was the question of money, for it required about 20,000 francs to get a decent monument. That was finally subscribed, and the next difficulty arose from the question of a concession à perpétuité. The city had closed the front part of the cemetery, and it was not easy to get a grave. But a small piece of land remained in the square containing the tombs of Visconti, Arago, Alfred de Musset, Danton, Lefèbvre-Wély, Ernest Baroche, Cousin, Beulé, and others, near the tomb of Rossini, and a bid was made for it. There were several members of the committee who thought the place too important for Auber, but after a time their objections were overcome, and, after some trouble with the Municipal Council, the land was ceded for the sum of 6,000 francs, or $12,00 the square foot. This money had to be raised also. One will probably ask what part the heirs of Auber took in this matter, and I am sorry to answer that they have not played a very creditable rôle. They left Auber, after inheriting his worldly goods, for four years in a nameless grave, and when asked to subscribe for this monument they replied that the family was not as rich as was generally supposed, and that they had no intention of taking any part in this movement. Evidently there are some private motives at the bottom of this decision, for Auber lived like a man of fortune, and his author's receipts from the Société Dramatique are known to be large. Besides, he owned his house in the Rue Saint Georges, kept seven servants and his carriage, and left a quantity of works of art of value. These who inherited all this, therefore, cannot expect the public to accept their excuse of poverty. It is possible that Auber's heirs were soured by his longevity, for when a rich uncle arrives at the age of 80 high hopes are natural, and it seems like a personal wrong for him to live nine years more, and thus deprive his family of their rights. I will not pretend to enter into this private matter any further, but may add that the heirs were shamed into contributing something by a mot of Alexandre Dumas. When the committee was in the presence of the notary public, discussing the matter, M. Dumas rose in astonishment when the heirs refused to give money for a monument: "What! you refuse to give! At least you will contribute the dead man!" The heirs subscribed 3,000 francs and—the remains of Auber.

A fourth difficulty arose when it came to be a question of the design, and no monument has ever given more trouble, for the committee rejected a large number of sketches before one was found that suited. At last, however, a monument was obtained, and the fifth difficulty arose from the question of inhumation. For six years the body of Auber had lain at Montmartre, at so much per diem, and there was a large sum in arrears to pay. Finally, to cut a painful story short, the remains of the author of so many great works were snatched away by friends, and almost clandestinely taken to Père la Chaise. Nor was this the end of the difficulties, for when the monument was ready for inauguration friends surged up in every direction. They poured in by scores. Every one wanted a leading rôle in the ceremonies. It seemed fit that Ambroise Thomas should speak, because he succeeded Auber as the Director of the Conservatory. Auber was an Academician, and one member of that body had to be delegated to deliver an address. The Société des Auteurs Dramatiques naturally had to say a word, and place had to be accorded to Baron Taylor. Then came the Institute, the Opera, the Opera Comique, &c.—in all five necessary discourses. One will see that this is a sufficient number for any ordinary ceremony, but the committee were not at the end of their difficulties. Auber was born at Caen, and the Mayor of that town put in his claims for a speech, and would not be refused, and with him came the delegate of the "Amis des Arts," a society of Caen, who thought that his titles to a speech were superior to those of the Mayor. That made seven speeches recorded, but on seeing the length of them, the latter was unmercifully refused. He will have his revenge soon, however, for the department of Calvados is going to raise its monument to Auber at Caen, and the "Amis des Arts" can then make as many speeches as they desire. That is not the same thing, though, as speaking in presence of the literati of Paris, and the gentlemen of Caen are greatly disappointed. After these six speeches the choruses of the Conservatory are to sing two morceaux, taken from the chefs d'œuvres of the master.

While writing of these things the figure of Auber as I last saw him rises in my mind. At 88—then close upon 89—he presided at the examinations of the Conservatory, and looked as if destined to see his hundredth birthday. His twinkling, malicious eyes still retained their fire, and that sarcastic, ironic, or mocking smile which one notes in his portraits still hung upon the corners of his mouth. His thin lips were still compressed, his chin not having fallen with age as with Rossini, and his small, delicate hand was not entirely deformed by time. He was evidently ennuyé, but he sat through the entertainment in patience, occasionally giving a smile to some friend in the audience. I saw Auber but once after that, and then he had walked down to the opera upon the arm of a friend, and was slowly mounting the Rue St. Georges to his hotel. There he was comfortably and richly installed, his working room being a small saloon coquettishly arranged. He worked to the last, and left a quantity of music yet to be published. The siege of Paris came. Auber lived the life of a rich man, his works returning him a large annual revenue, and his passion was for horses. He had two that he esteemed highly, and, in honor of Rossini, had named them Figaro and Almaviva. Every morning he went out to caress them, to examine their coats, to look after the quality of their hay, to carry them lumps of sugar, and his affection for them was real. Every afternoon they took him out for exercise, and for his accustomed tour in the Bois. One day an order came from the Government to seize the horses of the Sieur Auber. Almaviva was requisitioned and sent to the butchery. Auber was greatly distressed at the loss of his friend, and at once sent Figaro to a piano-maker, and his life was spared on condition that he did necessary duty as a dray-horse for the rest of the siege. Deprived of his horses, and of his accustomed exercise, Auber visibly languished. At the beginning of the Commune he had an attack of inflammation of the bladder, as in 1869, and on the 8th of May was confined to his bed. He was in the habit of going to bed late and of rising early—like most old men requiring little sleep—and received the pupils of the Conservatory who asked an audience at 7 o'clock in the morning. They found him at his piano composing music. He was there on the morning of the 8th despite his suffering, and his friends then tried again to get him to leave the city. He refused, saying that he wished to die in the city he had loved so well. The next day he could not rise, not even for his morning prayer, as he remarked gaily, his "Morning Prayer" being a delicious piece of music that he had recently composed. On the 10th he was delirious and talked about music. On the morning of the 12th he seemed easier, but while his friends were watching he suddenly rose in his bed, looked intently before him as if seeing far, far into the future, and fell back dead. In a few days monuments to Auber will be raised at Paris and at Caen, and soon the words, "Died in 1871," will be engraved upon the front of the New Opera.

THE HARTFORD BANK TROUBLES.

SERIOUS NATURE OF THE CHARGES AGAINST THE PRESIDENT AND CASHIER OF THE FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' NATIONAL BANK.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Feb. 11.—During the past week the talk in financial circles has centred in the disclosures of the mismanagement of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank, which followed speedily the troubles in the First National Bank. To-day there is fresh excitement over the arrest of Mr. Tracy, President, and Mr. Chapman, Cashier, of the bank. The accused were quietly taken before United States Commissioner Waldo, in the Directors' room of the bank, the charge being a falsification of returns, which is made a State Prison offense. Assistant United States Attorney Staunton appeared for the Government, and the hearing was postponed till to-morrow. Mr. Tracy was put under bonds of $30,000 for his appearance, and they were given by Henry Keney, David Clark, Charles Beach, and Shailer Burnham, all directors. Mr. Chapman was ordered to find bonds of $25,000, and these were furnished by Roland Mather and Francis B. Cooley. It is said that Chapman's account is overdrawn to the amount of about $15,000. There is still a great mystery over the inability to account for about $150,000 of the funds of the bank. There is a loss of over $80,000 in loans to George H. Penfield, a second or third mortgage of real estate being of no value. A loan to the Hartford Pump Company accounts for a bad investment of $100,000. Elisha T. Smith, a distiller, is a borrower of $100,000 more, but, it is said, the security is ample. So far as is known, the entire surplus of the bank—over $300,000—is gone, together with a serious impairment of the capital, which is over $1,000,000. The bank has been considered one of the most conservative here, and of course little attention was paid to the first rumors started; but as these grew, and facts showing a systematic falsification of returns came out, the public was thoroughly aroused. Both Tracy and Chapman have been apparently plain livers, and no one can imagine any motive for collusion or peculation. In a few days the Bank Examiner, Mr. Mygatt, will probably be able to get at the bottom facts.

THE HOSTILE INDIANS.

SPOTTED TAIL STARTS ON A MISSION OF PEACE.

CAMP ROBINSON, Feb. 10, via CHEYENNE, Wyoming Territory, Feb. 11.—Gen. Crook returned to-day from Camp Sheridan, where he has been several days. Spotted Tail, chief of the Sioux, with a body-guard of 200 chosen warriors, started to-day on a self-imposed mission to obtain an interview with the chiefs of the hostiles, now reported to be massed near the forks of Tongue River, and counsel them to accept, while there is yet time, the terms offered by the Government, namely, surrender their arms and ponies. Spotted Tail expects to be absent more than a month, but will communicate with Gen. Crook as soon as he reaches the hostile camp of Indians. It is believed there is a strong probability that this movement will be successful in terminating the war. Gen. Crook and staff will depart for Fort Laramie on the 13th inst.

FORT LARAMIE, Feb. 11.—Yesterday, Givin's train found the body of an unknown man in Cottonwood Cañon, nine miles from here. He is described as 35 years of age, dark moustache, five feet six inches in height. He had a handkerchief in his pocket which was marked "E. D." His head was cut open. The body was found in the snow. The indications are that he was killed a month ago.

RAILROAD ENGINE-DRIVERS' STRIKE.

PORTLAND, Feb. 11.—The engine-drivers on the Boston and Maine Railroad state they will run no more trains out until they have orders to go so from Mr. Arthur, the head of their organization.

MOLLY MAGUIRES EXCOMMUNICATED.

SCRANTON, Feb. 11.—A pastoral letter from Bishop O'Hara excommunicating the "Ancient Order of Hibernians," and directing the clergy to deny the members of that order the sacraments, was read in all the Catholic churches of the Scranton diocese to-day. The denunciation was unexpected, and has produced a sensation among the members of the order, who, for the past eight years, have been in favor with the church within this jurisdiction. The Ancient Order has a large membership in this diocese.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE SERVIAN AND MONTENEGRIN NEGOTIATIONS—MIDHAT PASHA'S EXPLANATION OF HIS EXPULSION—REPORTED ARREST OF THE LEADER IN THE BULGARIAN ATROCITIES.

LONDON, Feb. 12.—The correspondent of the Times, at Vienna, says it is probable that the Porte will not press its condition regarding the treatment of the Jews in Servia. An understanding is being brought about upon one point after another. The Prince of Montenegro seems to demand an adjustment of the frontier according to the line of demarkation laid down by the military commission during the armistice. He also insists upon four points, which include the free navigation of Lake Scutari, access to the sea, and various facilities for more direct diplomatic intercourse with the superior authorities of Turkey. None of these points will prevent a settlement, provided the main question of a cession of territory is solved.

A dispatch to the Daily News from Brindisi announces that Midhat Pasha has arrived there and informed an English deputation that his banishment was due to Russian intrigues. The Vienna correspondent of the News reports that Cheoket Pasha, the leader in the Bulgarian atrocities, has been arrested at Constantinople.

Private advices from Kieff represent that Russia has ordered all the railway companies to procure ambulance carriages, and prepare to convey 60,000 men to Kisheneff.

A telegram from Kisenhoff to the News, gives facts disproving the current reports of discontent and sickness in the Russian Army. On the other hand, the dispatch confirms the report that the passage of the army through Roumania would occupy probably about a month, as alterations in the guage in the Roumania railways is necessary. The correspondent adds: I cannot learn that this measure has commenced. It naturally will not be until war is finally resolved upon. Notwithstanding an official denial, the recent crisis in the Roumantan Ministry was caused by the question whether Romania should form an alliance with Russia, or merely permit the Russian Army to pass under protest. It is understood that the new Government are favorable to Russia.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE IN INDIA.

FIFTY PERSONS KILLED AND ONE THOUSAND WOUNDED BY A GUNPOWDER EXPLOSION.

LONDON, Feb. 12.—A dispatch from Calcutta reports that a gunpowder explosion has occurred at Ashemabed, by which 50 persons were killed and 1,000 wounded.

THE BASQUE TROUBLES.

AN AGREEMENT FOR A SETTLEMENT OF THE DIFFICULTIES PROPOSED AND ACCEPTED.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—A telegram from Madrid says it is reported on good authority that the Basque deputations have proposed and the Government have accepted a convenio for a settlement, which will remove the present difficulties with the Basque Provinces by a compromise. Instead of furnishing soldiers by conscription, each province is to maintain a battalion of Volunteers, which is to be placed under the orders of the Government in case of war, and economical and administrative autonomy is reserved to the Basque Provinces. The Basque juntas are willing to accept this convenio, and the Government will submit it to the Cortes.

A MADMAN'S FREAKS.

CURIOUS ANTICS OF A LUNATIC IN A SECOND AVENUE LODGING-HOUSE — THE POLICE UNABLE TO ARREST HIM — A PISTOL FIRED THROUGH THE DOOR AT THE OFFICERS — SINGULAR REVELATIONS FORESHADOWED.

The neighborhood of Second avenue and Twelfth street was the scene last night of considerable excitement caused by the actions of a man occupying apartments in the house of Mrs. Sparr, who keeps a lodging-house on the south-west corner of the streets named. Shortly after dark people passing up and down Second avenue noticed a curious crowd gathered on the sidewalks, who seemed to be interested in the upper windows of the house on the corner mentioned. That part of the building was brilliantly lighted, and large placards, having on them "Rooms to Let," were hung out. There was also a quantity of red flannel undergarments hung from the same window. Reports were circulated that a crazy man occupied the rooms in question, and the antics of the person who occasionally came to the window seemed to give foundation to the rumor. At one time the crowd became so great as to obstruct the Second avenue cars. On inquiry at the Seventeenth Precinct Police Station, a reporter of THE TIMES was told that Capt. McCullagh and four men had gone to the house to arrest the man who was creating the disturbance. In an hour one of the policemen came back, and said that it was a "desperate case." There was a man on the upper floor who had a "whole battery," and threatened to kill anybody who endeavored to enter his room. The Captain had told him that he had the authority to arrest him, and offered to pass in his shield as evidence. The man said said it was a "d—d lie." Other efforts were made to get in, when a pistol-shot crashed through the door, and came within an inch or two of Officer Burns' breast. Seeing that he had a madman to deal with, and not wishing to create a greater disturbance, the Captain left the officers to watch the room, and deferred the arrest until this morning.

From Mrs. Sparr, who keeps the house, the following facts were learned: On the 23d of January last, a man, apparently about 45 years of age, applied to her for lodgings. He said he wished a quiet, respectable neighborhood; that he was engaged in literary pursuits, and that if she gave him apartments she would have no further trouble in letting her rooms. He gave his name as Major G. W. Corliss, and was assigned to the third-story front. Mrs. Sparr says he has been making himself disagreeable ever since, frequently threatening to take her life. Last evening his conduct became so outrageous that she had to appeal to the Police. A woman, who says she is the man's sister, frequently comes from Brooklyn and stays with him, "and that woman," said Mrs. Sparr, "is up stairs with him now. The Police are up there watching their movements, and when it comes into court some curious and disgraceful revelations may be expected."

THE COLUMBIA LIFE OF ST. LOUIS.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 11.—The Columbia Life Insurance Company has made a strong protest against the valuation of its real estate made by the Committee of Appraisers appointed by the State Superintendent of Insurance. President Douglass publishes the opinion of a number of real estate firms, who value the company's building and grounds, at the corner of Sixth and Locust streets, at $1,000,000, while the Appraisers rate it at $600,000.

SHOT BY HIS BROTHER.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 11.—During a quarrel yesterday afternoon, between Charles and George Seifert, brothers, in Etnaborough, near this city, George drew a revolver and shot Charles in the breast, inflicting a wound which resulted in his death in a short time. The fratricide then surrendered himself to the authorities. He claims to have done the shooting in self-defense.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

PERSONAL WASHINGTON SKETCHES.

THE GREAT COUNTING DAY—DEMOCRATS AND ARISTOCRATS—PEN-PORTRAITS OF NOTABLE CHARACTERS — A MAN WHO IS MISSED—A STEP TOWARD CIVILIZATION—THE OUTWITTED REPUBLICANS.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Feb. 3, 1877.

I was early in my seat in the gallery of the House on the great counting day, and that I had a seat, I owe to the thoughtful kindness of Mr. S. S. Cox, the Democritus, or "laughing philosopher," of the Democracy. For this, and all other Democratic favors, I desire to be truly thankful. Armed with the magic piece of yellow pasteboard, I was treated for once as one of the elect, by a Democratic Door-keeper. Among the first Representatives to arrive were Fernando Wood and David Dudley Field. They are not unlike in appearance. Wood is a more rigid and reticent Field, and Field is a more brainy and belligerent Wood. Both are rather remarkable for an air habitually haughty and aristocratic—in public, at least—and this reminds me of the fact that prominent and dominant Democrats are almost invariably essentially undemocratic. Jefferson himself was practically and by instinct a patrician; there was nothing plebeian about him. If a demagogue, he was the prince of demagogues. Mirabeau of the Sans-Culottes was Count de Mirabeau, a noble in blood and tone. Even his ugliness, rough, rugged, and strong, was of a grand, uncommon type. And Danton—whose motto, "Audacity — again audacity—always audacity!" contains the vital essence of democratic policy—was a man of no mean outcome. Robespierre, even, was of good parentage and luxurious tastes. Elegantly, almost foppishly, attired, he wore always a fresh bouquet in his button-hole to kill the smell of blood. Not even Marat, friend of the people, had much in common, besides ferocity, with the mob he led. He had known courtly scenes and habits, and in his life of fierce toil and almost savage privation occasionally backslid, it is said, into "partial luxury." He would appear at the Club of Cordeliers in green velvet small-clothes and white satin waistcoat, with a democratic complete of greasy collar and soiled linen. Blood will tell, and syntax is a power. Your low-born and bred fellows, such as Spartacus, Jack Cade, and Wat Tyler, soon come to the end of their rope.

Mr. Lamar entered the hall very slowly, and walked directly to his seat, looking neither to the right nor to the left. He is of decidedly Southern aspect. I mean of that antique pre-Confederate type, which all old-fashioned Democrats are bound to respect. The strength of the South has always been largely in the hair. Mr. Lamar's is long, dark, and for his years, profuse. In striking contrast to him is his neighbor, Mr. Banks, fast getting to be snow-Banks, with his silver chevelure piled up in atmosphere strongly individual, vital and electrical, that mute, mysterious magnetism, which is the effluence of power, but which some men otherwise powerful, have nothing of.

"Toil could never compass it;
Art its height could never hit;
It never came out of wit."

As I saw him sitting there, a peer among the peers, I fancied he looked round a little regretfully for the field of his old conflicts and triumphs, on the spot where, only last year, he stood at bay, like a magnificent elk of the grand Maine forests, and tossed one after another of the finest and fiercest stag-hounds of the Democracy to the right and the left, till it rained dogs, if not cats. But they say he will not long "lie down in the pleasant pastures" to which he has been transferred, but will engage in new contests with more formidable adversaries. If the occasion come, he will not hesitate to lock horns with the Cretan Taurus of Democracy from Ohio, or the "golden-horned" stag of Diana and Hercules from New-York. Though he has left in the House two admirable lieutenants, Mr. Hale and Mr. Frye, who carry on the war enough in his gallant style to keep his memory green, he is sorely missed there this Winter. Though Mr. Garfield, commonly regarded as the leader of the radical Republicans, can neither be daunted nor driven, he is scarcely the man to engage the champion pugilists of the Democracy, rough, ready, magvelously agile fellows as they are, not too much hampered by precedent or science. Brave and handsome are Ohio's James I. and II.—Garfield and Monroe—and Massachusetts' sedate Seelye, their fighting qualities are rather weakened than strengthened by scholarly culture and a too sensitive refinement—are, so to speak, diluted by the proprieties of professorships, and vitiated by an infusion of clergyman. If such a happy conjunction could be, the champion for our present need were a man uniting the moral force and grand obstinacy of a John Quincy Adams, to the training and cool pluck of a James G. Blaine, and the wit, audacity, and, if you will, the ferocity, of a Benjamin F. Butler.

One near me said: "How pleased Mr. Cox looks; he thinks this will elect Mr. Tilden." It is true, he looked happy, but somehow no longer "the jester of Congress." There seemed method in his mirth. I could even imagine him handing to the venerable father of this partition arrangement his cap, saying, like the wise jester of Lear, "Here, nuncle, take my coxcomb." That same grave Senator wore also a look of unusual satisfaction. He is, doubtless, happy for once; but somebody has got to be disappointed, somebody punished. "What a strange Nemesis lurks in the felicities of men."

The Judges of the "Provisional Tribunal" were present, and many looked at them with commiseration, mingled with admiration, as if they were so many Curtii about to tuck their skirts about them and leap into the miry abyss of politics for the good of the Republic. It is odd to hear very much the same sort of stuff talked about these sacred judicial personages going out of their sphere and being dragged down and draggled up by political responsibilities and associations, as we women have had to hear when we have broken through the close jalousies of domestic life, and gone about freely in God's free sun-light on what we believed to be our Master's business or knew to be our own—and especially when we have presumed to demand, as citizens under our country's charter of freedom and equality, certain political rights. But for all the outcry, no woman essentially womanly and sensible has ever been harmed or sullied by enlarging her field of influence and action, and dealing with matters of common interest and importance, however much fools may have blossomed out into more glaring folly and lunatics given a wilder and wider flight to their lunacies. The Quaker kerchief of Lucretia Mott still rests over her motherly breast as snowy pure as the veil of a vestal virgin. Anna Dickinson was as respectable when a live revolution spoke through her glowing lips as now, when she declaims for a dead Queen. Julia Ward Howe has not fallen from the seventh heaven of Beacon street society through clubs and conventions, petitioning, preaching, and so I hope that our beloved Supreme Court Judges may be preserved from soil and corruption, in the ermine of their office, in the virgin purity of their honor.

Speaking of soil reminds me of what I have long felt moved to say in respect to the southern wing of the Capitol, and the rotunda—their extremely filthy condition. I have never seen anything comparable to it, except, perhaps, the Pennsylvania State-house, at Harrisburg. On my way to the Capitol, these fine days, I do not think it needful to lift my skirts from the well-swept sidewalks, but as soon as I get within the shadow of the great Corinthian columns I pull my garments carefully about me, and within the classic precincts I walk on tip-toe, striving to avoid the drifts of dirt, and dark, slimy pools—multitudinous nicotian seas. It must be that expectation begets expectoration of the most profuse and reckless sort. I know that chewing and spitting are not exclusively Democratic vices. I know that it is reported that more than one lofty Republican official sits flanked and circumvallated by monster spittoons. But to use the spittoon at all is a step toward civilization. Most of the democracy—I do not use the word in a narrow, specific, but in a broad, generic sense—there are some good republican Democrats and there are some some bad democratic Republicans—and I should say, perhaps, most of the masses despise the useful and sometimes ornamental spittoon as a dainty, effeminate superfluity. They consider it an impertment suggestion, an intrusive interference with their extrusive rights—a something that would circumscribe their liberty, dictate aims, and make a toil of a pleasure. I really believe that the only notice they take of the thing is to see how near they can come to it without hitting.

I witnessed the tumultuous scene in the House on the night when the Democrats, in spite of the wicked but somewhat weak filibustering of their opponents, stuck to their point of having the Florida report read out of its proper hour, and carried it, through the Roman justice of Mr. Randall. The Republicans were not there in force with their leaders, as they did not anticipate such a stroke of sharp practice. They never do. I feel somehow like a mother to the Republican Party, and it goes against my grain to see it perpetually outwitted and its easy-going magnanimity taken advantage of. That night I fancied the Democracy taunting it, in the words the squirrel addressed to the mountain, in the fable by Emerson:

"If I'm not so grand as you,
You are not so cute as I,
And not half so spry."

But it was a pretty scrimmage after all, and broke not unpleasantly the monotonous flow of legislation. Doubtless there ought to be something majestic and awful in the sight of a Sergeant at Arms walking up and down the aisles, "toting" the great silver-headed mace, but nobody seemed to see it, and all the profane filibusters kept on, laughing and shouting as before, while the one-man pageant passed by. It struck me that if that same terrible and truculent Thompson would perform a little with a broom, in that littered and dusty domain of his, he might prove more of a success.

GRACE GREENWOOD.

A GRASSHOPPER BOUNTY BILL.

A grasshopper bounty bill has been introduced in the Legislature of Minnesota, which provides for the payment by the State of the following bounties for catching and destroying locusts or their eggs: 50 cents a gallon for eggs; $1 per bushel for insects previous to June 1; 50 cents per bushel from June 1 to June 15; 25 cents per bushel from June 15 to July 1; and 20 cents thereafter until Oct. 1. The bill provides for the appointment, by the County Commissioners of each county, of a competent person, with an assistant when necessary, in each township of the districts where eggs are deposited, to receive, measure, and destroy the captured eggs or hoppers delivered to him. The township grasshopper gaugers are to be subject to a fine for neglecting their duties of not less than $10 or more than $100, or to be imprisoned in the County Jail for from 30 to 90 days, and to be prosecuted by the Supervisors of the township before a Justice of the Peace residing therein. The County Auditors, on the presentation of the certificates of the gaugers, are to make and deliver to the holder an order on the State Auditor for the sum to which he is entitled. Every able-bodied male adult under 60 years of age is required to give one days' work in each week of the period above stated, to the extent of five days in all, for the purpose of catching and destroying the hoppers and their eggs. The labor service may be commuted by the furnishing of a substitute, or the payment of $1 a day, which is to be expended in hiring substitutes. Persons refusing to work or pay are fined $2 a day. A hundred thousand dollars is appropriated from the State Treasury for the purposes of the bill.

BILLIARDS IN ENGLAND.

Recently, at the Surrey Club-house, Kennington-oval, Cook, the champion, played a game of 1,000 points in an hour and 10 minutes, the previous fastest time being an hour and 14 minutes by Roberts, Sr. Cook's adversary was Taylor, to whom he gave a start of 300 points. While the latter was making 87, Cook played the 1,000 points—his four principal breaks being 413 with 136 spot strokes; and all round, 117, and 113, with which last he went out; thus winning, including the start, by 613 points, the greatest performance in public for years.

SHELTER FOR THE IDLE.

CHEAP LODGINGS IN NEW-YORK.

WHERE MANY HONEST POOR HAVE TO MINGLE WITH LAZY TRAMPS—THE CITY A WINTER HAVEN FOR THESE RESTLESS PEOPLE—A CHANCE FOR A PRACTICAL LAW—THE PLAN WHICH NEW-JERSEY HAS ADOPTED.

It has long been a problem in this City among charitably disposed persons and those whose positions require them to consider such matters, by what means and to what extent lodgings should be provided for the various classes of the poor, who, for one reason or another, do not supply lodgings for themselves. These classes of the community cannot justly be lumped together and one specific be employed for the relief of all. Many are worthy and the victims of harsh fate, for which human judgment cannot assign a cause. Many are driven hurriedly by misfortune, social or business, or both, from honorable positions to the bitterness of poverty; many are worn out by sickness; while many others are hopeless drinkers, confirmed vagrants, professional beggars, or desperate tramps. In the view of most philanthropists and of most humane citizens the community should provide at least a shelter, clean and reputable, for the better portion of these people. Various attempts have been made in this City in a small way, and with fair success, to sustain systematic cheap lodgings, but no general plan such as has been so efficient in many European cities has been carried into operation here. The individual houses that are scattered here and there in various parts of the City are either private enterprises by which the keepers gain their livelihood, or are sustained by persons of wealth who direct their charity in this way.

Not to speak of the unwholesome lodgings which the Police stations have attached to them, and to which none will go until they are lost to shame or overcome by hunger and cold, there are several free houses in different parts of the City. Each Police Captain is provided with a number of tickets to be given away to all sober and decent-looking applicants, and which entitle them to a night's lodging at one of these. The best known is situated in the old church at the corner of Prince and Marion streets, and accommodates 375 persons nightly. This institution has been in operation for more than a year, and is supported wholly by a wealthy retired merchant. Applicants for admission must come between the hours of 8 and 10 P. M. to be entitled to a bunk. On entering the church, each man presents his ticket, obtained at the nearest police station, and is assigned to his proper place. The bunks, or "cots," consist simply of the old pews, with a light rail tacked on the side and a wooden support at the upper end which does duty as a pillow. Each pew holds two lodgers, one on the seat and one on the floor. In the gallery are long rows of canvas cots, for which 10 cents apiece is charged. The basement contains bath-rooms, closets, &c., divided off by rough board partitions, but clean, wholesome, notwithstanding the army of the neglected and homeless which frequents them each day. In a corner of the dimly-lighted basement is a rough kitchen where immense kettles of corn-meal mush are cooked and dispensed to the inmates each morning. Each individual is given "as much as he can eat" for two cents, and in case he has no money, he has the option of doing a quarter of an hour's work about the building instead. In the bath-room, warm water, soap, and dry towels are provided, and no restraint is placed on the number of baths taken daily. The hours for opening and closing are 8 P. M. and 7 A. M. Altogether the building is admirably adapted for its purpose, and has received the warm commiums of the charity officials of the City and the officers of private benevolent societies. There is another large free lodging-house at the corner of Tenth street and Avenue D, where the facilities afforded are of a scantier description, but the place shelters nightly fully 300 of these homeless wanderers.

The places which the tramps choose and to which many decent people have to go are the cheap lodging-houses to be found in Chatham street, the Bowery, and the purlieus of Baxter street. Here the "10-cent system" flourishes in all its glory. For that trifling amount a tramp may obtain "all the comforts of a well-regulated home," including coffee in the morning and hot rolls on Sunday. The house at No. 153 Chatham street is a fair specimen of the others. The beds are simple canvas cots, dirty and well worn, ranged in rows along the walls at right angles to the street. Regular comers get the same cot each night, and are supplied with the daily papers free of charge. Soap and water, needles and thread, writing-paper, pens, and ink are furnished free. In the centre of the long whitewashed room is a small deal table at which several careworn and hungry-looking men may be seen sitting slightly, writing, sewing, and reading. The atmosphere is close and unpleasantly suggestive of unwashed bodies, but the regular patrons of the place make nothing of it. A still greater curiosity in its way are the "P. Cooper Dormitories" at No. 201 Chatham square and No. 508 Pearl street, and lodgers are to the number of 400 people daily. Another cheap restaurant, where the dishes are 5 cents apiece, is situated within a block or two of the Tombs, but as Signor Valentini says, "ours is de cheapest." At almost all of these houses old books and papers are provided for the entertainment of the lodgers.

The most conspicuous and utterly indifferent class of the poor known as the tramp occupies a singular relation to the public. In the country people are afraid of these wandering and never contented vagrants. They are dark of visage skilled in nothing, lost to decency. They are for the most part bunglers at any crime, but always ready to undertake any easy task in villainy which is likely to give them a temporary lift or afford sustenance for their prevailing passions. In the City they find a Winter stopping-place, and add themselves to the vast throng of poor loafers who infest the streets and cheap rum shops.

In New-York the tramp, as long as he is not too troublesome, is left pretty much to himself. When his habitual presence becomes monotonous, and his ragged and filthy appearance hints strongly of pestilence, he is taken before a magistrate, and handed over to the Commissioners of Charities and Correction. Many tramps give themselves up in this manner, asking to be sent to one of the "Island" institutions in preference to walking the streets longer. Each morning one of the Commissioners is on duty at the Tombs, and before him are arraigned the vagrant and destitute who have been committed by the various Police Justices during the 24 hours preceding. From 30 to 50 of these people are disposed of daily by Commissioner Townsend Cox. For the months of October, November, and December, 1876, the number of commitments of this description was 914, classed as follows: For destitution, 601; for vagrancy, 313. The number increases constantly with the approach of cold weather, and diminishes again with the commencement of Spring. At present there are from 1,500 to 2,000 destitute persons in the alms-house, hospital, and other charitable institutions on Blackwell's and Ward's Islands. Their terms of commitment are generally only for a few weeks, and the work-house authorities keep the healthier ones for as short a time as possible. Superintendent Kellock, of the Department of Charities, says that the number of tramps and professional vagabonds applying for relief is less during the present Winter than heretofore. Those who do apply are referred to Warden Quinn and Commissioner Cox, and, if they are found to be entitled to it, are sent either to the Alms-house or hospital.

The great need of New-York, however, is the enactment of a Tramp law, such as the one in force in New-Jersey, and which if faithfully carried out would greatly restrict the evil not only in the City but throughout the State. The act referred to, which bears date April 19, 1876, defines "tramps" as follows:

"All persons who shall come from any place without this State, or from any city, county, township, borough, or place in this state, and have no legal settlement in the places in which they may be found, and live idly and without employment, and refuse to work for the usual and common wages given to other persons for like work in the place where they then are, or shall be found, going about from door to door, or placing themselves in the streets, highways, or roads to beg or gather alms, and can give no reasonable account of themselves or their business in such places."

The act further provides for the arrest and commitment of all such persons "to labor upon any county farm, or upon the streets, roads, and highways of any city, township, or borough, or in any house of correction, poor-house, work-house, or common jail for a term not exceeding six months." It also enacts that where no suitable labor exists in such institutions, it shall be lawful for the magistrates to bind out and keep said tramps at labor in the service of any suitable person, persons, or corporations, for a period not to exceed the one already mentioned. By the eighth section of the law the persons committed under it, are to be compelled "to work when able not less than six hours per day." The act has not yet been fully enforced, but even its partial operation has had an excellent effect. The existing treatment of tramps in most of the New-Jersey cities and towns has been summed up by a recent writer as follows: "A warm room, the soft side of a plank for a bed, and orders to leave at daybreak for some other locality, without anything to eat." In some of the towns they are forced to break stone and do other laborious work—a procedure which has a charmed effect in decreasing the number of applicants for lodgings.

The New-Jersey method has been tried in one or two instances in New-York State, and so far with the best results. One of the officials of Poughkeepsie reports:

"We find that breaking stone two or three hours before breakfast keeps a great number away. The more work you give them the fewer you have. The stone is used for macadamizing our streets. The Board of Supervisors for our county has just passed a resolution that the Overseers of the Poor shall keep no more of them. This I think, if rightly carried out, will eradicate the evil." The City of Binghamton, with a population of about 15,000, ceased to keep them, and now they give Binghamton a wide berth."

Those who have made the subject a study say that there is no reason why the same system should not be carried out in this City with the most beneficial results. Their friends claim that City rents once would greatly restrict the evil not only in the City but throughout the State. The act referred to, which bears date April 19, 1876, defines "tramps" as follows:

Those who shall apply here as tramps will be compelled to labor upon the streets, roads, and highways of the City, and will be forbidden to ask for alms. The Commissioner of Charities and Correction, Mr. Porter, is said to be in favor of the plan, and it is probable that he will recommend it to the Legislature in his annual report. The Commissioner of Public Charities, Mr. Hart, is also favorable to the idea, and it is probable that he will recommend it to the Legislature in his annual report. The Commissioner of Public Charities, Mr. Hart, is also favorable to the idea, and it is probable that he will recommend it to the Legislature in his annual report.

RELIGIOUS WORK AND TALK

JERRY MCAULEY'S MISSION.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN CONNECTION WITH THE OCCUPATION OF THE NEW WATER STREET CHAPEL—THE FASHIONABLE CHURCHES WELL REPRESENTED—ADDRESSES BY PROMINENT CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

The special services in connection with the occupation of the new chapel of the McAuley Water Street Mission, took place in the chapel, No. 316 Water street, yesterday, in the presence of a large congregation. Three services were held—one in the morning at 10 o'clock, one in the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and one in the evening at 7:30 o'clock. All three attracted interested audiences, composed largely of sympathetic friends from fashionable up town churches. The chapel of the mission, a room capable of seating 300 people, was handsomely decorated with illuminated texts and appropriate designs in evergreens. Mr. A. S. Hatch presided at the morning meeting, which was chiefly devoted to prayer and the rehearsal of personal experiences on the part of new converts. At 2:30 P. M. Rev. Gardner Spring Plumley, Pastor of the Fulton Street Church, lead in prayer. A number of well-known gentlemen, including Mr. F. Marquand, banker, of Wall street; Mr. E. B. Monroe, Vice President of the Young Men's Christian Association; Mr. Henry Johnson, of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church; Mr. Isaac Beale, and Mr. C. C. Coe, were present, together with a large number of ladies and gentlemen. At the evening service every inch of space was filled, and many were unable to obtain admission. Mr. William E. Dodge presided, and the exercises were conducted by Jerry McAuley, the founder of the institution. Rev. Drs. Ormiston and Taylor, who had been announced to speak, were absent, but Rev. Dr. Booth said a few earnest words on behalf of the clergy. He remarked that when doctors wished to heal an ulcer they sometimes did so by putting sound flesh in its place. This was precisely what was being attempted in the present case. Although Mr. McAuley was on the frontier of the fight, the people in the safe places had sympathy with him, and were ready to extend the hand of fellowship and aid to him in his work. The only way to save the poor and ignorant and vicious of this great City was to take them by the hand, as Jesus took the young man by the hand when he came down from the Mount of the Transfiguration.

Mr. Dodge said that his friend McAuley had asked him to come down there and say a few words, and what he was about to say he intended more for those to whom this sight was a comparatively new one. It was here that they were enabled to realize the transforming power of the Gospel on human lives; that Christ in reality came into this world to save sinners, and that when the poorest and wortliest of souls came to Him He would give them rest. The poor drunkard who was rapidly descending the broad road that led to destruction was here for the first time arrested in his downward course by the solemn words, "Sinner, turn; why will ye die?" There were those present who had given evidence of the transforming power of the Gospel greater than anything that could be witnessed in more luxurious and fashionable churches. And yet the noble work of reclaiming these fallen souls to Christ had been steadily going on for half a century, constantly increasing, and never failing for want of workers. Fifty years ago such meetings had been held in the New-York Bowery, but so large as this, but still of sufficient size to give encouragement. It was here that for the first time many heard that warning message, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." It was here that they first realized what it was for God to give His only Son, that whoso believed in Him should have everlasting life. He begged his hearers to take these things to heart, and when they went home to their churches not to forget the work that was going on here.

Jerry McAuley gave a short account of how he was, years ago, reclaimed from his evil ways by the unchanging power of the Gospel, and urged all his hearers to seek Jesus without delay. Mr. A. S. Hatch said he had been frequently asked who ran this mission. People said to him, "Do you run it?" "No." "Does Jerry McAuley run it?" "No." "Then who does run it?" To this question he could only answer in all reverence, "It was through Him, and Him alone, that this foothold of the Gospel had been maintained so many years, and it was to His strengthening arm that they looked for protection in time of need.

About an hour was devoted to the recital of personal experiences, in which many who had been previously hardened sinners, told how they had been converted by God's grace into good citizens and earnest laborers in the Church. The Seventy-fourth hymn was sung:

"Oh! to be nothing, nothing,
Only to lie at His feet."

Mr. McAuley stated that Mr. Thurlow Weed, who had promised to be present and say a few words, had been detained, but he would vouch for his appearance on a future occasion. The Ninety-first hymn was then sung:

"There is a fountain filled with blood Drawn from Emanuel's veins."

The congregation then dispersed. An earnest appeal is made by the friends of the mission, otherwise known as "The Helping Hand for Men," for additional means to discharge the present debt on the mission property—a neat three-story brick building—and to enable them to accommodate the now already over crowded church accommodations. During the year 1876, 424 religious meetings have been held here, at which the aggregate attendance was 51,277, and in which 6,260 personal requests for prayer were presented. Meals and clothing have also been furnished to hundreds of homeless and destitute persons. About $8,500 is required to relieve the institution from debt, and enable it to continue in its invaluable work among the lowly and destitute of this neglected quarter of the City. The current expenses are supplied entirely by voluntary contributions. Subscriptions either for the building fund or for current expenses may be addressed to Jerry McAuley, Superintendent, No. 316 Water street, or to either of the following Trustees: A. S. Hatch, (of Fisk & Hatch,) No. 5 Nassau street; to Sidney Whittemore, No. 71 Broadway, or to J. D. Phyfe, No. 123 East Fifty-seventh street.

SPIRITUAL RESURRECTION.

DR. CHAUNCEY GILES' THIRD LECTURE ON DEATH AND THE RESURRECTION—THE NATURE OF SPIRITUAL RESURRECTION—HOW THE SPIRITUAL BODY IS RAISED FROM SPIRITUAL DEATH TO SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Rev. Dr. Chauncey Giles lectured last evening before a very large audience, in the Church of the New Jerusalem, (Swedenborgian,) in Thirty-fifth street, on "The Resurrection of the Spiritual Body from Spiritual Death," being the third of a series of lectures explanatory of the Swedenborgian theories of death and the resurrection.

In order, said Dr. Giles in opening the lecture, that we may understand this question of the resurrection of the soul from spiritual death, and its restoration to spiritual life, we must first ascertain the meaning of "resurrection." It is not merely a change in those faculties which exist and are active when man is in a state of spiritual death, but it is a change in their purification and rectification and reduction to harmony. It is the creation within man of a new heart and a new moral nature. The Lord calls it molding man's whole spiritual nature into His own image and after His likeness. By spiritual death man loses that love and wisdom which is the embodied law of the Lord. By resurrection he regains them. The next point toward gaining a clearer perception of the subject, is to discover what is meant by "soul." The soul is the man himself, and not a mere formless essence which keeps the machinery of his body in motion. It has form, substance, organization. It gives form to the natural body, which is the image of the soul in clay. The soul is alive when all its organic forms are in a normal condition, and in a state to receive life, and be moved to pleasurable activities by it. It is dead when its organic forms have become so deranged and disconnected from the source of life that it can no longer receive in it a full measure. A dead soul has existence and some consciousness of life in its lowest and most imperfect forms, but it has no heavenly, spiritual life. It has strong affections, but they are those affections which lead to every possible sorrow. It has the power of seeing truth, but no love of truth which does not favor its own evil affections. It has no love of the Lord or its neighbor, although it has the power of perceiving its obligations to exercise such love. Right here lies the possibility of man's resurrection from spiritual death and restoration to spiritual life. By his fall man lost the love of goodness, but not the power of learning the truth. Man's moral nature died, but his intellectual faculties did not die. They became obtuse and uncertain in relation to spiritual things, but they did not lose their capacity to understand spiritual truth. It is through this power of understanding the true laws of his being when they are revealed him that man's resurrection from spiritual death is possible. Before man died spiritually, the Lord operated on him through his affections, and by means of them led him to all good. Now, that way being closed by spiritual death, He approaches him through the intellect by means of truth.

Since man's spiritual death, said the speaker, was caused by his disobedience of the commandments, the only way he can regain his lost life is by keeping them. An examination of the Bible will show that the Lord teaches this, and that life and all its blessings come of keeping the laws of life, which are the commandments. Man was expelled from Eden by breaking these commandments. He finds his way back to it by fulfilling them. The answer, then, to the question of how a soul spiritually dead is raised to spiritual life—the answer of the voice of the Scriptures is, by learning the commandments and keeping them to the best of our ability." But some will say that we are raised by faith in the Lord. But the miraculous faith, of which so much is said, and upon which so much depends, is simply belief in the truth of what the Lord has said, and the possession of such a clear sense of its importance that we are led to do as he has commanded. The great trouble is, however, that man does not believe the Lord. He will not believe that he is spiritually dead when the Lord discloses to him the fact that he is so. If he did believe this, and also believed that he could be raised from death and be eternally happy by keeping the commandments, he would certainly make a faithful effort to keep them. He is saved by faith, not as a substitute for keeping the commandments, but as a necessary means of fulfilling them. This view of the case may lead some to ask: what is the need of the Saviour, if the keeping of the commandments will raise man from spiritual death to spiritual life. The reply is that a Saviour is needed to teach us the laws of life, and to help us to keep them. The Lord did not come into the world as a substitute for the keeping of the commandments. He said Himself that He had not come to destroy the law or the prophets, but to fulfill them. If we keep before us man's spiritual condition, we can see the absolute necessity for the Lord's coming. Man was dead and dumb and blind, and leprous and paralytic, and there was no means of help from any human source. The Lord could not help him from the spiritual side of his nature because that way of approach was closed by sin. It was, therefore, necessary to approach him on the natural side, and to do so it was necessary for the Lord to assume a nature which would be apprehended by man's senses. He therefore came in the flesh, and His coming in the flesh is the only rational explanation for His coming, and it teaches us the manner in which human redemption was wrought out. After enlarging upon this point, the speaker briefly considered the reasons why a life in accordance with the commandments was the only means of regaining spiritual life. Every man, he said, begins to live according to the laws of his spiritual nature, he puts himself in true relation to the source of life, and soon begins to develop his spiritual being—feebly at first, but gradually attaining full strength and power. The result of this resurrection is that the soul is raised to a life of great sorrows and unspeakable and lasting joys. When the spiritual man begins to gain life, and love of the Lord begins to assume control of his nature, there comes a terrible conflict—a conflict for life, a conflict which results in death. This conflict is described in many ways in the Word, but in all it is presented as being the making of a sacrifice and suffering of great sorrows, for in it man loses all that he holds dear in this world, and suffers death. This conflict is being waged in every possible form wherever there is a human soul that has been raised from spiritual death to spiritual life, and it will continue to be waged until the subjugation of the natural man is complete, and love of the Lord and the neighbor reigns in undisputed sway over him. This is the reason why a religious life is presented in such forbidding aspects; this is why the life of a good man seems often to be full of conflict and sorrow. But only one side of the picture has been presented in such a view. The conflict and suffering are but for a moment; the victory is eternal. The activities of our nature will be reduced to harmony and order. The whole natural mind will be lifted from the dust and turned from itself and the world to heaven and the Lord. The soul will enjoy quietness, rest, and peace, and a new and higher class of faculties will be created within man, which will open to him a world of beauty and glory which the natural mind could not conceive of, and which will enable him to become part of the divine order, a form of the divine beauty, a sharer of the divine life, and a partaker of the divine blessedness.

The fourth and concluding lecture of the course will be delivered on Sunday evening next.

THE DEFAULTER'S RETURN.

HOW THE CASHIER, WHO STOLE AN INDIANA BANK, RETURNED FOOT-SORE AND CRAZED.

From the Indianapolis Sentinel.

FRANKLIN, Feb. 9.—Just before noon to-day the people of Franklin were thrown into a fever of excitement over the rumor that R. T. Taylor, the absconded cashier of the First National, had returned and was at that moment in the office of Dr. P. W. Payne. At some time during the night Taylor presented himself at Dr. Payne's office and knocked for admission. When the door was opened he was found standing without in his stocking feet, with his boots in his hand. On being taken into the office medical attention was called and means used to subdue the great mental excitement under which he was laboring. A little before noon he was taken to his home, and it was at that time that the public became apprised of his return. Several persons have visited him during the day, and to all he is disposed to talk, though in such an incoherent manner as not to give any very certain information. This afternoon an affidavit for embezzlement was filed by the Vice President of the bank, Mr. William McCaslin, before W. H. Barrett, Esq., and put into the hands of officer John Bullock for his arrest, who proceeded at once to his house and took him in custody. As soon as his condition will warrant he will be removed to the county jail.

It was given out along with the announcement that Taylor had returned that he was a raving maniac, but on investigation this was found to be greatly exaggerated. Several physicians visited him this afternoon, and pronounce him to be laboring under a state of great mental prostration consequent upon the terribly intense excitement through which he must have passed. His appearance was haggard and careworn, his eyes bloodshot, and his face blackened from the congestion which has followed the terrible struggle the man was but a wreck of his former self. Throughout he seemed to be contused in dates and as to time. When first visited he said he had been gone from home for six years, and had visited California, Nevada, Chicago, and other places. Later in the day he gave a more intelligible account of himself, and one which in this is most probably true. He said he had visited Louisville, New-Albany, Madison, and Cincinnati, and a Mr. Rufus Willan, who lives in Trafalgar, in this county, says that he saw Taylor last Monday evening, at the 5 o'clock down freight at Greenwood. If that be so, the probability is that he went from Indianapolis to Louisville, and from there made his way up the river to Cincinnati, and this probability is strengthened when it is remembered that he was seen in Indianapolis on Monday afternoon, going toward the Union depot.

He states that in Cincinnati he disguised himself and went upon the street, where he met many whom he knew, and this decided him to come right home; and as he has had his beard shaved to a different fashion, this is very likely true. To one who visited him he gave a terrible picture of the remorse which he must have felt in times past. "I am and many a night," said he, "have I walked the streets of Franklin not knowing what to do nor which way to turn."

He claims that the papers have done him an injustice, and that he was not in Fletcher & Sharpe's bank at all on last Monday. He also disclaims taking any money away with him, and says that the reserve had been gone for nine months, and that he had brought in money from elsewhere to show to the examiner. From all that can be learned it is certain that he walked from Indianapolis here last night. He says that he had no money with which to pay his fare on the train, but a small roll was taken from his person this morning.

Public sentiment is setting in strong against those men who are supposed to have been in the ring with Taylor in the Chicago margin business. He says that he will have to bear the brunt of the fight, and take all the odium of the crime, but the people are demanding that the accessories, if any, be brought to light. It is hard to tell where it will all end. The bank directory is in session, and such steps will doubtless be taken as the occasion will warrant. Facts have come to light to day, showing that there is about $30,000 of forged paper outstanding, and from all that can be learned it appears that if this forged paper and the Chicago man's deposit have to be made good, the stockholders will have to look up a heavy assessment over the actual capital of the bank.

SUICIDE IN COLUMBIA.

The Columbia (S. C.) Union-Herald of the 9th inst., says: "Last night, a little after 9 o'clock, as Mr. J. H. Runkle was on his way to his home, at the residence of his brother-in-law, Hon. S. L. Hoge, on Senate street, he stopped into the saloon and restaurant of Mr. Fine. Here he met Senator Owens and some other friends, who invited him to take a glass of wine. Mr. Runkle declined, as he said he had taken enough and desired no more, and walked into the restaurant and sat down by one of the tables. No person accompanied him, and there was no one in that department. The report of a pistol shot brought in the gentleman above named, who found the unfortunate young man had shot himself through the head. The ball passed in at the right side, in front of the ear, and came out near the upper part of the skull on the opposite side, lodging in the partition wall. The body was found lying backward on the chair, the head near the floor and bleeding copiously. He was lifted to the matting and a physician sent for, but he was beyond the power of the healing art, and died in forty minutes afterward, without speaking. The Coroner was notified, and a jury summoned to hold an inquest, that the body might be removed to the residence of the deceased. The jury, having heard all the evidence in the case, returned a verdict that J. H. Runkle died from a pistol shot in the head, fired by his own hand, while laboring under temporary insanity. The body was then removed to the house of his sister, Mrs. Hoge. Mr. Runkle was well known in this State, having filled several positions of trust in the National and State Governments. For the four years past he had been Solicitor of the Fifth Circuit, resigning that office a few months ago. He was a young man, of prepossessing appearance, about 35 years of age, unmarried, of a warm-hearted and convivial nature, which caused him to be universally liked by all the people. He was a sincere friend, and we question if he had an enemy in the world."

AMERICA AND ENGLAND.

THEIR RELATION TO EACH OTHER.

THE INTERCOURSE BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES—THE LAWS OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND—THE ATLANTIC TRAFFIC.

From the London Times, Jan. 27.

Our intercourse with America has become so enormous, and it has led to changes which are now so essentially parts of our every-day life, that we can hardly realize the rapidity with which it has sprung up, or the comparatively small limits within which, at a very recent date, it was confined. The survey of Atlantic traffic which we published yesterday, though it goes back no further than to a period which most of our readers will remember personally, yet seems to be dealing with a state of things which has already receded into the dim distance. When we read of the first attempt at establishing direct steam communication between Liverpool and New-York, it is only by an effort that we remind ourselves of the lateness of the date at which the as yet doubtful project was ventured upon. Of the measure of success which has followed it, the state of modern Liverpool is sufficient witness. That it should not yet be 40 years since the first mails were conveyed to America by a regular service of steam vessels, and that the wants of the time were satisfied by a contract for only one vessel in a fortnight, are equally facts which it is difficult for us to bring home to ourselves or to estimate at their proper meaning. America has now become in a very real sense a part of our own country. Ships from a dozen of our ports are sailing thither every day and almost every tide. We visit it for a holiday excursion, and receive a message from it in the course of a few minutes. Half a century ago it was connected with us only by an occasional and uncertain link, and the passage from the one shore to the other was an adventure which few on either side had the boldness or energy to encounter. We must consider the interval of time strictly, and without reference to the events which have happened in it, if we are to keep it within its proper measure.

Wonderful as the growth of our intercourse with America has been, it has been in every sense unforced and natural. The circumstances of England and America made each necessary to the other. On one side of the Atlantic were broad fertile lands untilled and unoccupied, and rich beyond belief with every description of native wealth. The one thing needed to turn all these advantages to account, and to supply the world from their teeming, inexhaustible store was a sufficiency of human labor, and this was a commodity which the United Kingdom possessed, or seemed to possess, in superfluous abundance. Population, from whatever cause, had increased with us faster than the means of subsistence, and we were glad to find an outlet for some portion of it. The food-producing powers of our little island appeared already to have been taxed to the uttermost, and we had to look elsewhere for the means of filling the new mouths which were only too certain to arrive. Between two such countries, which seemed thus made for one another, intercourse could not help growing. The thousands of miles which lay between them were indeed a sad obstacle, but even this vanished before the discovery of the steam-engine and its application to naval use. The same cause, too, contributed very powerfully to intensify the importance of the connection it thus helped to promote. The growth of our manufactures under the new influence of steam raised a demand for American raw produce, while America was not less in want of finished manufactured goods, which she had no leisure to prepare for herself. The division of labor was thus perfect, and, marked out as it was by natural lines which could not be obliterated, both countries would have done well to have acquiesced in it without a struggle. It was long, however, obstructed on both sides by the artificial barriers of a protective system. England did her best to shut out American corn, while America was equally anxious to prevent the intrusion of English manufactures. We have grown wiser in these matters than we once used to be, in America has still to learn her lesson, and to apply it. The communication between her and ourselves, and the vast machinery by which it is conducted, has thus, we see, grown up in spite of real efforts to keep it down. The laws of supply and demand have, indeed, proved too strong to be set at nought quite arbitrarily, and they have done something to assert themselves; but our trade with the Great American Continent is even now much less than it ought to be, and it is maintained at its present level under difficulties which ought not to exist. We gave a very typical instance of this yesterday. The supply of provisions from America can be poured unceasingly into this country without danger of exceeding the ever-growing demand. It is less easy just now to furnish a cargo in the opposite direction. The Americans do not want unmanufactured iron. They practically refuse to admit hardwares or manufactured goods. The vessels which we send out to fetch corn are thus compelled to load themselves with something else on their outward voyage. Salt happens to be the one thing they can carry, and they carry it accordingly, and they do so, as might be expected, at merely nominal rates. The consequence, of course, is that the steamers in the American trade must either be content with something like half profits or must make up for loss in one direction by higher rates in the other. The selling price of provisions from America is thus above what it ought to be, and the supply is of course less. Both countries suffer, and will so for a far, without even the semblance of a gain to either of them. Atlantic traffic is sustained, in fact, just now by hope, and, though there are no signs even so of its falling off, it is clear that we can form no notion of the proportions it might attain on less chameleon-like fare.

As far as there has been any actual decrease of intercourse between the United Kingdom and America it has been due to causes which we need not regret. It there are fewer emigrants now than there used to be, it is because emigration has done its work thoroughly, and has pretty well equalised the wages of labor in the two hemispheres. At one time there were starving millions seeking an exit from our Western ports, and pouring across the Atlantic at every chance that was given them. There was certainly briskness enough in such a movement, but we may prefer our present stagnation and the home progress that has been the cause of it. If we ask which country has been the greatest gainer by the process while it lasted, the question must be answered unhesitatingly in our own favor. Emigration has been for our people a matter of life and death. Hundreds of thousands who would have starved at home have gone out to America and have thriven well, and have left more space behind them in the Old Country for others to occupy. America has had somewhat less reason to congratulate herself upon her share in the transaction. She has obtained from us the hands she needed, but they have not always been of the choicest quality. We have been drained, no doubt, of some adventurous spirits which we have been sorry to lose, but it would be scarcely true, on the whole, to say that we have sent America our best specimens. The rowdy mobs in the Eastern cities have been but too largely recruited from the old country. New-York until quite lately has been governed by Irishmen, nor can we dare to affirm that she has even yet shaken off their influence. American progress has been more rapid than it might have been without our aid, but English wages have been ra

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE PLAINS OF THE GREAT WEST AND THEIR INHABITANTS. Being a Description of the Plains, Game, Indians, &c., of the Great North American Desert. By RICHARD IRVING DODGE, Lieutenant-Colonel United States Army. Illustrated. New-York: G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

There are two distinct standpoints from which to regard this stout volume written by an officer of the Regular Army. On the one hand it is merely a hand-book for sportsmen who can afford the expensive luxury of a hunt on the Plains; on the other, it is an authentic document, by an unquestionable authority, in regard to one of the most serious public questions now at issue. The sporting part treats indirectly the shocking slaughter of buffalo and other game, which goes on without remission in the West, and from which little or no profit accrues to any one. But the Indian portion is a report of an expert on the actual condition of that warfare between settler and savage, and between savage and soldier, which has never entirely ceased since the beginnings of government in the United States. Lest this part of the work should be passed over without due notice, an introduction has been furnished by Mr. William Blackmore, whose eulogy Col. Dodge indites in the following dedication; 'To William Blackmore, of Lond on, England, keen sportsman, genial companion, firm friend, with whom I have passed many happy hours on 'the Plains,' and to whose favorable appreciation of my camp-fire stories the inception of the work is principally due." A pretace informs us that Col. Dodge does not pretend to infallibility, but that he has written nothing in malice, and all in search of the truth.

In the introduction Mr. Blackmore puts a little more compactly what Col. Dodge reports concerning buffaloes and Indians. In regard to the former he says:

"With the great economy endeavored to be introduced into each department of the Government of the United States, it is difficult to understand how the Executive, while they enforce a heavy tax upon each seal which may be killed in Alaska, has neglected to avail themselves of such a fruitful source of revenue as that which might be derived from buffalo pelts. A tax of $5 on each skin, which could have been easily imposed and collected, under heavy penalties and forfeiture of all buffalo skins not having the Government duty stamped thereon, would realize not less than $1,000,000 per annum, even supposing the number of buffalo annually killed for their skins were only 200,000, in lieu of upward of 1,000,000. A tax of this amount would have realized upward of $15,000,000 on the buffalo ruthlessly slaughtered for their hides."

In regard to the Indians, after giving their numbers and the names of bands, the distribution of the Plains Indians, and recent military events affecting them, Mr. Blackmore states the principal causes of wars with the Indians to be: First, non-fulfillment of treaties by the United States Government; second, frauds by the Indian Agents, and third, encroachments by the whites.

If this be so, and Col. Dodge's statements bear it out in every particular, the settler is not to blame so much as the agent and the Government, while the latter is, of all others, the greatest stirrer up of war. In this connection one may put a foot-note by Col. Dodge in the body of the book. It has been long a mooted question how the Indians obtain their firearms and powder. For a century, under alternating Administrations, they have been drawing rations, buying rifles, and killing settlers:

"The following has been told me as true. If so, it will afford some light on the question, Who sells the arms? The names of all the parties can be furnished:

A few years ago an Army officer of high rank was in command of a force confronting a large body of Indians who were believed to be getting ready for an outbreak. The officer learned from his spies that a wagon train loaded with arms and ammunition was on its way to the quasi-hostile Indians. He immediately sent out and captured the train. He reported his action to the proper authorities at Washington. The Indian agent also made a report, and the result was that the officer received a most decided snub. He was ordered to release the train and mind his own business."

It may be readily allowed that Col. Dodge, as an Army officer, would not be likely to see the difficulties in the way of arresting a train in time of peace, but the point seems to be that the fault of each succeeding Administration has consisted in leaving the Indians in such a position that events of the kind could take place at all. Col. Dodge sees this, although he does not apply it to the instance above given. It is too much to expect that a soldier should have civilian excuses ready for the selling of powder and rifles to men who are about to fight him. The first rule that he lays down for dealing with the Indians shows that he can strike at the root of the evil. First, he says: "No more treaties should be made with Indians. Those now binding should be abrogated as soon as possible. The system should be gradually changed, and the Indians as rapidly as possible brought directly and individually under the laws." He then goes on to sketch out the rules necessary to preserve a reservation from becoming a farce such as it now appears.

The Indian's daily life and habits in war, the chase, and in his village, sketched by Col. Dodge, are extremely curious. One is ready to say that his book is indispensable to a correct understanding of the Indian and the Indian problem. The horrible barbarities to slaves and captives, which are usually told in general terms, find in these pages the most careful and exact description. They fully account for the ferocity excited in the mind of a Western settler when the name Indian is mentioned, for Indians, when at war, are as savage and unfeeling as wolves, and besides that, are endowed with an extraordinary ingenuity in devising what will torture the mind as well as the body. As to morality, he is of the opinion that its semblance does not exist among them.

Occupied with what is passing around him, and engaged in this book in telling what he knows of the Indian of to-day, Col. Dodge does not go into the question whether the Indians have not fallen in many ways since their contact with the white man. If they have it must be the white man's fault. But be that as it may, one cannot rise from a reading of this book without perceiving that it is the fault of the citizens of the United States, as represented in Congress, that red men and whites continue to murder, massacre, and outrage each other. Let us hope that it will induce a new Indian policy founded on common sense.

A WIDOW OF WINDSOR. A Novel. By ANNIE GASKELL. Boston: LORING, Publisher.

Here is one of the novels one buys on the railway for half a dollar and reads for the pleasure of making insulting remarks about it. In the first chapter we know the course of events, the kind of people we are to meet, the commonplace comedy and tragedy with which we are to be dosed. So artless is the literary style of Annie Gaskell that we know as well as if we were in the room with him that the hero is going to be an underbred person, who thinks his assured social position sufficient warrant for indulging in rudeness and impertinence of a kind apparently greatly relished by readers. Perhaps, if the young girls who devour these pages actually met the hero they would resent his assumption as much as any one; the young girls in the novel who meet him, however, seem to consider his bad manners as a sort of proof that he is somebody. Not that he is a Rochester or St. Elme. He does not swear and say Ha, ha! That would be melodramatic, but correct enough, after its kind. Capt. Hammersley is rude in small ways that shew him to be an indifferent gentleman. Another man is brought in, under the ignoble name of Charlie Dobell, to do the vulgar facetious, but not even beside his stupidity and want of breeding does Capt. Richard Hammersley succeed in shining by contrast. There is the inevitable Lady Bayne, who makes herself as thoroughly disagreeable and is evidently so unmitigated a snob, that the wonder is that anybody can be found in England to acknowledge to a title. Another thing that strikes one with surprise in this connection is that English people should set such store by their aristocracy when their writers unite in exhibiting them in the light of deplorable fools or monsters of iniquity.

We are furnished with a picnic in this thoroughly goody novel, after the somewhat tiresome landscape of Windsor and the Thames has done duty. Burnham Beeches is the spot where gather together as humdrum a party of junketers as pionics ever show, and that is saying a great deal. Next we get some charades and tableaux of an aristocratic make-up, which are described at length, with interlardings of Shakespeare and many superlatives to denote that they were successful. Captain Richard, naughty man, really kisses Laura, who is acting the statue in a tableau from "Winter's Tale," and the latter, who has blushed and turned pale so strenuously during the first part of the book that there is nothing else left for her to do, now varies her manner by running to her room (after the approved feminine notions of correct strategy and moral deportment) and double-locking the door. After this masterly retreat she executes a flank movement, and goes to bed with a headache. We will give here a clipping from page 174 to show the charming simplicity of this idyllic novel:

"'You eat nothing, Dick,' said Rose, reproachfully; and indeed Philip Bayne" (her affianced) "was not romantic in the matter of appetite; so, perhaps, the curves struck her forcibly. Richard was thinking of Laura.

"The hours of meals are so simultaneous in England that it has often occurred to me to wonder what the effect would be if we could hear the clashings of all the knives and forks between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock! The dinner-hour of the working man at 12, the lunch or dinner-hour of the middle classes at 1, the patrician meal at 2, following the lounging breakfast and preluding the luxurious dinner!" &c.

Toward the end the plot does not develop badly in respect to a codicil to a will, and the action of two step-brothers in respect to the same. But it will bear any amount of abuse otherwise, and we recommend it to the irritated traveler.

THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD. A Romance. By ROBERT BUCHANAN. New-York: D. APPLETON & Co. 1877.

Mr. Buchanan has evidently mistaken his vocation in literature. He was not meant for a poet, but a prose novelist. The Shadow of the Sword allows one to compare what he can do in these two fields, for it is ushered in with a proem in verse which sets forth the wickedness of the Antichrist Napoleon and the sufferings of one of his victims, the hero of the novel. Thus he sings concerning Christ:

"He had not risen; though all the world
Was waiting. Though with thin lips curled
Pale Antichrist upon his prison
Gazed yet denying. He had not risen.
Though every hope was slain save him,
Though all the eyes of Heaven were dim,
Despite the promise and the pain
He slept—and had not risen again.
Meantime, from France's funeral pyre,
Rose, god-like, girt around with fire,
Imperial Cain!"

This overture contains the plot of the story in its large lines, but only serves to prove that verse is not Mr. Buchanan's best field. The novel which follows is a beautifully-written tragedy, with scene laid chiefly in a little fishing village of Brittany. The book opens with Marcelle Derval calling over the cliff to her lover and cousin, who is engaged in gathering birds' eggs. One feels at once the harm that the author has done himself by writing poetry; it has inflated his prose style a little beyond the limits of good taste; but soon the real beauty of scenery and power of character-drawing overcomes the fault. One recurs involuntarily to Victor Hugo in some such novel as Les Travailleurs de la Mer, not that the scenes or people are the same, but that the romantic tone prevails here just as it does in them. It is soon evident that our author shares with Hugo the power to speak of love with realism, as well as to describe admirably the scenes in which his lovers move. In the third chapter Rohan Gwenfern has to carry his cousin out of the "Cathedral" through the incoming tide. They have never spoken to each other of love.

"The wall was soon rounded, and Rohan was wading with his burden to the shore, so that he was soon only breast-deep again. His heart was palpitating madly, his eyes and cheeks were burning, for the thrill of his delicious load filled him with strange ecstasy, and he lingered in the water, unwilling to resign the treasure he held within his arms.

'Rohan! quick! do not linger!'

It was then that he turned his face up to hers for the first time; and lo! he saw a sight which brought the bright blood to his own cheek, and made him tremble like a tree beneath his load. Porphyro, gazing on his mistress,

'Half hidden like a mermaid in sea-weed.'

And watching her naked beauty gleam like marble in the moonlight, felt no fairer revelation.

Rohan, too, 'felt faint.'

And why? It was only this—in the excitement and struggle of the passage Marcelle's white cowl had fallen back, and her black hair, loosened from its fastenings, had fallen down in one dark shower, raining alike around cheeks and neck; and cheeks and neck, when Rohan raised his eyes, were burning crimson with a delicious shame. Have we not said that to the saint of a Breton maid is virgin, and is as hallowed as an Eastern woman's face, and is only to be seen by the eyes of him she loves?"

The scene which follows shows that Buchanan is not only a skillful composer of phrases, a word-painter, as people say, but a fearless and strong student of human nature. He manages to endow Marcelle with loveliness of nature and physique, yet she is never common-place. The combat between her love for Rohan and her horror for a man who can deify the Emperor is excellently managed. The Shadow of the Sword is a deeply interesting novel, in spite of the slight blemishes of style already referred to, and cannot fail to improve Mr. Buchanan's reputation as a literary artist. The character of Rohan has great sublimity of the kind which is seldom attempted, except in poetry. This might lead one to the conclusion that Mr. Buchanan, having the ideas and ideals of a poet, lacks some one factor among those which go to make up a literary mind of just that variety. For his prose, although a little too poetic, is better, it seems, than his poetry.

MADCAP VIOLET. A Novel. By WILLIAM BLACK. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS. 1877.

Unlike his former novels, Mr. Black's Madcap Violet begins with the heroine at once, and by a bold sketch forces her upon the attention and into the good graces of the reader. Violet is a school-girl whose pranks put both school-mistress and assistant teacher to their wits' ends—a sort of lady-like and femininely softened Steerforth in the school scenes of David Copperfield. Chapter one is headed "You Devil!"

"There was a great silence in the school-room. A young girl of 16 or 17, tall and strikingly handsome in figure, with abundant masses of raven-black hair, dark eyes under darker eye-lashes, and proud and well-cut lips, walked up to the school-mistress' table. There was scarcely anything of malice or mischief visible in the bold carelessness of her face."

This is Violet North, who has irritated her German teacher into calling her a devil, and now proposes to exact an apology by telling Miss Main all about it. After this follows an episode of school-girl depravity in the shape of a runaway for a day's larking with a youth named George Miller, whose acquaintance she makes without an introduction. The school-girl is well drawn. When Mr. Black feels it necessary to remember the heroine, one feels the numbing influence of the conventional novelist. Thus, a scene where Violet convulses the school-room, in the absence of Miss Main, gives charmingly the laughter-loving nature of such audiences, and the clannish reverence which school-girls often show to the handsome and audacious young women who assume to lead them in violations of decorous rules. But here is the same bread-and-butter miss who ran away for a day's drive with a comparative stranger, who then, having got that youth into a scrape, is suddenly seized with such twinges of conscience that she must "speak" on him and herself to every one whom she has in the remotest degree deceived. Here she is at a fancy dress ball:

"What wonderful vision was this—not the Violet North they knew, but Juliet herself, descended in all her beauty from the moonlit balcony, her face a little pale perhaps, but that may have been the reflected light of her robe of white satin, her magnificent black hair looking blacker because of this gleaming dress, her dark eyes full of fire, and light, and gladness, the proud sweet mouth partly opened in the excitement of the moment, and just showing a glimmer of milk-white teeth."

It is true that Violet in the meanwhile had gone to the United States with her father on a trip; but the United States is a strange place to get all these heroic attributes suddenly developed. The novel itself is, however, by no means free from an American influence. Whether it be intentional or not, Mr. Black seems to be drawing an American girl in many of the actions of Violet North, or if not a real American, then such a one as a European might suppose her to be. In character she is a rather commonplace young woman, who does wild things and runs to violent extremes. She is alternately slangy and melo-dramatic, but she is always doing, always on the go, and would interest in any case, from her perpetual motion alone. James Drummond, the philosophic writer and recluse, who loves her, and is really loved by her in return, is another character whose thoroughly commonplace nature is cleverly covered over with various pleasing attributes and interesting habits. He dies suddenly, after Violet has worried him into lung fever and consumption, and his death allows Mr. Black to put the finishing touch of incongruity to that vigorous young lady's character. For Violet shrieks, very naturally, but then proceeds to become a monomaniac who is always expecting a letter from her beloved—the dead James Drummond. This conclusion to a fresh and rather pleasant-reading novel would be harrowing, were it not so thinly done that there is little or no illusion. We are so sure that the Violet of the first part does not exist as a hopeless monomaniac that we lay the volume aside with a smile.

Very wisely, it seems to us, Mr. Black carries his actors off to the Highlands of Scotland where the people say "coot" for "good," and pronounce "is" like "iss," and there they all see delightful views, shoot ducks, and enjoy the maddening delights of yachting. There, too, Miss Violet runs away again, and by leaving her hat and bag near some slippery rocks induces her friends to consider her drowned. The whole novel is of a thin complexion, and requires no trouble in the reading. One feels also that Mr. Black had little trouble in writing it; in fact, there is a feeling that from the author of A Princess of Thule one may not unreasonably expect something more solid.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Mr. John Lothrop Motley is said to be engaged upon his third novel.

Hepworth Dixon's novel, Diana, Lady Lyle, will be published by Hurst & Blackett shortly.

—George Eliot has earned, during the 18 years she has been an author, the sum total of $165,000.

—There will be a sketch of James Russell Lowell in the Wide Awake for March, with several capital illustrations.

—The complete works of St. Thomas Aquinas, in 33 volumes, edited by M. Frette, is to be published by Vives, Paris.

J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, announce as a second volume of the Star Series, a book by Mary Healy, called Storm-Driven.

—A Life of St. Romauld, founder of the Camaldolese Orders, has been written by the Abbé J. M. Frichaud, and published at Marseilles by Lebon.

—The printer's devil has leaked this time, and it is definitely stated that Mr. B. Ball has a hand in The Great Match, the next volume in the "No-Name Series."

—A compendium of the Moral Theology of St. Alphonso, for the use of the American Roman Catholic clergy, has been issued by the Messrs. Benziger, Boston.

—J. B. Lippincott & Co. have issued a school edition and a pocket edition of Contanseau's French and English Dictionary, and a pocket edition of Longman's German and English Dictionary.

—Some Other Babies, Very Much Like Helen's, Only More So—the new name for Mies at Play, has gone off with its new name to the number of 5,000 in the last fortnight. This author's babies are older than Helen's, but much the same.

—One of the great subjects of interest in England is still the Eastern question, and such well-known writers as Rev. Llewelyn Davies, Arthur Arnold, and Rev. W. Denton are some of the persons who are preparing tracts upon it, which will include many topics of special interest.

—The new books which Lee & Shepard have in hand are another volume of "The Trail Hunter's Series," by Samuel Woodworth Cozzens, a second volume of "The Winwood Cliff Series," and Abroad Again, a companion to Over the Ocean, by Curtis Guild, editor of the Boston Commercial Bulletin.

—Worcester's Dictionary has found a congenial atmosphere in Philadelphia, a city renowned for solid books. The Lippincotts have bought the stereotype plates of the entire series of Worcester's Dictionaries, seven in number, and will hereafter publish them under the copyright acquired with their sale.

—The latest guess as to the authorship of Is That All? in the "No Name Series" is Thomas W. Higginson and his wife, and the wise ones say that it is in the right direction. The authorship of Kismet is traced to Miss Fletcher, who is now abroad, and a bright little woman in the office of a Boston daily hunted after the secret till she found it.

—The reading public, as any bookseller in the large cities will testify, are eagerly inquiring for translations of Balzac's novels. Some were published in this City several years ago by Derby & Jackson, if we are not mistaken, but are now out of print. The publisher who brings out a good edition within the next three months will meet a real want and make money.

—E. P. Dutton & Co. are fortunate in being the publishers of Dr. Mozley's Sermons, which are specially notable in that department of literature, and now they are as prompt as they are fortunate in issuing his Ruling Ideas in Early Ages, a volume of lectures to graduates of the University of Oxford on the relation of these ideas to Old Testament faith, at the same time with the English publishers.

— Harriet Martineau's Autobiography will be issued simultaneously in England and America on the 1st of March, and will prove to be one of the most remarkable revelations of a strongly individual life and of intellectual studies and literary intimacies which has been published. It will make two handsome 8vo volumes, together amounting to about 1,200 pages. J. R. Osgood & Co. are the American publishers.

—The Cradle of the Christ: A Study of Primitive Christianity, is nearly ready at the Putnams'. This is not a volume of Mr. O. B. Frothingham's sermons, but a separate work of critical analysis, to which some years of special preparation have been given. They will also publish in a week or two the second volume of Van Laun's History of French Literature. The first volume, issued last Fall, has been very generally commended as an indispensable book to all students of French literature. The second volume embraces the period from the Renaissance to the close of the reign of Louis XIV.

—A certain English statesman exclaimed, on hearing of the death of a leading author, "Oh, how glad I am! Now I can bind him up." It is not exactly this feeling, but it is a source of great comfort to the public, when an eminent literary man dies, that his friends gather up the memories of his life and give the proper details of it in a compact book. "Barry Cornwall" was a man who mingled so freely with the celebrities of what is now beginning to be the past generation that his memoir, which Roberts Brothers (not J. R. Osgood & Co.) will shortly publish, is likely to be a work of great interest. The real name was Bryan W. Procter, and the biography is produced under the joint editorship of Mrs. Procter and Coventry Patmore.

LAW REPORTS.

COURT CALENDARS—THIS DAY.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Held by Barrett, J.

Nos.
12—Blydenburgh vs. The Mayor, &c.
35—Eagle vs. Peck.
53—Mut. Life Ins. Co. vs. Monaghan.
63—Earle vs. Strahan.
76—Whitlock vs. Rowe.
94—Priest vs. Priest.
100—Mills vs. Rodewald.
104—St. John vs. Maxim Gas Machine Co.
110—De Camp vs. Dempsey.
114—Miller vs. Bd of Police Commissioners.
119—Matter of the First Presb. Church.
126—Bates vs. Rice.
128—Campbell vs. Green.
129—Clews vs. Florida R. R. Co.
137—Mayer vs. The Mayor, &c.
138—Hamill vs. The Mayor, &c.
139—Dowley vs. The Mayor, &c.
140—Ford vs. The Mayor, &c.
141—Starin vs. Freeman.
142—Owen vs. Clerde.
144—Wormser vs. Hoffman.
161—Greer vs. Allen.

Nos.
162—Lyon vs. O'Connell.
165—Hudson vs. Schiller.
166—Matter of Conway.
181—Jarvis vs. Furman.
182—Ward vs. Ward.
190—Arctic Fire Ins. Co. vs. Selley
193—Rogers vs. Stillman.
205—Rogers vs. The Mayor, &c.
204—Jones vs. The Mayor, &c.
205—Greene vs. The Mayor, &c.
230—The People, &c., vs. The 23d St. and other R. R. companies.
250—Minat vs. Allegretti.
252—La Rue vs. Hatfield.
254—Osburn vs. Taggert.
255—Matter of the E. Ridge & J. R. R. Co.
257—Clegg vs. Elastic Truss Co.
258—Ubl, &c., vs. Neuman.
259—Matter of opening Eleventh avenue.
263—Livingston vs. Ebbet.
264—Same vs. Same.
Call from No. 269 to end of calendar.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Adjourned sine die.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Held by Van Vorst, J.

Nos. Demurrers.
14—Brainerd vs. Bertram et al.
15—Same vs. Same.
22—Grant vs. Anderson. Law and Facts.
47—Reilly vs. Dillon et al.
100—Fowler vs. Mehrbach et al.
50—De Zavala vs. Hart et al.
122—Bucking vs. Hausolt et al.
128—Grinsier et al. vs. Powers, &c.
133—Busteed vs. Busteed.
135—Jacobs vs. Miller.
141—Steinbrecher vs. Beyer et al.
142—Guidet vs. Brown et al.
143—Lynes vs. Brander, Jr., et al.
148—Hatch vs. Atlantic & Pacific Tel. Co.
281—Nicoll vs. Seymser.
114—Kinney vs. Cohen.

Nos.
115—Kinney vs. Beach et al.
283—Duncan vs. Duncan et al.
67—Herriot vs. Herriot.
26—Bard vs. U. S. Life Ins. Co. of N. Y.
76—Burtis vs. Thompson et al.
38—The Law. Gran. Mow. Co. vs. The O. S. Coaling Co.
53—Taylor, &c. vs. Roche.
74—Andrews et al. vs. Ryan.
87—Alden vs. Dlossy.
29—Green vs. Milbank et al.
334—Whiting vs. Gearty et al.
110—Auffarth vs. Schmedeke et al.
149—Buel vs. Paine et al.
151—Ten Eyck vs. Cory.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART I.

Held by Donohue, J.

Nos.
2011—Rodman vs. King.
1825½—Duryea vs. The Mayor, &c.
2719—Haden vs. Coleman.
2725—Strauss vs. Wolf.
2591—Gill et al. vs. Connor, &c.
2637—Picard vs. Bernheimer.
1993—Fiils et al. vs. Onderdonk.
1—Latourette vs. Clark.
2589—Boyd vs. Jackson.
1513—Brown vs. Decker, &c.
2091—Carroll vs. Cassidy.
2364—Excelsior Petroleum Co. vs. Fowler, &c.
902½—Heulin vs. Powers.
4297—Gray et al. vs. Jobes.
2751—Beaumont vs. Newman.
2083—Laflin & Rand Powder Co. vs. Gaillaudet.
2849—Franc vs. Del., Lack. and West. R. R. Co.
2871—Archer vs. O'Brien.
2883—Burbank vs. Burr.
2891—Connor, &c., vs. The Mayor.
2901—Hann vs. Sheffield et al.
2906—Bacon vs. Muloch et al.
2943—Bonney vs. Pasch et al.
2957—Cohen et al. vs. Waters.
2985—Harlem Bank vs. Adams.
2995—Springer et al. vs. Herman.
3001—Dowell vs. McGuire.

Nos.
3007—Hughes vs. Rubino, (No. 1)
3009—Same vs. Same, (No. 2.)
2549—Reilly vs. The Mayor, &c.
2517—Vallely vs. Amend et al.
2741—Miller burger versus Ger. Evangel. Luth. St. John's. Church of New-York.
1657—Goldsmith vs. Daly et al.
2831—Emerson, &c., vs. O'Reilly.
1583—Collins vs. The Mayor, &c.
1341—Fitzpatrick vs. The Mayor, &c.
1436—Purcell vs. The Mayor, &c.
1437—Hays vs. The Mayor, &c.
3045—Vogel vs. The Mayor, &c.
3053—London, N. Y., and Hartford Pub. Co. vs. Lawrence.
3055—Unkart vs. Benner et al.
3057—Holmes vs. Mott.
3059—Hecker et al vs. Howland.
3061—Andrew vs. Curtis.
3063—Hart vs. Bennett.
3065—Sanches vs. Stone.
3069—Obright vs. Whitman.
3071—The Mayor, &c., vs. The B'way & 7th Av. R. R. Co.
3073—Diamant vs. Met. Ins. Co. of N. Y.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART II.

Held by Lawrence, J.

Nos.
280—Lynch, Sheriff, vs. Butler.
1784—Brennan vs. The Mayor, &c.
1834—Collins vs. Pierson.
1822—Morris vs. Elliott.
1826—Ballard vs. Schackelford, et al.
1586—Roth vs. Mora.
1478—Skidmore vs. Fuller.
3582—Ring et al. vs. The Mayor, &c.
1036—Schall et al. vs. Collier.
2110—De Lavalette vs. Wendt, ex'x, &c.
1680½—Doolittle vs. Butler.
1550—Fallenbee vs. Silverstone, impld.
1874—Barrett vs. Hall et al.

Nos.
1880—Woodruff vs. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. of London.
2552—Lewis vs. Chicago Mutual Gas Light & Coke Co.
2786—Vial vs. The Mayor, &c., of N. Y.
3444—Lithauer vs. Conner, Sheriff.
3216—Muldoff vs. The Mayor, &c.
1862—Hilton vs. Al. Fire Ins. Co.
1820—Schmid et al, vs. Illig.
1724½—Fire Ins. Agency Co. vs. Voorhees.
4388—Simons vs. Cohen.
1902—Seyfert vs. Parsons.
1906—Ross, Jr., vs. Campbell.
1908—Miller et al. vs. Sackmaner.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART III.

Held by Van Brunt, J.

Nos.
3022—Mack vs. The D. D., E. B. & B. R. R. Co.
278—Reek vs. The Phœnix Fire Ins. Co.
718—Wann vs. Ashley.
151½—Hugart vs. the Mayor, &c.
2277—Delemater et al. vs. Amer. & E. C. Egg Co.
1148—Loughran, Jr. vs. Matthews.
2287—Blake et al. vs. Obright et al.
636—Davison et al. vs. Willetts et al.
1741½—Faulkee vs. Hammond.
413—McComb vs. The Excelsior Mfg. Co.
419—McComb vs. Jones.
1097—Norton vs. Buckey et al., Adm'rs.
554—Penn vs. Ward.

Nos.
557—Tyng vs. Serrell.
923½—Fessenden vs. N. J. Car Spring & R. Co.
301—Lee vs. Sayles et al.
1735—Henderson vs. White et al.
2000—Hart vs. Taylor et al.
1611—Dickinson vs. Dudley.
2159—Abrahams vs. Hyman.
31—Meyer et al. vs. Amidon.
2720—Hook, Ex'r, &c., vs. The Mayor, &c.
2561—Mensel vs. Mallory et al.
638—Wellwes, Ex'r, vs. The Mayor, &c.
2288—The People, &c., State of N. Y., ex rel. Bowne vs. O'Brien et al.

SUPERIOR COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Adjourned sine die.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Held by Sedgwick, J.

52—Reed vs. Livingston.
54—Boody vs. Tilden et al.
56—Mitzscherling vs. Van Winkle et al.
128—Offinger et al. vs. Dewolf.
26—Bradford vs. Bissel et al.

Nos.
28—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. vs. Davis et al.
40—Fowler vs. Butterby.
64—Milbank vs. Nat. Bank of Norwalk.
68—Weil vs. Fischer et al.
78—
58—Diets vs. Farish.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART I.

Held by Sedgwick, J.

Nos.
1053—Caffe vs. Lord, Jr., et al., Ad'r.
405—Kneeland vs. Spitka.
477—Cooper et al. vs. Smith.
312—Thomas vs. Knight.
179—Moore vs. Tower.
488—Wray vs. Pedderke.
365—Diamont vs. White.
318—Solling vs. Legendre et al.
924—Hannigan, Adm'x vs. Timmins et al.
687—Furman vs. Titus.
294—McElevey, Adm'x, vs. Lodewick.
65—Copeland vs. Ellsworth.
975—Woodruff vs. Beckman.
456—Gilman vs. Stevens.
475—Morgan, Adm'x, vs. McVickar.

Nos.
446—Boyd vs. Phœnix Ins. Co. of Hartford.
631—Johnson, Trustee, vs. Oppenheim.
486—Schmidt vs. Leasman.
758—Melvin vs. Carey.
400½—Schuster vs. McKfliop & Sprague Co.
506—Payne et al. vs. Conner, Sheriff.
319—Whomington, impleaded, vs. 42d and Grand st. Ferry R. R. Co.
1095—Cornwall, Adm'r, vs. Mills et al.
300½—Sparman, by Guardian, vs. Kein.
822—Moller, Jr., et al. vs. Sandford.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

Held by Freedman, J.

Nos.
347—Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank of Buffalo vs. Brown et al.
634—Rness vs. Hoops.
636—Franklin vs. Catlin, Jr., et al.
637—Same vs. Same.
572—Harrison vs. Reford et al.
573—Harrison vs. Ross.
743—Uhl, Receiver, versus Cremer.
744—Same vs. Same.
314—Germania Bank of N. Y. vs. Frost.
513—Gerken vs. Conner, Sheriff.
515—The Union Banking Co. vs. Siegel.
518—Gilman vs. Fitch et al.

Nos.
523—Corn et al. vs. Davis.
524—Leighton et al. vs. Perkins et al.
580—Volkening versus De Graaf et al.
582—Weisner vs. Muller.
589—Dye et al. vs. Adriance.
633—Matthews vs. Driscoll.
632—Von Glahn vs. Lowenstein.
645—Banfield vs. Gould.
354—Etzel vs. Byrne et al.
857—Raynor, Executor, vs. Martin.
858—Davis, Receiver, vs. Wood et al.
859—Hanford vs. Barlow.
860—Dunscomb vs. Bunges

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART III.

Held by Curtis, C. J.

Nos.
790—Bauer vs. Daumann.
798—Newman, &c., vs. Beach.
538—Ford vs. Stagg.
663—Riley vs. New Jersey M. L. Ins. Co.
686—Odell vs. Keller.
713—Farrell vs. Van Tuyl et al.
715—Plumbett vs. Appleford.
823—Byerson et al. vs. Tone.
825—Wyman et vs. Curtin.
826—Highlands Chem. & M. Co. vs. Parsons.
827—Lippman vs. Dittlehoefer.
828—Banks et al vs. Congdon.
830—Becker, Adm'r, vs. Kunz et al.
831—Manchester et al. vs. Kendall.
832—Johnston vs. The Mayor, &c.
833—Woodward vs. Lafferty.
834—Wood vs. Cutler.

Nos.
835—Keefe vs. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co.
836—McGeorge vs. Gunst.
837—Briggs vs. O'Donnell.
838—Jagger Iron Works vs. Bruff.
840—Fiefenhauser versus Meister.
841—Jagger Iron Works vs. Walker.
842—Jagger Iron Works vs. McAnerny.
843—Green, Adm'x, vs. Cit. S. B. Co. of Troy.
844—De Witt vs. Cit. S. B. Co. of Troy.
846—Salter vs. Ebervale Coal Co.
847—Wheeler vs. Perdon.
848—Gibson et al. versus Yaquierdo.
849—Deering vs. Boynton.
851—McKennes vs. Crosby et al.
852—Same vs. Same.
853—Ruggles, Recr, vs. Wilmont.
854—Parker vs. Tuska.
855—Andrews vs. Hatch.

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM.

Adjourned until the first Monday of March.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM—PART I.

Held by Van Hoesen, J.

Nos.
883—Walker vs. New Central Coal Co. of Maryland.
1004—Lamberti vs. Monte-gazza.
877—Wilson vs. Pine.
583—Howard, Jr., vs. McCullough.
723—O'Donnell vs. N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co.
959—Bierwecker vs. Camp
1281—Demarest vs. The Mayor.
600—McCormack vs. N. Y. L. & H. R. R. Co.
693—Wellington vs. Newton.
1156—Seligman vs. South & North Alabama R. R. Co.
1206—Germ. Hor. Society vs. Webster.
1342—Broadway StableCo. vs. Connor.
1223—McIntyre vs. Carroll.
865—Flynn vs. Dayton.

Nos.
352—Giles vs. Warshar.
945—Dean vs. Brown.
934—Mott vs. Consumers' Ice Co.
1142—O'Brien vs. Royal Ins. Co., &c.
1070—U. S. Reflector Co. vs. Buston.
899—Andrews vs. Farley et al.
688—Schenck vs. Barker.
592—Ketcham vs. Stevens
76—Danoby vs. Drake.
590—Drayton vs. Crosby.
214—Baird vs. The Mayor.
1374—Same vs. Same.
1103—Palmer vs. Clark, Marshal.
1209—Mulcahy vs. N. Y. Floating Dry Dock Co.
722—Stevenson vs. Hopkins.
1130—Trask et al. vs. Solomon.
1168—Briggs vs. Berdan.
766—Duke vs. Ridder.
998—Hogg vs. Beach.
1149—Lunny vs. Garrity.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

Held by Larremore, J.

Nos.
1072—Keys vs. Haskin.
996—Seligsburg vs. Goldstein.
1131—Conroy vs. Boyce.
1095—Friessen vs. Nichols.
143—Hunt vs. Roberts.
1311—Metropolitan Gas-L't Co. vs. The Mayor.
1159—Fitch vs. Bergen.
1197—Sylvester vs. Bernstein.
659—Solomon vs. Fischer.
560—Shelly vs. Yard, Jr.
1091—Werwick vs. Ohlweiler.
175—Sweiver vs. Germania Fire Ins. Co.
516—Malone vs. Derby.
915—Bogert vs. Clark.
1454—Lewis vs. The Mayor
789—Risner vs. Morgan.
785—Donnelly vs. Mayor.
1126—McGowan vs. McGowan.

Nos.
1090—Raubort vs. Leroh.
786—Schroeder vs. Lubenstein.
1093—Raidy vs. Shaw.
1136—Levy vs. Potsdam.
497—Brown vs. Patterson.
897—Wealden vs. Ishaaf.
1066—Cohn, Assignee, vs. Conner.
1087—Thompson vs. Gray.
1137—Paulding vs. Compressing Company.
1193—Lace vs. Yfor.
907—Schemerhoun versus Devlin.
739—Smith vs. Maclay et al.
604—N. Y. Life Ins. Co. vs. Wood et al.
954—Dettelbach vs. Berens.
814—Devlin vs. Gallagher.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM—PART III.

Held by J. F. Daly, J.

Nos.
478—Earle vs. N. Y. Life Ins. Co.
647—Emanuel vs. The Mayor, &c.
430—Johnson vs. The Mayor, &c.
920—Oakley vs. Baron.
921—Same vs. Same.
942—Hewison vs. Samuels.
1194—Weidling vs. The Mayor, &c.
570—Israel et al. versus Nicholson.
1179—Nessel versus The Mayor, &c.
493—Brower vs. Dayton.
1249—Nusebaum vs. Lyons et al.
1079—Spencer vs. O'Brien.
730—Roe vs. Brophy.
887—Walsh vs. N. Y. Flt'g Dry Dock Co.

Nos.
843—Second Nat. Bk. of Paterson vs. Porter et al.
1166—Martin vs. Gallagher
1190—Seaman et al. vs. Noonan.
710—Shipman vs. Pielsticker.
1256—Isaacs vs. Baer.
1257—Wilson vs. Wood.
1140—Wynen vs. Schapper, &c.
471—The People, &c., of State of New-York vs. Lamson.
1114—Gonondo vs. Flood.
541—Schlag vs. Schlag.
603—Schenck vs. Munzinger.
929—Cook vs. Clark.
1115—Vaude Wiele vs. Callahan.
1023—Levene vs. Brush.
937—Hoppenheim vs. Horzheimer.

COMMON PLEAS—EQUITY TERM.

Held by Robinson, J.

Nos.
15—Goldshear vs. Levy et al.
8—Pearistrom vs. Bennett
17—Heim vs. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
27—Malcolm vs. Holmes et al.

Nos.
21—Weiner, Jr., vs. Morange.
Demurrers.
3—Gomperts vs. Wood.
1—Orphius &ay. Society of New-York vs. Waterbury.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART I.

Held by Alker, J.

Nos.
5014—Hirsch et al. vs. Howard et al
5766—Mackintosh et al. vs. Rogers et al.
4082—Holler et al. vs. Sherrard, Jr.
3244—

The New York Times.

NEW-YORK, MONDAY, FEB. 12, 1877.

AMUSEMENTS THIS EVENING.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—WILD OATS—Mr. Lester Wallack, Mr. John Gilbert, Mr. Harry Beckett, Miss Rose Wood.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—LEMONS: OR, WEDLOCK FOR SEVEN—Mr. C. P. Coghlan, Miss F. Davenport

BOOTH'S THEATRE.—FIFTH AVENUE—Mr. George Rignold, Miss Maud Granger.

PARK THEATRE.—OUR BOARDING HOUSE—Mr. Stuart Robson, Mr. W. H. Crane, Mrs. A. F. Baker.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—THE DANICHEFFS—Mr. C. R. Thorne, Mr. W. R. Floyd, Miss Katherine Rogers.

HELLER'S WONDER THEATRE.—PRESTIDIGITATION, MUSIC, AND HUMOR—Mr. Robert Heller, Miss Heller.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS (Spectacular)—Kiralfy Brothers.

EAGLE THEATRE.—LA PETITE MARIEE (Opera Bouffe) Mlle. Marie Aimee.

BELMORE'S GARDEN.—EQUESTRIAN GAMES AND FIELD SPORTS.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—ROUND THE CLOCK.

NEW-YORK AQUARIUM.—RARE AND CURIOUS FISH AND MAMMALIA, STATUARY, &C.—Day and evening.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—MONSIEUR ALPHONSE.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.—MINSTRELSY, FARCES and NEGRO COMICALITIES.

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART.—EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT STATUARY, PAINTINGS, &C. Day only.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN.—EXHIBITION OF WATER COLORS. Day and evening.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES is the best family paper published; it contains the latest news and correspondence. It is free from all objectionable advertisements and reports, and may be safely admitted to every domestic circle. The disgraceful announcements of quacks and medical pretenders, which pollute so many newspapers of the day, are not admitted into the columns of THE TIMES on any terms.

Terms cash in advance.

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS.

Postage will be prepaid by the Publishers on all Editions of THE TIMES sent to Subscribers in the United States.

The DAILY TIMES, per annum, including the Sunday Edition	$12 00
The DAILY TIMES, per annum, exclusive of the Sunday Edition	10 00
The Sunday Edition, per annum	2 00
The SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES, per annum	3 00
The WEEKLY TIMES, per annum	1 20

These prices are invariable. We have no travelling agents. Remit in drafts on New-York or Post Office Money Orders, if possible, and where neither of these can be procured send the money in a registered letter.

Address THE NEW-YORK TIMES,
New-York City

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

The fifth section of the Electoral law declares, referring to the joint meeting of the two houses for the purpose of witnessing the counting of the Electoral votes: "Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of Electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either house, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such house not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon. And while any question is being considered by said Commission, either house may proceed with its legislative or other business." It is perfectly plain that the sole purpose of this provision was to enable the ordinary business of Congress to go on during the sessions of the Commission. Such business could not be done in joint meeting, nor by the houses separately, while considering the business of the joint meeting. Therefore each house was allowed to lay aside the work of the joint meeting, by declaring a recess from day to day. To postpone this work in order to delay it, is a plain defiance of the intent of the law.

It is quite possible that DAVID DUDLEY FIELD has conceived the notion that the Commission can be broken up by the withdrawal of the Democratic members, but it is a mistake. The law directs how the Commission shall be "constituted," and it has been so constituted. No provision is made for a vacancy, except one caused by death or physical inability to perform duty, and vacancies caused in any way not only need not, but could not, be filled. The law provides that the decisions of the Commission, reached by a majority vote, shall stand, if not reversed. If all the Democrats on the Commission chose to withdraw, decisions could still be reached by the same vote as in the Florida case, and would still have to stand.

The Democrats are worried about the partisan Judges on the Commission and the impression which their conduct will make abroad. The easiest, simplest, and straightest way out of this difficulty, which weighs so heavily on the Democratic mind, is for Judge CLIFFORD or Judge FIELD to vote with the Republicans. The Democrats claim that the injury to the country from the presumption that the Supreme Court is partisan is too great to be made up by the benefit from any possible solution of the Presidential question. If this is true, they will be obliged to us for pointing out so perfect a means of avoiding that injury.

The present condition of the streets of this City illustrates at once the vicissitudes of our climate and the imbecility of the so-called Street-cleaning Bureau. It is a bureau which does not clean. After tedious weeks spent in wrangling, the proper authorities did remove the bulk of the snow, ice, and slush from the main thoroughfares. To-day those streets are loaded with disagreeable dust, while the lateral streets are still encumbered with ice. Yesterday sweepers were at work raising a cloud of dust on Broadway, while a layer of ice, a foot thick, and holding in its bed a mass of indescribable nastiness, covered the pavements of the side streets. The Street-cleaning Bureau should be credited with an effort to sweep Broadway for Monday's inspection; but why the paleocrystic deposit in other portions of the City should remain undisturbed so long is a puzzle to most people.

At first glance, the penalty accompanying conviction for "hazing" in the Naval or Military Academy may seem too severe. A cadet proved guilty of this practice is not only expelled, but is declared forever ineligible for reappointment. Expulsion has little terrors for students in these Governmental institutions than it has for those in colleges and universities. It is generally the rule that a lad whose friends had enough influence to secure the original appointment can manage to put him back again if he has been expelled for misconduct. The rules of most colleges are more rigid than the moral sense of the average Congressman. The Congressman relents when a Faculty will not. In the case of the young man whose application for reinstatement in the Naval Academy went to Congress, Senator SARGENT, in his report, has put the law and the facts very clearly. The practice of "hazing" is not only brutalizing and vulgar, but it is subversive of all discipline. The law was enacted in the interest of good government. It was passed to relieve Congressmen of the importunities of friends of an expelled cadet. To suspend the operation of the statute now would be to open the door to all future offenders desirous of returning after expulsion. It would effectually put an end to a reformation which has already been a real benefit to the educational institutions of the whole country.

Moving-day will soon be here, and the question of rents has already become so important to our readers, that we surrender considerable space to-day to a fair review of the whole subject. Information covering a wide area may be said to point to still greater reduction in rents. Real estate has been depressed, and this depression has affected current rates of rent. On the other hand, it is certain that many tenants have begun to repent the extravagance which betrayed them into hiring expensive offices and stores in which costly finish and showy decorations, rather than their own needs, increased their annual expenses. The same is measurably true of house tenants. What now passes for extravagance in living was thought frugal enough before the hard times came in. There is a general complaint that rents have not yet been reduced to suit the altered condition of things. But how far this not unusual complaint will affect the market cannot now be determined. The number of "To Let" bills on Broadway is an indication that many shop-keepers have sought cheaper localities.

A cable dispatch, a few days since, said that the Pope would shortly denounce the "Clerical Abuses" law lately enacted by the Italian Parliament. An encyclical letter will probably be the medium through which the pontiff will express his displeasure. A letter from the Rome correspondent of THE TIMES informs us that the project of law, while yet before Parliament, met with much opposition, and that its passage was as much due to the fact that it was a ministerial measure, and could not be allowed to fail, as to anything else. The anomalous condition of the Papacy in Rome is sure to precipitate other and similar difficulties. This legislation is designed to adjust some of the unsettled relations between the clergy and the political government of Italy. But the offensive point in the law is that it prescribes penalties for "disturbing public order and the peace of families," said penalties being solely for the benefit of the clergy.

A QUESTION FOR THE DEMOCRATIC LEADERS.

There is no doubt that a plan has been formed by the more desperate Democratic leaders to put off action on the count of the Electoral votes until after the 4th of March. The recess from Saturday until to-day was a step toward carrying out that plan. It was not a decisive step, and it can be retraced, if deemed best; but it can also be followed up, or if retraced in the present instance, can be renewed.

There is nothing in the law to justify any such course, but the majority of the House, under the rulings of Mr. Speaker RANDALL, could not by any ordinary means be prevented from carrying it out. Whether they will do so or not depends on the decision of the leaders of the Democratic Party. With such a question before them, they need no advice from a Republican source, and are not likely to heed any. For our own part, we are as little inclined to offer any. But there are a few facts which we shall take the liberty of stating, and which, sooner or later, will have to be taken into account. Perhaps it would be better soon than late.

The great body of the people of the country accepted the Electoral Commission as a means of escape from a confused dispute, which they saw no other easy way of settling. The voters of the Republican Party — the men who give it strength throughout the country, and who have nothing to make or seek from the party —believed that in accepting the Commission they gave up rights which were clearly theirs, and ran the risk of losing the control of the Government, which by the letter of the Constitution, and by the ancient modes of action, must otherwise be confirmed to them. The compromise was only endured because it was taken to be offered in good faith; because, if followed in good faith, it would lead to an easy and early and lasting settlement; and because there was no apparent means by which it could be perverted or the country cheated of its benefits. On this view the people generally accepted it. On this view the Republican Party would quietly abide by its result, though that result, fairly reached, were a death-blow to their fondest hopes and a denial of their most cherished rights.

But this is as far as they ever ought to go, and as far as they will go. Having given up a certain means of getting what belonged to them for an uncertain one, they will not now see the agreement they have consented to evaded, overturned, or bent from its plain meaning to serve the ends of Mr. TILDEN or his followers. If the Republican Party had fully determined to use the means the law gave them to declare their candidate to be, as he is, the chosen President of the United States, they would have backed that decision in any way that was necessary to give it full effect. They waived their rights under the Constitution for new ones under the Electoral law, because the Democrats conceded the latter, and bound themselves to respect them. The new rights will not be surrendered, and they will be even more firmly enforced than the old ones would have been. The country is in no mood for trifling. If the Democratic leaders wish a peaceable and orderly decision of the Presidential question they can have it by promptly carrying out the Electoral law in letter and in spirit. If they wish to stake their hopes on the arbitrament to which JEFFERSON DAVIS appealed, they can do that.

THE PRESIDENT'S PLAN.

The country is to be congratulated that the President has thrown the weight of his recommendation in favor of funding the surplus greenbacks as a preparation for resumption, thus following up the policy recommended by both Gen. BRISTOW and Secretary MORRILL, and supported by the ablest advocates of specie payments. Readers of THE TIMES do not need to be reminded how persistently this policy has been advocated in these columns. We take a special pleasure in noting the growing strength of the views to which we have given so great prominence. We have not been very sanguine heretofore of any favorable action by Congress upon the proposal, partly for the reason that one branch of that body is pretty thoroughly permeated with the inflation heresy, and partly because of the lack of agreement, even among the advocates of resumption, as to the need of any further legislation in aid of that result. But now that the plan, after being recommended with great force and ability in two successive finance reports, is again brought forward by the chief magistrate of the nation, it is difficult to see how Congress can refrain from at least expressing an opinion concerning it. The House, being Democratic, and not very much in favor of reaching specie payments by any road, cannot be expected to take the initiative. If it should desire to rise to the level of the occasion, it could not do a better thing than to pass the simple and business-like bill of Mr. CHITTENDEN, which has been pending for two sessions. It is to the Senate, therefore, that we shall look for the first step in the right direction. The Finance Committee of that body will be inexcusably derelict in its duty if it fail to perfect and report a bill at once, giving force and effect to the President's recommendations. The question of specie payments has been so long before the country, and has been so thoroughly discussed in all its bearings, that the Senate ought to be able to reach a prompt decision on such a measure, without opening the flood-gates of that sea of talk by which the Senate chamber is so often deluged. If the bill should promptly pass the Senate and be sent to the House, it would bring the two parties face to face on the question of resumption. It would present to the consideration of the Democratic House "a judicious system of preparation" for specie payments, which the Democratic platform of last Summer demanded, and would give that party an opportunity to prove the sincerity, or otherwise, of the professions of its candidate and platform.

It is a significant fact that the Democracy, while condemning the present Resumption act as a hindrance to resumption, because it does not provide adequate means to that end, has utterly failed and neglected to even make an attempt to repair the assumed defects of that measure, although it has been in complete control of one branch of Congress for two years. The presentation by the Senate to the House of such a measure as we are discussing would give the Democratic branch of Congress an opportunity to supply this omission. If it should adopt the proposal, it would do a patriotic act, which we should be the first to applaud; if it should reject it, it would prove the justice of the charge that the Democratic professions of friendship for resumption are hollow and insincere.

There is one feature of the financial situation to which the President has not given as much prominence as it deserves. We refer to the remarkable reduction of the circulation which has taken place since the Resumption act was passed. The act removed the limitations on the bank circulation, but required that for every hundred dollars in bank notes issued eighty dollars in legal tenders should be retired and destroyed. The act of June 20, 1874, had already provided that the banks might surrender any portion of their circulation on depositing a like amount of legal tenders in the Treasury. The effect of the joint operation of the two acts was fortunately wholly unforeseen by their projectors. If it had been, the acts would never have been passed. Senator SCHURZ was almost the only man in either house of Congress to foresee that the necessary result would be to reduce the volume of the circulation, and he prudently held his peace. This result arose from the fact that every issue of bank notes under the Resumption act retired 80 per cent. of their amount in greenbacks, while the retirement of bank notes under the act of June 20, 1874, was absolute and unaccompanied by any reissue of legal-tender notes. The inevitable consequence was to contract both the bank notes and the legal tenders. The total amount of circulation actually or virtually retired under the operation of the two acts from June 20, 1874, to the 1st instant, according to the last statement of the Controller of the Currency, reaches the aggregate of $62,301,763, or nearly 9 per cent. of the total circulation outstanding on the date first mentioned. To those who believe that the chief cause of the depreciation of the currency is its redundancy, these facts are almost sufficient to account for the great fall which has taken place in the gold premium. Congress builded better than it knew. The two acts, both of which were the results of compromise, and neither of which would have been passed had its consequences been foreseen, have accomplished results as comprehensive as the sturdiest contractionist could desire. If it were certain that their operation would continue on the same scale for the next two years, there would scarcely be any need of further legislation in aid of resumption; the gradual voluntary contraction of the circulation alone would suffice to bring the currency to par by Jan. 1, 1879. But there is no reason to hope that such will be the case. The surrender of bank circulation has almost wholly ceased, and there is no likelihood that it will be renewed, unless there should be an unforeseen rise in the price of Government bonds. Such being the case, there is need of further legislation to get rid of the surplus currency before the day fixed for resumption, and the simplest, easiest, and most feasible way to accomplish this result is to authorize the funding of the greenbacks into long-time Government bonds, bearing a low rate of interest. No more "judicious system of preparation" than this can be devised.

A SCRAP OF HISTORY.

An account has lately been given of certain so-called archæological discoveries in Japan, as though two or three centuries were antiquity in a country that was old when COLUMBUS discovered America. The Empire of Japan had a language and a literature when our ancestors were well-dressed so long as they wore the skins of beasts; it was a civilized state when CARACTACUS was led captive through the streets of Rome. Nevertheless, the records and objects alluded to as being just brought to light in Japan have a peculiar interest, though they may not be so antique as the jewelry of CLYTEMNESTRA and the shield of AGAMEMNON. The true antiquity of Japan far ante-dates the beginning of the Christian era. The Japanese philosopher looks upon the faith of the Western Christian as a modern invention, akin to those religious theories which prevailed for a brief space in the twilight of his own ancestral faith, flourished, passed away, and were lost in oblivion. It is well enough for the time, he says; it will not endure; it is as the fashion of an hour. Nevertheless, intrenched as we are in the inviolability of the Christian faith, we regard any story of its earlier struggles with great interest. The discoveries alluded to are simply the recovery of the records of some of the first attempts to Christianize the pagan Empire of Japan.

From some dusty depository in that part of Japan which is yet unopened to foreigners has been dragged a curious collection of so-called antiques. These date back as far as the seventeenth century—a modern era in Japanese history, but old to us. One of the objects is a painting of European origin, representing what is supposed to be one of the first ambassadors from Japan to a European power. Besides this is a painting on copper of the Virgin and Child, two bronze crucifixes and several rosaries, medallions, fragments of bronze plates with religious devices, and a variety of equestrian trappings, all of European workmanship. Considering that Japan has been for centuries a sealed Empire to the rest of the world, the finding of these relics, to say the least, stimulates curiosity. The key to this puzzle of the antiquaries was a parchment scroll found with the rest, which turns out to be a document issued by PAUL V., Pope of Rome, and dated in the year 2366 from the building of the City, and 1615 from the redemption of the world. It is duly blazoned with the Roman arms and sundry heraldic devices which illustrate the historic period to which they refer, as well as to the personages therein celebrated.

This curious document is a certificate given by PAUL V., who was Pope of Rome from 1605 to 1621, to an embassy from Japan. European history makes mention of several of these earlier embassies. The first was that of VALIGNANI, a zealous Jesuit, who, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, visited Japan, and made many converts to Christianity. Chief among these was one CIVAN, King of Bungo; and, in order to open communications with the Pope, VALIGNANI and two selected young nobles were sent to Rome bearing messages of friendship and many rich gifts. The Pope, GREGORY XIII. then reigning, received them with great ceremony, and with much fervor. The King of Bungo subsequently fell into disgrace, and the embassy resulted in nothing that was permanent. This King (or Daimio, as we should now say,) was dubbed FRANCIS I. by the Jesuits, and his pagan wife, whom he repudiated, was named JEZEBEL by the pious missionaries, who seem to have regarded her with thorough disgust. The dynasty of "FRANCIS" lapsed, but was revived again in the next century, when Fra SOTELO, of the Franciscan order, penetrated Japan and persuaded the reigning sovereign of Bungo to embrace the Christian faith. He was unwilling to do this openly, for certain reasons, but one DATE MASUMUNE, Daimio of Oshiu, agreed to send an embassy to "the illustrious City of Seville," in Spain, and to the Pope of Rome. It is the missive of this Prince and the answer of PAUL V. which have just been brought to light. The Japanese Daimio, in his letters, touches on "the excellent truths of the divine faith and religion" which he has received, and desires to know if "the navigation of Japanese waters by trading ships, even to the Spanish Sea, is to be expected." He manifestly favored the divine truths and the aforesaid commerce, and prayed for further instruction in the same.

It is a matter of record that SOTELO and the Japanese nobles who accompanied him were received with pomp in Seville and in Rome, and were sent away with due ceremony and information. Before they returned, however, commercial intrigues detained them at Manila, and, meantime, the Japanese Christians were rigorously persecuted. When SOTELO reached Japan he was delivered up to the imperial authorities and put to death. Latterly, the Vatican Council has considered the expediency of canonizing him as one of the early Christian martyrs. It is curious that, after the lapse of so many years, these memorials of his life and mission should have been brought to light. The discovery verifies an ancient tradition. Moreover, it illuminates and illustrates one of the most singular missions which has ever been undertaken by any people. SOTELO and his companions journeyed to Spain by the way of Acapulco, then a prominent port of New-Spain, on the Pacific coast. The annual Spanish galleon from Manila took them thence around Cape Horn to a Spanish port, and their journey to Rome occupied about two years. The voyage across the Pacific was made in a Japanese vessel. Such a craft would now be regarded as a curiosity of naval architecture in any American port. But such an embassy would be a nine days' wonder, though the "divine truths" and the commerce which they sought are now free in Japan.

ELECTIVE STUDIES.

The complaint now being made in England concerning university education by many intelligent and impartial critics is, that the present methods of teaching do not make thorough scholars. Until within a generation two very good systems were pursued at the English universities, each of which furnished young men with good educations. The undergraduate became either a good classical scholar or a good mathematician. The training was no doubt faulty and left much to be desired; but this much, at least, could be said in its favor, that it was an education. Within the last few years, however, special sciences have started into existence in many directions. The field of mental activity has vastly widened; and there has been an effort to represent this extension in university life. The student is tempted to know a little of history, a little of art, a little of biology, philology, &c. The scholar's horizon is widened, but at the same time he himself is weakened. He gains some slight knowledge of a number of subjects, but misses, after all, the best result of an education, that energy, that sense of power which comes of the mastery of a single subject.

The same need of concentration is felt in this country; the movement toward increasing the number of elective studies in our colleges has had much to do with this idea. The devotion to a particular line of study has, however, never been a feature of our American colleges; hence, with us, the narrowing of the scholar's field of study is not, as with the English, a return toward an old plan, but is rather an experiment with a new one. The great argument for the increase of elective studies is that men cannot pursue with zeal and success more than one or two subjects. There is no such educator as energy; there is nothing like earnest and enthusiastic work to develop and strengthen the thews of the mind. But the plan of education in our colleges has not hitherto recognized this principle. We think we may say with truth that the tendency of American instruction has not been to encourage the earnest pursuit even of the studies of the course. Our general American notion of the duty of an undergraduate has been that he should pursue faithfully and perfectly the course laid down by his instructors; but that the manner with which he should pursue his labor in college ought to differ in some way from his manner of pursuing his work after leaving college. The ideal of study inculcated by the silent feeling of our American places of education has been that of a quiet and orderly acceptance of tasks. Enthusiasm has had in some way a bad name. It was distracting when employed upon pursuits other than those laid down by the instructors; it was not especially encouraged even in the regular studies of the course. Certainly, we see that in the general affairs of life great things are only accomplished by persons deeply interested in their tasks. When men lose that elan which accompanies their best enterprises, their day of effective work is nearly past. Hypochondriacs and valetudinarians generally regard enthusiasm as a kind of insanity; but it is the sign, we might almost say the condition, of all successful labor. It, indeed, is life, and the reverse is death. But it appears to have been held by American Professors that undergraduates and the Professors themselves were exceptions to this rule. We believe that very many university men in this country, in looking back upon their college career, will say that the instructors who really sought to make their studies interesting to them were few. To be sure, a student was at liberty to go to a Professor and seek assistance and information, yet there was a sentiment among the students which forbade much intercourse of their own seeking with their teachers, as having an appearance of currying favor with them. This sentiment was largely due to the apathetic bearing of the instructors; it was one, moreover, which the Professors made very little effort to break through. The notion that Professors should strive to interest students in the special studies they conducted really appeared to be regarded by the college society as Utopian and impracticable. That it was not impracticable was proved by the fact that there were teachers who succeeded in interesting scholars in their work. In omitting the appeal to the interest and enthusiasm of scholars, the instructors lost a strong ally to that industry which they inculcated—an ally needed by men at all times, but never more than at that period of life when the conscience and self-respect are not sufficiently mature to compel them to do their work.

It would have been a great help in enlisting the zeal of scholars and in giving them a real education, had they been able to pursue at least one study to a considerable point of advancement. This is what the reform in the direction of elective studies seems likely to accomplish. As it used to be, a hundred young men left the university, not one of whom could read at sight a page of Greek, and very few of whom could translate Latin with any ease. They left college, having mastered no one study to the point of feeling that they really possessed or enjoyed it. They were told that they had been brought to a point where they could enter with zeal upon the pursuit of knowledge, but their experience of knowledge was such as to give them the impression that knowledge was an elusive phantom which might, indeed, be pursued, but which would not be likely to be overtaken. But we are sure that a young man who should, during the last three years of his course devote the half of his time to one special line of study would leave college in a different frame of mind. He would feel that he had at least one piece of solid ground for his feet to stand upon. Besides the knowledge gained, he would have the sense, always invigorating, that he had done something. The certainty that he had done one thing would cause him to approach new tasks with confidence. Few qualities are of greater service to young men than intelligent confidence. DISRAELI said in his address before the University of Edinburgh that youth was a period of mistaken confidence and of mistaken diffidence. In matters of knowledge and scholarship a young man is extremely apt to exaggerate the difference between himself and an older and wiser man, to make a difference in kind of what is only a difference in degree. An education which acquaints a young man with his strong points and sets him forward upon the path he is best fitted to pursue with hope and zeal, does him a great service.

No doubt, the reform is one which the universities should approach with caution. There are, of course, many circumstances which, at the best, will modify the good which it may accomplish. There will be youths so idle or so stupid that no kind of education can do them much service. There will be young fellows of a strong, practical bent, who can never be more than half awake over a book. But it is, nevertheless, plain that universities should endeavor to suit themselves more to varieties and conditions of mind, that clever and zealous young men should have their natural paths open to them, and that they should be permitted to pursue these at their natural pace, that the hard outlines of college life should be made more to resemble the conditions of mundane society in general. Of course, the opposition to the new reforms is honest and often intelligent; but may it not be also due to a dislike of the trouble and vexation which the discussion and establishment of them will necessitate, and to an unwillingness to own that during all these years our colleges have been pursuing a mistaken course?

WANDERING HOUSES.

The wild animals of Long Island have been pretty thoroughly extirpated, except, of course, at Huntington. There is an occasional deer to be shot on Montauk Point, and the fierce and sanguinary woodchuck still lingers in the forests of the North Shore, but the bold German huntsman, who tramps over Queen's County in company with his Spitz dog and Belgian gun, rarely slays anything more dangerous than the wild robin and depraved cat-bird. Nevertheless, a strange tendency to revert to the savage state has of late been shown by the houses of Long Island. The meekest meeting-houses and the tamest cottages have developed a lawless thirst for adventure, which impels them to wander away from their accustomed localities, and to roam the face of the country as if they were habitual photographic wagons or confirmed gypsy tents.

This singular tendency was first developed among the houses of Flushing. A quiet Baptist meeting-house, which had never shown the slightest sign of restlessness, suddenly left its usual haunt, and proceeded at a leisurely rate up the main street of the village. It was at first supposed that it intended to make its way to the water, but instead of so doing, it wandered wantonly through the village, until it was finally caught by a few determined men, and confined in a strongly-fenced yard. Its example was soon followed by a full-grown Methodist meeting-house, which escaped from its yard one afternoon, and created a panic among the horses by its obstinate determination to monopolize the highway. For fully a fornight this frivolous building infested the streets. Every morning it would be found in a new locality, and bearing the most painful evidences of having been out all night. On one or two occasions it was found in the gutter in a muddy and frightfully disreputable condition, and it was at one time feared that it would make a violent attack upon the Episcopal church, so prolonged was its stay in front of that inoffensive edifice. After a time the more hardy villagers rallied, and by a vigorous attack overpowered it, and dragged it into a side street, where it was hastily secured. It has since been quite docile, but should the sexton accidentally leave the front gate open, it is very probable that it would seize the opportunity to make its escape and renew its wandering and dissolute habits.

Seven miles from Flushing is Hunter's Point. Whether the houses of the latter place heard in some mysterious way of the conduct of the Flushing meeting-houses is not known. It is certain, however, that the general outbreak of the Hunter's Point houses occurred soon after the disturbances at Flushing. Whole rows of houses were simultaneously affected. At one period the streets were full of wandering houses. Here a disreputable grocery staggered shamelessly through the mud, and there a timid cottage crept through an unfrequented street with the evident intention of concealing itself in the distant meadows. The Hunter's Point citizen who left his house in the morning never knew where to look for it at night. This state of things naturally became intolerable, and the stray houses were finally captured by the aid of well-trained steam-engines and sagacious hydraulic jacks, and the town has now resumed to some extent its normal appearance.

So far, the Long Island houses had shown no actual hostility to mankind, and had apparently no other object in view than that of escaping from confinement. The other day, however, an escaped house made a determined attack upon a Long Island railway train. The incident occurred near the village of Hillside, and although it caused much anxiety and hindrance, it did not result in bloodshed. The house, which, though undersized, was powerfully built, had certainly been at large for some time, for it had a soiled and travel-worn look, and was perhaps suffering from the pangs of hunger. It placed itself directly across the railroad, and for several hours disputed the passage of any train. It could not be coaxed from its position nor driven away by threats. The whistle of the locomotive did not terrify it in the slightest degree, and the tempting display of prize packages of candy could not lure it from the track. In this emergency the threatened passengers felt that there was no hope except in POPPENHUSEN. To him they appealed, and he generously heard their cry. A fearless and furious locomotive was brought from Hunter's Point, and loosed upon the still defiant house. With a hoarse yell the locomotive sprang upon its prey, and in a few moments so severely lacerated it that it could no longer offer any serious resistance.

There is every reason to believe that this strange form of madness—which has already seized upon so many houses—will continue to spread. It is evidently infectious in its character, though sporadic cases also occur, the origin of which cannot be traced. Darwinians see in it a new confirmation of the development theory, since the return to savage and nomadic life on the part of a staid meeting-house, and other civilized buildings, is a fresh proof that our present race of houses has been developed from the wild tent of pre-historic ages. The evil must be met with prompt repressive and preventive measures, or Long Island will become a howling wilderness, swarming with ferocious houses, which, either singly or in packs, will hunt down the railway trains and waylay incautious men, women, and cattle.

Common prudence suggests that every Long Island house-owner should look well to his gate fastenings, and keep his houses chained up night and day. Where fences and chains cannot readily be procured, large yokes, modeled after the familiar pig-yoke, should be fastened upon the houses, so that in case they do escape, they cannot leap fences or force their way through narrow openings. All houses found on the streets should be instantly destroyed by proper officers appointed for the purpose. In addition to these measures, the Long Islanders should treat their houses with kindness, and thus strengthen their attachment to their owners. A few coats of paint, or a new tin roof, judiciously bestowed upon a house may secure its lasting affection. The truth is we do not treat our houses with the care that they deserve, and doubtless this has had its share in reviving in the houses of Long Island the long dormant love of the wild, free life of the Asian steppes.

VIEWS OF THE JUDGES OF APPEALS.

A NOTE FROM CHIEF JUSTICE CHURCH—THE OPINIONS ATTRIBUTED TO HIM BY THE TIMES CORRESPONDENT CRITICIZED AS TO FORM, BUT REASSERTED IN SUBSTANCE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your Albany correspondent, in a letter published to-day, has drawn inferences from familiar and casual conversations with friends, which may create, unintentionally on his part, I presume, an erroneous impression. I entertain and have expressed doubts about the constitutionality of the Electoral law; but, in common with the public generally, have felt disposed to acquiesce in it as a compromise measure passed in the interest of fairness and harmony. I have also expressed the opinion that the authentication of the election of Presidential Electors, according to the laws of each State, is final and conclusive, and that there exists no power to go behind it, but I have never undertaken to determine what questions may arise for decision by the counting power consistently with this general proposition, and I have not formed, much less expressed, an opinion as to which of the candidates is entitled to receive the vote of either of the disputed States. For my associates, it is but just that I should say that the subject has never been discussed and scarcely alluded to at any of our daily meetings, and I do not know the views of either of them upon any of the contested points involved. I will thank you to insert this note. Truly yours,

S. E. CHURCH.

ALBANY, Saturday, Feb. 10, 1877.

OBITUARY.

SIR WILLIAM FERGUSSON, BART., F. R. S.

The announcement is made by telegraph from London of the death, on Saturday last, of this eminent surgeon and medical author. Sir William Fergusson was born at Prestonpans, East Lothian, Scotland, March 20, 1808. He received his early education at Lochmaben grammar school, and continued his studies in the High School and University of Edinburgh. He began his professional studies at the age of 18, under the noted anatomists Drs. Knox and Turner, the latter of whom occupied the chair of Surgery in the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh. His progress was so rapid that in less than a year he became the confidential assistant of his learned and skillful preceptors in the preparation of their "subjects." He continued his intimate professional relations with Dr. Knox for nine years, and thus enjoyed opportunities for pursuing his favorite study—anatomy—rarely presented to the medical students of his day. He became a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1828, and a Fellow of that corporation the year following, and in 1831 he began to lecture on the principles and practice of surgery. In 1836 he was appointed Assistant Surgeon to the Royal Infirmary, and was chosen a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1839. A year later he removed to London, where he was made Professor of Surgery in King's College and Surgeon to King's College Hospital. He was chosen a member of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, and for some time was Professor of Surgery and Human Anatomy in that institution. For five years he was Examiner in Surgery at the University of London, and was chosen member of most of the medical and scientific societies of Great Britain, being a Fellow of the Royal Society of Great Britain, Vice President of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society, a Fellow of the Obstetrical Society, and President of the Pathological Society. At the time of his death he was President of the Royal College of Surgeons. He was also consulting surgeon to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, to the British Home for Incurables, to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat, to the Scottish Hospital, to the Caledonian Asylum, and honorary Surgeon to the St. George's Hospital. He was also Surgeon Extraordinary to the Queen. Among his works relating to his special branch of the medical profession he has left A System of Practical Surgery, which is held in high estimation among surgeons and Progress of Anatomy and Surgery in the Nineteenth Century, which was published in 1867; besides special papers on Cleft Palate, Lithotomy, Lithocrity, Excision of Joints, Aneurism, and other subjects. He was also the inventor of numerous surgical instruments, in the construction of which he displayed great ingenuity, besides making many improvements in instruments already in use. He was created a baronet in 1865, "in consideration of distinguished merit and eminence as a surgeon."

OBITUARY NOTES.

Mr. Charles Edward Benton, one of the editors and proprietors of the Fredonia Advertiser and Dunkirk Union, gave up business on account of failing health, and started six weeks ago with his wife and child for Florida. Stopping at Middletown, Orange County, for rest, he was advised by his physician to go no further, and died there yesterday morning of consumption. He was 36 years of age. His body was sent to Fredonia last night, and the funeral will take place there on Wednesday.

Rev. John Wiley, aged 71 years, who was for 30 years a minister of the Protestant Episcopal churches in Cecil and Charles Counties, Md., died in Baltimore yesterday of heart disease. He is said to have been the oldest ordained minister of the Episcopal Church.

HAWAII AND AUSTRALIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 11.—The steamer City of Sydney, from Sydney via Honolulu, arrived here to-day. Among the passengers are Mile. Di Murska and Elisha H. Allen, late Chancellor of Hawaii, who, it is understood, has accepted the appointment of Hawaiian Minister Residentat Washington.

News from Australia is unimportant. Small-pox is prevailing at Sydney. A number of vessels arrived from Chili and China with the disease on board, and the steamer Australia also brought it on her last trip from San Francisco.

The Victoria gold statistics for the year show a falling off of about 100,000 ounces. Business in New-Zealand is reviving. Sir Donald McLane, Minister of Defense, died on Jan. 5.

MR. MORRILL'S CONDITION IMPROVED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Dr. Pope reports at 6 P. M. that Secretary Morrill's condition has improved decidedly within the last 26 hours. The preliminary symptoms are much relieved, and the fever almost gone. He sleeps quietly, takes nourishment freely, and the indications of his recovery are promising.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 11.—The boiler of Harrison Jones' saw-mill, nine miles from Noblesville, Ind., exploded on Saturday morning, instantly killing Pleasant Gillam and James Page, and injuring Marion Stewart and Thomas Jackson so seriously that they have since died. Three other men were slightly wounded.

HIGH ART IN BOSTON.

PHILLIPS BROOKS' NEW CHURCH.

Second Notice.

It does not take a long consideration of the interior of Trinity Church, Boston, to conclude that the architect has been very successful in more ways than one. The great tower, of which mention has already been made, composes the main part of the church, while transepts, chancel, and nave are so shallow, comparatively speaking, that the whole interior is bound together in a way which must make the church remarkable for its acoustic qualities. At the same time, the shape brings into good view the fine spaces that have been left for decorations. In carrying these out, Mr. La Farge has continued the work begun by the architect, by uniting all the limbs firmly to the body of the church. Thus the horse-shoe arches, resting on cups that spring from the four masses of pillars which support the tower, draw a sharp line between the tower space—the well of the church, if that term be allowable—and each of the four above-mentioned portions. To soften this sharp division between (for instance) chancel and tower, the gold on the ceiling of the chancel has been repeated in a broad gold band above the arch and on the inner walls of the tower. The result is that between this band and the gold ceiling of the chancel the edge of the arch has been softened down according to laws of what are called "values" in color. Every painter uses these laws more or less; only the best artists have them at command so as to use them to increase certain illusions of the eye or lessen certain others. Each of the four great arches have been treated in the same manner. The absence of this artful system of decoration is left when the eye reaches the end of the ceiling of either of the transepts. There, where the ceiling makes a right angle with the wall, the absence of decoration on this same dull red wall brings out somewhat jarringly the harsh line of meeting.

Speaking of the walls, the groundwork of all these decorations is, as it has been noticed, a kind of deep red, which in some lights assumes a bricky color. Where the sun-light strikes, however, a luminous tone is at once seen. One of Mr. La Farge's secrets is painted into these red walls. Instead of holding always to one exact shade of red, he has made different spaces ever so slightly different; and thereby breaks intuitively any suspicion of monotony. At night the different shades are much more manifest, for the gas-light is so hard that there is no chance for that mellow effect which sunlight gives, an effect that brings the shades apparently into nearer harmony. Yet by gas-light, the church, and especially the tower, is well worth a study. The tower has a row of gas jets high up under the twelve narrow windows near the top. From the centre a chandelier of gilt metal hangs well down into the middle of the church, and smaller ones light the nave. When all these jets flash out, the effect on the gigantic saints and the angels that seem to lean out from windows in the tower is curious. Colors that were most rich and luminous by daylight, now take on a harder tone or change in color, while on the other hand, some that looked pale by day, now are at their best. Gas is a rude test, but the paintings stand it well.

But after all, it cannot be other than a mistake to have the chandeliers handsome and in excellent taste though it be, hanging down through the most important space of the church. From the gallery, above the vestibule in the nave, it interferes grievously with a view of the chancel and the semi-circle of paintings that will some day decorate the wall of the apse. If there is one point more than another where nothing should divert the straight course of a glance toward mural decorations, toward painted windows, or whatever objects of still higher art this church may hold, it is the central and axial point. It is true that such things as this chandelier exist in great cathedrals; but then one is so overcome by their size, that a chandelier dropping a long line from high up, is not disillusioning. On the contrary, it forms a measure to realize somewhat the immensity of the building. But with Trinity Church the size is not great enough to warrant such a trifling with comparisons and proportions, notwithstanding the great inner height of the tower itself. The golden color of the chandelier also introduces complications with other colors, which only artists would be likely to appreciate.

In a former notice the decorations of chancel, nave, and the east or chancel side of the tower were spoken of. It has been mentioned above how the note of gold on the capitals of the olive-colored piers and on the ceiling over the chancel has been struck again above each arch on the four inner walls of the tower. The south wall is decorated as elaborately as the east wall, described both in a former notice. High up and over the three narrow windows on this side are three small compartments representing respectively Samson and the lion, the Good Shepherd, and the story of Jonah. On the space to the left of the windows is the symbol of St. Matthew—an angelic being, reading in a book. His robe is of a fine blue, which speaks well for Mr. Lathrop's eye for color, for the figure is said to be of his own creation. A companion figure, on the other side of the window, is the eagle used to represent St. John, said to be by Mr. Maynard. The eagle is treated in a somewhat symbolical way, that is, not realistically. Under the window (and this holds good for all four sides of the tower) runs a broad gold band with inscriptions in plain Roman text, which repeats once more the gold bands over the arches before mentioned. Between these two, and high on the arch, are two compartments, with some angel apiece. These angels are distinguished for their wings of skillfully blending colors, violet predominating. The coat of the left-hand angel is of a very beautiful green mixed with gold. On a lower plane and on the two sides of the arch stand two more gigantic figures like those described above the chancel. That on the left is Isaiah; that on the right, Jeremiah. Isaiah is in a red robe, very plainly seen against the red wall, both shades being very different and neither harsh. His position is somewhat exaggerated, although the painter had good reason to make his gesture more violent than the dignified St. Peter and St. Paul above the chancel. The same criticism cannot be withheld from Jeremiah, who looks tilted back, as if the artist had desired to make his figure—since it is a decoration—follow a little the bend of the arch beside him. Jeremiah has a reddish body-garment and a green robe of a very agreeable shade. Both these prophets, and perhaps the angels between, have hands of excessive size. The result is powerful, but a little too strong. As to the colors on the wall, one is at a loss to find a fault. Mr. Maynard has done some of it, Mr. Lathrop a great deal, but of course, as Generalissimo, Mr. LaFarge goes over everything for retouches or alterations. To him is due all the praise, and on his head must fall whatever blame there is.

The wall on the north side of the tower, above the north transept, is divided in exactly the same fashion as the southern wall. St. Mark and St. Luke have their symbols to the right and left of the high triple windows. These windows are surmounted by little paintings of Biblical scenes, which are wonderfully distinct, considering their great height from the ground. Medallion heads of angels occupy the spaces between the bases of the windows, while below the straight inscribed band of gold come the two compartments for angels, just above the arch. Each has a scroll; one is looking up, the other down, as if they were singing. On the left of the arch stands King David, a stalwart young man with ruddy hair, whose legs seem too large for the best effect. He supports his lyre on his shoulder. The raised elbow causes the whole figure to follow the space left by the arch and fill it; still, to leave aside its character as a piece of decoration, David is a little too athletic to be merely shouldering a small lyre. Of course such criticism can be called frivolous, but a figure should not suggest such an idea. Nor is the general attitude of legs and body pleasing. The draping is blue, the body-garment whitish. The figure was painted, unless we are mistaken, by Mr. Millet. On the other side of the arch stands Moses with the tablets of the law. The cloak of this figure is yellow of a low tone, and is carried over the head. The right hand angel over the arch has good sentiment, but looks faint in color. On the whole this group is not as satisfactory in color as that on the other side of the church. All the main figures, of which there are six, stand on little platforms that jut across above the cusps of the arches. This must be considered a movement in the direction of realism, for the figures, since they throw no shadows on the wall before which they seem to stand, may be called in so far forth unrealistic.

There are not eight of these figures, because the fourth wall over against the chancel has not been decorated in that way. The omission is an excellent idea, for there is plenty to occupy the thoughts already, and a further crowding of figures would produce overloading. As it is, the tower space is thoroughly filled from the very top. It is rather the lower spaces of the church, the walls at rear of the transepts, and, notably, the semicircle of the chancel, that are free of decorations. The west tower wall has tables of inscriptions, and the other paintings, but no figures. Lowering the eyes from the tower, one finds that in the north transept, the corresponding space occupied by the organ in the south transept has been invaded by Mr. La Farge with the brilliant figure mentioned in a previous notice, a St. Thomas, setting and turning the leaves of a folio; but it seems a departure from the plan heretofore preserved, and may possibly carry the eye away from the figures about the arch of the chancel, and so confuse by overloading. As a contrast to the clive of the great main piers, the short, thick pillars that uphold two peculiarly charming little lobbies on either side of the nave have been painted chocolate. These lobbies give access to the galleries in the transepts, and although they themselves are so powerfully supported by the pillars just mentioned, yet the galleries they lead to run from side to side of the wide transepts without a prop of any kind. Minor criticisms of this nature may be made at more than one point, especially on the exterior of this church, but as a whole it must be conceded to be a success. For the present, the windows are of white glass with borders of stained panes. The intention is to fill their places with elaborate memorial windows. These, together with the rich and significant decorations by Mr. La Farge and his young assistants, will make Trinity a model church in the United States. Let us hope that the art displayed in its decoration, and not the sum of money expended, will form a kind of standard which other congregations will surpass if they may, but can fall short of if they can help. But let us also hope that no congregation will give so short a time to the painting of what they will be forced to look at for years. The painters having been compelled to take this decoration on contract, have been harassed by money considerations, in addition to the thousand annoyances attending any affair of the kind. But the severest tug has been to do all within a few months. The paintings cannot be considered at all finished, from an artist's standpoint, but they were made ready for Consecration Day, by concentrating excessive labor into a few weeks. The actual putting on the paint takes little time. It is the perfecting of sketches and the alteration of mistakes that devour weeks and months. Isolated paintings that are perfectly satisfactory by themselves, have to be entirely repainted to bring them in harmony with others, and to get them into tune with the ideal, the grand unity that is in the chief artist's mind.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE OPERA BOUFFE.

Three additional representations of "La Petite Mariée," an opera bouffe, by Lecocq, new to American audiences, are to occur at the Eagle Theatre this week. "La Petite Mariée" embodies an opera bouffe story wedded to opera comique music. The libretto, in other words, abounds in the amusing incidents essential to works of the peculiar plays typified by "La Grande Duchesse," while the score being richer in graceful and sentimental than in ultra-vivacious numbers, approaches more closely to the achievements of Auber's successors than to the sprightly measures of Hervé and Offenbach. The new work turns upon the domestic misfortunes of an aged village magistrate who, by threatening to turn the tables upon his enemy, keeps the culprit, who has just taken to himself a wife, in constant terror of the lex talionis. It is constructed after the usual fashion, and the librettists—MM. Vanloo and Leterrier—have handled their theme with the deftness which characterizes most French performances of the sort. M. Lecocq's tunes are fluent and have a certain air of distinction, if we may so put it; but the lack of a well-marked rhythm in many of the pieces is such that the score of "La Petite Mariée," interesting though it must be to the admirers of daintier music than is habitually listened to in opera bouffe, will scarcely enlarge the popular repertoire of easily-remembered melodies. Mlle. Aimée, of course, fills the leading rôle in the work, and her portrayal of Graziella is characterized by a clever commingling of ingenuousness and of worldly knowledge, implied by all kinds of suggestive glances and gestures. No artist before the public can hope to compete with Mlle. Aimée in performances of this description, and if, now and then, dangerous ground is near at hand, it is invariably passed over with a lightness of foot and an airiness and unconsciousness of bearing quite inimitable. The rôle of St. Carlo, the repentant and tremulous sinner, falls to M. Raoult, and M. Reine personates the injured official. "La Petite Mariée" is placed upon the stage with fresh scenery and dresses; it can be witnessed until Thursday, on the evening of which day it is to make way for "La Périchole."

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. Burbank is to read at Chickering Hall this evening.

"Round the Clock" will be acted to-night at the Olympic Theatre.

"Monsieur Alphonse" is to be acted at the Grand Opera-house this evening.

TWO ART EXHIBITS.

A very good collection of pictures, now on view at Leavitt's Broadway Art Gallery, is to be sold this evening and to-morrow evening. The original owner of these works seems to have made his selections judiciously; his patronage was about equally divided between American and foreign artists. Of the former the names of J. W. Casilear, J. F. Kensett, M. F. De Haas, G. H. Story, J. G. Brown, and W. H. Beard give a certain value to the collection. Of the foreign painters, Paul Weber, Fortuny, Pinchat, Guillemin, and Robbe probably furnish the best examples. Paul Weber's picture of "The Monastery, of the Madonna del Sasso, Lake Maggiore," is a celebrated and remarkable example of that master. Theodore Weber is represented by a marine view, "Off Ostend," in which his favorite effects of air and water in motion are cleverly introduced. W. H. Beard's well-known "Bears on a Bender," a humorous but not over-refined work, is in this gallery also. Three or four sketches by C. R. Leslie and C. Stanfield and others of the London Sketching Club, will attract connoisseurs and amateurs. Half a dozen spirited pen-and-ink sketches by William Hart will also interest curious students. The picture by Robbe is a capital example, and is in his very best pastoral vein.

At Leavitt's rooms in Clinton Hall building, Astor place, may be seen a collection of Oriental articles, most of which are of the best. In textile fabrics, there is a showy display of Turkish Persian and Daghistan rugs, embroideries and wraps, and some rich Chinese silks. The Chinese porcelains are all good, and many of them are quite rare and curious. Several specimens of carved teak-wood are unusually fine. In Japanese goods the pieces of cloisonné are uncommonly good, and some specimens of Banco and Hizen ware are fine in color and design. The sale takes place on Thursday and Friday afternoons of this week.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12—1 A. M.—For the Middle and East Atlantic coasts, stationary or falling barometer, warmer south-east to south-west winds, and partly cloudy or clear weather.

IN THIS CITY.

The following record shows the changes in the temperature for the past 24 hours, in comparison with the corresponding date of last year, as indicated by the thermometer at Hudnut's pharmacy:

1876.	1877.		1876.	1877.
3 A. M.	37°	32°	3:30 P. M.	61°	42°
6 A. M.	39°	32°	6 P. M.	47°	40°
9 A. M.	42°	36°	9 P. M.	49°	37°
12 M.	45°	42°	12 P. M.	47°	35°

Average temperature yesterday ..... 37½°
Average temperature for corresponding date last year ..... 44½°

NINETY-ONE DOGS, AND ONE POOR FOX.

The Carnarvon correspondent of the Reading (Penn.) Eagle says that the most exciting fox chase witnessed in Conestoga in many years took place on Tuesday from Ammon's Mountain House, on the turnpike, two miles west from Waynesburg. Ninety-one dogs were housed for the chase. Brisban Skiles, "the boss hunter of Lancaster County," put in 35 dogs of his own; Everett Henderson, of Glen Moore, Chester County, put in 18; Brubaker Bros., from Bearstown, put in 13—making 66 dogs entered by three firms. The remaining 21 were owned by different parties. At 12 o'clock Reynard was let run. When scarcely out of sight the Bedlamites were sent pellmell after him, taking a zig-zag course down the Welsh Mountains. He made a splendid chase until 3:30 o'clock. Directly after turning the eastern terminus of the mountain, nine miles from the starting point, he was overtaken by about 12 dogs and killed. Messrs. Skiles and Henderson were the first among the 50 horsemen to arrive at the place of slaughter, after which a number of men and dogs put in their appearance, but too late. Reynard presented a sad appearance when his remains were conveyed to Lancaster County, at the request of a Mr. Miller, who wanted the lights, which he says are a sure cure for consumption.

GOSSIP FROM LONDON.

FLUNKEYISM IN OLD ENGLAND.

WHY AN INTELLIGENT LAD WAS REFUSED A SITUATION—HOW IT HAPPENED THAT A BALL-TICKET WAS REFUSED THE DAUGHTERS OF A LORD MAYOR—THE SNUB DIRECT GIVEN A HIGH SHERIFF—JOURNALISTIC NOTES—CHARGE AGAINST A SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Jan. 27, 1877.

If you think flunkeyism in England died out under the sarcasm of "the Snob Papers," you have complimented us grievously, as Dogberry Skipwith would say. It is on record that last week a boy, educated at the City of London school, was nominated to a clerkship in the City of London Docks. He passed a satisfactory examination, but was informed that his services would not be required. Why? Because his father was a coachman! Yet Lord Beaconsfield was an attorney's clerk, and his wife a milliner. Mr. Adams, Queen's counsel, who was Governor of Hong Kong, was a printer's reader, and his wife a seamstress. It may well be asked who are these snobs of the City of London Docks, who disqualify a young fellow on grounds that are no bar to the learned professions, nor to the civil service. Some years ago I had the honor of a special engagement to attend a grand national ball at the dowager City of Bath, to describe the scene for the leading journal there. I was requested to go by a back staircase into the orchestra, as it was impossible to get a newspaper man an invitation, for the committee had refused tickets to the daughters of the Mayor because their father was a linen-draper. I need hardly say that I described that ball, but not in the local paper, and I afterward learned that no tradesman was allowed to sit in the dress circle of the Bath Theatre. I once resided in a western country. For the time being the High Sheriff of a county is the direct representative of the Queen. It is an honorary office and costs the man who holds it ten or fifteen thousand dollars at least. He meets the Judges of Assize in State, attended by his javelin men and retainers. The Judges are forbidden to receive his hospitality, however, for some old-world reason or another. They are therefore entertained at dinner once at least during the Assize by the Lord Lieutenant. I had the honor of an invitation to dine at one of these banquets by the Earl of B., but he excluded the High Sheriff because he was a manufacturer. Not even the royal seal of majesty protected the plebian Sheriff from the aristocratic snub direct. The late Lord Fitzhardinge was almost feudal in his aristocratic brutality to all who were beneath him. He was a great hunter, and as great a swearer. One day he encountered a new tenant in the hunting-field—a Scotchman, who had come West to farm in the Southern valley. The Scotchman somehow crossed the track of the hard-riding Lord, who turned upon the Northerner with a volley of oaths, "a—— you; who the —— are you, Sir." The Northerner put his horse at the noble Lord and nearly spilled him, with a volley of oaths quite equal to his Lordship's, and "a —— you, an' whae the —— are ye; and de ye think there's naebody in the field can curse and swear but ye!" Lord Fitzhardinge was a man although he was a Lord, and the cannie Scot dined at Berkeley Castle many a day afterward, and never again had he any cause to try a cursing bout with his noble landlord.

The report that Mr. Delaine is about to relinquish the editorship of the Times, is once more in circulation, and is just as untrue now as it was a year ago. It is also untrue that Mr. Hepworth Dixon is going to edit the Gentleman's Magazine. The publishers think that respectable periodical old enough to edit itself. Messrs. Lewis & Allenby are going to bring an action against Truth for saying that they send their young men to applaud the Miss Terry's at any theatre where those ladies are engaged. If anybody said that I applauded the Terry's, I think I should be inclined to bring a libel suit myself. The young lady whom Gilbert has been coaching to play Galatea at the Haymarket, makes a pitiable exhibition of it, and she is the youngest and best looking of the Terry's. Coming Events is the title of a new daily paper, which will be out with the opening of Parliament. It will devote itself to lifting the veil on to-morrow. There was a paper started a few years ago called the Future, but the Future was soon a thing of the past. Mayfair is doing fairly well. Its editor, Mr. Lucy, quarreled with Yates, of the World, because Yates put pressure on him to describe the home life of the O'Gorman and Mr. Cowen, Member of Parliament, with whom he has some acquaintance.

The World, it would seem, has changed its tactics with regard to the Prince of Wales, upon whose home life there is this week a fulsome toadying article worthy of an editor with the three-button glove and the pink and white complexion. Mr. Yates is making $45,000 a year out of the World, (as large an income as that returned by Punch,) which is a success unequaled by any journal in so short a time. Mayfair is written entirely by Daily News men, five of whom contribute five articles a week. Mr. Lucy, the editor, is a young man, little over five feet in height, with hair that stands on end, and gives the idea of a continual state of wild excitement. I mention this as a warning against "judging by appearances," for Lucy is "the coolest hand" on the Daily News, for which paper he has done some very good work. Sir Harry Havelock, who expected to be the star-writer of the last number of the Fortnightly Review, was overshadowed by Mr. Gladstone, and doesn't like it. He is asking everybody if they have seen his article; nobody has, because all their attention was exhausted upon the essay by the ex-Premier, who is now devoting himself almost exclusively to literary work. Mr. Schuyler, Secretary of the United States Legation at Constantinople, was charged by Mr. Labouchere in Truth with sending telegrams to a London journal (? Telegraph) giving information which he had no right to divulge. Mr. J. C. Huetson has written to the Times denying this assertion, "because Mr. Schuyler's position as Secretary of the United States Legation forbids him from writing for the press." Mr. Labouchere takes the following notice of the denial: "I specifically repeat my assertion, and if Mr. Huetson is right in his statement that United States diplomatists are forbidden to send press telegrams, I have only to add that Mr. Schuyler has violated a rule of the United States diplomatic service." The senior wrangler this year is Mr. Donald McAlister, a Scotchman by birth and education; and it is a notable fact that the two next to him, as well as himself, are not public school men.

The Whitehall Review has made a somewhat snubbish attack on Dublin society, to which the Freeman has replied. The drift of the article in the Review is that in Dublin society the professional classes are everything and the commercial nothing; that wealthy trades people are always persistently endeavoring to gain a social footing in Dublin, but are sternly resisted by the "Professionocracy;" that no seamstress works so hard as the wives of Dublin traders to fight their way into the charmed ring of lawyers and doctors. The Freeman says this is nonsense, but to say so is no proof to the contrary, and "gentility," it must be confessed, lingers in the Irish city, but not more than it lingers in the old clerical cities of England. As America grows old it is to be hoped she will not imitate the mother country in the practice of what is called gentility.

THE NEW-JERSEY RAILROADS.

THE TAXABLE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY AS ASCERTAINED BY THE RAILROAD TAX COMMISSIONER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Sunday, Feb. 11, 1877.

The report of James S. Yard, the Railroad Tax Commissioner of the State of New-Jersey, shows that although the valuations of taxable railroad property in the State amounted to over $12,000,000 last year, the valuations this year aggregate only $7,701,476. This is because the Tax Commissioner has not returned any property belonging to the United Railroads of New-Jersey, valued at over $4,500,000, the Supreme Court having adjudged that under the laws of 1873 the possessions of that company are exempt from taxation. The total valuation, however, does not include the property in all sections of the State. Of the 262 municipal corporations, reports have been received from only 189. Thirty-eight returned property liable to taxation upon which action was had; 145 showed that their property had been already valued, and was not liable to revaluation this year, or that they had no property within their corporate limits liable to taxation under the law; 73 townships made no report whatever; five townships reported too late, and one report was laid over because of error in serving the necessary notices. The report embraces valuations of 24 railroad corporations, which, with the places in which their property is situated and the valuation in such places, are as follows: Belvidere Delaware Railroad Company—Property in Hunterdon County, value, $25,600; in Mercer County, $5,800; and in Warren County, $5,400; total, $36,800. Camden and Atlantic Railroad Company—Atlantic County, $3,600; Camden County, $4,650; total, $8,250. Camden and Burlington Railroad Company—Burlington County, $600; Camden County, $700; total, $1,300. Camden, Gloucester and Mount Ephraim Railroad Company—Camden County, $1,500. Chester Railroad Company—Morris County, $5,000. Delaware and Bound Brook Railroad Company—Mercer County, $300. Erie Railway Company—Hudson County, in the township of Weehawken, $778 525; and in Harrison township $3,400; total $781,925. Freehold and Jamesburg Railroad Company—property at Manalapan, $1,600. Jersey Dock Company—Jersey City, $4,782,200, with deductions amounting to $795,739, leaving the net value of taxable property at $3,986,461. Mercer and Somerset Railroad Company.—Property in Hopewell township, Mercer County, $2,000. Montclair Railroad Company—Hudson County, $12,000; Passaic County, $1,800; total $13,800. Morris and Essex Railroad Company—Newark, $106,300; Harrison, $28,300; Jersey City, $2,022 600; Morris County, $117,900; Warren County $60,084, making a total valuation in the State of $2,335,184. Newark and New-York Railroad Company—Newark, $377,500. New-Jersey Midland Railroad Company—Jersey City, $77,400; Passaic County, $3,800; Sussex County, $1,800; total, $83,000. New-Jersey and New-York Railroad Company,—Total valuation in Burlington, Camden, and Monmouth Counties, $8,325. New York and Long Branch Railroad Company—Middlesex County, $3,600; Monmouth, $300; total, $3,900. Northern Railroad of New-Jersey—Bergen County, $13,000; Hudson County, $500; total, $13,500. Paterson and Newark Railroad Company—Newark, $4,000. Salem Railroad Company—Pilesgrove, $200. Sussex Railroad Company—Sussex County, $6,100. Tuckerton Railroad Company—Ocean County, $400. Warren Railroad Company—Washington, Warren County, $26,100. West Jersey Railroad Company—Cumberland County, $750; Gloucester, $3,550; total, $4,300.

ANCIENT GARDENS OF MICHIGAN.

At the late meeting of the Michigan State Pioneer Society in Lansing, Mr. Bela Hubbard, of Detroit, read a paper on the "Ancient Gardens of Michigan." The first descriptions of the remains of these gardens, he said, was made by Schoolcraft in 1827. They are relics coeval, apparently, with mound-building. John T. Biois in 1839 again mentions them, and a later writer mentions them as being found along the shore of Lake Michigan. In Cass, St. Joseph, and Kalamazoo Counties these garden beds have been numerously found. They consist of beds from 5 to 15 feet wide, 16 to 100 feet long, and about 18 inches high. These beds are regularly arranged, with paths between them, and while some are as narrow as 5 feet, others are as wide as 16 feet. Mr. Hubbard has charts representing the forms of these beds, which he explained to the audience. Some plats have been drawn by Schoolcraft. He says the plats upon which these beds are found are from 20 to 300 acres in extent. Gardens of this kind were found by the early settlers of Cass County, Kalamazoo, Prairie Ronde, Barr Oak, and many others. Old settlers say that the beds which they have seen are about five feet wide, and are regularly laid out throughout the plat. There have been found eight different kinds of beds; most of them are rectangular, some circular in form. These beds denote some species of cultivation, and were undoubtedly the work of people who inhabited the country prior to the Indians. The Indians cultivated only maize, and this was not grown regularly in rows. Historians tell us that the Aztecs had gardens, in which they cultivated various plants for medicinal uses, as well as for ornament. Was there not something analogous to this in the Michigan natives? Did the latter also have botanical gardens? These extensive indications of ancient culture necessarily imply a settled and populous community. All testimony agrees that almost none of the usual aboriginal relics were found, no pottery, no spears, no arrow-heads, and no implements of stone, not even the omnipresent pipe. Tumuli or burial mounds of the red man are not uncommon, though not numerous, in Western Michigan, but have no recognized association with the garden race. There are no traces of dwellings and there is nothing to indicate their homes. It seems strange that these garden-beds should be the only remains of a people who inhabited and cultivated the earth. It is evident they were a peaceful, and to some extent cultivated, civilized, and scientific people. The date of the abandonment of these beds may be determined to some extent by the age of trees which have grown upon them. One writer finds that a tree growing upon one of these beds was over 300 years old, but how long they were abandoned before the tree started cannot be known. The tools used by them were evidently of wood and have decayed, and everything relating to them must be left to conjecture.

AN ILL-PLACED FROG.

The Troy Times of Saturday evening says: "A stomachic singularity culminated in an upheaval last Sunday evening. Seven years ago Lena Crapo, an amiable, bright, and worthy French girl, drank from the waters of a babbling brook. During the draught Lena felt a live lump distending her esophagus, which she gulped down. From that date her health was increasingly impaired with an internal disturbance. Two years since, although then an invalid, she was employed by the family of Dr. M. W. Campbell, of this city, in the capacity of a waiting-maid. For a time she was slightly serviceable, but her difficulty soon became more aggravated, until she was completely disabled. An ulcer in the stomach was the hypothesis professionally put forth by the physicians whom Lena consulted: but she always stoutly maintained that a foreign substance was secreted. She was a great sufferer, and almost daily experienced protracted paroxysms of pain. For the past four or five months, however, Dr. Campbell has used a galvanic battery, which greatly mitigated Lena's sufferings, although her general condition remained unimproved. Inability to retain food was one of the most unpleasant characteristics of the case. Only certain dishes were favored with retention. A few weeks ago Lena was removed to the residence of Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, No. 77 Federal street. Sunday evening she vomited violently, and, feeling a substance rising in her throat, she thrust her fingers down between the tonsils and seized the offending lump, which was triumphantly captured. It was submitted to the examination of Mrs. Wilson and another lady present, who pronounced the slimy lump to be a dead frog. Lena, with true French impulsiveness, viewed the ejected substance for a moment and hurled it into the stove, foolishly preventing an intelligent analysis of the squab. Lena is now slowly improving, and able to retain butter, sugar, cream, juicy fruit, and fat food, all of which her stomach has heretofore rejected."

SENATOR ELECT HILL.

Hon. Benjamin H. Hill, lately elected United States Senator from Georgia, has written to a friend in Douglasville, that State, as follows: "I was deeply touched by the resolutions of the Democracy of Douglas County, passed in the very midst of the late Senatorial contest. Happily, the will of the people was respected by the Legislature, and that, after all, in a representative Government, is of more consequence than the advancement of any public man. Yet I confess there were phases of the late contest that emphasize in the people's triumph my own personal vindication, and it is for this reason that I make haste to ask you to thank the Democracy of Douglas for their special zeal. The contest is now ended, and we must all be united again. I have neither exultation nor revenge to gratify. My sole purpose in the Senate will be to serve the people that trust me, and among these none will take precedence of the generous Democracy of Douglas."

EPIDEMICS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The San Francisco Post of the 3d inst. says: "During the week 159 deaths were registered at the Health Office, 24 more than last week. Males, 98; females, 61. Whites, 145; black, 3; copper-colored, 11. The deaths for the corresponding week last year were 91, and the average for the preceding five years, 74. Of this total 91 were natives of the United States, and 68 foreigners. The principal causes of death were as follows: diphtheria, 32; phthisis, 21; small-pox, 18; and pneumonia, 11. There were 27 cases of small-pox reported during the week. Diphtheria is still epidemic, and appears to be pretty well diffused over the city."

THE KINGDOM OF ITALY.

GOVERNMENT AND THE VATICAN.

THE FUTURE STATUS OF THE PAPACY—PASSAGE OF AN IMPORTANT LAW—PENALTIES TO BE VISITED UPON THE CLERGY FOR CERTAIN OFFENSES—160,000 ECCLESIASTICS SWORN TO OBEY THE POPE—THE CONDITION OF THE PEASANTRY—BRIGANDAGE IN SICILY.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Thursday, Jan. 25, 1877.

The bill which has been under discussion for more than a week, fixing penalties to be visited upon the clergy for offenses "disturbing public order and the peace of families," was passed in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday by a majority of 50, among 250 members present. If the discussion has not been very profound, the question of the position of the clergy and the rights of the State has been entered into in all its details, and every phase of it held up more conspicuously than ever before. Indeed, there is no question left unsettled which so intimately concerns the vital interests of this political society, and Catholic society throughout the world, as that of the future status of the Papacy in this its central seat. The law just passed has met opposition from all parties, and does not seem to give full satisfaction to anybody. On the one hand, complaint is made that it promises to accomplish too little, and on the other, that it is calculated to make the evil worse. Some who made objection to the project of law voted for it on the ground that the measure, being a ministerial one, it was necessary not to let it go by default, nor give the priests opportunity to say that the Chamber had not the courage to take so advanced a step in its aggressive course. As I can attest, having followed the discussion from the beginning, the conduct of the deputies was calm, decorous, and self-assured to a degree not to be expected, and hardly to be equaled, perhaps, in any other Catholic country in which a similar conflict of opinions and interests is going on. It cannot be doubted that the Italian Government feels assured of its position, and while it is not disposed—unless it is forced to it—to exercise any undue pressure upon the Vatican, it is at the same time determined to make its authority respected. The Chamber of Deputies—as also the Italian Ministry before this and all along—has recognized the solidarity of the great Catholic community of both hemispheres, and has tried to temper its action so as not to offend more than necessary the prejudices of the more strict devotees of the hierarchy. The Government has paid even more regard to foreign susceptibilities than to those of its own subjects, with scruples and interests more immediately affected by legislation. It has been said that the present Chamber of Deputies has in it so many free-thinking, or radical elements—so far as matters of theology and religion are concerned—that it forms a body of rationalists. Examining some of its component parts, or the views held by some of the individual members, the change seems not without a certain ground of justification. If it be true, the fact is a curious one presented to the world by the oldest of Catholic communities. Signor Mancini, the Minister of Grace and Justice, the author of this measure of law, in his speech, repeated the fact, known before, that there are more than 160,000 ecclesiastics in the Kingdom of Italy. It is a formidable army, and if it is remembered that even a larger part of the priests belong to the basso clero, or rank and file, than the soldiers of the regular Army—sworn to unquestioning obedience—it will be seen what a quantity of fighting material, using, of course, spiritual weapons, the hierarchy has at its command. It may be a cause of surprise that at the very moment of discussing and voting a law of so much importance, only 250, or less than one-half of the number of Deputies belonging to the Chamber, were in their places. To us here, the matter is not one of marvel. The confident optimism of Italians, whether in triumph or defeat, is one of those happy national qualities which excites our admiration, and which has carried this people through the vicissitudes of many hundred years.

Next to the ecclesiastical or religious question, and intimately connected with it, is that of the melioration of the condition of the peasant classes, which form the great bulk of the laboring population of Italy. This not being in any pre-eminent degree a manufacturing country, those who cultivate the soil have no choice but to remain in their native districts, with their miserable pay and no prospect from generation to generation of improved condition, or emigrate to some distant country. The Western Continent is the land of hope to which many have already gone, and the bourn to which the aspirations of a great many more are turned. The pay of one franc per day, with no work to do for three or four months in the year, is the sad fact in the story of woes of nearly all of this class. The subject is engaging the attention of writers and law-makers more and more every year, and there is hope that whatever can will be done before long to bring about a change for the better. It is already clearly ascertained that the disordered condition of the southern provinces, and the complete derangement of the system of public security, is in a great degree owing to the neglected and hopeless state in which the laboring, and particularly the rural, populations find themselves. A great deal of fault has been found, and a loud cry raised, by the English more than by any others, because these evils have not been removed by the action of the Italian Government. But the evils complained of are the growth of generations, and other generations must pass before they can be entirely got rid of. The interest, the good name, and the spirit of humanity of the nation are pledged to the work of finding a remedy, and the country is at last addressing itself to it with resolution.

In connection with this matter, a question between certain British subjects who have been sufferers and this Government has arisen, and the English authority has lately had the matter more intimately than before brought home to it. But there does not seem much probability that any direct satisfaction, or in the mode desired by the aggrieved ones, will be obtained from the Italian Government. Today in the Chamber the question was asked of the President of the King's Cabinet what was meant by the notice received by telegraph that British subjects residing in Sicily had petitioned Lord Derby to exercise a pressure to bring about the redress of injuries suffered here. The Minister replied that at the moment he knew nothing more about the matter, or the intentions of the British Cabinet, than that about which others were informed, but gave it to be understood that if any action should be taken or correspondence ensue, the Italian Government will know how to defend its dignity and its rights. The ground taken is—and the position seems to be just—that foreigners coming to reside in the country for business or pleasure must take their chances with the rest, with the hope of no special protection or immunity from damage.

The Pope has been suffering for some days past more seriously than for a considerable period before; but from trustworthy evidence his case is not so bad as has been reported, or such as need excite anxiety for an immediate fatal issue. Pius IX. is within a few months of the date (the 13th of May) when he will, if he holds on, pass into his 86th year. The weather is fine and favorable to enjoyment and health, but visitors do not come, and the inn-keepers and money-changers are all forlorn. The air is clear and crisp with the sharpness of northern latitudes, and the sun is showering down rays bright as the javelins tipped with hoar frost of an American Winter. Let none come to Italy, led away by old illusions of romance, believing that the climate is so gentle that Spring or Summer coverings for the person will suffice. Such errors cannot be indulged with impunity. With few exceptions of detail the same apparel is needed here as in the more rigid North. It is true that the trial to which the system is exposed is not severe from the intensity of cold; for, except among the mountains, ice does not form of any considerable thickness. It is the quality of cold, and the element of frigid damp with which the air is so often laden, and the treacherous gust which comes out of some unsuspected cave or crevice, which gives the fatal blow to the careless or unprepared visitor to these "sunny regions." It is not fever miasma alone against which one must stand guard, but the changes of temperature which strike suddenly the vital organs.

A. H. STEPHENS' CONDITION.

The Augusta (Ga.) Constitutionalist prints a telegram from Washington, dated Feb. 7, which says: "I called on Mr. Stephens to-day. The change in this great man is truly pitiable. Beyond the physical emaciation, which is marvelous, he has literally lost hold of all earthly affairs, and has turned his eyes toward a better world. When asked how he felt, he replied, 'Very bad—sinking.' He called constantly for his brother, and being unable to pronounce the word kept muttering a syllable at a time all day long. In his delirium he talked pathetically of his mother, whom it is said he never saw. Talking with Mrs. Felton, who has been his constant nurse since his sickness, he said, 'I want to go. What is there left to tie me to this world? My brother, my comrades, my friends have all gone, and I am ready to go to them. I am weary of this world and its sufferings.' Mr. Stephens seems to have lost all earthly animosities, and to have perfectly resigned himself to whatever fate is in store for him. There is very little room to hope that Mr. Stephens will ever recover sufficiently to sit in a chair again. His doctors think he may be able to sit up in bed for an hour or so each day, if he continues to improve, but it is easy to see that they fear that the end may come at any moment. He is seized at frequent intervals during the day with spasms of coughing, during which he nearly suffocates, and it is feared that the end may come during one of these fearful attacks. His patience and gentleness have won for him the love and reverence of every one who is about him. He has scores of visitors daily. He is next door to the room in which Henry Clay died, and within a few doors of the room in which Daniel Webster died. Four doors off is the suite of rooms in which Crittenden, the splendid Kentuckian, dispensed the princliest hospitality, and next to that is the suite from which Buchanan went to his inaugural ceremonies. If the worst should come to him, the 'Old National,' so rich in historical remembrance already, will have a new claim upon the hearts of the people."

SALE OF WINES IN GEORGIA.

The Augusta (Ga.) Constitutionalist of the 9th inst. says: "Yesterday, Alexander Philip, Executor of the estate of James Hope, deceased, sold the remnants of the stock of wine belonging to the estate of Mr. Hope. This lot was perhaps the oldest wine in the South, if not among the old

COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Feb. 10, 1877.

The receipts of the principal kinds of Produce since our last have been as follows:

Ashes, pks	46	Spirits Turp., bbls.	496
Bullion, bars	229	Tar, bbls	92
Beans, bbls	1,863	Resin, bbls	3,548
Cotton, bales	9,007	Oil-cake, pks	1,080
Copper, bbls	193	Pork, pks	1,199
Dried Fruit, pks	12	Beef, tcs. & hfs	194
Eggs, bbls	178	Cut-meats, pks	2,697
Flour, bbls	13,232	Grease, pks	193
Wheat, bushels	16,100	Lard, pks	668
Corn, bushels	54,000	Stearine, pks	13
Oats, bushels	16,850	Butter, pks	3,135
Rye, bushels	1,642	Cheese, pks	1,416
Malt, bushels	7,062	Tallow, pks	110
Barley, bushels	84,202	Lubricat'g oil, bbls	50
Peas, bushels	300	Dressed Hogs, No	1,005
Grass-seed, bags	1,173	M. Seed, bags	1,979
Flax-seed, bags		Rice, pks	343
Corn-meal, bbls	2,132	Sugar, (N.O.,) hhds	393
Buck w't Flour, bush	400	Sugar, bbls	13
Hemp, bales	22	Syrup, bbls	2
Hops, bales	548	Spelter, pcs	3,067
Hides, No	33	Staves, pcs	1,176
Hides, bales	771	Skins, bales	679
Leather, sides	13,679	Tobacco, hxs. & cs	92
Lead, pigs	2,460	Whisky, bbls	1,013
Molasses, (N.O.,) bbls	911	Wool, bales	90
Moss, bales	15	Wine, (Cal.,) pks	173
Oil, bbls	92

COFFEE—Dull; quotations nominally unchanged.

COTTON—A very moderate call was noted for early delivery at former figures....Ordinary quoted to-day at 11 3-16c.@11 5-16c. Low Middling, 12¾c.@12⅞c.; Middling, 12⅞c.@13c....Sales were officially reported, for prompt delivery, of 530 bales, (of which 170 bales were on last evening,) including 430 bales to spinners and 100 bales to speculators....And for forward delivery business has been on a restricted scale, but at firmer rates....Sales have been reported since our last of 21,2600 bales, of which 6,800 bales were on last evening and 14,300 bales to-day, with 2,100 bales on the calls, on the basis of Middling, with February options, closing at 12 15-16c.@12 31-32c.; March, 13 7-32c.; April, 13⅜c.; May, 13 9-16c.; June, 13 23-32c.; July, 13 1-16c.@13 27-32c.; August, 13 29-32c.; September, 13 17-32c.@13 9-16c.; October, 13 7-32c.@13¼c.; November, 13 1-32c.@13 1-16c.; December, 13c.@13 1-16c., ₱ lb., showing an advance of 1-32c.@3-32c. ₱ lb., closing barely steady....The receipts at this port to-day were 9,007 bales, and at the shipping ports 15,388 bales, against 27,471 bales same day last week. The week's exports hence have been 13,417 bales, including 12,317 bales to Liverpool and 100 bales to Bremen....The exports from all the ports since Sept. 1, 1876, have been 1,868,437 bales of which 1,318,788 bales were sent to the British ports and 549,649 bales to the Continent.

Closing Prices of Cotton in New-York.

	Uplands.	Alabama.	N. O.	Texas.
Ordinary	11 3-16	11 3-16	11 5-16	11 5-16
Strict Ordinary	11 9-16	11 9-16	11 11-16	11 11-16
Good Ordinary	11 15-16	11 15-16	12 1-16	12 1-16
Strict Good Ord	12 3-16	12 3-16	12 5-16	12 5-16
Low Middling	12⅜	12⅜	12½	12½
Strict Low Mid	12⅝	12⅝	12¾	12¾
Middling	12⅞	12⅞	13	13
Good Middling	13⅛	13⅛	13¼	13¼
Strict Good Mid	13⅜	13⅜	13½	13½
Middling Fair	13¾	13¾	13⅞	13⅞
Fair	14½	14½	14⅝	14⅝

Stained.

Good Ordinary	10 13-16	Low Middling	11¾
Strict Good Ord	11 7-16	Middling	12¾

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western Flour ruled quite dull to-day, varying, however, as to values. Export inquiry unusually limited. Sales have been reported since our last of 7,500 bbls. of all grades, including unsound Flour at $3 50@$9 75; (of which 225 bbls. unsound Extras at $6@$6 50;) Sour Flour at $4 70@$6 75; poor to fair Extra State, $5 45@$5 85; choice do. at $5 95@$6 90; very poor to very choice Superfine Western, $5 40@$5 90, mainly at $5 65@$5 85, with fancy Michigan do., Winter Wheat product, $5 90; very poor to good Extra Ohio, $5 75@$6; good to choice do. at $6@$6 30; City Mills Extra shipping grades, $5 75@$7 10, mostly for West Indies, on the basis of $6 70@$7 10 for good to very choice, and quoted at $8 @$8 50 for very good to fancy, for the South American trade, and quoted nominally at $5 90 asked for brands suited to the English trade; inferior to good shipping Extra Western, $5 20@$5 80; common to fair trade, $6 30; and other grades within our previous range.....Included in the sales have been 2,350 bbls. shipping Extras, of which 1,300 bbls. City Mills; 950 bbls. Minnesota clear and straight Extras; 600 bbls. do. Patent do.; 400 bbls. Winter Wheat Extras, (for shipment at $7 25@$8.) 350 bbls. Superfine, 550 bbls. No. 2, and 225 bbls. unsound Extras, at the quoted rates....Of southern Flour, 850 barrels sold, in lots, to the home trade at unchanged quotations....Of Rye Flour, 270 bbls. (in lots) chiefly fair to choice Superfine State, at $4 70@$5 10; market as before quoted. ....Of Corn-meal, 1,100 bbls. sold, including 500 bbls. Brandywine at $3 50, and 450 bbls. Yellow Western, in lots, at $3, of which 100 bbls. Prize Medal, from dock, at $3. Market rather weak. And of Corn-meal, in bags, 2,300 bags were reported on the basis of $2 10 for choice City....Buckwheat Flour in some demand at $3 50@$4 10 for very poor to very choice ₱ 100 lb.

GRAIN—Wheat very quiet to-day. Spring was held more firmly and offered sparingly, but was dull. Some speculative call was noted for No. 2 Chicago Spring, but to a very limited extent. Winter Wheat without movement.....Sales were reported to-day of only 8,000 bushels prime No. 2 Chicago Spring, in store, on speculation, at $1 43; New-York No. 2 do., 800 bushels, at $1 38; and sundry small lots of Spring at $1 18@$1 35, of which 2,000 oushels ungraded at $1 35; rejected at $1 20; and "no grade" at $1 18. Corn has been in less request, with new crop again quoted down, in instances, 1c. a bushel, under free offerings; old crop sb ut steady, but inactive.. Sales have been reported since our last of 145,000 bushels, including new York steamer Mixed at 56c.@56¾c., closing at 56c. for new; New-York No. 2 White, 400 bushels, at 56½c.; New-York No grade, (old classification,) and No. 3, (new grading,) at 55¾c.@56c., to the extent of about 19,500 bushels; new crop Mixed Western, canlots, at 55¾c.@57c., (of which 4,400 bushels at 55½c. @55¾c.) ungraded, sailing-vessel Mixed Western, old crop, (nominal,) at 55¾c.@56¼c. to arrive; and about No. 2 Chicago, in store, quoted at 56c.@56½c., and afloat, at 61c.@62c., with no further sales reported; very choice Round Yellow, 400 bushels, at 80c.; Yellow Western at 57c.; Yellow Southern, from dock, within 55c. range of 55c.@57c.; and White Southern at 58½c. ....Rye and Peas as last quoted....Barley heavy, with sales of 10,000 bushels No. 2 Canada at $1, in store, or $1 01½ delivered from store; 2,500 bushels ungraded Canada, in store, quoted at 95c.@97½c....For Peas, and, rumored, of a boat-load of ungraded do. at $1....Of Barley-malt, 3,500 bushels very choice two-rowed State sold at 85c., cash. ₱ bushel....Of Buckwheat, 70 bags State sold at $1 ₱ bushel....Oats have been very quiet, as a rule, to-day, at somewhat irregular prices for either than the best samples, which were held firmly, in view the scarcity of this class.... Sales reported since our last of 50,000 bushels, including White Western at 40c.@49c. for very inferior to very choice; (of which 2,250 bushels fair, afloat, at 46c.); White State, ordinary to choice, within the range of 51c.@55c., from track and afloat; Mixed Western at 39c.@48c., as to quality; No. 2 Chicago, average quality, in store quoted at 48c; New-York extra White, 750 bushels, at 55c.; New-York No. 1 White, 750 bushels, at 53½c.; New-York No. 2, 2,250 bushels, delivered, at 46c.; New-York No. 3 White at 45½c., (as against 45c. yesterday; New-York No. 2 at 45c.@45½c., (of which 3,750 bushels at 45¾c.); New-York No. 3, 6,750 bushels, at 44½c., of which 1,250 bushels at 44¾c.; New-York Rejected, 1,500 bushels at 39c., and Mixed State at 47c.@53½c. for inferior to choice, from track and afloat; (of which 2,250 bushels very common at 47½c.)..... A fair inquiry has been reported for Feed, which has been quoted generally steady....We quote: 40-lb. at $18 50@$19 50, chiefly at $19@$19 50; 60-lb. at $19 75@$20 50; 100-lb. at $20@$22 50; Rye Feed at $23@$25; bharps at $22 50@$25, the latter for choice, delivered.....Of Clover-seed, further sales of only small lots of prime State reported at 16¾c.; very choice do. at 16¾c.; fair do. at 16c.; prime Western at 15½c.; market dull and heavy.....Other Grass Seeds inactive, with prices quoted generally as before....Of Calcutta Linseed sales were made of 38,000 bags, from store, at $2 05; and 2,000 bags at equal to $2 06½ gold, showing a decline..... Bale Hay has been in moderately active demand, with shipping qualities quoted steady, within the range of 70c.@75c., and retailing qualities at 75c@$1 05, the extreme figure for choice, ₱ 100 lb.; Clover, 65c.@75c.; Salt Hay, 60c.@65c. Straw has been in request, including rye Straw within the range of 60c.@85c.; Oat 55c.@70c. ₱ 100 lb... The week's export clearances hence, for European ports, included 9,025 bbls. Flour, 136,973 bushels Wheat, $22,709 bushels Corn, 26,991 bushels Rye, (of the latter, 24,991 bushels to Bremen, and 2,000 bushels to Hamburgh.)

HIDES—Have been in less demand at rather easier rates....The week's receipts have been 40,481 Hides and 1 bales do....Sales reported of 36,645 Hides, including, according to Messrs. Pickard & Andresen, 4,825 Dry Buenos Ayres and Entre Rios, 22½ to 23 lb., at 24½c. gold, four months, usual selection; 635 Dry Buenos Ayres and Entre Rios Seconds, 23 lb., at 19c. gold, cash, as they run; 1,000 Dry Buenos Ayres and Entre Rios Kips, 10¼ lb., at 19c. gold, four months, usual selection; 9,860 River Platte Kips, 11 lb., private terms; 1,850 Dry Cordova Seconds, 21 to 24 lb., at 16c. gold, four months, as they run; 1,000 Dry Rio Grande, Cow, 20 lb., private terms; 5,070 Dry California, 22 to 23 lb., at 21½c.@22c. gold, 30 days, usual selection; 2,855 Dry Texas, mostly Cow, 22 to 24 lb., at 19c.@19½c. gold, 60 days, selected; 645 Dry Mexican, 21 to 22 lb.; 440 Dry Port au Platte, 17 lb., both private terms; 4,275 Dry Texas, part to arrive, 22 to 27 lb., part at 19¼c.@20½c., currency, four months, selected; 550 Dry Texas Kips, 11 lb., 905 Wet-salted Texas, 60 to 70 lb.; 905 Wet-salted Uruguay, from Europe, 40 lb., all private terms, and 1,100 City Slaughter, 70 lb., at 8¼c., currency, cash..... Stock in the hands of dealers to-day, 109,900 hides, and 10 bales do., against 80,800 Hides and 1,040 bales do. same time last year.

MOLASSES—New-Orleans has been in request at from 48c.@58c. for about good to fancy; sales —— bbls. Market otherwise dull and nominal.

NAVAL STORES—Resin dull on the basis of $2 15 @$2 25 for common to good Strained, ₱ 280 lb ....Tar and Pitch as last quoted....Spirits Turpentine in slack demand with nominal quotations for prompt delivery, at the close, at 42½c.@43c. ₱ gallon.

OIL-CAKE—Has been offered more freely and quoted lower, on a moderate inquiry, with Western, in bags, quoted at $25, currency, at which price 150 tons sold; City, nominal, $26 50, gold....Exports for the week, 18,086 pks.

PETROLEUM—Crude has been very quiet and quoted down to 11¼c., in barrels, and 14½c. in tanks, under....Refined inactive; quoted by refiners at 26¾c., but from second hands down to 20c. for small lots, for early delivery....Refined, in cases, quoted at 30c.@ 31½c., City Naphtha quoted 13c., and Philadelphia and Baltimore Refined Petroleum, for early delivery, quoted by refiners at 26¾c., but in small lots from second hands down to 20c.

PROVISIONS—Pork in less demand and less Pork has been in less request for early delivery at about former rates....Sales reported of 200 obls. of uninspected, for shipment, at $16 75@$16 80....Other kinds dull: Extra Prime, inspected, quoted at $15 50@$16; Western Prime Mess at $15 75@$16.....And for forward delivery here, Western Mess has been also in less demand; quoted for February at $16 50; March, $16 40@$16 50; April, $16 70@$16 75.....Sales reported of 500 bbls. February at $16 50; 1,000 bbls. April on private terms; and 500 bbls. May at $16 75.....Dressed Hogs have been moderately inquired after, with Western quoted 7¾c. City at 8¼c.@ 8½c.....Cut-meats have been inactive at rather easier prices.....Sales include small lots of Pickled Bellies, in bulk, at 9¾c.@9¾c., and sundry small lots of other City Cut-meats within our previous range....Of Bacon, for Glasgow delivery, 500 bxs. Long and Short Clear at $8 60@$8 62½; and 250 bxs. do., March delivery at $8 62½. Market about as last quoted....Western Steam Lard has been dull for early delivery, and quoted weaker.....Of Western Steam, for early delivery here, sales have been reported of only small lots of prime at $11 15, closing nominally at this rate.....And for forward delivery here, Western Steam has been moderately active. ....Western Steam, for February quoted at the close at $11 15@$11 17½; March, $11 22½@$11 25; April, $11 32½@$11 35. May, $11 45.....Sales were reported of Western Steam to the extent of 500 tcs. for February, at $11 15; 3,750 tcs. March, at $11 20@ $11 25; 2,500 tcs. April, at $11 32½@$11 37½; and 1,000 tcs. May, at $11 42½@$11 50.....City Steam and Kettle dull; quoted at the close $10 87½@$11; sales at $10 87½@$10 87½, and No. 1 quoted nominal....Fine Lard inactive; quoted for the Continent, for early delivery, at $11 37½, and for the West Indies at $10.....Sales reported unimportant.....Beef and Beef Hams inactive and quoted as before.... Butter has been very moderately sought, and quoted weak throughout.....We quote State tubs, fair to very choice, 20c.@33c.; Welsh tubs, 16c.@26c.; do. firkins, fair to fancy, at 18c.@22c.; State Butter, whole dairies, fair to choice, 20c.@26c.; Western ends, fair to very choice, 25c.@34c.; do. tubs, common to strictly choice, 13c.@ 17c.; rolls, fair to very choice, 14c.@21c.....Cheese has been in fair demand, and the finer makes quoted firm as to values....We quote State Factory at 14½c. @15½c. for choice to strictly fancy, and 11c.@14½c. for fair to choice, and 4c.@9c. for Skimmed and Western Factory, at 10c.@14½c. for fair to strictly fancy; State, dairy-made, poor to very choice, 8c.@14c.....Eggs have been in quite moderate request at drooping prices.....We quote fresh Eggs within the range of 22c.@26c. for fair to fancy marks, with the dealings reported as mostly in good to choice at from 23c.@25c., in round lots, ₱ dozen....Tallow has been fairly active at essentially unchanged rates.....Sales, 155,000 lb. prime to choice at 6⅝c.@6 3-16c.....Stearine has been quiet to-day; choice City, in lbls., quoted at $11 25; prime Western, in tcs., at $11@$11 12½.... Domestic Rice has been quoted firm, and a moderate inquiry, in a jobbing way.....We quote fair to strictly fancy at 6c.@7¾c., with job lots at $6 25@$7. Louisiana at $4 25@$6 ₱ 100 ₱.....East India Rice has been in demand, with Rangoon quoted at $3 12½ @$3 25, gold, in bond; Patna at $7@$7 25, currency, free, and Siam at $4 50@$4 75, gold, ₱ 100 lb.....The week's exports to Europe have been 1,728 pks. Pork, 919 pks. Beef, 12,951 pks. Bacon, 6,229 pks. Lard, 13,300 bxs. Cheese, 5,294 pks. Butter; also, 1,418 pks. Tallow.

SKINS—Deer has been in slack request and quoted easier as to price.....The week's receipts have been 42 bales; sales, 1,000 lb. Central American, 5. 00 lb. Mexican, and 5,000 lb. Matamoras on private terms.... Goat has been in fairly active demand and quoted firmer; receipts, 1,457 bales; sales, 50 bales Mexican, 30 bales Curacoa, and 62 bales Payta on private terms. .....We quote Deer thus: Vera Cruz, 30c.; Guatemala, 26c.; Para, 25c.@25½c.; Maracaibo, 24c.; Puerto Cabello, 30c.; Honduras, 32½c.; Central America, 29c.@32½c. ₱ lb. ...And Goat thus: Tampico, 47½c.@50c.; Matamoras, 47½c.@50c.; Vera Cruz, 45c.@50c., gold; Buenos Ayres, 50c.@52½c.; Payta, 47c.@50c.; Curacoa, selected, 55c.@57½c.; Cape, 35c.; Madras, 55c.@57½c.; Patna, 40c.@42½c.

SUGARS—Raw have been in very moderate demand, but quoted at unchanged figures; with fair to good Refining Cuba quoted at 9¾c.@9¾c. ₱ lb.; sales reported of 500 hhds. French Island at 9¾c.; and 200 hhds. New-Orleans at $8 88¾.....Refined Sugars have been quiet with prices quoted as on yesterday.

WHISKY—Sold to the extent of 50 bbls. at $1 07, cash; and 50 bbls. at $1 07½, regular, closing at the lower rate. And of Alcohol, — bbls. at $2 03 per gallon.

FREIGHTS—Both rates for Grain were quoted firmer again to-day, with more inquiry for accommodation from the Grain interest, chiefly for the British ports. Apart from this feature, the general market was without change of moment, on a restricted business.....For Liverpool, the engagements reported, since our last, have been, by sail, 1,900 bbls. Flour at 2s. 3d. per bbl; 160 tons State ₱ 32 ₱ ton, with room for Grain quoted at 6d. ₱ 60 lb. from store bed, and 5½d. ₱ standard bushel asked; and by steam, small lots of Cotton at ¼d. ₱ lb; 24,000 bushels Grain, in bulk, (one bin) at 5d. ₱ 60 lb., with 5½d. subsequently bid for room for single boat-loads;) 150 tons Measurement Goods within the range of 12s.6d.@17s.6d.; 11,000 boxes Cheese at 35s.; 1,900 bxs. Bacon, chiefly at 30s.; small lots of Leather at 40s. ₱ ton, and (in addition to the fresh shipments mentioned in our last) 1,100 bbls. Apples at 3s.3s. 6d. ₱ bbl And by steam, from Philadelphia, (contracts made there,) 1,500 bales Cotton—part through freight—at 5-16d.@9-32d. ₱ lb., and 25,000 bushels Corn on private terms, and from the West, by rail and steam, on through freight account, 500 bxs. Bacon, via Boston, at 50c. ₱ 100 lb.; also a British brig, 221 tons, hence, with petroleum on private terms; a British ship, 728 tons, placed on the berth hence, for general cargo. .....For London, by sail, 300 bbls. Resin, and 40 tons Measurement Goods, on private terms; and by steam, 1,000 tcs. Beef, at 6s. ₱ tierce; 2,000 pkgs. Cheese and Butter, at 35s. ₱ ton.....For Glasgow, by steam, 2,800 pkgs. Lard, Butter, and Cheese, at 30s.@35s. ₱ ton; 1,500 bbls. Apples, reported at 4s. ₱ bbl.....For Bristol, by sail, 25 tons Tallow at 25s. ₱ ton, and, by steam, 16,000 bushels Grain at 6½d. ₱ standard bushel; 110 bbls. Tallow at 30s. ₱ ton.....For Hull, by steam, 16,000 bushels Grain at 6½d. ₱ standard bushel, and 50 tons Oil-cake at 20s. ₱ ton ...For the United Kingdom, a Norwegian bark, 532 tons, reported with general cargo, from Savannah on private terms; a Norwegian bark, for Cork and orders, lumber for Grain was in some request, and quoted here at 5s. 3d.@5s. 6d.; at Philadelphia, at 5s. 3d.@5s. 6d., and at Baltimore, at 5s. 3d. ₱ quarter.....For the Continent, a Swedish bark, 850 tons, with resin, from Savannah, reported on private terms, quoted nominally at 3s.; also, rumored, a British bark, 371 tons, hence, with equal to about 2,400 quarters Grain, on private terms, but chiefly coal, not confirmed. .....For Havre, the French steamer cleared to-day with 2,000 bushels Corn, 1,200 bxs. Bacon, 1,000 tcs. Grease, 1,300 bags Coffee, 600 pks. Hides, 170 pks. Sundries, and a quantity lots of miscellaneous cargo, engaged some time since, at market rates.....For Bremen, by sail, 500 bxs. Starch, at 20s. ₱ ton.... For Hamburg, by sail, 250 bxs. Bacon at 30s. ₱ ton; and, by steam, of recent contracts, 4,000 bags Coffee, on private terms; and small lots of Bacon at 2.50 reichmarks; and of Measurement Goods at 90 to 100 do.....For Stettin, by sail, some inquiry was noted for room for Bacon and Lard within the range of 35s.@40s. ₱ ton. .....For Gibraltar and orders, the Italian brig, 322 tons, with Refined Petroleum, from Philadelphia, mentioned in our last, at 6s. ₱ bbl, gold 2-3 of the cases.....For Genoa or Leghorn and back, a British bark, 593 tons, with general cargo, on private terms, taking out Kentucky Tobacco on private terms, quoted at $3 50@$4 ₱ 100 pounds, and back, with Marble.....For Cadiz, an Italian bark, 414 tons, hence, with staves on the basis of $40 for heavy and $50 for extra heavy Pipe, and 2,000 cases Petroleum at 12s. ₱ case.....For Trieste, by sail, 1,000 bbls. Resin, reported on private terms.....For St. John's, N. F., a British brig, 380 tons, hence, with Flour and Provisions, at 65c.@70c. ₱ bbl.....For Rio Janeiro, a British brig, with about 3,000 bbls. Flour from Richmond, reported at $1 ₱ bbl, and a brig, with Lumber, from Brunswick, at $20.....For Cuban ports, a bark and brig, with Coal, from Baltimore, reported at 50c.@75c., and a schooner, with do., from Philadelphia, at $1 75 ₱ ton.....For Barbadoes and Demerara, a British schooner, 188 tons, hence, with general cargo, reported at 50c. ₱ bbl.....For Hayti, two schooners, with Lumber, from Jacksonville, as $7 50@$8.....For Ponce, a brig, and, rumored, of a boat-load of ungraded do. at $1.....Of Barley-malt, 3,500 bushels very choice two-rowed State sold at 85c., cash. ₱ bushel....Of Buckwheat, 70 bags State sold at $1 ₱ bushel....Oats have been very quiet, as a rule, to-day, at somewhat irregular prices for either than the best samples, which were held firmly, in view the scarcity of this class.... Sales reported since our last of 50,000 bushels, including White Western at 40c.@49c. for very inferior to very choice; (of which 2,250 bushels fair, afloat, at 46c.); White State, ordinary to choice, within the range of 51c.@55c., from track and afloat; Mixed Western at 39c.@48c., as to quality; No. 2 Chicago, average quality, in store quoted at 48c; New-York extra White, 750 bushels, at 55c.; New-York No. 1 White, 750 bushels, at 53½c.; New-York No. 2, 2,250 bushels, delivered, at 46c.; New-York No. 3 White at 45½c., (as against 45c. yesterday; New-York No. 2 at 45c.@45½c., (of which 3,750 bushels at 45¾c.); New-York No. 3, 6,750 bushels, at 44½c., of which 1,250 bushels at 44¾c.; New-York Rejected, 1,500 bushels at 39c., and Mixed State at 47c.@53½c. for inferior to choice, from track and afloat; (of which 2,250 bushels very common at 47½c.)..... A fair inquiry has been reported for Feed, which has been quoted generally steady....We quote: 40-lb. at $18 50@$19 50, chiefly at $19@$19 50; 60-lb. at $19 75@$20 50; 100-lb. at $20@$22 50; Rye Feed at $23@$25; bharps at $22 50@$25, the latter for choice, delivered.....Of Clover-seed, further sales of only small lots of prime State reported at 16¾c.; very choice do. at 16¾c.; fair do. at 16c.; prime Western at 15½c.; market dull and heavy.....Other Grass Seeds inactive, with prices quoted generally as before....Of Calcutta Linseed sales were made of 38,000 bags, from store, at $2 05; and 2,000 bags at equal to $2 06½ gold, showing a decline..... Bale Hay has been in moderately active demand, with shipping qualities quoted steady, within the range of 70c.@75c., and retailing qualities at 75c@$1 05, the extreme figure for choice, ₱ 100 lb.; Clover, 65c.@75c.; Salt Hay, 60c.@65c. Straw has been in request, including rye Straw within the range of 60c.@85c.; Oat 55c.@70c. ₱ 100 lb... The week's export clearances hence, for European ports, included 9,025 bbls. Flour, 136,973 bushels Wheat, $22,709 bushels Corn, 26,991 bushels Rye, (of the latter, 24,991 bushels to Bremen, and 2,000 bushels to Hamburgh.)

HIDES—Have been in less demand at rather easier rates....The week's receipts have been 40,481 Hides and 1 bales do....Sales reported of 36,645 Hides, including, according to Messrs. Pickard & Andresen, 4,825 Dry Buenos Ayres and Entre Rios, 22½ to 23 lb., at 24½c. gold, four months, usual selection; 635 Dry Buenos Ayres and Entre Rios Seconds, 23 lb., at 19c. gold, cash, as they run; 1,000 Dry Buenos Ayres and Entre Rios Kips, 10¼ lb., at 19c. gold, four months, usual selection; 9,860 River Platte Kips, 11 lb., private terms; 1,850 Dry Cordova Seconds, 21 to 24 lb., at 16c. gold, four months, as they run; 1,000 Dry Rio Grande, Cow, 20 lb., private terms; 5,070 Dry California, 22 to 23 lb., at 21½c.@22c. gold, 30 days, usual selection; 2,855 Dry Texas, mostly Cow, 22 to 24 lb., at 19c.@19½c. gold, 60 days, selected; 645 Dry Mexican, 21 to 22 lb.; 440 Dry Port au Platte, 17 lb., both private terms; 4,275 Dry Texas, part to arrive, 22 to 27 lb., part at 19¼c.@20½c., currency, four months, selected; 550 Dry Texas Kips, 11 lb.; 905 Wet-salted Texas, 60 to 70 lb.; 905 Wet-salted Uruguay, from Europe, 40 lb., all private terms, and 1,100 City Slaughter, 70 lb., at 8¼c., currency, cash..... Stock in the hands of dealers to-day, 109,900 hides, and 10 bales do., against 80,800 Hides and 1,040 bales do. same time last year.

MOLASSES—New-Orleans has been in request at from 48c.@58c. for about good to fancy; sales —— bbls. Market otherwise dull and nominal.

NAVAL STORES—Resin dull on the basis of $2 15 @$2 25 for common to good Strained, ₱ 280 lb ....Tar and Pitch as last quoted....Spirits Turpentine in slack demand with nominal quotations for prompt delivery, at the close, at 42½c.@43c. ₱ gallon.

OIL-CAKE—Has been offered more freely and quoted lower, on a moderate inquiry, with Western, in bags, quoted at $25, currency, at which price 150 tons sold; City, nominal, $26 50, gold....Exports for the week, 18,086 pks.

PETROLEUM—Crude has been very quiet and quoted down to 11¼c., in barrels, and 14½c. in tanks, under....Refined inactive; quoted by refiners at 26¾c., but from second hands down to 20c. for small lots, for early delivery....Refined, in cases, quoted at 30c.@ 31½c., City Naphtha quoted 13c., and Philadelphia and Baltimore Refined Petroleum, for early delivery, quoted by refiners at 26¾c., but in small lots from second hands down to 20c.

PROVISIONS—Pork in less demand and less Pork has been in less request for early delivery at about former rates....Sales reported of 200 obls. of uninspected, for shipment, at $16 75@$16 80....Other kinds dull: Extra Prime, inspected, quoted at $15 50@$16; Western Prime Mess at $15 75@$16.....And for forward delivery here, Western Mess has been also in less demand; quoted for February at $16 50; March, $16 40@$16 50; April, $16 70@$16 75.....Sales reported of 500 bbls. February at $16 50; 1,000 bbls. April on private terms; and 500 bbls. May at $16 75.....Dressed Hogs have been moderately inquired after, with Western quoted 7¾c. City at 8¼c.@ 8½c.....Cut-meats have been inactive at rather easier prices.....Sales include small lots of Pickled Bellies, in bulk, at 9¾c.@9¾c., and sundry small lots of other City Cut-meats within our previous range....Of Bacon, for Glasgow delivery, 500 bxs. Long and Short Clear at $8 60@$8 62½; and 250 bxs. do., March delivery at $8 62½. Market about as last quoted....Western Steam Lard has been dull for early delivery, and quoted weaker.....Of Western Steam, for early delivery here, sales have been reported of only small lots of prime at $11 15, closing nominally at this rate.....And for forward delivery here, Western Steam has been moderately active. ....Western Steam, for February quoted at the close at $11 15@$11 17½; March, $11 22½@$11 25; April, $11 32½@$11 35. May, $11 45.....Sales were reported of Western Steam to the extent of 500 tcs. for February, at $11 15; 3,750 tcs. March, at $11 20@ $11 25; 2,500 tcs. April, at $11 32½@$11 37½; and 1,000 tcs. May, at $11 42½@$11 50.....City Steam and Kettle dull; quoted at the close $10 87½@$11; sales at $10 87½@$10 87½, and No. 1 quoted nominal....Fine Lard inactive; quoted for the Continent, for early delivery, at $11 37½, and for the West Indies at $10.....Sales reported unimportant.....Beef and Beef Hams inactive and quoted as before.... Butter has been very moderately sought, and quoted weak throughout.....We quote State tubs, fair to very choice, 20c.@33c.; Welsh tubs, 16c.@26c.; do. firkins, fair to fancy, at 18c.@22c.; State Butter, whole dairies, fair to choice, 20c.@26c.; Western ends, fair to very choice, 25c.@34c.; do. tubs, common to strictly choice, 13c.@ 17c.; rolls, fair to very choice, 14c.@21c.....Cheese has been in fair demand, and the finer makes quoted firm as to values....We quote State Factory at 14½c. @15½c. for choice to strictly fancy, and 11c.@14½c. for fair to choice, and 4c.@9c. for Skimmed and Western Factory, at 10c.@14½c. for fair to strictly fancy; State, dairy-made, poor to very choice, 8c.@14c.....Eggs have been in quite moderate request at drooping prices.....We quote fresh Eggs within the range of 22c.@26c. for fair to fancy marks, with the dealings reported as mostly in good to choice at from 23c.@25c., in round lots, ₱ dozen....Tallow has been fairly active at essentially unchanged rates.....Sales, 155,000 lb. prime to choice at 6⅝c.@6 3-16c.....Stearine has been quiet to-day; choice City, in lbls., quoted at $11 25; prime Western, in tcs., at $11@$11 12½.... Domestic Rice has been quoted firm, and a moderate inquiry, in a jobbing way.....We quote fair to strictly fancy at 6c.@7¾c., with job lots at $6 25@$7. Louisiana at $4 25@$6 ₱ 100 ₱.....East India Rice has been in demand, with Rangoon quoted at $3 12½ @$3 25, gold, in bond; Patna at $7@$7 25, currency, free, and Siam at $4 50@$4 75, gold, ₱ 100 lb.....The week's exports to Europe have been 1,728 pks. Pork, 919 pks. Beef, 12,951 pks. Bacon, 6,229 pks. Lard, 13,300 bxs. Cheese, 5,294 pks. Butter; also, 1,418 pks. Tallow.

SKINS—Deer has been in slack request and quoted easier as to price.....The week's receipts have been 42 bales; sales, 1,000 lb. Central American, 5. 00 lb. Mexican, and 5,000 lb. Matamoras on private terms.... Goat has been in fairly active demand and quoted firmer; receipts, 1,457 bales; sales, 50 bales Mexican, 30 bales Curacoa, and 62 bales Payta on private terms. .....We quote Deer thus: Vera Cruz, 30c.; Guatemala, 26c.; Para, 25c.@25½c.; Maracaibo, 24c.; Puerto Cabello, 30c.; Honduras, 32½c.; Central America, 29c.@32½c. ₱ lb. ...And Goat thus: Tampico, 47½c.@50c.; Matamoras, 47½c.@50c.; Vera Cruz, 45c.@50c., gold; Buenos Ayres, 50c.@52½c.; Payta, 47c.@50c.; Curacoa, selected, 55c.@57½c.; Cape, 35c.; Madras, 55c.@57½c.; Patna, 40c.@42½c.

SUGARS—Raw have been in very moderate demand, but quoted at unchanged figures; with fair to good Refining Cuba quoted at 9¾c.@9¾c. ₱ lb.; sales reported of 500 hhds. French Island at 9¾c.; and 200 hhds. New-Orleans at $8 88¾.....Refined Sugars have been quiet with prices quoted as on yesterday.

WHISKY—Sold to the extent of 50 bbls. at $1 07, cash; and 50 bbls. at $1 07½, regular, closing at the lower rate. And of Alcohol, — bbls. at $2 03 per gallon.

FREIGHTS—Both rates for Grain were quoted firmer again to-day, with more inquiry for accommodation from the Grain interest, chiefly for the British ports. Apart from this feature, the general market was without change of moment, on a restricted business.....For Liverpool, the engagements reported, since our last, have been, by sail, 1,900 bbls. Flour at 2s. 3d. per bbl; 160 tons State ₱ 32 ₱ ton, with room for Grain quoted at 6d. ₱ 60 lb. from store bed, and 5½d. ₱ standard bushel asked;) and by steam, small lots of Cotton at ¼d. ₱ lb; 24,000 bushels Grain, in bulk, (one bin) at 5d. ₱ 60 lb., with 5½d. subsequently bid for room for single boat-loads;) 150 tons Measurement Goods within the range of 12s.6d.@17s.6d.; 11,000 boxes Cheese at 35s.; 1,900 bxs. Bacon, chiefly at 30s.; small lots of Leather at 40s. ₱ ton, and (in addition to the fresh shipments mentioned in our last) 1,100 bbls. Apples at 3s.3s. 6d. ₱ bbl And by steam, from Philadelphia, (contracts made there,) 1,500 bales Cotton—part through freight—at 5-16d.@9-32d. ₱ lb., and 25,000 bushels Corn on private terms, and from the West, by rail and steam, on through freight account, 500 bxs. Bacon, via Boston, at 50c. ₱ 100 lb.; also a British brig, 221 tons, hence, with petroleum on private terms; a British ship, 728 tons, placed on the berth hence, for general cargo. .....For London, by sail, 300 bbls. Resin, and 40 tons Measurement Goods, on private terms; and by steam, 1,000 tcs. Beef, at 6s. ₱ tierce; 2,000 pkgs. Cheese and Butter, at 35s. ₱ ton.....For Glasgow, by steam, 2,800 pkgs. Lard, Butter, and Cheese, at 30s.@35s. ₱ ton; 1,500 bbls. Apples, reported at 4s. ₱ bbl.....For Bristol, by sail, 25 tons Tallow at 25s. ₱ ton, and, by steam, 16,000 bushels Grain at 6½d. ₱ standard bushel; 110 bbls. Tallow at 30s. ₱ ton.....For Hull, by steam, 16,000 bushels Grain at 6½d. ₱ standard bushel, and 50 tons Oil-cake at 20s. ₱ ton ...For the United Kingdom, a Norwegian bark, 532 tons, reported with general cargo, from Savannah on private terms; a Norwegian bark, for Cork and orders, lumber for Grain was in some request, and quoted here at 5s. 3d.@5s. 6d.; at Philadelphia, at 5s. 3d.@5s. 6d., and at Baltimore, at 5s. 3d. ₱ quarter.....For the Continent, a Swedish bark, 850 tons, with resin, from Savannah, reported on private terms, quoted nominally at 3s.; also, rumored, a British bark, 371 tons, hence, with equal to about 2,400 quarters Grain, on private terms, but chiefly coal, not confirmed. .....For Havre, the French steamer cleared to-day with 2,000 bushels Corn, 1,200 bxs. Bacon, 1,000 tcs. Grease, 1,300 bags Coffee, 600 pks. Hides, 170 pks. Sundries, and a quantity lots of miscellaneous cargo, engaged some time since, at market rates.....For Bremen, by sail, 500 bxs. Starch, at 20s.

SHIPPING.

CUNARD LINE B. & N. A. R. M. S. P. CO.

NOTICE.

With the view of diminishing the chances of collision the steamers of this line take a specified course for all seasons of the year.

On the outward voyage from Queenstown to New-York or Boston, crossing meridian of 50 at 43 latitude, or nothing to the north of 43.

On the homeward passage, crossing the meridian of 47 at 42, or nothing to the north of 42.

FROM NEW-YORK FOR LIVERPOOL AND QUEENSTOWN.

PARTHIA....WED., Feb. 14 | BATAVIA....WED., Feb. 28
CHINA.....WED., Feb. 21 | ABYSSINIA..WED., March 7

Steamers marked "o" do not carry steerage passengers.

Cabin passage, $80, $100, and $130, gold, according to accommodation. Return tickets on favorable terms.

Steerage tickets to and from all parts of Europe at very low rates. Freight and passage office, No. 4 Bowling Green. CHAS. G. FRANCKLYN, Agent.

WHITE STAR LINE.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL. CARRYING UNITED STATES MAIL.

The steamers of this line take the Lane Routes, recommended by Lieut. Maury, U. S. N., going south of the Banks on the passage to Queenstown all the year round.

BRITANNIC.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.
CELTIC.....SATURDAY, March 10, at 2 P. M.
GERMANIC.....SATURDAY, March 17, 6:30 A. M.
BALTIC.....SATURDAY, March 24, at 1 P. M.

From White Star Dock, Pier No. 52 North River.

These steamers are uniform in size and unsurpassed in appointments. The saloon, staterooms, smoking and bath rooms are amidships, where the noise and motion are least felt, affording a degree of comfort hitherto unattainable at sea.

Rates—Saloon $80 and $100, gold; return tickets on favorable terms; steerage, $30.

For inspection of plans and other information apply at the Company's offices, No. 37 Broadway, New-York.

R. J. CORTIS, Agent.

LIVERPOOL AND GREAT WESTERN STEAM COMPANY. (LIMITED.)

LIVERPOOL, (Via Queenstown.)

CARRYING THE UNITED STATES MAIL.

TUESDAY.

Leaving Pier No. 46 North River as follows:

DAKOTA.....Feb. 13, at 3 P. M.
NEVADA.....Feb. 20, at 10 A. M.
IDAHO.....Feb. 27, at 3 P. M.
MONTANA.....March 6, at 10 A. M.
WISCONSIN.....March 13, at 3 P. M.
WYOMING.....March 20, at 9 A. M.

RATES OF PASSENGERS REDUCED.

Steerage, $26; intermediate, $40; cabin, $65 to $80, according to state-room. Offices, No. 29 Broadway.

WILLIAMS & GUION.

ATLAS MAIL LINE.

BI-MONTHLY SERVICE TO JAMAICA, HAYTI, COLOMBIA, and ASPINWALL, and to PANAMA and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall.) First-class full-powered iron screw steamers, from Pier No. 51 North River.

For KINGSTON (Jam.) and AUX CAYES.

ATLAS.....Feb. 8

For HAYTI, COLOMBIA, ISTHMUS OF PANAMA, and SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS (via Aspinwall.)

ANDES.....Feb. 14
ALPS.....Feb. 28

Superior first-class passenger accommodation.

PIM, FORWOOD & CO., Agents.
No. 56 Wall st.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE.

SAILING FROM PIER NO. 29 NORTH RIVER.

WEDNESDAYS and SATURDAYS at 3 P. M.

FOR CHARLESTON, S. C., FLORIDA, THE SOUTH, AND SOUTH-WEST.

GEO. W. CLYDE.....WEDNESDAY.....Feb. 14
CHAMPION.....SATURDAY.....Feb. 17

SUPERIOR PASSENGER ACCOMMODATIONS.

Insurance to destination one-half of one per cent.

Goods forwarded free of commission. Passenger tickets and bills of lading issued and signed at the office of

JAMES W. QUINTARD & CO., Agents,
No. 177 West st., corner Warren.

Or W. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 8 Bowling Green.

Or BENTLEY D. HASELL, General Agent Great Southern Freight Line, 317 Broadway.

STATE LINE.

NEW-YORK TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, DUBLIN, BELFAST, AND LONDONDERRY.

These first-class full-powered steamers will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Canal st.

STATE OF NEVADA.....Thursday, Feb. 22
STATE OF INDIANA.....Thursday, March 8
STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.....Thursday, March 15
STATE OF VIRGINIA.....Thursday, March 29

First cabin, $60, $65, and $70, according to accommodations; return tickets, $110, $125. Second cabin, $45; return tickets, $80. Steerage at lowest rates. Apply to

AUSTIN BALDWIN & CO., Agents,
No. 72 Broadway, New-York.

STEERAGE tickets at No. 45 Broadway, and at the company's pier, foot of Canal st., North River.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD.

STEAM-SHIP LINE BETWEEN NEW-YORK, SOUTHAMPTON, AND BREMEN.

Company's Pier, foot of 20th st., Hoboken.

RHEIN.....Sat. Feb. 10 | HERMANN.....Sat. Feb. 24
ODER.....Sat. Feb. 17 | NECKAR.....Sat. March 3

RATES OF PASSAGE FROM NEW-YORK TO SOUTHAMPTON, HAVRE, OR BREMEN.

First cabin.....$100 gold
Second cabin.....60 gold
Steerage.....30 currency

Return tickets at reduced rates. Prepaid steerage certificates, $32 currency. For freight or passage apply to OELRICHS & CO., No. 2 Bowling Green.

INMAN LINE.—MAIL STEAMERS.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.

CITY OF CHESTER, Saturday, Feb. 17, at 7:30 A. M.
CITY OF RICHMOND, Saturday, March 3, at 8 A. M.
CITY OF BRUSSELS, Saturday, March 17, 6:30 A. M.

From Pier 45 North River.

CABIN, $80 and $100, Gold. Return tickets on favorable terms. STEERAGE, $24, Currency. Drafts at lowest rates.

Saloons, state-rooms, smoking and bath-rooms amidships. JOHN G. DALE, Agent, Nos. 15 and 33 Broadway, N. Y.

ANCHOR LINE U. S. MAIL STEAMERS.

NEW-YORK AND GLASGOW

Alsatia....Feb. 17, 8 A. M. | Ashford, March 3, 8 A. M.
Anchoria....Feb. 24, 2 P. M. | Ethopia March 10, 2 P. M.

TO GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, OR DERRY.

Cabins $65 to $80, according to accommodations; Intermediate, $30; Steerage $28.

NEW-YORK AND LONDON.

Italia.....Feb. 14, 2 P. M. | Utopia, Feb. 24, 2 P. M.

Cabins, $85 to $70. Steerage, $28. Cabin excursion tickets at reduced rates. Drafts issued for any amount at current rates. Company's Pier Nos. 20 and 21, North River, N. Y. HENDERSON BROTHERS, Agents, No. 7 Bowling Green.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO FRANCE.

THE GENERAL TRANSATLANTIC COMPANY'S MAIL STEAMERS BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND HAVRE, Calling at PLYMOUTH (G. B.) for the landing of Passengers.

Will sail from Pier No. 42 North River, foot of Morton st., every alternate Saturday, beginning with:

CANADA, Frangeul.....Saturday, Feb. 24, at 2 P. M.

For particulars address
LOUIS DE BEBIAN, Agent, No. 55 Broadway.

FOR SAVANNAH GA.,

THE FLORIDA PORTS,
AND THE SOUTH AND SOUTH-WEST.

GREAT SOUTHERN FREIGHT AND PASSENGER LINE, CENTRAL RAILROAD OF GEORGIA, AND ATLANTIC AND GULF RAILROAD.

WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY.

R. LIVINGSTON, Capt. MALLORY, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14, Pier No. 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agent, No. 409 Broadway.

SAN SALVADOR, Capt. NICKERSON, SATURDAY, Feb. 17, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

GENERAL BARNES, Capt. CRESSMAN, WEDNESDAY, Feb. 21, Pier 16 East River, 3 P. M. MURRAY, FERRIS & CO., Agts., 62 South st.

SAN JACINTO, Capt. HAZARD, SATURDAY, Feb. 24, Pier 43 North River, 3 P. M. GEO. YONGE, Agt., 409 Broadway.

Insurance ONE-HALF PER CENT. Superior accommodations for passengers. Through rates and bills of lading in connection with Central R. R. of Georgia, Atlantic and Gulf Railroad, and Florida steamers City Point and Dictator; also, with the steamer J. B. SCUYLER, which has been placed on the inside route from Savannah to Florida, and offers unsurpassed accommodations.

C. D. OWENS, Agent A. & G. R. R. No. 315 Broadway.
GEORGE YONGE, Agent C. R. R. of Ga., No. 409 Broadway.

FLORIDA.

Caution to travelers! Great reduction in fare via the inland route from Savannah to all Florida ports. Only 48 hours to Jacksonville. Meals and state rooms extra. The elegant steamer J. B. SCHUYLER makes close connection with all Savannah steamers, thus forming the quickest and most agreeable route as well as the lowest in fare. Accommodations for passengers unsurpassed. Travelers are cautioned against purchasing through tickets via any other route.

PACIFIC MAIL AND PANAMA TRANSIT STEAM-SHIP LINES.

FOR CALIFORNIA, JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, NEW-ZEALAND, BRITISH COLUMBIA, OREGON, &c.

Sailing from Pier No. 42 North River.

FOR SAN FRANCISCO, via ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

Steam-ship COLON.....Thursday, Feb. 15

connecting for Central America and South Pacific ports.

From SAN FRANCISCO to JAPAN and CHINA.

Steam-ship CITY OF TOKIO.....Thursday, March 1

From San Francisco to Sandwich Islands, Australia, and New-Zealand.

Steam-ship CITY OF SYDNEY.....Wednesday, Feb. 28

For freight or passage apply to

WM. H. NEWDE & CO., or H. J. BULLAY, Superintendent, No. 6 Bowling Green, Pier No. 42, N. R., foot Canal st.

NEW-YORK, HAVANA, AND MEXICAN MAILS.

Steamers leave Pier No. 3 North River at 3 P. M.

FOR HAVANA DIRECT.

CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17
CITY OF VERA CRUZ.....Wednesday, Feb. 21
CITY OF NEW-YORK.....Wednesday, Feb. 28

FOR VERA CRUZ AND NEW-ORLEANS, Via Havana, Progreso, Campeachy, Tuxpan, and Tampico.

CITY OF HAVANA.....Saturday, Feb. 17

Steamers will leave New-Orleans Feb. 23 and March 16 for Vera Cruz and all the above ports.

For freight or passage apply to
P. LANDAVANDER & SONS, Nos. 41 and 43 Broadway.

NEW-YORK AND HAVANA DIRECT MAIL LINE.

These first-class steamships sail regularly at 3 P. M., from Pier No. 13 North River as follows:

COLUMBUS.....WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14
CLYDE.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24

Accommodations unsurpassed. For freight or passage apply to WM. P. CLYDE & CO., No. 6 Bowling Green. MORELLER, LULING & CO., Agents in Havana.

HAMBURG American Packet Company's Line, sailing for PLYMOUTH, CHERBOURG and HAMBURG, GELLERT.....Feb. 15 | SUEVIA.....March 1
COMMERANIA.....Feb. 22 | LESSING.....March 8

Rates of passage to Plymouth, London, Cherbourg, Hamburg, and all points in England. First Cabin, $100 gold; Second Cabin, $65 gold; Steerage, $30, currency.

CUNARD & CO., C. R. RICHARDS & BOAS,
Agents, General Passenger Agents,
61 Broadway, N. Y. 61 Broadway, N. Y.

SHIPPING.

AMERICAN STEAM-SHIP LINE

Between Philad'a & Liverpool, calling at Queenstown, Thursdays from Philad'a, Wednesdays from Liverpool.

Steamers to sail from Philadelphia as follows:

Pennsylvania.....Feb. 1 | Illinois.....Feb. 22
*City of Limerick....Feb. 8 | *Lord Clyde.....March 1
Indiana.....Feb. 15 | Ohio.....March 8

Price of passage in currency:

Cabin, $75 to $100, intermediate, $40. Steerage, $28.

PETER WRIGHT & SONS, Gen. Agents, Philad'a.
No. 52 Broadway, New-York.

JOHN McDONALD No. 8 Battery place, New-York.

NATIONAL LINE—Piers 44 and 51 North River. FOR LONDON.

GREECE.....SATURDAY, Feb. 24, at 1 P. M.

FOR QUEENSTOWN AND LIVERPOOL.

England, Feb. 17, 7:30 A. M. | The Queen, Mar. 3, 7 A. M.

Cabin and steerage passage, and drafts from £1 upward, issued at very low rates. Company's offices No. 69 Broadway. F. W. J. HURST, Manager.

RAILROADS.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT TRUNK LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

Trains leave New-York, via Desbrosses and Cortlandt Streets Ferries, as follows:

Express for Harrisburg, Pittsburg, the West and South, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, 8:30 A. M., 8 and 8:30 P. M. daily.

For Williamsport, Lock Haven, Corry, and Erie, at 8:30 P. M., connecting at Corry for Titusville, Petroleum Centre, and the Oil Regions. For Williamsport and Lock Haven, 8:30 A. M.

For Baltimore, Washington, and the South, "Limited Washington Express" of Pullman Parlor Cars daily, except Sunday, 9:30 A. M.; arrive Washington 4:10 P. M. Regular at 8:40 A. M., 1, 6, and 9 P. M. Sunday, 8 and 9 P. M.

Express for Philadelphia, 7: 30, 8:30, 8:40, (9:30 Limited,) 10:30 A. M., 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30, 9 P. M., and 12 night. Sunday, 8:30 A. M., 5, 5, 7, 8:30, and 9 P. M. Emigrant and second-class, 7 P. M.

Accommodation for Trenton, 7, A. M., 2 and 4:10 P. M.

For trains to Newark, Elizabeth, Rahway, Princeton, Trenton, Perth Amboy, Flemington, Belvidere, and other points, see local schedules at all Ticket Offices.

Trains arrive from Pittsburg, 6:20 and 10:30 A. M., and 12:20 P. M. daily; 10:10 A. M. and 6:50 P. M. daily, except Monday. From Washington and Baltimore, 6:30, 9:50 A. M., 4:10, 5:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday 6:30, 9:50 A. M. From Philadelphia, 5:05, 6:20, 6:30, 9:50, 10:10, 11:50 A. M., 2:10, 4:10, 5:10, 6:50 9:40, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M. Sunday 5:05, 6:20, 6.30, 9:50, 11:50, A. M., 6:50, 10:10, and 10:20 P. M.

Ticket Offices, Nos. 526 and 944 Broadway, No. 1 Astor House, and foot of Desbrosses and Cortlandt streets; No. 4 Court street, Brooklyn; Nos. 114, 116, and 118 Hudson st., Hoboken; Depot, Jersey City. Emigrant Ticket Office, No. 8 Battery place.

FRANK THOMSON. D. M. BOYD, Jr.,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.

TO PHILADELPHIA via PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

THE OLD-ESTABLISHED ROUTE AND SHORT LINE between

NEW-YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.

14 Through Trains each way daily; 3 Depots in Philadelphia, 2 in New-York.

4 Tracks, the most Improved Equipment, and the Fastest Time consistent with absolute safety.

Express Trains leave New-York, via Desbrosses and Cortlandt streets Ferries, as follows:

7:30, 8:30, 8:40, (9:30 Limited,) 10:30 A. M., 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8:30, 9 P. M., and 12 Midnight. Sunday, 8:30 A. M., 5, 6, 7, 8:30, and 9 P. M.

Returning, trains leave Philadelphia 3:20, 3:30, 7, 7:30, 8:30, and 11 A. M., (Limited Express, 1:35 P. M.,) 1:40, 4, 5:30, 7, and 7:35 P. M., and 12 Midnight. On Sunday, 3:20, 3:30, 7, 8:30 A. M., 4, 7, 7:35 P. M., and 12 Midnight.

Ticket Offices, Nos. 526 and 944 Broadway, No. 1 Astor House, and foot of Desbrosses and Cortlandt sts., No. 4 Court st., Brooklyn; Nos. 114, 116, and 118 Hudson st., Hoboken; Depot, Jersey City. Emigrant Ticket Office, No. 8 Battery place.

FRANK THOMSON. D. M. BOYD, Jr.,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.

ERIE RAILWAY.

Winter Arrangement of through trains. From Chambers Street Depot. (For 23d st. see note below.)

9:00 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Cincinnati and Chicago Day Express. Drawing-room coaches to Buffalo.

10:45 A. M., daily, except Sundays, Express Mail for Buffalo and the West. Sleeping coach to Buffalo.

7:00 P. M., daily, Pacific Express to the West. Sleeping coaches through to Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Cincinnati, and Chicago without change. Hotel dining-coaches to Chicago.

7:00 P. M., except Sundays, Western Emigrant train.

Above trains leave Twenty-third Street Ferry at 8:45 and 10:15 A. M., and 6:45 P. M.

For local trains see time-tables and cards in hotels and depots.

JNO. N. ABBOTT, General Passenger Agent.

NEW-YORK, NEW-HAVEN, AND HARTFORD RAILROAD.

After Dec. 10, 1876, trains leave Grand Central Depot (42d st.) for New-Canaan Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1:40 P. M.; Danbury and Norwalk Railroad at 8:05 A. M., 1, and 4:40 P. M.; Naugatuck Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3 P. M.; Housatonic Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3 P. M.; New-Haven and Northampton Railroad at 8:05 A. M., and 3 P. M.; for Newport at 8:05 A. M. and 12 M. Boston and Providence Railroad at 8:05 and 11 A. M., 3 and 9 P. M., (9 P. M. on Sunday;) Boston, (via Shore Line,) at 1 and 10 P. M., (10 P. M. on Sundays.) Boston and New-York Air Line, 8 A. M., 1 and 11:35 P. M.

Way trains as per local time-tables.

LEHIGH VALLEY RAILROAD.

ARRANGEMENT. PASSENGER TRAINS. JAN. 1, 1877.

Leave depots foot of Cortlandt and Debrosses sts., at 6:30 P. M.—Night Express, daily, for Easton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Wilkesbarre, Pittston, Sayre, Elmira, Ithaca, Auburn, Rochester, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and the West. Pullman's sleeping coaches attached.

General Eastern office corner Church and Cortlandt sts., CHARLES H. CUMMINGS, Agent.

ROBERT H. SAYRE, Superintendent and Engineer.

WICKFORD RAILROAD ROUTE TO NEWPORT, R. I.—Passengers for this line take 8:05 A. M. and 1 P. M. express trains from Grand Central Depot, arriving at 4:18 and 8 P. M. at Newport.

THEODORE WARREN, Superintendent.

STEAMBOATS.

STONINGTON LINE

FOR BOSTON AND ALL POINTS EAST.

REDUCED FARE.

Elegant steamers leave Pier No. 33 North River, foot of Jay st., at 4:30 P. M.

Tickets for sale at all principal ticket offices. State-rooms secured at offices of Westcott Express Company and at No. 363 Broadway.

PRIDY & HENCE LINE.

Freight only, steamers leave Pier No. 27 North River, foot of Park place, at 4 P. M. Freights via either line taken at lowest rates.

D. S. BABCOCK, Pres. L. W. FILKINS, G. P. Agent.

FALL RIVER LINE FOR BOSTON AND THE EAST.

FARES REDUCED.

Leave New-York daily, (Sunday excepted,) from Pier No. 28 North River, foot of Murray st., 4:30 P. M.

GEO. L. CONNOR, General Passenger Agent.

FOR NEW-HAVEN, HARTFORD, &c.—Fare $1; steamers leave Peck slip for New-Haven at 3 and 11 P. M., connecting with road.

FOR BRIDGEPORT AND ALL POINTS ON Housatonic and Naugatuck Railroad.—Fare $1. Steamers leave Catharine slip at 11:30 A. M.

LEGAL NOTICES.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Massachusetts District, } ss.
Seal. }

Boston, February 3d, 1877.

Pursuant to a monition to me directed, I hereby give notice to all persons concerned that a libel, or petition, is filed before the Hon. John Lowell, Judge of the District Court for said district, by Mr. Frederick Nickerson, Frederick W. Nickerson, Alfred A. Nickerson, and Elkanah C. Crosby, partners under the firm of F. Nickerson and Company; Harrison Loring, Joseph Nickerson, and William T. Glidden, owners of the steam-ship "Seminole," her machinery, tackle, apparel, and furniture, and freight, against John Maguire, claiming to be the late owner of the steam-ship "Montgomery;" and all persons making or alleging any claim against said steam-ship in a cause of collision, civil and maritime, wherein and whereby said owners claim the benefit of limitation, of liability, as by law provided, and upon the facts and circumstances set forth in said libel or petition; said collision being alleged to have occurred between the said steam-ship "Montgomery" and said steam-ship "Seminole," on the morning of Sunday, the seventh day of January, now last past; and pursuant to said monition, I cite all persons claiming damages for any loss, destruction, damage, or injury, by reason of, or caused by, or arising out of said collision, to appear before said District Court, at the United States Court-house, in Boston, in said district of Massachusetts, on or before the first day of June next at 10 o'clock A. M., and make due proof of their respective claims.

ROLAND G. USHER, United States Marshal.
fa-law3wM

MUSICAL.

A GREAT OFFER!! We will during these Hard Times dispose of 100 PIANOS & ORGANS, new and second-hand, of first-class makers, including WATERS', at lower prices for cash or installments or to let until paid for than ever before offered. WATERS' GRAND SQUARE and UPRIGHT PIANOS & ORGANS are the BEST MADE. AGENTS WANTED. Illustrated Catalogues Mailed. A liberal discount to Teachers, Ministers, Churches, etc. Sheet music at half price. HORACE WATERS & SONS, Manufrs. and Dealers, 40 East 14th st., Union square, N. Y.

A SOPRANO DESIRES CHURCH POSITION; Reference A. Errant. Address SOPRANO, care of A. Errant, No. 328 East 14th st.

FINANCIAL.

ELIZABETH CITY 7s,

MATURING 1878 TO 1898,

FOR SALE BY

VERMILYE & CO.,

Nos. 16 and 18 Nassau St.

NEW-YORK CITY 6s,

DUE IN 1879.

OSWEGO CITY 7S,

DUE IN 1888.

ELIZABETH CITY 7S,

DUE IN 1896.

FOR SALE BY

DANIEL A. MORAN,

NO. 40 WALL ST.

TO THE HOLDERS OF

Alabama State 8 per cent. Gold Bonds of 1870,

ISSUED TO THE ALABAMA AND CHATTANOOGA R. R.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 1, 1877.

Having been appointed by the English Committee of Bondholders agents for the United States to receive the deposit of Bonds accompanied by a contribution of Ten Dollars Gold for each bond, we respectfully request holders to deposit with us at our office, No. 51 William st., their Bonds and the stated contribution, for which proper receipts will be issued.

Printed forms for deposit of Bonds and copies of the resolution under which the said Committee act will be furnished on application at our office.

PLOCK & CO.

CHASE & ATKINS,

BANKERS AND BROKERS,

NO. 18 BROAD STREET, NEW-YORK.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS SUBJECT TO DRAFT AT SIGHT.

GOLD, GOVERNMENT, STATE, MUNICIPAL, AND RAILROAD SECURITIES BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION FOR CASH OR UPON MARGIN.

Choice and Safe Investments.

7, 8, AND 10 PER CENT.

CITY AND COUNTY MUNICIPAL BONDS.
FIRST MORTGAGE RAILROAD BONDS.
CITY RAILROAD STOCKS AND BONDS.
INSURANCE AND BANK STOCKS.
GAS-LIGHT STOCKS AND BONDS.
STRICTLY FIRST-CLASS SECURITIES.

PAYING 10 TO 15 PER CENT.

INTEREST ALWAYS PROMPTLY PAID.

For sale at desirable prices by

Albert H. Nicolay & Co.,

NO. 43 PINE ST., NEW-YORK.

N. B.—INVESTMENT SECURITIES OUR SPECIALTY 26 YEARS.

THE NEW-YORK MINING STOCK EXCHANGE,

No. 19 Broad st. Organized in 1864.

This association has been reorganized for the purpose of facilitating dealings in the stocks of the prominent mining companies, and thus meeting the demands of business arising from the increased developments and growing importance of the mining interests of this country; 135 of its members are also members of the NEW-YORK STOCK EXCHANGE; 50 of its members are also members of the NEW-YORK GOLD EXCHANGE.

Parties desiring information relative to the business of the Exchange or membership therein, may apply to the Secretary, J. WYMAN MORRIS, at its temporary rooms, NO. 19 BROAD ST.

JOHN STANTON, JR., President.

OCEAN NATIONAL BANK.

ASSETS AT AUCTION,

MARCH 27, 1877.

For catalogue apply to ADRIAN H. MULLER & CO., No. 7 Pine st., or to the Receiver, No. 21 Nassau st.

THEODORE M. DAVIS, Receiver.

CINCINNATI 7 3/10 PER CENT

MUNICIPAL BONDS, DUE 1906. A LIMITED AMOUNT FOR SALE BY

KUHN, LOEB & CO., NO. 31 NASSAU ST.

A. C. BURNHAM, NO. 33 PINE ST., NEW-YORK.—Investment securities paying eight to ten per cent. for sale. Western mortgages a specialty for six-teen years. References in NEW-YORK, Boston, Hartford, and Philadelphia. Send for lists.

A HAND-BOOK OF COMMERCE, FINANCE, AND INVESTMENTS.—The FINANCIAL REVIEW, (Annual,) price $1 25, is now ready. Address for book or circular of contents. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle, No. 79 William st.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO.,
NO. 59 WALL ST.,
ISSUE COMMERCIAL and TRAVELERS' CREDITS AVAILABLE in all PARTS of the WORLD.

$150,000 TO LOAN ON BOND AND mortgage on New-York City improved property. Apply to GRANT BROTHERS, No. 2 Exchange court.

DIVIDENDS.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.

The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts. Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

CHICAGO AND ALTON RAILROAD CO.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
CHICAGO, Feb. 8, 1877.

Notice is hereby given to the stockholders of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company that a cash dividend of four (4) per cent. has this day been declared upon the Preferred and Common Stock of this Company, payable at the banking house of the Company's Agents, Messrs. W. K. Jesup, Paton & Co., No. 52 William street, in the City of New-York, on the 1st day of March next, to holders of record at the time of the close of business hours on the 17th day of February, inst., at which time the transfer books will be closed, and reopened for transfers on the 2d day of March next. W. M. LARRABEE, Secretary.

CLEVELAND AND PITTSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.

Office of Secretary and Treasurer, Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 3, 1877.—Dividend No. 74. A regular guaranteed quarterly dividend of this company, at the rate of Seven per Cent., per annum on the new guaranteed stocks, will be paid on and after the 1st March proximo, at the office of the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, No. 26 Exchange place, New-York.

The transfer-books will close on the 10th inst. and reopen on the 2d March.

G. A. INGERSOLL, Secretary.

NEW-YORK AND COLORADO COMPANY,
PARK BANK BUILDING,
NEW-YORK, Feb. 10, 1877.

DIVIDEND NO. 1.—A DIVIDEND OF ONE PER cent. has been declared on the capital stock of this company, payable at this office on and after March 1, 1877, to the stockholders of record at the closing of the transfer-books, which will close on the 20th day of February instant, and reopen March 2, 1877. H. GROENEMEYER, Secretary.

THE ST NICHOLAS NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK,
No. 7 Wall st. NEW-YORK, Jan. 30, 1877.

DIVIDEND.—A SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND OF Four per Cent. has been declared by the Directors of this Bank, payable on and after the 12th day of February next. The transfer books will be closed from the 1st to 13th proximo.

A. PARKHURST, Cashier.

HOLDERS OF CERTIFICATES FOR THE past due coupons of the First Mortgages on the Main Line of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad Company may present them to the Metropolitan National Bank, and have the interest on the coupons added to the certificate.

ELECTIONS.

OFFICE OF THE CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY OF MARYLAND,
NEW-YORK, Feb. 2, 1877.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STOCKholders of this company for the election of President and Directors, and transaction of other business, will be held at noon on WEDNESDAY, the 21st inst. The transfer-books will close at 2 o'clock P. M., on the 10th inst., and reopen on the 23d inst.

H. C. HICKS, Secretary.

A SPECIAL MEETING OF THE STOCKholders and election of Directors of the St. Joseph and St. Louis Railroad Company will be held on the 26th of March, 1877, at the office of said company, No. 417 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo., at 1 o'clock, P. M.

N. E. GOULDY, Secretary.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR THIRTEEN Directors of the sixth Avenue Railroad Company will be held at the Depot, 6th av., corner of 43d st., on TUESDAY, Feb. 13, 1877, from 12 to 1 o'clock.

H. S. MOORE, Secretary.

REMOVALS.

REMOVAL.—RIDGELY & CO., IMPORTERS OF Lace curtains and embroideries, have removed from No. 110 Worth st. to Nos. 79 and 81 Worth st., between Broadway and Church st.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 1, 1877.

BOARDING AND LODGING.

THE UP-TOWN OFFICE OF THE TIMES.

The up-town office of THE TIMES is located at No. 1,257 Broadway, bet. 31st and 32d sts. Open daily, Sundays included, from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. Subscriptions received, and copies of THE TIMES for sale.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UNTIL 9 P. M.

NO. 4 WEST 14TH ST., TWO DOORS FROM 5TH AV.—Newly and handsomely-furnished suites and single rooms to Families and gentlemen, with or without breakfast; bath-rooms and running water on each floor; house heated by steam throughout; appointments and location unsurpassed; best references given and required.

A PRIVATE FAMILY OCCUPYING AN elegant house, in close proximity to fashionable restaurants, would accommodate single gentlemen with rooms and service; French breakfast if desired; none but first-class parties treated with. Address K. Y. K., Box No. 267 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

PRIVATE CLUB, 28TH ST., NEAR BROADway.—Gentleman wanted to join; breakfast at all hours; table d'hote at 6:30 o'clock; also rooms; terms reasonable. Address "CLUB," Box No. 252 TIMES UP-TOWN OFFICE, NO. 1,257 BROADWAY.

NO. 244 EAST 40TH ST.—SQUARE ROOM, suitable for gentleman or lady; nicely kept; bath, hot and cold water same floor; fire evenings; private family; $3 week.

SECOND FLOOR, WITH PRIVATE TABLE. Spacious rooms, en suite, with elegant parlor, bath, &c.; vacated by family going South; references. Call at No. 14 East 32d st., between 5th and Madison ave.

MRS. M. B. SUMNER, No. 2 West 39th st., has rear suite, second floor, to offer, with or without private table, and one front upper room.

FIFTH AV., NO. 45, BETWEEN 11TH and 12th sts.—Spacious suite of well-furnished rooms on parlor floor, with or without private table.

NO. 42 WEST 19TH ST.—HANDSOME SUITE of apartments, with or without board, in private house; references.

NO. 8 EAST 9TH ST.—DESIRABLE SUITE OF handsomely-furnished rooms; with or without private table; references.

